LSC
3.3317.1

3 1430 02937393 5
a31430029373935b
UNIV. OF MD. COLLEGE PARK

PRESENTED BY
Colorado W. C. T. U.

From the library of Mrs Ursula D. Herrick
Presented by the executors of her Estate

PRESENTED BY
Colorado W. C. T. U.

THE UNION SIGNAL

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 1.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January 7, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Ursula D Hettick
2419 19th St
Denver

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: The Old Year and the New—Barmaids in New York 8, 9
SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES: 9
WATCH-TOWER: 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem, "The Bells Across the Snow," by E. Lena Griswold—Vesta Blackburn's Lesson, by Laura J. Rittenhouse—The Coffee House Movement in England, by Henry J. Osborne 2, 3, 4
CORRESPONDENCE. Pointers from a Prohibition Priest—Suppression of Opium in China—Wood Alcohol Again—Temperance Temple Items 4, 5
OUR PRESIDENT'S COLUMN: The Peck Family 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, The Bands of Mercy—Christmas in Chicago—Demorest Medal Contest Bureau—Healthy Girls. 6
THE HOUSEHOLD. Poem, When the Women Have Their Way—A New Idea, and a Bright One—Words to the Wise, Lucy 7
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: State Reporters, New York, South Carolina, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana Jottings—News in a Nutshell 10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: Memorial Recommendations—Concerning Petition Requests—The Present Work for the Sabbath—Woman's Lecture Bureau—Temperance Temple Receipts 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT: 13, 14
SIGNAL NOTES: 16

THE regular quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association will be held at the central office, 161 La Salle street, Chicago, Wednesday, January 13, 1892, at ten o'clock a. m.

MARY ALLEN WEST, Sec'y.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Count Tolstoi estimates the famine sufferers in Russia as numbering 30,000,000.

During Christmas week, 38,000,000 letters and parcels were posted in London and 33,000,000 delivered.

John G. Woolley gave an admirable temperance address at the First Congregational church, Chicago, Sabbath evening.

Sir William White, British Ambassador at Constantinople, who was said to know more about the Eastern question than any other Englishman, is dead.

Sunday witnessed a great ingathering to the churches of the West side, Chicago, largely the result of the Mills meetings; the Third Presbyterian alone received 175 to membership.

The Inter Ocean notes that in the Ohio senatorial contest, the Sabbath was observed by a temporary armistice; both Sherman and Foraker remained on the ground, but their lieutenants were inactive.

Dr. Kate Mitchell, of London, attended the Y conference in Tuscola, Illinois, last week, and spoke at Bethesda Mission, Chicago, Sunday evening. Owing to her engagement at Tuscola on the day set for her reception by the lady physicians of Chicago, it was postponed till Tuesday, when it occurred at the Sherman House, and was a very pleasant affair.

HERR WERMUTH, the German Imperial Commissioner, is distributing throughout Germany, the pamphlet issued by the Lady Managers, giving a descriptive report of woman's work in connection with the Columbian Exposition.

BY the will of Mrs. Mary Carcelon, of Oakland, Cal., Bowdoin College, Maine, receives $400,000. Princeton Theological Seminary receives a bequest of $21,000 by the will of John T. De Sellum. He had made a previous will, giving this to Union Theological Seminary, but changed his will just before his death, on account of the utterances of Professor Briggs.

AMONG the dead of 1891 are numbered Bancroft and Lossing, historians; James Russell Lowell, James Parton, Lord Lytton and Dr. Prime, among writers; Charles Pratt, the philanthropist; Hannibal Hamlin, Dom Pedro II.; Emma Abbott, queen of song; Sir John Macdonald, of Canada; Jules P. Grevy, of France, and Germany's greatest General, Von Moltke. From our ranks have been promoted many whose names are not recorded here, but whose memories are cherished in loving hearts.

CHEN YU LING, special representative of the Emperor of China, is now in Chicago to arrange for representation in the World's Fair. He disclaims any feeling of resentment toward America on the part of his government, declaring on the contrary, that the Emperor and merchants feel very great interest in the Exposition. He applies for space for two exhibits, a large one of teas, and a smaller one of rare old China ware and curios.

WITH the recurrence of famine comes the old prescription of whisky. Dr. George F. Shrady, General Grant's physician, on being asked if whisky was a good preventative of the disease answered: "Whisky is never good to ward off anything. Good food is the best means with which to ward off disease. To dose with whisky is like adding shavings to the fire. There is no physical, mental or moral excuse for a man's drinking whisky as a preventative of disease."

EPIDEMICS of typhus fever and small pox in various localities are adding to the horrors of famine in Russia; as if this were not enough, officials are misappropriating funds for the relief of the sufferers; government now refuses to grant permission for private distribution of food or soup houses. Meanwhile the Czar continues his efforts to stamp out all religions except the Greek Church, his latest step in this direction being the closing of certain Catholic churches.

B. W. PERKINS is appointed by the Governor of Kansas to succeed Senator Plumb. Those best posted in Kansas affairs say his appointment is a slap in the face to the temperance element there. An item in the Chicago Times seems to sustain this view. Its Topeka correspondent, writing January 1st, says: "The old soldier element, 87,000 strong, the Methodist church, the Santa Fe influences, the strong temperance element, and many of the most influential men and newspapers of the state, have been snubbed."

ON JANUARY 3d Madame Willard entered upon her eighty-eighth year, in good health and spirits. Many kind friends remembered the occasion with gifts of flowers, pictures, books, etc., and at family prayers there was special recognition of the day by Miss Willard, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick and Misses Anna and Bessie Gordon, whose Auburndale home is to Miss Willard almost like her own. Madame Willard is true to her name of "Saint Courageous" and her motto "it is better further on."

THE first number of Our Day, published by the W. T. P. A., was issued New Year's day and we are very proud of it. A fine photogravure of James Russell Lowell forms the frontispiece; Sunday closing receives attention at the hands of Will C. Wood and of Joseph Cook in his Monday lecture. Julia Ward Howe discusses Woman Suffrage as a Weapon in Vital Reforms, and Professor Simon writes of Theological Education in England. In Editorial Notes white-ribboners will turn first to the delightful sketch of the reception at Mrs. Hunt's cottage following the Boston convention; while the discussion of the Brussels Treaty will claim thoughtful attention.

A NEW departure for Demorest medal contests has been made in favor of prisoners in all reformatory institutions. All chaplains, superintendents, teachers, etc., may secure full information as to the conditions for winning the medals by writing to the "Medal Contest Bureau," 10 East 14th street, New York City. The medals to be awarded in the new series of contests are not of the same design as those in general use. The first of these contests was held New Year's day, in the United States Military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Mrs. Julia A. Chase was the moving spirit, Chaplain Charles C. Pierce heartily seconding her efforts and securing the consent of the Commandant.

THE Woman's Canning Company, organized one year ago, celebrates its first birthday by very large increase in its facilities for doing business. During its experimental year it has done its work in a very modest way, in a small tenement on Archer Avenue. New Year's day it took possession of a four story and basement building in the very heart of the canning industries of Chicago, No. 19 Michigan Avenue, engaged an experienced, capable business manager, contracted for a boiler and other machinery of multiplied capacity over its old outfit, and will soon be in position to fill the largest orders. The flurry of trouble which gained publicity in the daily press had nothing to do with the working of the business; it was caused by a too enthusiastic agent for the sale of stock, whose engagement with the company has now terminated.

THE coming convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, at Washington, January 17, 18, 19, 20, promises to be of unusual interest. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Lide Meriwether, Mrs. Lucy Stone, Elizabeth Lyle Saxon, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, Madame Clara Neyman, Carrie Lane Chapman, Rev. Anna Shaw, May Wright Sewall. Other speakers expected: Mary A. Livermore, Miss Florence Balgarnie, Senators Hoar, Warren, Carey, Stanford and Dolph. Discussions on the following subjects, "Methods of Work in State Legislatures;" "Constitutionality of Extending Suffrage by Legislative Enactments;" and the "Columbian Exposition," will be led by Lillie Devereaux Blake, Susan B. Anthony and Isabella Beecher Hooker. Reductions have been granted by the Trunk Line Association and the Southern Passenger Association, by which a rate of a fare and a third will be made for the round trip. For all information concerning railroads, address Miss Mattie A. N. Shaw, 748 North Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

THE Congregationalist of Boston, in speaking of the course of Sunday School lessons for 1892, says that the most difficult problem before the committee is selecting one temperance lesson each quarter, "as the number of suitable selections is so few that in order to supply the demand they must be often repeated." We have not found any such difficulty; the W. T. P. A. has published the temperance lesson every quarter for years as a supplement to The Young Crusader, and will continue so to do. The one for January 17th is by Miss L. E. F. Kimball, those for the rest of the year will be prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston. The announcement is made that the Baptist and the Methodist publication societies have decided not to announce any temperance lesson; our friends in those denominations will be pleased to learn that we can supply them.

THE president and secretary of the Kansas State Temperance Union issue a circular declaring that upon entering the new year it is wise to again call the attention of the people to (1) the importance of well-directed efforts to promote temperance; (2) the necessity of unremitting toil and vigilance to preserve and increase the efficiency of our prohibitory law; (3) the fact that the law has been enforced wherever officers have faithfully tried to do their duty; (4) the fact that the duty of the citizen is to encourage the officers and assist in cultivating and strengthening the sentiment in favor of the law, thus making it easier of enforcement; (5) the great beneficence of the law, and the benefits our people have derived from ten years of prohibition; (6) the still greater blessings awaiting us in the future, coming from a generation growing up to almost unexampled sobriety as the natural outgrowth of the law and its enforcements, and that these important truths may be brought home to the thoughtful people in no way so well as by the ministers of the Gospel. They therefore ask every Kansas minister to devote Sunday, January 17, to special temperance services and to preach on that day, a temperance sermon.

WHILE Miss Ames lay sick in Boston, our business committee, to free her from all anxiety, voted her a vacation till she should be well enough to resume her duties, and arranged to provide assistance to the remaining editors in doing her work temporarily. Providentially, as it now seems, the committee learned that Mrs. Kells, of Mississippi, had been appointed National Superintendent of press work, and that as this work can be better carried on at Headquarters, she intended to come to Chicago, and might be induced to assist us on THE UNION SIGNAL till such time as the duties of her department work demanded her full time. This she kindly consented to do, and is now with us. Mrs. Kells brings to her work, both in the press department and on THE UNION SIGNAL, exceptional qualifications. She is a lady of rare literary culture, having been at the head of one of the leading seminaries of the South for many years, and of journalistic experience as editor and publisher of The Mississippi White Ribboner and contributor to various other papers. Her thorough knowledge of the capabilities and the needs of our Southern sisters will also be of great value. She has received in this office, as we are sure she will from our wide constituency, hearty welcome and Godspeed in her new and difficult work. Her numerous correspondents will note her change of address from Jackson, Mississippi, to 161 La Salle Street, Chicago.

176985

Contributed.

"THE BELLS ACROSS THE SNOW."

BY E. LENA GRISWOLD.

Oh! wonderful bells are the bells of Time,
Singing to us in mystical rhyme
Of the years gone by!

What is the story the bells are telling
Which ever anon on the winds are swelling,
With their ringing and swinging
From the old gray tower,
With their rhyming and chiming
Proclaiming the hour,
While we stand at the door with the dear old year
Who is passing away to return no more?

Out in the midnight cold he is driven,
Where only the stars through the clouds wind-riven,
Gleam like the tears of a sinner forgiven.

Again they come across the snow,
Over the fields where the grain lies low,
Echoing the words of the Christ who said,
That except the wheat lie buried and dead
It abides alone.
Sorrowful thoughts of the past arise,
Many a tear bedews our eyes;
Sadly adown the track of years
Dimly we peer through a mist of tears.
Softly they whisper of Loves asleep
Under the mounds where the snow lies deep:
Over the furrows Death's hand hath turned
Often our hearts have wept and yearned,—
But the flowers we planted in tears and gloom
We shall find again 'mid a fairer bloom.

Oh! mystical bells across the snow,
Sweet peace ye bring to all below,
For the calm of Him who trod the sea
Falls again on the waves of life's Galilee,
And over the hearts that are lowly laid,
He whispers again, "Be not afraid."

Still again we stand and listen
Where the moonbeams gleam and glisten,
To the music gently swelling
Like a river in its flow,
To the quaint and pensive rhyming,
To the sad and mystic chiming
Of the bells across the snow.
Still "the love of Christ arisen
Yearns to reach our souls in prison,"
Longs to hear the chains we wear
"Crumbling in the breath of prayer,"
Waits to see the "gates of fire"
Yielding to our souls' desire.

Softer now they come and go,
Slower now their mystic flow,
And the moonbeams fainter glow
On their track across the snow.

Over the mounds where the snow lies drifted
Only a moment the veil is lifted,
And we peer through the mists the wind has rifted,
Beyond the clouds where the snow is sifted,
Where the lights and shades of our lives are shifted.

Oh, wonderful Love that watches above,
Noticing even a sparrow's fall!
Ready and waiting to take us all,
Pierced and stricken by earth's poisoned dart,
Back to His merciful, fatherly heart.

Summer's hours of heat
And winter's hours of cold
Wrap round us the mystical fold
Of the years gone by.
But from youth to age,
Till we turn the last page
Of Life's wonderful Book,
Shall over again the story be told
Of the Infinite Love that never grows old.

Clio, Mich.

VESTA BLACKBURN'S LESSON.

BY LAURA J. RITTENHOUSE.

It had been an easy matter to wear the white ribbon in the quiet country town where Vesta Blackburn had lived her twenty happy years, but here in the great, turbulent city it seemed a very different thing. As she stood before her dressing-case mirror gazing at herself in her pretty evening dress of China silk, she had been more than satisfied until she caught a glimpse of the modest white bow on her bosom.

"I've half a notion not to wear it," she thought. "I can be just as good a temperance girl without flaunting my opinions and sentiments in the eyes of my friends, and it does look so conspicuous on this dress. People are always asking me what it means, and making pert or sarcastic remarks about it, too. Of course I'm not afraid of them, but I'm beginning to think it shows questionable taste to display a white ribbon as an emblem of my total abstinence principles.

"One might as well wear a purple ribbon to show she was truthful, or a pink one to proclaim one's self a Christian. The more I think of it, the more I wish I had never put it on. It doesn't do a particle of good to wear it, anyhow."

At this point in her reflections she slowly took the dainty white bow from her dress and laid it upon her toilet table, trying to satisfy herself that no lack of moral courage had caused the action. But her conscience was tender, and would not allow her to deceive herself, so she picked the bow up again, and compromised by pinning it so close to the bon silene roses upon her bosom that only the closest scrutiny could discover it.

"Vesta!" her cousin called from the hall below.

"Yes, Robert, I'm coming," she said cheerily, and with a final touch to the soft, brown hair, and a half-admiring glance at the pretty, girlish figure, she gathered up her fur-lined circular and ran lightly down stairs.

"How sweet you look, Vesta! I do not wonder it took you so long to get yourself up. It must have been hard work to tear yourself away from the mirror," Robert said, with honest admiration.

"It was nothing of the kind," Vesta said, a little warmly. "I was just puzzling about whether I should wear a certain article, or not."

"It must have been something of great importance to have kept you so long," teased her cousin.

"It was. No one can tell how much depends upon it," Vesta said lightly.

Then chatting gaily, they went down the broad stone steps to their carriage, and were driven to the elegant home where they were to spend the evening. The receptions given in this home were always conducted upon a magnificent scale, and Robert looked forward with much pleasure to the impression such an affair would create upon the mind of his cousin. He was quite proud of her piquant beauty, her bright, original sayings, her manners so easy, yet tinged with a delicate dignity of true womanhood, and her wholesome, honest nature that made her so unlike the majority of society girls whom he knew.

Such a bewilderingly happy evening as it was to Vesta, to whom such scenes were new and fascinating, and when they were ushered into the elegant dining room, where iridescent candelabra illuminated the tables, with their rare flowers, solid silver, cut-glass and beautifully decorated china, she felt as if she had entered a veritable fairy-land. From behind a bank of tree-ferns, palms and orange trees came the sweet notes of a fine string band, and to Vesta, even the deft waiters in their full dress suits seemed a part of the enchantment.

She had never attended anything so radiantly splendid before, and with her keen appreciation of the beautiful, she fairly reveled in delight, her eyes sparkling, her cheeks aglow with a pink as lovely as in the roses she wore.

Across the table from her sat Bruce McDonald, a young gentleman whose unusual intellectual qualities had won Vesta's admiration, tinged, perhaps, with a feeling somewhat warmer, though she had never admitted this even to herself. Several wine-glasses stood at each plate, and the attentive waiters kept them well filled. Heretofore, upon like occasions, Vesta had allowed no wine to be poured for her, but to-night the dazzling scene seemed to shake that firm moral courage upon which she had always somewhat prided herself. It seemed very hard to do anything unusual, in such a place; anything to make one look odd or conspicuous, and she thought within herself that she need not taste the wine, and so her pledge would remain unbroken.

She felt she could not bear the coldly inquiring, or half contemptuous stare of those around her, and so, half-ashamed, she allowed her glasses to be filled. Her cousin Robert felt a dull pang in his heart as he saw this. He had had such faith in her courage, her high resolutions, and here, in spite of her avowed temperance principles, the wine in her glasses told no tale of total abstinence. And then he suddenly noticed that her white ribbon was gone. He had often chaffed her for wearing it, yet in his heart he had loved and honored her for it.

"She will soon be just like the balance of them," he thought ruefully. "The glitter of wealth and the fashionable world are spoiling her already."

And then, to banish these gloomy thoughts, and partly because he liked it, he drank glass after glass of wine, till his face was flushed and his voice husky. Completely absorbed in the brilliant scene around her, Vesta did not realize Robert's condition for some time.

When she did so, she felt both shocked and indignant. What right had he to drink at all, when with her, knowing how she abhorred it? Surely out of respect to her feelings he might have abstained. Then, instinctively she glanced across the table. Mr. McDonald was draining a glass with evident relish.

The sight made her heart-sick, and her face lost its pretty color. Something in her expression arrested his attention. He, too, had noticed that she had permitted her glasses to be filled and had vainly looked for her white ribbon.

"False and weak, as they all are," he thought bitterly, and had tried to forget his reckless misery in the luring wine.

He raised a fresh glass to his lips as he caught her eye. "Will you not join me in quaffing this nectar of the gods?" he said ironically.

"You know I never drink, Mr. McDonald!" she said coldly, throwing up her head with offended dignity, hurt more deeply than she cared to show.

"Ah!" with just the faintest trace of inquiry or doubt in his voice; "I see your glasses are filled this evening."

Vesta's face turned scarlet but she made no reply. How fervently she longed for the banquet to be over. It seemed all at once as if there was mockery in the glare and glitter, in the very swell of the music, and time that had before flown so rapidly now seemed interminable. All her brightness and vivacity left her, all the joy went out of her heart, and conscience began to upbraid her.

There was a choking feeling in her throat, and only with the greatest effort could she restrain her tears.

"Let us go home at once, Robert," she said imploringly as they left the dining-room, and to her relief her cousin offered no objection. She never quite remembered how she took leave of her hostess, and answered the playful badinage of the few friends she met on the way from the drawing-room.

Once inside the friendly obscurity of the carriage she wept silently.

"Oh! Robert, how could you—how could you?" she said chokingly.

"How could I what, cousin?" he asked half drowsily, not yet free from the influence of the wine he had taken.

"How could you drink when I was with you; when you knew how I hated it? You might have had some consideration for my feelings, instead of ——" and here the sobs broke forth stormily.

The cold, sharp air, as well as his cousin's tears aroused the young man to a realization of the situation.

"Come now, Vesta, don't cry and get into a tantrum. I didn't do anything so very wicked; not so very much worse than you did. The only difference was that I drank my wine to get it out of sight, you know," with a feeble attempt at playfulness, "and you left your glasses full to make other people long for them.

"If you hadn't allowed the servants to fill them, I shouldn't have touched a drop; I hadn't intended to. Bruce McDonald and I had both said we should respect your feelings too much to drink hereafter, and that it was a practice much better left alone, perhaps. You had set us to thinking of the drink custom in a new way, you know, and we thought you a regular trump; a girl who would not be afraid or ashamed to stand by her colors anywhere."

"Well, I'm not afraid—I don't care who knows I am a total abstainer! I want people to know it," Vesta said vehemently.

"Then why were your glasses filled this evening? No, my good little cousin, you may as well own up; you dreaded the ridicule; you were overcome by the glamour of fashionable society, and so you at least partially descended from the high plane you have occupied heretofore. It is only a question of time, how long it will be before you take a step farther, and sip the wine you profess to fear and despise."

Then, as Vesta attempted to defend herself, he said, playfully:

"There now, Vesta, don't work yourself up into a white heat of indignation. I don't blame you at all; you're only a girl, and I suppose it is natural for girls to be weak and yielding. But, I confess I was disappointed and sorry when I saw that you had not worn your white ribbon to-night. Somehow, although I've laughed at you for wearing it, I've had the greatest respect for you because you did. If you had worn it, I should not have drank to-night, but seeing you without it, what inducement had I, who have been accustomed to the use of wine all my life, to deprive myself of the pleasure?"

"Because it is wrong! That should be reason enough for you!" Vesta said passionately.

Then she was silent for a while, too miserable and remorseful for words. She thought with bitter penitence of the struggle she had passed through about that ribbon, and of the cowardly compromise she had made, feeling almost as if it would do no good to tell Robert the truth about it.

PRESENTED BY
Colorado W. C. T. U.

"Oh! Robert, I did wear it," she said tremulously, "but I was weak enough to let it be hidden by my roses. I never dreamed any one would care, or be influenced either one way or the other. I thought nothing I could do or say would change any one in this great city, and so I hoped to escape being made a target of for unfriendly or criticising eyes. But this night has taught me a lesson so bitter and painful I shall never forget it, and if the Lord will forgive me, I shall never waver or shrink from bearing my little cross hereafter."

"Well, I'm honestly glad to hear you say so, Vesta. Somehow, when I thought you were becoming weak and worldly, I began to lose faith in everything. No girl can ever know how much she influences those around her until —well, until she has gone up higher, where she can see the scroll of her life-work unfolded before her.

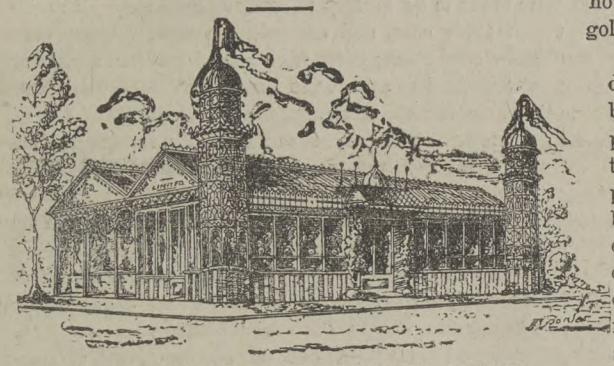
"Just go on quietly and resolutely wearing your white emblem of temperance and purity, and there is no telling how many may come over to your way of thinking, even in this big, wicked city," Robert said earnestly.

And so it was that Vesta Blackburn, having learned wisdom from the wretched experience of that one evening, never again compromised her position, nor lost an opportunity to throw her influence on the side of right and sobriety. With what measure of success she was crowned may be learned from the fact that her cousin, Robert, keeps a total abstinence pledge in his office, which is headed with his own name, followed by that of Bruce McDonald and a dozen other young men.

Intoxicating drinks of all kinds have been banished from her uncle's home, and from Mr. McDonald's as well, and as such influences spread with ever-increasing power, no one can foresee how many lives may be bettered through the influence of one earnest temperance girl. Perhaps some such thoughts as these help to fill her heart with sweet peace and joy unutterable, as she turns upon her finger the ring placed there by Bruce McDonald.

THE COFFEE HOUSE MOVEMENT IN ENGLAND.

BY HENRY J. OSBORNE,
Editor and Manager "Alliance Press Agency," London.



COFFEE CAFE, IRISH EXHIBITION, LONDON.

The modern popular Coffee House movement in England dates back some twenty years. It is essentially an offspring of the organized temperance movement. Workers in the latter sought to do something practical by means of this new agency to fight their old foe, the liquor traffic. Before that time, of course, other efforts had been made to provide "counter attractions" to the public-house. Largely the movement has been one of evolution. Perhaps its first stage—viewed as a philanthropic effort, and distinct from the purely business essays of individuals—was what was known in its time as the "British Workman" phase, that being a generic name applied to houses established, first at Leeds by Mrs. Hind-Smith and others, and afterwards in many other parts of the country. The idea which underlay this phase was the provision of houses in most respects like the real public-house, but without the drink—tea, coffee and cocoa, mineral waters and other refreshments being on sale at low rates, together with rooms for reading, talking, smoking, occasional "free and easy" concerts, and other forms of attraction. Houses of this character did good work for a time. They drew away many workmen from the dangerous associations of the drink-shop, and found work for many temperance people on the committees of management, in helping at entertainments, in conducting money clubs, and in other ways. But this phase did not spread so rapidly or become so universally adopted as was perhaps expected. Probably it "played too low"—possibly those who were thus weaned from drink began at once to look for something better in the way of surroundings and entertainment. The name never became popular, and was in that respect in great contrast to the newer appellation. "Coffee Tavern" and "Coffee House" at once struck root.

In all large towns there is a large floating population—people who cannot go home for such refreshment as they need, and there is the social instinct which calls for places where men may gather as friends. The promoters of the Coffee Taverns sought to meet these natural requirements with a liberal hand, excluding the one dangerous element—strong drink. That the attainment of these objects was both possible and practicable, experience has abundantly shown. A great deal has been done, much is being done, much remains to be done. There are few populous places in the country where some sort of beginning has not been made. Many limited liability companies have been formed by persons who set out to be useful, and found themselves rewarded with dividends, for the business is one that readily becomes remunerative, and with careful management a profit of from five to ten per cent is easily made. Sound commercial principles are essential—the business must stand or fall on its merits, and must prosper if at all, by means of effectually catering for the real needs of the public, whether "run" by joint stock companies, or by individuals—as is often the case—who, having graduated in the service of a company, go into business on their own account. There are equally successful concerns belonging to both categories. The best of these establishments carry in their appearance plain evidence that they are meant to pay; nothing dingy, dusty, or loose-ended is tolerated; plenty of space, plenty of light, of air, of glass, well drilled, neat, attentive waitresses; articles of the best quality and at moderate prices—these make up the visible stepping-stones to success.

Time was when even in London the thousands who perforce must take one meal or more from home during the day had no choice between places where the sale of drink was the chief interest, and the dingy, often dirty, sometimes worse, coffee house of private enterprise (save the mark) only to be found in the third-rate streets. Much of that is changed. Of late years an imperative demand has grown up for better provision, especially for light refreshments, and the old form of coffee house has to a large extent passed away. It has given place to numbers of well-lighted, cleanly, wholesome shops, where good quality and low prices go hand in hand. There are now in the city of London proper—the civic square mile, as distinct from "Greater London"—over 100 coffee taverns and perhaps 2,000 coffee rooms of other descriptions. Numerous business combinations, firms and companies now cater for the hungry and thirsty crowd, and reap a golden harvest.

Probably no single example is so charged with evidence of great commercial possibility as that afforded by the history of one large and now very wealthy company in London. Many years ago the company in question—The Aerated Bread Company—was formed for the purpose of making and vending a particular kind of bread, aerated on a patent system. After a time, however, the company got into low water,—why, it is of no consequence to inquire, but it was not the fault of the quality of bread supplied—so that at one period, not many years ago, its shares, for which £1 each had been subscribed, were bought and sold in large numbers for half a crown. Now, and for some years past, these same shares have been quoted on the London Stock Exchange at about £5 each, or a premium of nearly four hundred per cent. By what process was such a change wrought? Simply by reason of the business foresight of the present managing director of the company, who persuaded the shareholders to risk more money for purposes of extension —to take up the business of temperance catering, so as, primarily, to afford an outlet for their own breads and cakes. Acting on this principle, taking advantage of an undoubted demand which existed for more coffee houses, and of a better sort than had so far existed in London, but probably with no idea of philanthropy or of aiding or extending temperance principles and practice—in fact with no thought beyond that of dividend earning—the company's managers set to work. Shop after shop was opened in the best thoroughfares of London, in the city and in the West End, until now there are a great number of them, to say nothing of the many imitation houses—very like in appearance, but started by other companies or persons, attracted by the unmistakable success that has attended what are popularly known as the "A. B. C." (the initials of the company) houses.

Two of the houses of this company face the Palace of Westminster, and are frequented by members of Parliament, those having business in and near the National Parliament, by lawyers, newspaper men, and hosts of "all sorts and conditions of men"—and women too. In the houses of this company, the ground floor, and often the basement, is devoted to the "A. B. C." business, the upper portions of the house being let off as offices, the rentals so obtained serving to swell the company's profits. Outside, the prevailing feature is, as much plate glass as possible, the windows bearing the name of the company, and the words "Tea," "Coffee," etc., in bold, open letters, and showing a variety of eatables tastefully arranged on glass shelves, glass stands, glass dishes, and behind fancy-framed, glass swung partitions. Inside, having passed the massive glass doors, one is struck first of all by the prevailing air of cleanliness and order, and next observes the tasteful arrangement of marble-topped tables of varied shape and size, padded leather settees lining the walls, and cane-seated, bent-wood chairs facing them—the tables between. Gilt framed mirrors fill every panel of every wall, and massive gilt chandeliers afford brilliant light. On one side is a massive, polished, mahogany marble-topped counter, surmounted by shining glass bearing tempting edibles, and steaming urns of brightly polished silver plate, containing coffee, cocoa, milk, and hot water, but not tea—for a specialty is the A. B. C. tea fresh made for every customer, insuring a delicacy of flavor that has won for it the praise of countless thousands. Neat-handed, neatly-dressed girls wait and serve—all uniformly dressed in black with white aprons. Brown and white rolls of the company's patent kind, cakes in variety, also "home-made," biscuits of divers kinds, even cold ham, tongue, brawn, and boiled eggs make up the menu—neatness and promptness helping to complete the sum of content, and make fast friends of those who once become customers.

Another distinct grade of London houses of a somewhat more "rough and ready" style is found in those founded by the "Lockhart's Company." These cater for the million, to whom low prices are a first consideration. But low prices do not prevent the Lockharts serving their customers in rooms kept sweet and clean, nor from supplying articles from which not even the most fastidious appetite need turn; and their houses are therefore an untold boon to young and old alike, among the great army of lower grade workers who have little to spend. "Lockhart's" were the pioneer firm in London, in showing the way to success. They are still extending in many directions. Our illustration is of one of the newer additions to their many houses. This particular house is situated at Brompton, in the west of London.

In accordance with the pious intention of Robert Lockhart, the founder of the firm, there is hung in every bar, in a conspicuous position, an intimation that the temperance pledge may be signed there. Many pledges are so signed; and there is a flourishing Gospel Temperance Society carried on by the various employes.

A great feature of many Coffee Taverns is the provision of halls for meetings. Here, for instance, is a view of an interior of the large room of the "Guardsman," in London, set out in the view as a dining hall, but also used for public gatherings. Here many "strike" and other meetings connected with the labor movement have been regularly held, greatly to the advantage of the men concerned, as being free from the baneful influences of the liquor-selling saloon.

"GUARDSMAN" COFFEE TAVERN, LONDON (INTERIOR).

There are also some conspicuous examples of how philanthropy can aid in the matter. "The Welcome," situated at New Cross, a southern suburb of London, is a splendid building specially erected for the purpose of a Coffee Tavern and Workmen's Institute. It is an excellent instance of the good that may be done by the expenditure of money by a large-hearted employer of labor. The head of a great firm of brass founders, moved by the fact that many of his workmen lived a long way from the works, and were subject to great discomfort with respect to their meals, set to work to gain the coöperation of others, and ultimately secured the establishment of the place. He gave the site, the building, and the furniture and fittings, and then handed the whole over to a committee of management, to be conducted principally for the benefit of workmen employed by the firm, but also as a center of usefulness for the neighborhood. The house fills a commanding corner site, has a frontage of 190 feet, contains a hall for meetings and concerts which measures 60 feet long, a "bar" 35 feet by 28 feet, a dining room 22 feet by 15 feet, and is fitted and arranged with great completeness. It comprises a Coffee Tavern and an Institute. The former is conducted on purely business principles, the profits being used for the benefit of the Institute. Connected with the latter, games, entertainments, cricket and rowing clubs, newspapers, bands, and other attractions are provided, together with a large library.

The catering at public exhibitions is often of a kind to excite anything but complimentary comments on the part of the public. As a rule, the contracts are placed exclusively with liquor-selling firms, with the result that visitors have to pay exorbitant prices, and often find themselves either unable to procure non-alcoholics at all, or have to put up with fifth-rate quality. Three years ago, on the occasion of the Irish Exhibition, at Kensington, London, this execrable rule was departed from, and was far more honored in the breach than in the observance. A catering department was organized in the exhibition grounds by the Coffee Tavern Company, Limited, London, in whose handsome pavilion the crowds of visitors found every provision for their comfort, and were not slow to show their appreciation of the excellence of the arrangements and of the articles supplied. As will be seen from the illustration at the beginning of this article, the pavilion was an elegant and well-appointed building in the Moorish style of architecture, parts of it being replicas of the celebrated palace of Alhambra, the design of which has been described as "the most inventive and fanciful, but at the same time the most fitting and delicate that can be conceived." The café in question comprised a commodious saloon, fitted with an open drink bar corrugated iron roof; both it and the walls were handsomely decorated in Japanese style. The furniture was of American bent wood, the tables marble-topped, the urns of silver plate, the counter temptingly arranged with pastry and breadstuffs, the lighting, by day through abundant glass, by night by numerous albo-carbon gas burners. Lightness, tastefulness, cleanliness, good quality and low prices were the striking features of the concern.

A LONDON COFFEE HOUSE "BAR."

It has already been said that the provincial towns, as well as London, have proved the value and reaped the advantage of the Coffee House system. This is true of so many places that the mere recital of their names would make too long a list. We select two conspicuous instances, Birmingham and Leicester, the former—the great midland metropolis, "the toy shop of the world"—because there is the finest Coffee House in the country, "The Cobden" (named after the well-remembered hero of the anti-corn law crusade) where the regular hotel business has been successfully added to that of the Coffee Tavern. The Cobden fills a commanding corner on the finest street in the city, and is a palatial building—Café and Coffee House fronting the street on the ground floor, with equally fine rooms in the basement, and the hotel with many rooms above, spacious dining, reading, and commercial rooms coming first, and airy, well-furnished, comfortable bedrooms occupying the upper floors.

COBDEN HOTEL, BIRMINGHAM.

(To be continued.)

Correspondence.

POINTERS FROM A PROHIBITION PRIEST

Dear Union Signal:—Will you kindly let me say a word to the workers, to give them a little Christmas-box made out of my brain? One of the most money-making quill-drivers of our times is George Augustus Sala, and what is G. A. S. but scissors and paste and a good index? Now I will let go the index and the paste, but the scissors, no! All friends of temperance should read their papers with scissors in hand, to cut out the good things and read them for those they meet in street cars, stores, offices, on the way to or from church, and at meetings. I often spring a Voice editorial, or "Jangle," on a most distinguished pillar of the high license fashion, and it goes home every time. The whole bulky paper, even the smallest sized temperance paper, is too big for many, maybe for most men, but a tidily cut out piece they will readily listen to, or read for themselves if passed or mailed to them. The good things in our papers could be, and should be, made thus to multiply tenfold their actual effect. Sometimes the scissors should not be used until after the blue, or red, or green pencil has done its perfect work. Let an intelligent, earnest person mark the good things of a paper, and they become alive, electrized, dragging people to read them, and be haunted by them. Why do we neglect so easy, cheap and obvious a way of doing good?

I have found out that two or three times a month, if not even every week, the largest hall or church of any place can be filled with good listeners, and with only the ordinary local talent to draw them. How? By an expenditure of less than five cents' worth of paper or canvas, and inks or colored chalks. A most fascinating notice of a meeting can be made on a piece of paper the size of an ordinary newspaper page, with black and red ink, put on with a chip of wood. But colored chalks are easier to work and speedier. All over and all the time, meetings, Demorest contests, lectures by our best speakers, have only a fraction of the effect they might have, if better advertised. And any one can advertise in the way I mention, or get some one else to do it. You can sometimes find the worst fool or ruffian of a place quite ready, for nothing, when shown in rough outline what is wanted, to produce a work of art in this line. A very fine thing it is to make a good speech to five hundred people, but it is just as meritorious to send in five hundred more to hear that speech.

We can reach all the people if we get all the clergymen of a place to promise a little address, and if we advertise accordingly. For the smaller cities and the villages and all the country around excellent work can be got in, for nothing, through the local papers, by sending them for two or three or four weeks before the meeting, notices of it, or letters to the editor, or ready-made editorialets, backing or attacking the object of the meeting. But perhaps the widest advertising and reaching those most in need of it, would be to get a man or boy, "sandwiched" in between two large placards in vari-colored inks or chalks and pasted onto canvas stretched on a light frame, and have him move around through the busy streets at the times the people pass there. This, indeed, is how the base-ball clubs and other children of this world advertise their business. The huge attendance at the variety theaters is very distressing to us, but it is no more than proportioned to the size, strikingness and ubiquity of their advertisements. Fas est et ab hoste doceri.

A plan to reach the people very successfully was that devised last fall by my friend, George A. Allyn, of Madison Lake. He got together a speech-making and singing band, of four or five persons, besides myself, advertised a meeting, or two or three, according to the population, to be held in every town and village of the country, every successive night for two or three weeks, and then took his "band" around to the several places in his double-seated carriage, which he had magpied all over with strips of canvas or calico bearing some of the temperance mottoes, some drink statistics, etc., some lists of songs to be sung, some programs of the meetings, names of those who would speak, subjects, etc. The very horses were made to be heralds with their little flags set up between their ears, and compelling notice, inquiry, curiosity—"compelling them to come in." When a meeting was to be held in a place the campaign carriage drove up into it in the afternoon, drove through it, up and down the chief streets and avenues and suburbs, the band meantime singing their most catching songs. By 7:30 the halls everywhere had such audiences as were never seen there before. And there were tracts and leaflets for every one, as there ought to be at every meeting.

During the coming year I wish to attend and speak at all the meetings I can possibly get to, and always at no cost to any one but myself. So whether the meeting is got up by a W. C. T. U., or Sons of Temperance, or Templars, or a Prohibition club, or any other body, I would like very much to be invited in good time. If I can't go in person, I'll send an excuse that could be read by some one for the audience, and might say as much as I should if present, and maybe say it better. Meantime whether I am to be at the meeting in body, or only in letter and in spirit, there would be nothing wrong in printing in large red letters on the placards, "Come and hear what," and under this in larger green letters, "Father Martin Mahony, of St. Paul, Minn.," and under this again, in smaller yellow letters, "has to say on Prohibition." Doubtless many would come, just for that, and whether I were there or not, they would hear what I have to say; and when I could not be thus present I would do the next thing—send along a large print of my "phiz." Is not this a hint to solve the long and often hopeless puzzle "How to reach the Catholics?" Won't the papers spread it, and the workers, women and men, and let me know somewhat of the invitations I am to get, and the number of pictures I may need?

Apropos of pictures, what a place they have in the world's and the devil's plan for reaching the people. Every saloon window, and every dead wall garnished with the heads of actors, and alas, with more than the heads, of actresses. Major Pond had contracted with "Max O'Rell" for fifty lectures, but he found that in six weeks he could hardly place him for six lectures, and he was about concluding that his Frenchman was going to be a dead loss on his hands, when something queer happened. A New York house having the sale of a book of O'Rell's sent all over the country a lot of lithographs, pictures of the author. Almost at once there began an O'Rell boom, and bids for his lectures. What more could even "Astral Bodies" do than these machine-made prints? They drew the people and drew out their cash; as, for one instance, might Catholics and others be drawn to a meeting, and more favorably impressed there by means of a print of even so poor a kind of bodily presence.

Yours sincerely,

Martin Mahony.

SUPPRESSION OF OPIUM IN CHINA.

Believing that the following letter from one of the most distinguished Chinese gentlemen in this country will interest our readers, we have asked the privilege of giving it to them:

HARTFORD, CONN., Oct. 25, 1891.

Miss Frances E. Willard, President Woman's Christian Temperance Union,

DEAR MADAM:—Since you have expressed a wish to know what I have done, and the result of my effort in the suppression of the opium traffic, I regret to say that I have done very little, and that little was without any practical results.

While at Pekin in 1883, I drew up a plan in the form of a treaty for the total extinction of the poppy cultivation both in India and China, to be executed by Great Britain and China.

The Chinese government, fearing lest such a step would lead to a third opium war, declined to take the initiative, and the plan was abandoned.

In April of this year, I noticed that the House of Commons had passed a resolution to suppress the further cultivation of the poppy in India.

The vote stood 160 against 130. Thinking that that was an auspicious moment to help on the cause, I sent a copy of my plan to my friend, the Rev. Doctor James Legge, Professor in Oxford University, and a member of the Executive Committee of the Anglo Anti-Opium Society. My letter and plan failed to reach him, and were returned to me. Meanwhile word had reached me that the resolution was, for unknown reasons, withdrawn. You will thus see how feeble my attempts were, and how unsuccessful they have been.

The situation may be briefly stated as follows: China on the one hand, is too weak and afraid to take the aggressive to assert her rights in the opium question; the British government, on the other, will not move a step to abolish its opium policy, as long as it is not forced to do so, either by British public sentiment, or by the united sentiment of the Christian world.

What a great work you have done and are still doing for temperance! Yours truly,

YUNG WING.

WOOD ALCOHOL AGAIN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Because you are law and gospel on temperance matters to so many thousands of people, I hate to see you disseminate an error broadcast over this land, though all unwittingly and with the best intentions.

In your issue of November 19 you state that you referred a subscriber's question, as to whether wood alcohol is ever used as a drink, to the Scientific American, and received the answer: "Ordinary wood alcohol is not used for drinks, unless in exceptional cases. Its offensive odor cannot be disguised, and it would be poisonous unless greatly diluted. The process of purification is expensive." With all deference to the above high authority, we claim that Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson is still higher authority. On page 53-60 of the "Ten Lectures on Alcohol," he gives a very detailed description on the "Action of Methylic Alcohol," or wood spirit. After giving its chemical properties and uses in the arts, he says: "The alcohol may be administered in the usual way, that is to say, in combination with water, hot or cold. In this way it is not unpleasant to the taste, and in one instance, as I am informed by a veteran member of my profession, this alcohol was invariably drunk by a well-known physician in preference to common alcohol. He was accustomed to make it into toddy, with water and sugar, and considered that while it was as pleasant to take as ordinary spirituous drinks, it was less injurious. I have myself, of late years, when compelled to allow the administration of alcohol, sometimes recommended this methylic lighter spirit, and I am satisfied, with better results than if the heavier or ethylic spirit had been employed; for methylic alcohol is much more rapid in its action, and much less prolonged in its effects than is common alcohol, so that it produces its effects promptly, and what is of most importance, it demands the least possible ultimate expenditure of animal force for its elimination from the body." In another place he says: "In many respects, this, the lightest and least injurious of the alcohols, resembles chloroform in the ultimate action it produces on the body."

The Scientific American says: "It would be poisonous unless greatly diluted." We know that all kinds of alcohol are poisonous, whether diluted or not. No one but a thoroughly whisky-soaked toper would think of drinking undiluted alcohol. And such have been known here, in this wood-alcohol region where I live, to drink the raw wood spirit without fatal results. Another error was in saying that "the process of purification is expensive." The wood alcohol has been divested of much of its offensive odor by the use of raw potatoes experiments made with them having been very successful.

Wood alcohol is a cheap spirit, and unless I am very much deceived by my sense of smell, the alcohol sent out by wholesale drug houses to the retail trade is largely adulterated with it.

The five or six young men, cited in your article, as having died from drinking a decoction of wood alcohol, sold them in a low-down saloon, probably died from the other ingredients of the decoction.

In the face of Dr. Richardson's article, it evidently will not do for us to plume ourselves upon the hope that the substitution of wood spirit for the alcohol distilled from grain or fruit is going to help on the cause of prohibition or of total abstinence.

MAY MORGAN MCKOON,
Long Eddy, N. Y. State Sup't Press Work.

Our President's Column.

THE PECK FAMILY.

NEW YEAR, 1892.

Notice is hereby served on this aggressive and inquisitive-minded family that on and after January 1, 1892, there will be no departments to let, and no entertainment furnished to any of its members in any white ribbon household whatsoever. The time past sufficeth wherein we have done evil, but the new year text is, "Quit your meanness," and We, Us & Co. are settled in our minds to cut the acquaintance of, all and singular, the Peck family, from this time on.

"Know all men and women by these presents, etc.," that there may be no mistake, either in or on the premises, said Peck family is hereinafter more particularly inventoried, described and set forth. Webster thus defines the family name in its original character: "To strike; to pick; to thrust against; to dig into; to peck at; to attack with petty and repeated blows; to carp at; to nag; to tease.

When a member of the Peck family is admitted to one's home, he always proves to be a bird of ill-omen. Directly the head is on one side, the cold, pointed, pitiless eyes are fastened on the nearest victim, and peck goes the sharp bill with a vim worthy of a better cause. No matter what the victim's merits, no matter how hard he or she may have tried to do better, no matter what circumstances of heredity or environment might mitigate the situation, the Peck family, in all its branches, lights down remorselessly, and gets in its work like a cross old hen or a hateful, big blue-jay.

Its appetite is like that of the ostrich family to which its relationship is close. All grists suit its crop—only so they are noxious and not nourishing. The bread of its life is made up of poor humanity's follies and foibles, failings and faults. And the worst of it is, that each one of us may at any time pass under the spell and pop up a full-fledged member of the Peck family. Lips that smiled but a moment before may pucker into the ugly beak, eyes that were gentle may take on the cold, contractile gleam, and with a mean, savage little "peck" we may perceive with disgust that we are members of the very outfit that we had just warned off our premises.

All the same, the fiat has gone forth. Away with the Pecks—beak, bill, basilisk-eyes, squawk-tongues and all! Though a right eye be plucked out, or a right-hand plume be singed, we will not harbor this mean-spirited brood in 1892. Whoever comes croaking to us with some disagreeable remark about somebody else, will get for answer, "What! the Peck family again?" or "Claw and Beak have moved away from here;" or, "Peck, peck, peck, and how much good does it do?"

We are not even going to pin-feather ourselves. We are tired of introspection. "The spring of motive" is hidden away down under the rocks of circumstance—the more we dig the muddier it gets. Looking inside one's self is looking into a miserably dark place. He who sets his own copy keeps writing worse and worse.

But WE ARE SAVED BY HOPE. This we have taken for our New Year motto. Hope is the gentlest creature outside of heaven; she is the one true Bird of Paradise. Hopeful thoughts then of everybody; of ourselves, our friends, our foes, if such we have, and most of all, supernal hopes of that great cause through which from year to year the home grows holier, and the kingdom comes of Him who said, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me."

***

The crucial question of every human heart has been thus aptly put by one of our evangelists: "Will you encourage your desire to lead a Christian life? It is not your tears, it is not your prayers, it is not your agonies that help to higher revelations of spiritual power; it is the simple question, will you surrender? When two countries are in arms against each other, no amount of regret expressed, no amount of promises of future peace are of the least avail. The question asked is this: "Will you give up your sword?" So far as we are individually concerned, God has His way wholly in the universe if He has it in our hearts. This little plot of ground that He has left us each, the realm of our free will, He only asks that we shall make it over to Him, to Him who cares for us, and thus to make it over the best way we know how is all there is of Christianity."

***

"Life is a search after power," says Emerson. Next to being, the aspiration of every normally-constructed mind is power; first, over himself; second, over the forces of nature; third, material power over humanity; fourth, the highest spiritual power over humanity.

Frances E. Willard.

Rest Cottage, Jan. 1, 1892.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The Chicago Morning News, of January 1, has an article on "Beauty in Architecture," from the pen of one of Chicago's ablest architects, Henry Ives Cobb. He has the following good words to say in regard to the Temple and its architect: "There is no question but that the public is getting educated up to the esthetic, and will require more beautiful architecture as time goes on. It is a fact, too, that the beautiful has its practical value. The last year demonstrated in several instances that in buildings which had beauty as well as height better rents were secured.

"The death of John W. Root took from Chicago a man naturally endowed with talents especially fitted for the architect's profession. His loss is best appreciated by those who regard architecture as the art of beautifying and embellishing construction as well as that of designing construction. The most beautiful high building in Chicago, the Woman's Temple, will stand as a memorial to the artist-architect who died last January."

***

The Interior (Chicago) Christmas edition is the finest holiday number of any weekly we have seen. It contains a large pen and ink sketch of the Temple, and is rather scathing in its remarks on the high sixteen and twenty story skeleton buildings now being erected in Chicago. It holds up the Temple as a model for high buildings. It says:—"Instead of resting altogether on steel columns, its weight is supported by thick and heavy stone walls which extend to the third story. It seems to have every advantage of modern construction, and it has superior merits over the skeleton buildings we have described. It reflects great credit upon that able and loyal corps of women who are resting neither night nor day until that worst foe of modern civilization shall be vanquished—is a monument to the lifework of these noble women. No bronze or marble surpass in simple grandeur this staunch, symmetrical and useful structure, and it will be a standing menace to all who under cover of the saloon attempt to poison the purity of our homes."

***

Such expressions as the above from those outside our ranks in regard to our beautiful Temple, must be extremely gratifying to all white-ribboners. It would seem as though it must set all the half-hearted ones at work, and that not a union or individual in the land that wears a white ribbon but would commence work at once, with the determination that by January, 1893, every dollar of the stock would be the property of the National W. C. T. U. This can be accomplished if all go at it without farther hesitation. Those who cannot give large sums send a two-cent stamp for a mite-box and set about to fill it during the next year; to such we will send a colored picture of the Temple. Those who desire to help the Temple and at the same time do a thorough temperance work, can send to Mrs. Carse for a Baby Band list and certificate cards which will be sent free of charge. All who secure a full band of 100 names will receive a large photogravure of the building. In an iron box in one of the turrets of the Temple, the names of the children on the Baby Band lists will be preserved for all time. If all local unions, county and district, who desire to raise $100 will send to Mrs. Carse and state their wishes, they will be supplied with a large photogravureof the T emple, and all documents pertaining to it, without cost; mite-boxes will also be sent free, the cost of postage only being charged.

***

The silver-plated models of the Temple, except the slide in the bottom, are about perfected. We have had a new die cast for this part of the model. By the middle of January we hope it will be completed and ready for shipment.

***

Mrs. Emma Miller, De Bar, S. Dakota, sends $100 in memory of her mother, Mrs. Nancy Moorhead McClelland. Hers was a life spent for others, and she stood firm for temperance when it was far from popular. Surely her name is worthy of record in Willard Hall. The W. C. T. U. of Windsor, Ill., sends $40 on a pledge of one hundred in memory of one of their number, Mrs. M. Crolt, who died last June. Mrs. Edwards writes, "Mrs. Crolt was a grand inspiration to our little band of workers. She loved the cause and the Temple, so it came to us to begin this fund with her name and benediction, as she would have liked it had she lived."

A. Walker Vale, of Webber, Kan., sends $100 in memory of his wife, Sarah Elizabeth Mills Vale, late state superintendent of peace and arbitration for the W. C. T. U. of Kansas. This noble woman rests from her labors. She has entered into the joy of the peacemaker whose rich inheritance it is, to be called a child of God.

Mrs. S. P. Berry, South Bridgeton, Me., sends $1. It was taken from her mother's, Mrs. P. Fitch's mite-box. The dear aged saint was eighty-eight years old. She was greatly interested in the Temple, and her daughter sent last May at her request for a mite-box. She was taken ill in June and died in September. Mrs. Lydia A. Strowbridge, of Cortland, N. Y., sends $5. She writes: "The money is a gift from a mother, who, eighteen years ago laid away the earthly form of her youngest son, not quite six years old. He had with his own little hands deposited the money in the bank, and it is now for the first time drawn out, to help along the great work of raising the noble Temple."

***

All money sent to the Temple should be in the form of draft, post-office and express orders or in registered letters, and should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, and sent to her at Evanston, Ill. A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 149 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, will secure a Temple mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin.

Our Children.

THE BANDS OF MERCY.

BY MRS. C. M. FAIRCHILD-ALLEN.

Listen to the childish voices,
Borne upon the air,
At the sound the earth rejoices—
Heaven seems to hear.

CHO.—Lo, the Bands of Mercy gath'ring
From the hill and vale;
List, the voice of mercy shouting
"We shall yet prevail."

Listen to their glorious orders
Breathed in accents clear:—
"Fly, ye cruel, from our borders—
Mercy draweth near.

"Lo, we lift our silken banners—
Raise our starry shield—
O'er the dumb, defenseless tenants
Of the wood and field.

"Fly, ye cruel from our borders!
Come, ye wounded, all,
Rest ye 'neath our starry banners
From the tyrant's thrall.

"We will feed the weak and hungry,
We will stay the blow,
We will guide you to the pastures
Where the waters flow."

Bless the bright-eyed children coming,
Clothed in garments white,
They shall rout the spirits roaming
In their caves of night.

With the torch of mercy glowing
'Mong the isles of Time,
They shall move in triumph, showing
Kindness is sublime.

Aurora, Ill.

CHRISTMAS IN CHICAGO.

Perhaps I ought not to have taken such a big title, for if I should tell you one-half the Christmas doings in this great city, this whole paper would not hold the story, much less the one little page "we young folks" can claim for our own.

In thousands of homes there was just such merry dancing around well-filled stockings as there was in your home; thousands of other homes where want reigns all the year were made bright and happy on this one day, by gifts given because the givers remembered what the coming of the Christ-child meant. The children in the Orphan Asylums, the Foundlings' Home, the Home for the Friendless, the many, many missions which the W. C. T. U. and the various churches sustain, were all remembered not only by gifts, but by loving words to help them understand what Christmas means.

At Bethesda Mission, in whose Sunday-school Miss Ames used to teach, Miss Hood gave Dr. Cushman money to get something for each man who comes to the gospel meeting, in memory of her promoted comrade.

For weeks before Christmas the Chicago Herald has been preparing gifts for the poor little ones whom Santa Claus forgets. It bought hundreds of dolls and asked good people to dress them. The girls who set the type for THE UNION SIGNAL, the Oak and Ivy Leaf, and The Young Crusader dressed thirty-six of these dolls, and you ought to have seen what a pretty show they made all set up in the composing room. (That is the room where the types are set, not where the pieces to be printed are composed—written, as some of you may imagine.)

The children wrote letters to Santa Claus telling him what they wanted most, and the Herald sent the presents accordingly. Nearly twenty thousand dolls, six thousand sets of little dishes, one thousand six hundred doll's carriages, and four hundred and fifty sets of doll's furniture were among the presents asked for and received by the little girls, while the boys' presents were such things as they like best.

The Daily News has for several years offered prizes for the best stories written by children; this year seven thousand four hundred and eighty-three children wrote stories, and thirty-five of them received prizes. The judges were Mrs. Governor Fifer, Mrs. Potter Palmer, and our own chieftain, Miss Willard. I am sure they had a very hard time deciding between so many stories, and presume they wished there were many more prizes to give. Indeed, I have no doubt Miss Willard wished there were as many prizes as children, for she wished to make them all happy.

The thirty-five stories were printed in the Daily News. Here is one of them written by Sadie Hendrickson, ten years old:

"WHY LITTLE CHILDREN NEVER SEE KRIS KRINGLE.

"Many years ago there lived in a village in Germany a little man whose name was Christopher Vonderheisenthaler, but who, on account of his love for the society of children, was nicknamed Kris die Kind, or Chris the Child, by the men of the town who found more pleasure in hanging around the taverns than in staying at home with their little ones. The good-natured Kris paid no attention to their jeers, but continued to associate with his chosen friends. The children all loved him, for he could tell funny stories and make them curious toys with his jackknife, and no sport seemed complete without he was with them.

"One cold winter a terrible plague broke out among the children and many of them were dying. The parents were almost distracted, and tried everything to stay the deathly plague. They finally resolved to visit an old witch who lived on the mountain side, and see if she could help them; so three of the men went to consult the witch, and after they had gained her good will she told them to place a cup of water beneath a tree that stood on the village green, and that she would walk through the place at nightfall and gather up the plague and put it in the cup; then, one of their number, brave enough to sacrifice his life for the children, should drink the contents of the cup, and his death would destroy the plague.

"Upon the return of the men great was the excitement at the tavern, where the villagers met. One father thought that the other should make the sacrifice, because he had as yet lost none of his children. The other father said this one should, for the reason that he had lost all of his and had nothing more to live for. Thus they argued until the meeting closed without any one offering to make the sacrifice.

"Kris was almost heartbroken with grief and left the tavern, caring not whither he went. In his wanderings he found himself near the tree, and saw beneath it the fatal cup. The thought struck him, why not he be the one to empty the cup? He loved life, but his playmates would soon be gone, and then his life would be valueless. Looking at the village he saw the twinkling lights where the little sufferers lay. He would save them; so, seizing the awful cup, he drained it and then sat down to await death. Soon a bright light shone around and a beautiful fairy stood before him. In a musical voice she told him 'that for his heroism he should not die, but live forever, and that she would take him to a place far up north, and give him a workshop with plenty of tools to make toys for the children, and that every Christmas eve he could bring his handiwork to them.' 'But,' said she, 'you must never let the children see you or the plague will again come upon them.'

"The next morning the children were all well, and far up in the Northland Kris die Kind, or, as we call him, Kris Kringle, works merrily away, and once a year visits the children while they are asleep, and this is why little children never see Kris Kringle."

This is a beautiful legend; it was noble in Kris die Kind to drink the cup of death and thus save the children from the plague.

But how much more beautiful is the true story of the Christ-child, born in Bethlehem, growing up and giving Himself a sacrifice, not alone for the children who loved Him, but to save even his murderers from their sins! This our Jesus did; can we help loving Him with all our hearts?

I should have told you about Christmas in Chicago last week, but we gave up your page to a memorial of one who dearly loved children. CAPTAIN MARY.

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTEST BUREAU.

[Because our boys and girls are interested in the medal contests, we give here the new rules controlling them. —ED.]

The medal contests inaugurated in New York City, April, 1886, having become a decided success, and an approved method for interesting and educating young people and listening audiences in the principles of prohibition of the liquor traffic, it has been thought best, for the purpose of placing the contests on a more permanent basis, to make some modifications of the terms for securing the Demorest medals as trophies of merit, and also to more effectively extend the gospel of prohibition.

The terms in future will be as follows:

A public meeting to be arranged, for which the recitations will form the program, which may be interspersed with music.

Three disinterested persons of mature intelligence are to be chosen to act as judges, for whom suitable blanks will be furnished. Judges are advised to avoid a tie, as but one medal can be presented at a contest.

When not less than eight young persons of either sex, between the ages of twelve and twenty-one, shall recite before an audience selections taken from either the three volumes, "From Contest to Conquest," the one adjudged to have made the best recitation will be awarded a silver medal in a satin-lined case.

When not less than eight of the silver medals are secured by as many contestants, the winners will be entitled to compete for a gold medal.

When eight or more have won gold medals, they may compete for a grand gold medal.

When eight or more have won grand gold medals, the holders may compete for a handsome gold medal studded with diamonds.

On these terms the medals will be presented by W. Jennings Demorest, free of expense.

No one having won a medal will be allowed to compete again for the same kind of medal. Two trials will be allowed to each speaker for the silver medal, but only one trial for either of the gold medals or a diamond medal. No one can receive the higher prize until the lower ones are secured. At every contest a new piece must be recited. After the silver medal is won, age will not be a bar to further competition.

Not less than eight will be entitled to speak for any of the medals. When there are less than eight contestants present, let those who are ready recite, and a different prize be given. Postpone the contest for the medal until the full class shall be prepared. Contests in any church or hall must be held not less than thirty days apart. The recitations are to be taken exclusively from the books prepared for this purpose, which can be procured at this office and of state superintendents, at 10 cents each, postpaid.

Admission tickets may be sold or a collection taken. All money above expenses may be used in local prohibition work.

The contests are designed to be educational, and it is requested that the prose matter contained in the books be given the preference for the competitions. When ordering books or medals, write your name plainly, also full address.

Circulars, recitations and medals can be obtained on application to Mrs. Charlotte F. Woodbury, General Superintendent, 10 East Fourteenth street, New York City.

HEALTHY GIRLS.

In the preparatory school of a large women's college, which is attended by many girls from all parts of the United States, the instructor in gymnastics recently said to the pupils, as they were assembled in the gymnasium:

"I wish that the girls here who are taller than their mothers would please raise their hands."

About three-fourths of all the girls present raised their hands. The average age of the pupils was about seventeen years, though some were not more than fifteen, and in some cases these girls had not yet completed their growth; and yet a considerable majority of all were larger than their mothers. The majority, too, were vigorous and healthy, and capable of long walks in the open air, and of sustained and active exercise in the gymnasium.

Within the memory of the older generation, it was "fashionable" for young women to be delicate, slender-waisted, pale and incapable of much physical exertion. Bodily robustness was discouraged, and such "calisthenics" as were in vogue were of a very weak and flimsy sort. All this reacted upon the general physical condition of women, and rendered them less vigorous and well-grown.

At the present time there are many foolish fashions, no doubt, but it is no longer unfashionable for a woman to be strong and well. Suitable kinds of athletic exercise are, on the contrary, much in vogue, and a girl who can walk ten miles without serious fatigue is admired by her companions rather than looked at askance.

This is certainly one of the respects in which the world has improved. Good exercise and plenty of life out-of-doors will not only make the women of the rising generation superior to their mothers in stature, but will make them better able to support the burdens of life, and happier in supporting them. Nor need it render them less gentle and womanly; for a healthy woman has a better basis for gentleness and unselfishness than a weak and suffering one.—Youth's Companion.

THE calendars, for 1891 may yet be made to do good service, and the skillful fingers of our L. T. L's are just the ones to put them into shape for new use. Take the stiff cardboard backs and paste upon each a bright card or two, and temperance clippings, stories, poems, etc. Then send the same to Miss Jennie Smith, Mountain Lake Park, Maryland, prepaying expressage, unless on the line of the Baltimore & Ohio road, which will send them from any of its baggage rooms free of cost. "Sister Jennie" assures us she cannot get enough of these to hang in railroad cabooses, round-houses, etc.

The Household.

WHEN THE WOMEN HAVE THEIR WAY.

BY REV. J. P. HUTCHINSON.

"The world is getting harder, and every year that goes,
But leaves its added burden to the weary weight of woes;"
So croak the human ravens and the owls that shun the light
Or mar the mellow music of the restful hours of night;—
I say the world is adding to its treasury of love
As we feel it swinging nearer to the central orb above.
We are getting more of light and warmth and giving them to-day,
But the world would still be brighter if the women had their way.

I know not what the angels call the place from which they roam,
But long to find its rest again, I think they'll call it home:
Home, sacred spot, where mother is—the safe retreat from strife
Where the children greet the parents, where the husband greets the wife;
Where the youngsters' merry voices—harmonious and sweet—
Fill up the cup of happiness and make the life complete;
And love and joy and music would have much fuller sway
Than yet they've had among us, if the women had their way.

Oh, many a home is blighted, and many a life is tossed
Upon the sea of passion—or for evermore is lost;
Oh, many a home is wrecked upon the callous cliffs that rise
Above the waves, and on the rocks concealed from watchful eyes;
But these cliffs should all be blasted from the terror-striking shore
And the rocks be dynamited from their beds for evermore;
And the home-barks proudly sailing would their bright life-flags display;—
Life would be a pleasant voyage—if the women had their way.

Every man should have employment, and the kind of work to do,
In which his mind delighted and his eyes desired to view;
Not to toil a slave degraded but to labor as a man,
Transforming work to worship while he does the best he can—
And worth, not wealth, should be the gauge by which to view the life,
For after all the private may be bravest in the strife,
Tho' little honor he obtains in the victorious day;—
I think it would be different if the women had their way.

The schools would be well furnished with all the children need,
And the bells that ring for school-hours would be joy bells indeed;
And the churches would be open, not one day out of seven,
But every day—for some good act or thought,—for earth or heaven,
The poor be helped, the suffering soothed, the hungry satisfied,
The Christ be followed every day and God be glorified,
And every joyous soul would sing and every heart would pray—
Oh, happier far the world would be if the women had their way.

And I believe the time is near when politics shall be Made purer by the women whom at the polls we'll see,—
For where's the boss would dare approach the true of womankind,
To tell her how she has to vote when she's made up her mind!
Her ballot will be to the end that truth and right may rule
And purity's white flag will wave o'er church and home and school;
Men have misruled for ages—have had undisputed sway—
Let the women have their innings—let the women have their way.

We boast of our religion, yet we quarrel over creeds,
And notice not Christ's suffering ones, nor satisfy their needs,
We bring from Nature's depths the strange agencies of joy
And use them, as the devil would, to injure and destroy.
When, O Christ, shalt Thou be leader? When shall Thy great law of love Prevail upon this earth of ours as it prevails above?
We get wearied of the waiting but we see the dawn of day,
Soon we'd have its noontide glory if the women had their way.

Clinton, Ind.

A NEW IDEA AND A BRIGHT ONE.

A little group of Christian workers whose homes are in one of Boston's many beautiful suburbs, have set moving a circle which promises to exceed the equator, both in the measure of its circumference and in the extent of its influence.

In the autumn of 1890 a little book by Professor Drummond was mailed by the present secretary of the circle to a distant friend with the instruction to "keep it moving," and requesting that each reader write his or her name on one of its pages, the last person doing so to return the book to the original sender. The book was received in Boston on October 5, 1891, and contained the names and addresses of twenty-two readers. It has seen a good deal of the world and is a treasure which is prized highly. Out of this simple incident has grown the Good Tidings Circle.

It is a beautiful organization. Its very simplicity is its charm. It offers its members a pleasing opportunity of carrying "good tidings of great joy" to an ever-widening circle, not only helping, but what is even better, affording each person helped the privilege of helping others.

You become a circumference member of the Circle when you have read one of its books, written your name and address on one of the pages of the book, and placed it in the hand of some other person. When the circle is complete the twentieth circumference member mails the book to the central office. The twenty members forming the circle become centers and each receives a new book with which to form a new circle. The old book is returned by the secretary to the center member whose name appears upon it. You read your new book, enter your name as center member, and mail it, say to a friend in San Francisco. This friend reads the book, enters his name and address and hands it to another friend, and he to another. The book finds its way perhaps to St. Paul, from there to Chicago, and from there to Montreal. In two or three months it has your name and address as center, and the addresses of twenty circumference members. The twentieth returns the book to the central office. Each person whose name appears upon it at once becomes a new center and receives a free copy of a new book. By the aid of the central Circle it is possible for one person to carry good tidings to the hearts of eight thousand persons in one year.

The Circle depends for its support upon the voluntary contributions of its members. The good tidings of the Master are "without money and without price." The Circle is not burdened with organization and has no initiation fees or salaried officials. Its chief expense is for the books sent out, and these will continue to be the very best its treasury can afford.

Members are allowed to write any "good tidings" they wish upon their own pages, or to call attention to any passages of the book which seem specially important. These original thoughts and suggestions of readers add much interest to the work and enhance the value of the book. The book which is just now being mailed to center members is by Dr. Lyman Abbott, and is entitled "How to Become a Christian." We doubt if any more helpful book of this character was ever written.

Any Christian worker anywhere may become a center member direct by sending fifty cents to Good Tidings Circle, Newton, Mass. He or she will receive by return mail a book with which to start a circle of twenty. The "grain of mustard seed" planted in this simple way may grow to be a great fruit-bearing tree.

"A CENTER."

A GREAT deal of so-called spiritual conflict is simply spiritual rebellion.—Hannah Whitall Smith.

WORDS TO THE WISE—LUCY.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

"You remember, girls," said Aunt 'Phosie, "about the bit of green vine that somehow got life enough from under the pavements of that gloomy back-yard there in the city, all filled in with dirt-barrels and ash-boxes and done-with things, and all walled in with high houses, this little thread o' green somehow got life enough to grow and climb, and it quite livened up the yard. You know I said it made me think of Lucy, a spinster like myself—though every way superior—who had a home allowed her partly in charity—though she more'n paid for her keep—in a dolesome sort of family, always complainin', and bickerin', and snappin' one another up, and how Lucy kept cheerful and always had a smile and a pleasant word for everybody. She made me think of the thread o' green in the yard, and she puzzled me same as that one, for both of 'em seemed to be in unlikely places, and her thread o' green seemed as if it could not come from anything to be seen around her, and where could it come from?

"One day I came across this passage, 'Every one of us has a root of divine life to grow from,' and I surmised this might have something to do with the matter, but did not like to put it right to her—talkin' about herself—so I asked her if she believed it, and she said she did believe it. Then I said,

"'And why don't we all, every one, grow from it?' She said in reply, with her pleasant smile, that she supposed we put something in the way of its growing.

"'And what do we put there?' I asked her. Lucy, she sat meditatin' a few moments, at the first of it in a sober kind of way, but bimebye a smile spread over her countenance, and she looked up at me with that funny, mischievous look she uses sometimes, and said she,

"'Phosie, I think that what we put in the way is self. Self has no idee of bashfulness. 'Tis never one mite afraid to put itself forward and stand right up in front, and has no more thought of gettin' out o' the way than a post; and it has such a killin' influence that it stops off whatever is a-tryin' to grow up from that root of divine life, you speak of.'

"'Now stop, Lucy,' said I, 'and tell me just what you mean. How does it stand in the way and hinder people from being pleasant and good-natured under tryin' circumstances, as, for instance, when anybody is cross to us, and finds fault with us, or is impudent to us, or gets mad at us, or looks down on us, or shows a bad spirit to us?'

"Said Lucy, in answer, 'You know, 'Phosie, that one name of self is me. Now the circumstances you speak of would not be tryin' if this me could be shoved way back out o' sight and mind. You know how it is; when people do things o' that sort we keep me right in front. She is cross to me; she finds fault with me; is impudent to me; gets mad with me; looks down on me; shows a bad spirit to me. Now if the me could be dropped then the case would stand this way: She is cross; she finds fault; she is impudent; gets mad; looks down; shows a bad spirit. This would put you—if it were your case—entirely out of the matter, as indeed, you really would be, for another's crossness is not yours; her faultfinding is not yours, it is not you who gets mad or looks down, or shows a bad spirit, and because these are shown toward you does not change you one mite. We are just what we are. We ourselves are the only ones who can really touch and injure ourselves.

"'I do believe,' continued Lucy, 'that one way we do this injury is by allowin' the me or self to come into bad states o' mind by being touched by other people's bad states o' mind. We ought to hold ourselves untouched, no matter if the bad spirit and other things are shown towards us. 'Treat everybody well' is a sentence puttin' duty in three plain words, and the second word must take in any who make themselves disagreeable to us in the ways you mentioned. For their states of mind are no concern of ours, and if people show badness to us their badness is no more our affair than if it were shown to somebody else, and we have no call to treat them other than well. Of course, 'Phosie, you wouldn't go for to say that only good people should be treated well. Where should we all be in such a case?' And Lucy laughed and went on to explain 'deny self' in a way I never thought of before, and still it seems a good way of looking at it."

Belmont, Mass.

THE first time I read an excellent book, it is to me just as if I had gained a new friend; when I read over a book I have perused before, it resembles the meeting with an old one.—Oliver Goldsmith.

CHRIST was set forth as a stumbling stone, but the figure of a stairway equally applies to Him, for every step is something over which we either stumble, or by which we ascend.—Elizabeth J. Scovel.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

EDITORS.
MARY ALLEN WEST, JULIA A. AMES.
ASSOCIATE.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
President—MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, 149 Ashland Boulvd., Chicago.
Treasurer—MRS. L. A. HAGANS Elmhurst, Ill.
Secretary—MARY ALLEN WEST, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD Evanston, Ill.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MISS ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
MRS IRA LEWIS, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Stroudwater Me
MRS A. H. CHRISTENSEN, Beaufort, S. C
MRS. L D CARHART Marion, Iowa.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec,—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

Thou crownest the year with thy goodness.—Ps. 65 11.

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW.

For the first time 1892 replaces 1891 in THE UNION SIGNAL'S heading. Looking back through the year just closed we find it full of that which makes it richer in all really constituting life than "a cycle of Cathay." Thank God it has not been marked by what used to be the staple of history—great wars; yet it has been marked by great commotions, physical, political, spiritual. And it is a cause of thanksgiving, as showing the upward movement of civilization, that many grievances which half a century ago would have been absolutely sure to be considered sufficient cause of war, have this year been settled by peaceful arbitration.

"Thou crownest the year with thy goodness," was never more apparent than in America in 1891. Unprecedented crops bless all our farms, with the single exception of the cotton fields, and they have yielded an average increase; commercial prosperity has followed this outpouring of the earth's largess, and there is no need that any man, woman or little child in America should go hungry.

The brightness of this background throws into strong relief the shadows of the picture made by starving miners, by thousands of unemployed men in great cities whose wives and children cry for bread; while the liquor traffic is reaping a harvest of a thousand million dollars annually.

Our great prosperity seems to have led to great wickedness. Never within our recollection has any year showed such a carnival of crime. Especially is this noticeable regarding crimes against women and children. In each daily paper is a sickening array of wife murders and child beatings, of maidens murdered because they refused to join their fortunes to those of whatever scamp asked them to. Nor are these atrocities confined to the lower stratum of society; divorce courts frequently give glimpses into princely houses, on both sides the water, in which a husband's brutality wreaks itself on his defenseless wife and children. Almost without exception the inciting causes, whether in crowded tenement house or lordly palace, are the same—drink, jealousy and tobacco.

A cyclone of gambling has swept over Christendom, affecting alike prince and peasant, the leaders on Wall street and the gamins in the alley. Accompanying this, often closely allied to the drink and the gambling, has been an unprecedented number of suicides The year has also been marked by great defalcations, as witnessed the Spring Garden and the Keystone banks of Philadelphia, and the Ninth National of New York. Gambling, either with cards or stocks usually lies at the bottom of defalcations.

In many lands Nature's convulsions have equaled those of the financial world, floods, cyclones, earthquakes having marked the year 1891. Many read in these "signs of the times" symbols of the coming of the Son of Man.

How this may be we know not; we do know that the year has been one of physical and spiritual upheavals, of great unrest among the nations. "The peace of Europe" seems to tremble in the balance which a breath may turn; the whole continent seems a huge tinder-box which a careless spark may cause to burst out into the red flame of war. South American countries have showed more than their usual restlessness. China is in a ferment, and Japan has experienced something of a reaction from her wonderful progress in Occidental civilization.

In America the heads of money kings rest quite as uneasily as do always those "that wear a crown;" the aforetime blind war of labor against capital is slowly becoming systematized and based on principles which command respect, and at the same time foretell a struggle to the death. Everywhere is sign of changes, present or prospective.

What do all these changes, this great unrest of nations portend? Are they signs of advancing or of retrograding civilization? The latter, we firmly believe. Anything is better, in either individual or national life than stagnation. This unrest of men and of nations shows the waking up of thought, the grappling, often blindly, with the underlying principles of great social reforms. Blind Samson, groping for the pillars, pulled them down, and himself perished in the ruin he had wrought; but the Philistines were conquered, and Israel freed from their yoke.

Social and economic reforms have been more thoroughly discussed and in more diversified circles than ever before; we expect these discussions in religious and philanthropic convocations; we did not expect to hear the strongest kind of temperance from the lips of royalty. Yet this is just what the young Emperor of Germany has given us. Nor are his thoughts confined to the temperance reform; they have wrought out practical reform in the relations of mistress and maid. For the past two or three years in Germany, every servant keeps a little book, into which each week, her mistress must paste a stamp purchased by her from government for this very purpose. As each stamp bears the mistress' signature, the little book becomes the most accurate and valuable of references. When old age or sickness incapacitates the servant for labor, government redeems the stamps which thus provide a pension for the worn-out servant, paid by her old employers. Imagine, if you can, Charles the Fifth or Napoleon Bonaparte leaving their game of kingdoms to study out this plan for the good of housemaids. "The world do move."

Even those blots upon the statesmanship of this country, the issuing of the Brewers' Circular by Secretary of State Blaine, and the neglect of the Senate to ratify the Brussels treaty, may help in the great uplift of public sentiment through the rebound of indignation aroused by these national disgraces. The failure of President Harrison to make one reference to the liquor traffic in his message, tends in the same direction. We have had multiplied proofs of the domination of Congress by Louis Schade and his clients, the National Liquor Dealers' Association, so many indeed, that national conscience seems case hardened thereby; when evidence of this domination is seen in the White House and in the head of our Diplomatic Circle, it may well make thoughtful patriots pause and think whereunto this thing will grow.

The positive side marks many points on the ascending scale. Foremost stands the magnificent fight made by Governor Nichols and the good people of Louisiana against the lottery abomination, ably seconded by Postmaster-General Wanamaker. The purging of the mails from lottery circulars shows what can be done, and we trust prefigures what will be done in regard to impure literature. A significant pointer is the fact that so many great gatherings of labor men, Farmers' Alliances, Horse Breeders' Associations, Swine Breeders' Associations, railroad men, and other secular organizations of that kind held during the past summer and fall, declared against Sunday opening of the World's Fair. It goes without saying that all religious and temperance organizations have made the same record; we deem it full of significance that other organizations should also do so.

The peaceful coming together of the nations to plan for the victories of peace instead of war, is a sign and a promise of progress. The North and the South have so commingled as to tread Mason and Dixon's line out of sight; the Pan-Republic Congress, the Congregational Ecumenical in London, the Methodist Ecumenical in Washington, International Medical, and other congresses, and our own World's Convention, bring minds, foreign, yet friendly, into close conference, dissipating prejudice and hastening the perfected ideal of the "federation of the world."

An omen of good is the fact that thirty-three states of this union have adopted some form of the Australian or secret ballot, thus purging polling places of bummers and ward politicians. The fact that the new system will be in operation in all of the doubtful states at the next Presidential election will have much to do with the result, as under it intimidation of voters, and safe placing of "blocks of five" will be difficult or impossible.

Whatever may be the stand taken by the Commissioners of the Columbian Exposition on great moral questions, none can doubt the value of the work being accomplished by the World's Congress Auxiliary, under leadership of that noble Christian man, Charles C. Bonney. Its object is to crystallize thought along all lines that tend toward the betterment of humanity. All forms of Christianity here meet and consult regarding the extension of Christ's kingdom, not each one's peculiar sect. All temperance organizations, all educational forces, labor organizations, and those for government and law reform, send their choicest representatives to confer together. Such conferences cannot help bringing about greater unity and effectiveness into methods of work in religion, philanthropy, social economics, education, literature, journalism, medicine, law and the industries.

The opening year brings the great quadrennial struggle for political supremacy, and never did a presidential year open upon a more mixed situation. A Republican President and an overwhelmingly Democratic House; several of the "great states" in an equally divided condition; the feeling so strong as to form the basis of sharp party dissension that the President and his Chief of Cabinet are rival candidates, and a larger number than usual of states rated as "doubtful"—all these things combine to make a "mixed situation which is at once a blessing and a bane to political journalists, giving them endless themes to write upon, and driving them frantic to know how to write thereon without harm to "our party."

Meanwhile we look calmly on, interested in the skirmish only so far as it relates to the principles we hold dear. And the situation is full of promise for success of those principles, During the past four years both of the great parties have controlled government, state and national; each has had the opportunity to show what it wished to do for the cause of temperance and neither has done anything.

Political parties may succeed in fooling "all the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time," but they cannot fool all the people all of the time. Slow-thinking, ox-eyed, though the Christian voters have shown themselves to be, their range of vision cannot always remain restricted to the narrow circle of party. All over the land thinking men are coming to realize the fact, that whether the party platform declares against sumptuary legislation or in sympathy with proper methods of temperance reform, it makes no difference so long as both yield implicit obedience to the rum power. The industrial classes who voted with the Republicans because high tariff promised high wages, or with the Democrats because of other promises, have found the hard fact to be that one set of promises was as specious as the other, and they will not be caught again with the same sort of chaff. Hence there is a great breaking away from old party lines, a multiplication of parties and of issues.

Meanwhile, slowly but surely, the masses are becoming permeated with the truth, that back of all labor questions lies the drink question; that the most oppressive monopoly existing is the liquor traffic; that the first concern of all good government is the protection of the home, and they are slowly swinging round to the position that any reform party to be effective, must stand for the protection of the home, and for throttling the liquor monopoly.

Meanwhile the liquor traffic is helping on this conviction by its own high-handed doings. When saloons are seen to be the hot-beds in which germinate all manner of crime, the rallying points and training ground of anarchists; when they monopolize caucuses, and bulldoze voters; when the secretary of a liquor dealers' association attempts to blow up a distillery which refuses to come into its "trust"; when foreign capital is found to be buying up all the distilleries in the country, thus transferring their vast financial and political power to aliens, patriots begin to open their eyes to the dangers which threaten the nation from the liquor power.

All these things point to the disintegration of old political parties, and reorganization upon different lines. The resultant may not be great accessions to the Prohibition Party or the People's Party, but it will be some party having the living issues of prohibition and justice to the industrial classes as its center of crystallization. This may not come in 1892, it will come in 1896.

BARMAIDS IN NEW YORK.

When a resolution condemning the introduction of the English system of barmaids in New York was presented to the National Convention at Boston, it was met by the assertion that its passage was unnecessary, since the project had been abandoned. We wish this were true; but later developments tend to prove that it is not. A gentleman of New York, whose testimony is unimpeachable, both from his personal character and because of his facilities for ascertaining the facts in the case, assures us that there are barmaids in New York to-day.

The New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune substantiates the statement. He declares that Major Hayward's experiment in importing English barmaids for his down-town, Broadway saloon has proved such a success that he has ordered more from London to reinforce the four originally imported. He has started two more saloons, one near the foot of Broadway, the other uptown, into which he proposes to put the barmaids. He says: "The American drinking public takes very kindly to the barmaid. Drinkers seem to find an additional excellence in drink served by fair hands, and the bar receipts have increased largely since the barmaids arrived."

Are American women made of the stuff to sit still and see this degradation of womanhood go on without such a protest as shall shake the very foundation of things? What this degradation is has been told most eloquently by Lady Henry Somerset. In an article in the Chicago Tribune on New York's dark places, she says the degradation of London is deeper than that of New York, because of the greater prevalence of drinking among women in the old country, and this degradation of women she traces in large measure to the English barmaid system.

The barmaid system is the crowning curse of the liquor traffic in London; it is an added attraction by which the gin palaces lure more souls to destruction; it is ruin to the barmaids themselves, and lowers the standard of morality of the entire class of working girls. It debauches girlhood, making its beauty and freshness to pander to man's corrupt appetites. It is a device of the evil one, whose servants delight to do his bidding, and "steal the livery of heaven to serve the devil in."

This system is fastened upon London; God helping us, it shall never be fastened upon New York or any other American city. Here it is in its infancy, and we can throttle it. If the 200,000 members of the W. C. T. U. are not able to rescue the four barmaids of New York from their chosen degradation, and prevent others from sinking to a like level, we have 200,000 brothers who will help us for the love they bear their own pure young daughters, and through them feel for all girlhood. The first thing the Australian W. C. T. U. did after its organization was to suppress the barmaid system in Melbourne; it was more strongly entrenched there than it is here, as yet, and the Australian W. C. T. U. was but a little band compared with the American.

How can these barmaids be brought here in the face of our laws against imported labor? If those laws are strong enough to exclude not only the Chinese laborers, for whose especial benefit they were enacted, but merchants, musicians, ministers and professors of colleges, how comes it that barmaids slip through its meshes? This is a matter which needs looking into.

A correspondent writing to Miss Willard urges that at once the W. C. T. U. send a committee to Albany with a bill making the punishment six months imprisonment at hard labor for the first offense of introducing women as barmaids into the depraving surroundings of the saloon and the hotel and tavern bars, and twelve months for the second offense. She believes that American legislatures should at once be appealed to by the W. C. T. U. to check this new proposed avenue of degradation and ruin for America's working women.

We make the plea in behalf of American girlhood; degradation of woman anywhere means possible degradation everywhere. At first barmaids are foreigners, girls so accustomed to the type in their own lands that they do not realize its degradation from the American point of view. They may begin as barmaids, but our American born girls, in this tremendous struggle for existence among the laboring classes, will soon yield to the enticements of this new calling which promises an easy and pleasant way of earning a living, and having entered upon this life will swiftly go from bad to worse.

If the vast army of saloon-keepers in this land decide that barmaids will draw better than bartenders of their own sex, those barmaids they will have—and if the twenty or thirty millions of Great Britain and Ireland require 70,000 barmaids, as the Chicago Tribune states, the sixty millions of our land will require twice seventy thousand—and there we shall have in ten years another great army of brazen, besotted women to swell the ranks already rushing on to death. We wonder if the Mrs. Lynn Lintons who are so horrified at the "wild women" that are consecrating time, money, talent, everything to the service of their kind, can spare one thought to this army of women, wild, not with philanthropy, but with drink? The drinking of the women in Great Britain is the despair of temperance philanthropists there, it will soon become the despair of American philanthropists if the barmaid is allowed to secure a footing here.

Mrs. M. Fay Pearce, author of "Co-operative Housekeeping," writing on this subject, says: "At this, to my apprehension, momentous crisis, let women of influence cry to the manhood of this nation, to bar forever out of America the barmaid, whether she be native or foreign born. On our soil she has a right to be defended against degradation and wrong. On our soil she should be protected against herself. Her love of freedom, of excitement, of display, of the society of the opposite sex, instincts and impulses which every normal girl feels, must not be suffered to carry her, as they surely will, into this occupation, if it is opened and made attractive to her. The life of the working girl is too full of self-denial and gloom for her not to be seduced into one of such gayety and glitter and fun, if it be offered her with all its extra chances for fees and for fun. The thing will spread like wild-fire, as all evil things do in this country. Do you not remember the beginning of the concert saloons during the war? Now those horrors are spread all over the country,—wretched, half-dressed women singing, and selling drinks. What, then, must and will be the popularity among working girls of this comparatively respectable employment?"

We have too much faith in both American manhood and womanhood to believe that this evil upas tree will be allowed to take root in American soil, to grow and spread its deadly blight upon what is freshest and fairest. The occasion calls for united action all along the lines. Especially does it call for action upon the part of our Y's, the Heaven-appointed custodians of the honor of girlhood.

Special Difficulties.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including Wine and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

The pressure upon our columns has prevented, for some time, giving this department the space it deserves. Many of the questions asked have been answered privately, for the benefit of the individual; those of general interest are repeated here.

QUERY.—Is the convention (State) the highest authority upon a subject, or can the executive committee reverse or disregard its action?

ANSWER.—The convention certainly outranks any of its committees; it is the source whence they derive their powers. No committee can therefore reverse its action unless especial power has been granted it to do so. At the close of a convention it is customary to vote to refer all unfinished business to the executive committee; this does not, in my judgment, confer power to undo actions taken by the convention, as that is finished, not unfinished business.

Here is a special difficulty of great magnitude, needing the united wisdom of the W. C. T. U. to solve:

At the grand convention in Boston, I was asked to assist the committee for supplying the pulpits of Boston and vicinity with speakers for the intervening Sabbath. Those only who have heretofore served on a similar committee, can form any idea of the magnitude of the undertaking. For three days the applications kept coming in, increasing in number and urgency as the time wore on. Of course every minister wanted for his particular pulpit a star of the first magnitude. This was a natural and laudable ambition, but stars of the first magnitude are limited in number, and are unable to occupy two places at one and the same time. But it was not of the difficulties in general which beset the perplexed committee of which I wish to speak, but one difficulty did assert itself which I think deserves the consideration of the white-ribbon women as a whole. This it is:

Of course it was absolutely impossible, except in rare instances, to make assignments which would not require the use of public conveyances on the Sabbath, either street car or steam car. Some of the ladies upon being consulted, at once said: "Oh, I cannot go, if I have to take the train on the Sabbath!"

Now Boston, although she is very humble when she thinks of her great, big, lusty, young sister of the "Prairie State"—of course I mean Chicago—yet one cannot succeed in reaching the outermost rim of the Hub, starting from Tremont Temple, without a ride of half-a-dozen miles at least, and then the calls came from outlying cities and towns—which, let me say, if Boston had been Chicago she would have swallowed up long ago, if only to make herself look big—and to reach these places Sunday trains and Sunday street cars must be brought into requisition. "But," said one lady, "how can I go? I am on the committee for Sabbath observance!"

There was, however, no other way for it. If private conveyances were employed, that is, if a carriage from a livery stable were secured, would this be any better? Is it any better to keep a public stable open on Sunday, than to run street cars and steam cars? There are cities in the world where there are no street cars running on Sunday, and I take it no steam cars likewise, and I do not know how the people get on without them; but we can dispense with a good many things which we are accustomed to deem necessities, when we have to. Now, what is best to do in this matter should the exigency arise again, as it is like to do?

Is it wrong to patronize the steam cars on Sunday for any purpose? for so good a purpose as the dissemination of truth?

Is it wrong in principle to patronize the street cars on Sunday? Do not the latter especially seem to be a necessity?

At the yearly meeting of the white ribbon clans from all over the country, would it not be impossible to respond to the demand of the ministers in the various churches for speakers to lay the work of the great union before their people, were public conveyances on the Sabbath to be abjured? Can we have any light on this subject in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL? E. F. M.

The Watch-Tower.

Miss Florence Balgarnie will be in Chicago and vicinity from January 26 to February 6, and local unions who would like to have a meeting addressed by this gifted young Englishwoman may apply to her, care of R. Somerville, 195 South Clark St., Chicago.

***

In his book, "The People I've Smiled With," Marshall P. Wilder, says: "Some of my most successful work has been in the line of after-dinner speeches, and I have been asked how I could go through ten or twelve courses of food, and six or eight different kinds of wine, and then have any head on my shoulders. The answer is very easy—I don't. I never drink wine or any other kind of liquor . . . I don't want to give away any other man's business secrets, but I venture to say that the best after-dinner speakers in the United States are the most moderate diners. If you will cast your eye at the table in front of some man at a big dinner who gets up and makes a capital speech, you will probably see one of two things—either that all his glasses are turned upside down or that they are entirely full. In other words, he has been drinking little or nothing."

***

Dr. L. C. Purington, of Dorchester, Mass., has been made National Superintendent of franchise. Dr. Purington was one of the chief members of the Central W. C. T. U. when Miss Willard became President in 1874. She is a graduate of Mt. Holyoke College and of Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago,—a strong, accomplished woman. This department has entered on a wider career by means of her appointment, with Alice Stone Blackwell as her associate.

***

A friend of Mrs. Warner Snoad whose sweet poems have often graced THE UNION SIGNAL, writes: "The thought strikes me that you may like to hear a little about our beloved President (of the Women's Progressive Society). I am not going to ask her permission, nor even tell her a word about it till the letter is gone. Mrs. Snoad's chief work was a few years ago among the girls of London, primarily working girls; her pamphlet, 'Our Working Girls,' brought in large sums of money, and interested most of the powerful philanthropists of the day, the late Lord Shaftesbury, Samuel Morley and others. Then she worked as only a true woman can amongst the fallen—very, very quietly, as at that time she was thought too young to take any public part in such matters. Then almost single-handed, she founded a home for worn-out governesses and her pen has kept it going for eight years.

"Numberless charities she has helped. Last year a pamphlet of hers cleared the Central London Opthalmic Hospital from debt. Just now she has started a cooking kitchen for the poor of Battersea in conjunction with Mrs. Neville, wife of the Member of Parliament for Liverpool. Mrs. Snoad's biography will be in Sampson Low's new work 'Women of the Time.' She has written on most subjects connected with women, and is a woman's woman to the core without being extreme, and a favorite with all, both men and women, who know her personally. Although still a young woman, of late years Mrs. Snoad has been a complete invalid. She broke down from overwork. She can now do very little and is quite prevented from speaking or going into public; for the last seven years she has been one of your 'temperance women' as I am also."

***

Miss Willard authorizes the following: The statement that Lady Henry Somerset leases property inn holders is a mistake. When she came into her property, there were a few long leases that she could not control, but under no circumstances would she rent her buildings for liquor traffic purposes.

***

Mrs. Tel Sono, of Tokio, Japan, has addressed audiences in a number of churches in Boston and vicinity during the past two months. Tel Sono comes from a cultivated high caste Japanese family. She was carefully educated and became the first woman lawyer in the empire. She determined to devote her life to the elevation of women in her country, and came to America four years ago to solve the problem. Soon after her arrival in California, the bank in which her funds were placed failed, and she was reduced to serious straits. She bravely overcame obstacles, learned the English language, and became instructor of Japanese in Mrs. Osborn's Missionary Training Institute, in Brooklyn, N. Y. The story of her life is charmingly told by herself in a little volume, entitled "Growing up in Japan." She is now collecting funds to establish a Christian school for high caste girls in Japan. Contributions toward this worthy purpose are received by Mrs. A. J. Gordon, Boston.

ON DUTY.

News from the Field.

STATE REPORTERS.

Alabama—Mrs. Jennie B. Gerald, Montgomery.
Arizona—Mrs. L. C. Hughes, Tucson.
Arkansas—Mrs. F. L. Sutton, 315½ W. Markham street, Little Rock.
California—Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, Oakland.
California (Southern)—Mrs. Mary E. Garbutt, Temperance Temple, Los Angeles.
Carolina (N.)—Miss Bettie D. Caldwell, Greensboro.
Carolina (S.)—Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Charleston.
Colorado—Mrs. S. L. Teetor, Denver.
Connecticut—Miss M. Belle Smith, Rockfall.
Dakota (North)—Miss Addie M. Kinnear, Fargo.
Dakota (South)—Mrs. Irene G. Adams, Webster.
Delaware—Miss Annie Sutton, Smyrna.
District of Columbia—Miss Lizzie Kessler, 802 North I street, Washington.
Florida—Mrs. N. B. Irwin, Jacksonville.
Georgia—
Idaho—Mrs. Mary E. McGee, Nampa.
Illinois—Mrs. G. H. Read, 412 E. North street, Bloomington.
Indiana—Miss Sadie B. Whistler, Terre Haute.
Indian Territory—Mrs. Sarah Ford Crosby, Muscogee
Iowa—Mrs. Clara P. White, Volga.
Kansas—Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, Le Roy.
Kentucky—
Louisiana—Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, Napoleon Ave., New Orleans.
Maine—Miss Mary French, Auburn.
Maryland—Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, Mt. Washington.
Massachusetts—Miss Emma W. Bumstead, 171 Tremont St., Boston.
Michigan—Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint.
Minnesota—Mrs. Amy B. Green, 2208 6½ avenue, Minneapolis.
Mississippi—Mrs. Lena M. Hobbs, Box 534, Brookhaven.
Missouri—Mrs. Mary E. Jones, Humansville.
Montana—Mrs. W. W. Wylie, Bozeman.
Nebraska.—Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock, Beatrice.
Nevada—Mrs. Lena M. Westlake, Reno.
New Hampshire—Mrs. F. H. Bailey, Hopkinton.
New Jersey—
New Mexico—Mrs. Ada Morley Jarrett, Socorro.
New York—Mrs. Frances Graham, Lockport.
Ohio—Miss Hannah A. Foster, Berea.
Oklahoma—Mrs. Sue Brown, Oklahoma City.
Oregon—Mrs. L. A. Nash, Corvallis.
Pennsylvania—Mrs. Bertha Howe, Bradford.
Rhode Island—Miss Miriam Earle, Valley Falls.
Tennessee—Mrs. T. P. Holman, Fayetteville.
Texas—Mrs. Elizabeth Strong Tracy, Houston.
Utah—Miss Mary Howard Nutting, 2324 Madison Ave., Ogden.
Vermont—Mrs. Clinton Smith, Middlebury.
Virginia—Mrs. M. H. Whitehead, Richmond.
Virginia (W.)—Mrs. Mary Cartwright, 1007 Main St., Wheeling.
Washington (East)—Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, Cheney.
Washington (West)—Mrs. J. W. Lee, Tacoma.
Wisconsin—Mrs. Maria F. Hanchette, 322 W. Washington Ave. Madison.
Wyoming—Mrs. Therese A. Jenkins, Cheyenne.

NEW YORK.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

We have had a "moving scene" in New York since my last letter was sent to THE UNION SIGNAL, and our state headquarters will now be found at 30 West 23d street, instead of 10 East 14th street. Miss Dailey, our efficient office secretary, is settled and ready for housekeeping again, and reports herself well pleased with the change. Through the efforts of Mrs. Burt, a pretty carpet has been added to our belongings, and we congratulate ourselves on having a homelike place in which to welcome all who call, and a cordial invitation is extended to friends in general to "walk into our parlor."

A splendid meeting was held in New York City on November 29, at which Lady Henry Somerset and Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith were present, and addressed a large audience. The meeting was a success in every way.

The work is moving forward and quite a number of new unions have been organized since our state convention, with "more to follow." A report comes from Westchester county of their thirteenth annual convention at Mount Vernon, and they are justly proud of the fact that the meeting was held in "Willard Hall," a fine and commodious building, erected and owned by the Mount Vernon W. C. T. U. Fifty-one responded to the roll-call, and encouraging reports were listened to. The county has a membership of 581. Over 1,700 children have been pledged and $9,575 raised during the year for all purposes.

The Silver Lake quartette were present and added much to the interest of the meeting, while all were pleased with the evening address by Mrs. Stanton Cady, of Sing Sing, lately returned from her Alaska trip. A generous collection was taken, and $25 raised to make the secretary a life member to the state. The resolutions passed are worthy of more than a passing notice, but space is limited.

Oswego county held its fourteenth annual convention in the village of Mexico, December 2 and 3. Forty delegates were present, and many visitors. Five minute reports from superintendents showed advancement along the different lines. The membership has more than doubled in the last two years. Several excellent papers were read, after which officers were elected. Mrs. Stone, who has served as county president so faithfully, was obliged to rest from the labor for the coming year because of ill health, and a new president, Mrs. A. A. Maltby, was elected. Many pleasant features were enjoyed, and the convention was voted one of the most enthusiastic and harmonious ever held in the county.

Chautauqua county met at Forestville, December 2 and 3. After the usual routine business Mrs. Westwood, of Fredonia, gave an interesting Bible reading, and Mrs. Danforth presented the subject of the Willard Fountain to be erected at the main entrance of the Temple in Chicago. The convention decided by a unanimous vote, that the unions of the county help to erect this fountain, to cost $1,000. Mrs. Almy gave an interesting report of the National Convention at Boston, and of many pleasing incidents in connection with it. Miss Elizabeth U. Yates, of Maine, gave the evening address, her subject being, "The Conflict of the Modern Hercules." The audience were unanimous in their praise of her, and her words cannot fail to exert a lasting influence on her hearers. Miss Yates also conducted a school of methods, taking up and discussing the different departments. The evening exercises of the second day consisted of short reports from local unions and was decidedly interesting.

New unions are being organized in this county and it is the intention of the president and corresponding secretary to look after the old as well as the new unions, and if possible to visit every one, holding a public meeting with each. The work was never in a more hopeful condition.

December 2 and 3 seem to have been red-letter days in our state as so many conventions met at that time. Wayne county chose those dates for their meeting which was held at Clyde, and they report a splendid gathering. Reports of both state and National Conventions were given by the delegates. Items of interest from local unions were full of cheer, and the children added to the general pleasure by their part on the program. A delightful talk on "Young Women in Temperance Work," was given by Miss Lounsbury, of Clyde, and an interesting paper was read by Mrs. Bradley. A pleasing event was the presentation of a gavel to the county union, which was used thirty years ago by the Sons of Temperance of Ontario.

Monroe county, which is one of the strongest and best organized in the state, has recently held a very pleasant and profitable convention, but the details are not reported. We can be assured, however, that good work was done. A medal contest had been arranged for, but the "grippe" got there first, and left only six out of fourteen able to speak, so the contest had to be given up, but will occur in the near future. A successful contest has just been held in Lockport, under the auspices of the Prohibition Club, and the present intention is to hold a series of contests during the winter. Surely it is one of the very best means of getting prohibition principles before the people, and we hope the good work may extend throughout all the states.

The outlook is good for the coming months, and we are hoping for more vigorous work and better results than ever before. Organization will be pushed and we look for 5,000 new members before our next state convention. Do we expect too much? We think not. If we are "all at it, and always at it" we can accomplish great things. May the New Year be a blessed one in the line of temperance work. I wish all the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL a Happy New Year, full of good fruit, for "by our fruits we are known."

FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A TUG OF WAR.

In my double official capacity as corresponding secretary and state treasurer, I am in constant touch with our workers throughout the state, and this intimacy has been utilized for the distribution of literature adapted to their needs. There have been mailed 1,724 temperance papers, magazines, temperance annuals, and W. C. T. U. tracts and leaflets. It has been made an invariable rule in writing to unions and their officers, whether president, secretary, or treasurer, to inclose temperance and suffrage tracts and leaflets. Such letters have this year numbered 916. Besides this mode of disseminating W. C. T. U. literature, two wall pockets have been kept filled at the depot. THE UNION SIGNAL and Mississippi White-Ribbon have been given to every visitor at my house. I have written seventy-nine original articles on temperance, prohibition, and woman suffrage; furnished thirty columns of selected matter on same subjects to the Allendale Enterprise, Hampton Guardian, Bamberg Herald, and Timmonsville News. The seed thus sown is springing up, and though not exactly in the shape of unions and Loyal Temperance Legions as we would prefer, still we must thank God for the increasing public sentiment in favor of temperance and prohibition, which has made the introduction and discussion of the subject in the state legislature possible, under the name of the "Childs' Prohibition Bill." Our leading papers have been teeming with articles pro and con, and we have no idea that popular feeling in favor of a prohibitory law will be stifled, even if this law proposed by Mr. Childs should be "killed in the Senate," or vetoed by the governor. It has already passed the lower House.

As for the Good Templars, who of course are in sympathy with the W. C. T. U., though not in full accord, the order has been "on a boom" this year, and added largely to its number of lodges. In the last few months a paper entirely devoted to temperance, called The Broad Ax, and two others, The Soldier and The Way of Faith, have materialized, and we must claim these as ours in consanguinity of thought, if not identity of name. But meantime the W. C. T. U. column in the Allendale Enterprise has followed the most advanced lines of the W. C. T. U., though a year ago its prohibitory sentiment excited such strong opposition that we were urged to change the heading to "The Temperance Column." This would have been done in my despite had I not been owner. "It will kill the paper," my publisher said. "Very well," I replied, "I will go down with my colors flying. I bought an interest in this paper to advocate W. C. T. U. principles. I have never got a dollar of my investment back, and so I am determined to get all the moral satisfaction out of it possible. If the name W. C. T. U. kills the paper, let it die." From that time, thinking the paper doomed, I began to crowd in woman suffrage tidbits of which I had before been somewhat chary. Still, this was not yet coming out boldly and advocating it over my own name, the very thought of which, knowing the storm of criticism it would evoke, gave me a nervous chill; for my tidbits of woman's rights presentation were all quoted. But then came the tug of war. There stood "the petticoat in politics," in the News and Courier, flaunting its ridicule and opprobrium on every woman who believed in her right to the ballot. It made me sick, but an answer shaped itself in my brain and would out though I didn't want to do it. I'm sure I should not have had the courage to throw that bomb if my husband had not held my hand while I fired. Without any collusion Mrs. Chapin sent an article at the same time, "Capitulating the good work of the W. C. T. U., and defending the women engaged in it." The editor did not spare his criticism for either of us, but on me he poured out the special vials of his wrath in the awful headlines, "Mrs. Young thinks women have the same right as men to a free ballot and a fair count"—"She defends the woman suffrage propaganda outright." After this opening skirmish the battle raged, Mrs. Chapin writing two more articles, I four, and a Baptist minister, setting forth woman's right to the ballot in South Carolina "as a property owner," for, according to the records in the county clerks' offices, "a very large proportion of the landed property in the state is owned by women."

All this, you may be sure, gave rise to a considerable discussion of the woman suffrage question which had been previously tabooed as a matter of no concern to the public of South Carolina. One influential paper, the Abbeville Medium, came out as follows: "Our women, as a matter of right, should have an equal show with the sterner sex. No harm can come to the state by granting them all that is claimed by these sisters, and it looks as if success is not far ahead." Now, I claim that this introduction of the "tabooed" subject—the eschewed question, about which we had so often been cautioned "to keep quiet"—is a distinct advance in South Carolina; for the ice has been broken, the matter discussed, and on the back of it or face of it, Mrs. Chapin organized eleven new unions—not all great workers yet, but having a name to live, which shows that the "awful doctrine of woman's rights has not 'killed the W. C. T. U.' in our state." Indeed, we have received more letters from the unions, both "old and new," and of a more loving and hopeful spirit than we did when "we kept silence," and before suffrage had been broached.

Our superintendent of Y's, Miss Mary Yeargin, is bestirring herself not only in building up the society of young ladies in Leesville College, with a large body of honoraries among the young men (for they have co-education there), but she has lately taken charge of one page of the Soldier, a temperance paper, started in Columbia by Rev. L. L. Pickett. Miss Yeargin, a beautiful and talented young lady, is a staunch suffragist, and preaches this doctrine to her girls on every possible occasion.

I kept my L. T. L. together in a most flourishing state as to numbers and attainments until I went abroad last June, and I scarcely ever failed to bring in woman's rights as part of the lessons I taught. The chivalry of men and boys in South Carolina is the avenue by which I find it easiest to awaken their sense of justice in endowing wives, sisters, mothers and daughters with the franchise for their protection in the home. Just the other day one of the wealthiest men in this country, as well as bluest of blue blood, to whom I read one of my first articles favoring woman suffrage, evidently to his disapproval, came to visit us, and said to me: "Mrs. Young, I am willing for my wife to vote, and I am getting to think nothing will save our state from political ruin but putting women in office. As far as I am concerned I would just as lief Miss Willard was President."

Now what has brought him round but my persistent urging of prohibition and woman suffrage in the Enterprise, which everybody about here takes and reads! For the W. C. T. U. heading did not "kill the paper" and it now seems likely to become a fixed factor in the growing town of Allendale. A new worker from Timmonsville, Mrs. Julia Traxler, who promises to become a power, was present at the National Convention in Boston, and returned with her mind made up to work on all advanced lines.

MRS. VIRGINIA D. YOUNG,

MISSOURI.

DISTRICT AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

The second district held its annual convention at Wheeling the middle of November. Though this is one of the small towns in the district it did nobly in entertaining the delegates and visitors. Mrs. J. H. Clark and district president, Mrs. R. Callahan, gave valuable lessons and helps, "but the wise counsel of our state president was missed, as we have no other who is such a leader." The wife of the pastor of the M. E. Church (South) gave many inspiring words. Mrs. I. B. Cole conducted a very touching memorial service, and at night gave a talk on "The harvest is ripe, but the laborers few." The president of the Y at Carrolton read a bright and cheery paper as only the "wise" can. Equal suffrage was presented by Mrs. M. L. Almroth in a convincing manner.

Mrs. Ida B. Cole was elected president, Mrs. Elfa C. Hayes, secretary, and Mrs. M. B. Slinglerland, treasurer. Mrs. Clark gave the closing address of the convention, and is now going out to organize and work in the district.

The tenth district held its annual convention December 9 and 10 at Kirkwood. Union Hall was tastefully decorated with plants and cut flowers. Mrs. E. B. Ingalls gave an excellent paper on "Narcotics." Each union, through its representative, reported, with encouraging results. Mrs. Clara Hoffman gave an interesting talk on "How to Hold a County Convention," and urged the workers to make more use of the press in their work. The mayor of Kirkwood welcomed the ladies in the happiest manner, as did also Mrs. Harris, as representative from the local W. C. T. U. Mrs. Alice Williams gave an address which was listened to with close attention. Excellent music was rendered by the M. E. Church choir. The morning devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Worthington; an admirable paper was read on "Motherhood," and a paper on "Fatherhood" was requested to be published. Twenty dollars' worth of Home Guard stock was taken by the district. The president, Mrs. Mummert, gave her annual address, which was received with thanks. The departments of literature, Sabbath observance and sacramental wine were in turn well represented; while Mrs. Bell Kimball gave a charming report of parlor work. Notes of the National worthy of praise, were given by Mrs. Sutton. Appropriate resolutions were adopted, Mrs. Clara Hoffman's address was fearless and forcible, full of strong points, and thus closed a most delightful and successful convention.

Marion county recently held its fifth annual county convention. Mrs. Templeman came forward and introduced Mrs. Ruby who took charge of the devotional exercises. A visitor from Blanchard, Ia., in the person of Mr. Gault, was highly appreciated. Reports show that temperance sentiment is on the increase. Resolutions favoring prohibition, franchise, anti-tobacco, etc., were adopted. The medal contest charmed all who attended; receipts at the door were $20. Mrs. Templeman was unanimously re-elected county president.

The W. C. T. U. at Brookfield were invited to attend the meeting of the missionary society of the Congregational Church and accepted. An excellent paper was read by one of the W. C. T. U. women, on "The Relation of Temperance to Foreign Missions."

During the month past the Bonne Terre unions have done excellent work—held regular, interesting meetings, distributed nearly 3,000 pages of literature, sent $10 each to the Temple fund and to the Temperance Hospital; have a Loyal Temperance Legion which has an enrollment of 107, with an average weekly attendance of fifty-two.

An enjoyable entertainment was given by the Pleasant Valley W. C. T. U. at a county school-house, December 9. The teacher of the school gave a rousing good talk, a pathetic recitation was given by a blind girl. Brief addresses were given by several, and all admitted that this was a profitable evening.

Dr. Brumbaugh gave an address which was worthy of commendation at Memphis recently. New members were added to the union and a collection of twenty dollars was taken. Harrisonville has a Temple superintendent who has begun a Baby and Cherub Band fund. A Temple sociable was held with profit, as this union proposes to give $100 to the Temple.

The Verdella union are a busy people, circulating petitions, and each month holding an open meeting. They have a Baby Band of fifteen and furnish the churches with unfermented wine.

At the Kansas City fair last fall, the Central W. C. T. U. offered a premium of $5, for the person making the best unfermented wine. The premium was given to Mrs. Winter, of Kansas City.

Through the influence of Wilbur F. Crafts, in St. Louis, Sabbath reform work has been taken up to quite an extent, one member from each W. C. T. U. has been appointed on the committee. And thus we hope to preserve our American Sabbath.

A series of parlor meetings are being held in St. Louis by the Y's. The first of the series was given at the home of the president, Miss McKeel. Two new members were added to the list. The second, held at the home of Mrs. Clark, was largely attended. Mrs. Williams addressed the meeting; good music, charming recitations and two new members were the result of this evening's gathering.

Sedalia W. C. T. U. boasts of a free reading room in the building where one year ago was a saloon. This union is adding to its membership almost every meeting.

Mrs. Ida Burr, of Princeton, has been holding a series of meetings in the fourteenth district with excellent results. She gave twenty-four lectures, secured twenty-six subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL, and gained twenty-five new members. The collections more than paid all expenses, and the district treasury was added to, by her coming.

On Thanksgiving night the L. T. L. and W. C. T. U. gave a joint entertainment at Buffalo. The evening's program consisted of recitations and songs by the little folks, and addresses and the reading of papers by the "grown up folks." Three honorary members were secured and a collection of $6 was taken. This is one of the wide-awake new unions of the state, located twenty miles from a railroad.

Bolivar gave a reception at the home of the president, Mrs. Mary Larrick. Short addresses, recitations, etc., were indulged in. Mrs. Kate Newton, state recording secretary, gave a talk on the National Convention which was eagerly listened to by all. We are glad to welcome to the sixth district Mrs. Lucy M. Wisker. She has been appointed superintendent of parlor work for this district, and requests that each union appoint a local superintendent of this department. She has also taken charge of the woman's department in the Pettis county Enterprise.

New unions have been organized by Mrs. J. H. Clark, at Keytesville, Wakenda, Dalton, Brunswick, Mooresville and Sumner; by Mrs. M. Lewis, at Olney and Prohibition; by Miss Carrie Carter, at Lutesville and Marble Hill.

At Arrow Rock, Colonel Sobieski has been holding a week's meeting, with most flattering results. He was greeted by a large audience each night, and much good was the result. Miss Morris requests that each union send at once for state minutes. Let each union send for one for each member, and be sure that each member has a copy. The minutes have never been so complete as this year. No one should be without them.

MRS. MARY E. JONES.
State Reporter, Humansville.

ILLINOIS.

CHEERY ITEMS.

A reporter for the Illinois W. C. T. U. could almost wish that its lines did not stretch so far away to the four points of the compass and include such a host of faithful "braves," for how to select and condense into a sizable UNION SIGNAL letter the marchings of this division, this child of the pencil hath not yet discovered, hence I shall not itemize very largely.

Since my last letter was written, Illinois has held what is generally acknowledged to be her grandest W. C. T. U. convention—almost an ideal convention in all its details. The increase of 1,696 in its membership the past year, and increase in quantity and quality of work, gave a cheery tone to all utterances and filled all hearts with glad thanksgiving. The loving testimonial of $100, from members of the executive committee, was an enjoyable surprise for our faithful state president.

One of the pleasing features of the work in Illinois is that of the Y. W. C. T. U. Our girls are coming forward under the superintendency of Miss Cowen, whose work will be supplemented this year by that of Miss Clara Parrish, state organizer. Miss Parrish's enthusiastic zeal in the fifteenth district made it not only the banner region of the state, but it is said, of the United States also. As evidence of the interest in the annual convention there, it is claimed that ten newspaper reporters were present. As newspaper straws are a good indication of which way the breezes are tending, it looked as if there was quite a W. C. T. U. gale in that direction.

The increase in editorial and temperance news paragraphs that have been seen in the secular and religious papers the past year, are cause for rejoicing. The conventions throughout the state have been worthy of good reports, and have received many words of commendation from the local press.

Medal contests are increasing in number and growing in influence. The department of mothers' meetings is one that suits all conditions of society, and is so varied and flexible in its working, that it is a great power for good. Many W. C. T. U. recruits are won from the attendants at these meetings.

Scientific temperance instruction with practical application is another cause for thanksgiving at different points in this great whisky and beer-cursed state. The work of our state superintendent of evangelistic work has been supplemented by that of Mrs. Palmer, of Iowa, and the gospel temperance institutes have shown blessed results. County conferences have proved very helpful. Practical methods of work have been discussed and timid helpers are encouraged by hearing what has been done by their more courageous sisters.

The Lewistown union did a nice thing in inviting its sister unions at Cuba and Ipava to visit it at the time of its regular meeting, and a blessed meeting it was. It concluded with a social hour and an "elegant supper," served in the church dining room. I wonder if it would not be a good thing for other unions to "go visiting" occasionally, and "receive company" also.

At the annual convention of the sixth district W. C. T. U. held at Polo, a new order of things was witnessed. The mayor requested, through the papers, that the "business houses be decorated in honor of the W. C. T. U. convention." The request was quite largely heeded. The Y's of Polo tendered a reception to the delegates. Souvenir cards and knots of white ribbon will be pleasant remembrancers of the occasion.

A report from a country union in Christian county has interested me greatly. It was organized with five members about a year and a half ago, and now numbers fifty, including eight honorary members, one the Presbyterian pastor, and a physician. The membership extends over eight school districts, and is made up largely of farmers' wives and daughters. Meetings are held every two weeks at the homes of the members. Gospel temperance meetings were held once a month in a church. The meeting for November was held in a school-house, which was crowded. Oh, for scores of such unions in every county! I think the name of the county aptly given. It must be a Christian county, or will be. My good reporter lives five miles from the post office. Another local reporter writes: "We are busy making scrap books of bristol board, in which we paste temperance clippings, to be placed in the depot and hotel." One dear woman whom the Lord is using, writes in a personal letter: "And still the wretched ones come for help. This afternoon a tempted, desperate man was in the kitchen, a fallen girl in the dining room, and a heart-broken, grieved, married woman in the parlor, all in the house at one time, for help." It is the old story, oft-repeated, and more thrilling than romance.

Thanksgiving was a red-letter day for the Rochester union, when its W. C. T. U. temple was dedicated. Notwithstanding the almost impassable roads, the house was filled. There was an all-day meeting and a sumptuous feast was spread both for dinner and supper, and homes open to welcome those who could remain over night.

This W. C. T. U. building is of brick with a seating capacity for 600. Mrs. Gougar, who is always glad to aid in every good undertaking, was present and through her efforts $1,000 was raised that day for this temple fund. Boys and girls, even the little tots, wanted to have a share in the temple. Young men and young women helped swell the sum. Business men declared that the rising of this temple and that day's program "had increased the value of every acre of land in the township." Shrewd, sensible men—they! This W. C. T. U. refrain is in the Illinois air—"Rise, temple, rise!"

The good people of Moline tendered our brave, little leader there, Mrs. Metzgar, a grand reception. She has met considerable opposition in her work for the enforcement of certain state laws, but she is a power that the "powers that be" have reason to take into account. That she has hosts of friends that appreciate her work the reception showed.

The coming of Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Balgarnie to our borders has strengthened the ties that bind us to the workers across the sea, and we rejoice at the thought of their presence with us, but how are our hearts cast down as we think of the beautiful spirit gone from our midst—dear Miss Ames—the loving and beloved. How can we think of THE UNION SIGNAL headquarters and Rest Cottage Circle, and leave her out?

We do not need to be told that God's ways and plans are not as ours. We see it. We feel it. But we thank Him for what she was, what she has been, what she is, and what she shall be, in all the coming years. Illinois is consecrated ground, made so by the sacred dust that slumbers in its bosom.

MRS. G. H. READ,
State Reporter, Bloomington.

INDIANA JOTTINGS.

With deep regret, Indiana press workers read the sad news of the death of their late National superintendent, Miss Ames. Our great loss is her eternal gain, and we take up our work with its broken threads, patiently and bravely, just as she would have us do, and through our tears look up toward her resting place and ours, "from whence cometh our strength" and say, "Help us, dear Lord, to push the battle on to the very gates."

Our delegates to the National Convention are making their tour through the respective counties which sent them to Boston, visiting each local union and lecturing upon the two great conventions. As I have received several letters asking Indiana's method of sending delegates to the National, I take this opportunity to reply. Of course we, as all other states, send a delegate for each 500 membership, but we provided for their expenses on this wise: The state was divided into as many districts as there were delegates, and the counties in these districts selected and paid the expenses of their delegates, upon the condition that the delegate should visit the local unions within the limits of the counties sending her. The result, Indiana sent representative, earnest women, who kept their places in their delegation, and have brought home much help and enthusiasm to the faithful constituency behind them.

Mrs. Nichols writes a nice letter to the L. T. L. children of the state in this week's Organizer about the Willard fountain given by them to the great city of Indianapolis, telling them what a beautiful object lesson it is of the great reform they are helping to carry to a successful ending.

The strike among the Indiana Block Coal miners is declared off, and the brave fellows who tried to wage the war for the entire craft are beaten. Beaten because of lack of public sympathy, caused by persistent misrepresentation through the press, and by the lack of aid from other mining states and districts. The men simply had to go to work or starve. Of course, the saloon played its part; for if it were not for the presence of the saloon, the miner might have some hope to win in some of these protracted struggles. The course of the Indiana miner in this strike was such that should have commanded public respect and sympathy. Ernest P. Bicknel, correspondent of the Indianapolis News, gave a correct exposition of the situation in the Evening News, of December 22. This your correspondent knows, for she has been in the Block Coal district since the 2d day of last May, and can vouch for the correctness of his article. When capital and labor discover that their best interests are identical, then oppression and strikes will be unknown.

The trustees of the Hadley Industrial School held an important meeting December 10th, in which they set May 14th for the laying of the corner-stone of the building. Reports show everything pointing to great success with this enterprise. The State Central Committee also held an important meeting the 10th. On the 11th the Organizer Board met in a called session.

Hartford City reports live work done by their union. Wabash County held its semi-annual convention December 3d. Also Newton, Henry, Morgan and St. Joseph counties report interesting conventions lately held. Miss Palmer's letter for November shows much hard, honest work and deserved success. Mrs. Dennis, superintendent of Sabbath observance, Libby W. Candler, superintendent of systematic giving, and Mrs. Cowan, superintendent of mothers' meetings, have laid their plans of work before their women through the columns of the Organizer. Your correspondent can report thirty days work, sixty-five public meetings, 475 signatures to the pledge, and sixty house visits from November 24th to December 24th, one total Abstinence Society and one L. T. L. organized among the miners. She also received from her kind constituency as a Christmas present a lovely winter wrap, much needed, and most lovingly appreciated. New unions organized during the month are Kentland, and Broch, by Miss Palmer; Stewartsville, Mt. Vernon, and Sullivan, by Mrs. Balch, and Willard union in Terre Haute by Miss Whistler.

Huntingburg, Evansville and Vincennes write glowing accounts of the gospel work of Mrs. Trish. Miss Edna Farley has constant work, and is rapidly developing into a good speaker. Miss Ayers is busy this month visiting the counties which sent her to Boston. The Meridian union lately held an interesting meeting with Mother Wallace as conversationalist. Mrs. J. R. Nichols will soon give her illustrated lectures for the Willard union of Terre Haute. Mrs. Nichols spent Tuesday and Wednesday, December 22 and 23, with me at Newburg, talking and visiting with my people. The miners enjoyed her visit and her excellent talks. The Princeton W. C. T. U. have opened a Woman's Exchange. La Porte union cleared twenty-six dollars at a supper recently given by them. Mizpah union, New Albany, is interested in relief work. Bloomingdale union reports: "Growing in numbers, in interest, and in energy," in reply to Miss Reed's query, 'What cheer?' Dana union reports itself wide-awake.

The death angel has visited us during the last month and among our "loved, and lost awhile" we name Mrs. Virginia Davidson Day of the New Albany union; Mrs. L. L. Hopple, of the Decatur union; Mrs. Dr. Haynes, of the Richmond union; Mrs. James Johnston of the Otterbein union; Miss Rosa Wyatt, press superintendent of the Kennard union; the aged father of Mrs. Margaret Huddleson, and Miss Mahala Atkins, of Henry county.

Mrs. Gougar has given 323 lectures this season, despite James G. Blaine's assertion that women cannot campaign. Miss Hay and Miss Palmer attended the prohibition banquet at Chicago, December 17. Rushville proposes to have a Y. Seymour and Corydon unions have taken up the Demorest medal work. An L. T. L. was lately organized at Hartford City, consisting of 100 members. The Indiana Woman's Suffrage Association held its annual session at Franklin, December 15. Dr. Wilson, of Fairmount, read a paper on "Women as Physicians." Mrs. M. S. Brooks had an excellent paper on "Newspapers and Reforms," which was published in the Organizer of December 24. Mrs, Alice Waugh, of Tipton, Mrs. J. R. Ridgeway, of La Porte, and Miss Hay were appointed to attend the National Association. Mrs. Gougar spoke in the evening upon the utility of woman's suffrage to a large and appreciative audience. This was a most significant meeting. Indiana women suffragists have heart, brains, and consecrated courage. God bless them.

Miss Flora Spurrier, press superintendent of the Indianapolis Y, writes an interesting account of the celebration of the first anniversary of their "Noon Rest." During the year the average attendance has been sixty-seven per day, total number of visits, 20,937. The following officers for the year were elected: President, Miss Carrie Duth; corresponding secretary, Miss Mary Gilmore; recording secretary, Miss Lulu Jones; treasurer, Mrs. Ira G. Wooden.

With a Happy New Year to all the state reporters, I am faithfully yours.

SADIE B. WHISTLER,
State Reporter.

Official Communications.

MEMORIAL RECOMMENDATION.

The following memorial recommendation is presented as a fitting tribute of affection and appreciation to the one who as fraternal delegate and new-found friend made the journey with me to Great Britain and Europe in 1890, and who at that time after persistent urging, became willing to prepare and read at a public meeting a paper on press work; the result of which was the establishing of a press department by the British Women's Temperance Association. The intimate relationships of a sea voyage and of foreign travel caused not one inharmonious thought between us, but rather made sure and enduring a rich and blessed friendship, the memory of which is left to me as a helpful legacy until the journey of life is over, and we clasp hands again.

As a perpetual memorial to Miss Julia Ames, whose bright young life has so recently gone from our midst, we recommend that December 12 be observed from year to year by Y. W. C. T. Unions in holding a special meeting to be called the "Press Memorial," when plans for influencing the secular and religious press for temperance shall be devised and set in motion. By this means the National department which our dear friend and co-worker had so much at heart, and for which she so earnestly labored, may be continued with renewed interest and vigor.

FRANCES J. BARNES,
World's and Nat. Supt. of Y. W. C. T. U. Work.
MRS. F. S. EVANS, Sec.

CONCERNING PETITION REQUESTS.

DEAR CO-LABORERS:—I am made happy by the numerous calls for petition blanks which are coming in, evidencing as each does the intent of many to secure as soon as possible the second million of signatures to the World's petition; but, dear friends everywhere, may I make one very special request?

There are at my home quite a number of orders for petition blanks which it will be impossible for me to fill, as the name of the state from whence they come is not given and the postmark cannot be read. One reads "Springfield" and we find there is a "Springfield" in every state of the nation, but the person who wants the petition blanks can live in but one. Which one, is the question. I am glad that "a word to the wise is sufficient," and henceforth each wise W. C. T. U. woman will give the name of the town and the state in which she lives when ordering from

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
Sec. World's W. C. T. U.

THE PRESENT WORK FOR THE SABBATH.

At the Boston Convention it was decided that each state union where the Legislature will be in session this winter should try to secure from it by petition and otherwise action requiring the state exhibit at the Columbian Exposition to be closed on the Sabbath. Such action was shown to be very important and helpful, and New Jersey, Ohio and Iowa and perhaps others are hard at work.

About half the States are holding legislative sessions and to reach them in season, petitions must be circulated at once. In Iowa the corresponding secretary sends out the petitions, the superintendent of legislation and petition receives them and attends to the farther work, which is an excellent plan. In New Jersey the superintendent of Sabbath observance does both and it will be well done. In Ohio the work is divided.

Petition headings to Legislatures can be ordered of me (No. 40) 10 for 2 cts., 100 for 10 cts. Order at same time petitions to Congress (No. 38) forbidding Sunday opening of exhibitions where United States funds are expended, and, if they have not been circulated, those also to the commissioners (No. 25); all can be circulated together; those to Congress are just now very important, and with this three-fold cord we can help storm the gates. Don't wait for state officers but order promptly and circulate, returning them to your own members of Legislature and Congress.

Our new leaflet No. 42, "Shall the Gates be Open?" should be circulated with them, for more light is needed on this subject; also No. 43, "The Facts and the Remedy," designed for all friends of the Sabbath. The many who last year ordered No 33, "Roll ye away the stone," after the second edition was exhausted, are informed that a new edition is now ready, and the same of 21, Base Ball. Send stamp for price list and new samples, or 8 cts for 30 samples. Let us not lose the battle by inaction.

Yours faithfully,
J. C. BATEHAM.
26 Charlotte St., Asheville, N. C.

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

MRS. R. A. EMMONS, SEC.

All engagements made by this Bureau are conditional upon the ability of the lecturer to fill them. In case of detention by sickness, accident, or any legitimate and unavoidable cause, another date will be given as soon as possible.

LECTURERS.

Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge.	Mrs. F. W. Leiter.
Mrs. Marion B. Baxter.	Miss I. C. DeVelling.
Rev. Henrietta G. Moore.	Mrs. Caroline M. Woodward
Mrs. E. T. Scott.	Mrs. Helen L. Bullock.
Mr. A. G. Wolfenbarger.	Prof. A. B. Huckins.
Hon. John P. St. John.	Rev. A. A. Phelps.
Mother Stewart.	Mr. S. A. Haines.
Prof. Rena Michaels.	Mrs. Amy Kellogg Morse.
Mrs. S. A. McClees.	Miss Ida Clothier.
Rev. E. O. Taylor.	Mrs. S. M. Perkins.
Mrs. E. M. J. Newcombe.	Maj. E. T. Scott.

EVANGELISTS.

Mrs. C. H. St. John.	Rev. Eugenia F. St. John.
Rev. S. M. I. Henry.	Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler.
Mrs. Harriet D. Walker.

ELOCUTIONISTS.

Miss Eva M. Shontz. Mrs. Frances E. Preston.

CHALK TALKER.

Mrs. Maude L. Greene.

SOCIAL PURITY.

Mrs. Alice Williams.

REV. HENRIETTA G. MOORE

will spend February in Iowa; a few dates are open; let applications be made at once.

DR. KATE MITCHELL

of London, England, speaks in Philadelphia and Baltimore during January. Some dates are open for Pennsylvania and Maryland.

MISS EVA M. SHONTZ

is a dramatic reader of fine ability. Miss Willard says of her: "If our local unions knew her merits as I do, I am quite sure they would ask her to come and read for their benefit."

COL. JOHN SOBIESKI

is available for Illinois and Wisconsin, January and February.

MRS. MARY SPARKES WHEELER

begins evangelistic services at Tampico, Ill., January 4, and from there to the twentieth district. A few dates are still available.

REV. C. H. AND REV. E. F. ST. JOHN will be at Hyde Park, Ill., all of January.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN

is available for Wisconsin during January, and in Illinois from February 1 to 14. Let applications be made at once, as only a few dates are available.

For dates and terms of the above address

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

FROM OCTOBER 18 TO DECEMBER 1.

Alabama—Citronelle; Mrs. E. A. Williams, $1.15.
Arkansas—Little Rock: Mrs. W. T. Wilson, $12.
California—Wright: per Laura R. Miller, $4; Castroville: W. C. T. U., $1.
Carolina (North)—Hickory: W. C. T. U., $6.
Colorado—Monte Vista: W. C. T. U., $1.37.
Connecticut—Northford: W. C. T. U., $5; Moosup: Y. W. C. T. U., $5; Meriden: W. C. T. U., $50; West Hartford: A. E. McLean, $3.
Dakota—Rondell: Mary McCoys, $1; North Hillsboro: W. C. T. U., $10; Wessington: Baby Band, 50 cents; Pierpoint: Miss E. S. Haskell, $5; De Voe: Mrs. Nancy M. McClelland, $100; Mitchell: Band of Hope, $3.
Delaware—Harrington: W. C. T. U., $3.37.
District Columbia—No. Capitol: W. C. T. U., $2; Washington: Annie M. Wilson, $3.65; Miss E. S. Huntington, $3.70.
Florida—Sanford: W. C. T. U., $3.65; Emma Taber Thorpe, $25.
Illinois—Brighton: Mrs. Margaret A. Brown, $15; Fulton: Veteran Band, $2; Monmouth: Miss Edith Dillon, $1; Mendon: W. C. T. U., $4; Pittsfield: Bertrand Westlake, $3 65; Belvidere: Y. W. C. T. U., $100; Petersburg: Miss M. C. Beers, $10; Mrs. Rachel Frackelton, $10; Chicago: M. A. West union, $18.60; First Baptist Church, per Mrs. Ranney, $7.50; Irving Park: L. T. L., $5.85; Van Orin: W. C. T. U. and L. T. L., $15; Mendota: W. C. T. U., $2; Lockport: Mary Nicholson, $4.10; La Fayette: W. C. T. U., $3.60; Mazon: per Mrs. E. M. Rose, $13.65; Paris: Y. W. C. T. U., $3.70; Milmine: Mrs. H. A. East, $3.82; Glen Ellyn: Mrs. Emma Lloyd, $50; Utica: per Mrs. W. R. Clayton, $3.25; Amboy: W. C. T. U., $25; Wataga: W. C. T. U., $1; Durand: Mrs. H. S. Jennison, $1: Chicago: Dr. McChesney, $100; Vandalia; Genevieve Capps, $6; Chicago: Mrs. O. C. Beman. $3.65; Vernon: L. T. L. and W. C. T. U., $5.64; Princeton: Swedish W. C. T. U., $1; Chicago: S. W. Packard, $20; Rockford: Mrs. J. Beatson, $15; Leon: W. C. T. U., $1; Red Oak: Samuel Gussinger, $1.55; Winchester: W. C. T. U., $12; Streator: F., $2; Rockford; Mrs. E. L. Worthington, $5; Nokomis: Mrs. Nancy Lowden Rood, $100; Sycamore: Hattie E. Townsend, $3.65; Harvey: Howard L. Chute, 30 cents; Shabbona: S. H. Sherwood, $2; Flora: W. C. T. U., $1; Windsor: W. C. T. U., $40.
Indiana—Logansport: Mrs. C. A. P. Smith, $1; Rehoboth: per John S. Lennon, 50 cts.; Alto: W. C. T. U., $6; Union Mills: L. T. L., $1; Carthage: E. A. Clark, $1.50; Clinton: Jessie Wilternwood: $1; Indianapolis: per Mrs. Prettyman, $1 20; La Fayette: Mary Dresser, $3.65.
Iowa—West Branch: Mrs. Sarah Congill, $4.79; Middletown: L. T. L., $5.30; Akron: Alvira Streeter, $3.65; Illinois: L. T. L., $5; Ft. Dodge, Baby Band, $8.20; Decorah: Mrs. R. F. Gibson, 50 cts.
Kansas—Ft. Scott: per Cora M. Charlton. $3; Mayetta: W. C. T. U., $5; Hazelton: Baby and Cherub Bands, $5.90; Wichita: Mrs. J. K. Sawyer, $3.50; North Topeka: Epworth League, $3 28; Hazelton: per Mrs. R. Follett, $19.29.
Kentucky—Harlan: per Addie Jones, $3.85; Paris: Bennie G. Jacker, $2; Newport: L. T. L., $1.50.
Louisiana—Baldwin: Ruth Grougey, 30 cts.;
Massachusetts—Northfield: L. T. L., $8; Worcester: John L. Pearce, $1; North Adams: W. C. T. U., $1.60; West Somerville: Rosa E. Bennett, $2; Springfield: W. C. T. U., $15; Quincy: Henry Faxon, $500;
Maine—Hebron: R. E. and A. M. Dunning, $6.39; Ellsworth: W. C. T. U., $3; Pansy Band, $1; Bridgewater: W. C. T. U., $4; New Castle: Baby Band, $5.80.
Michigan—Whittaker: J. Webster Childs, $100; Ula: Mrs. J. E. Waterman, 93 cts; Niles: 4th District W. C. T. U., $3; Albion: J. C. Finch, 90 cts; Sturgis: Per Mrs. M. Kent, $7.50; Lansing: Baby Band, $3.87; Portland: Henry Higema, $1; Mrs. A. L. Lane, $1; Benton Harbor: Clara Leighton, $1; Laingsburg: Per Mrs. A. Dowding, $11.35; Manistee: W. C. T. U. $11; Excelsior: Per Mrs. E. B. Dennis, 45 cents; Liberty: Per Mrs. G. F. Shafer, $4; Sault St. Marie: L. T. L., $3; Blissfield: Helen A. Goff, 50 cts.; Jackson: Mrs. L. C. Nash, $2; Kalamazoo, W. C. T. U., $15; Benton Harbor, W. C. T. U., $3.
Minnesota—Cannon Falls: Miss Margaret M. Brooks, $3.75; Winnebago City, Mrs. E. Poole, $1, Mrs. Mary Rand, $6; Minneapolis: Per Miss A. M. Henderson, $3.50; Wadena: W. C. T. U., $2; Fulda: L. T. L. $1; Hamline: L. T. L., 60 cts.; Hokal: W. C. T. U., $3; Northfield: W. C. T. U., $50.
Missouri—Clarksville: M. M. Roberts, $4; Webster Grove: Mrs. M. W. Nevires, $3.65; Bonne Terre: W. C. T. U., $10; Savannah: Mrs. O. Anna Sasseen, $1; Jefferson City: W. C. T. U., $5; Clearmont: W. C. T. U., $3.60; Osceola: Mrs. Emma L, Lander, $4; Tarkio: Mrs. Anna M. Pattison, $8; Carondelet: W. C. T. U., St. Louis, $10.
Mississippi—Greenville: Mrs. Somerville and Mrs. Mount, $1, each.
Montana—Helena: Mrs. Church, $6.50.
Nebraska—Sterling: W. C. T. U., $10; Lanham: M. A. Coleman, $3; Ponca: Ruth and Kate Gamble, $7.30; Paxton: Leon C. and Grace M. Rise, $1.13; Wahoo: Sunday-school class, $7; Brewster: Children, $2; Purdum: W. C. T. U., $2; Mrs. White and Mrs. Dunning, 50 cents; Waverly: C. G. Lathrop, $8.50.
Nevada—Mottsville: Mrs. M. McCue, $10.
New Hampshire—Auburn: Luella Cochran, $1.
New Jersey—Moorestown: Y. W. C. T. U., $5; High Bridge: Mrs. L. H. Voorhees, 25 cents; Succasunna: Miss DeCamp, $1.50; South Orange: Mrs. J. A. Cole, $5.
New Mexico—Agnes Morley, $1.
New York—Cortland: Mrs. M. L. Decker, $2; Syracuse: Baby Band, $10; Mrs. Phelps, $3.75; Rev. and Mrs. P. S. Culver, $2; Mrs. Johnson and Misses Galpin, $3; Rensselaer county, $100; Red Creek: Mrs. L. L. Shotwell, $50: Cobbleskill: Mrs. Orville Hodge, $1; Whitesboro: W. C. T. U., $1; Oneonta: C. A. Lane, $5; Albion: W. C. T. U., $5; Fairport: Mrs. A. A. Howard, $1.27; South Richland: Children, $1; Rossville: Gustave Rose, $1; East Otto: Jessie Ellsworth and Grace Tarbox, $1; North Chatham: Mrs. E. P. Nichols, $20; Washington county: W. C. T. U., $25; West Brookfield: W. C. T. U., $2.20; Lansingburgh: W. C. T. U. $60; Almond: L. T. L., $3; East Kendall: W. C. T. U., $2; Rockland: W. C. T. U., $6.50.
Ohio—Cable: W. C. T. U., $1; Burbank: Epworth League, $1.50; Troy: Mrs. L. R. Drury, $5; Randolph: W. C. T. U., $4; Wilmington: W. C. T. U., $7 80; South Salem; $1.50; Winona: L. T. L., $3; Chillicothe: W. C. T. U., $4.05; Brooklyn Village; W. C. T. U., $5.81; Medina: W. C. T. U., $15.60; Mansfield: Jean Lawson, $1.37; Susan Sturgis, $100; Morrow: Nannie Guttery, $1; King's Creek: W. C. T. U., $6.37; Plymouth: Mrs. L. E. Johnson, $35; Burton: W. C. T. U., $5.
Oregon—Salem: Mrs. E. R. Bagley, $1; Emma Morgan. $1; The Dalles, Bessie French, Georgie Sampson, May Barrett, Pearlie Butler, $7.
Pennsylvania—Philadelphia: Susan Dewees, $4; W. C. T. U., George Institute, $29.19; Florence: W. C. T. U., $5; Fayette City: W. C. T. U., $8.80; Delaware county: W. C. T. U., $15.29; Stewartston: W. C. T. U., $5; Allegheny county: Elizabeth: W. C. T. U., $5; Hughesville: W. C. T. U., $5; New Salem: W. C. T. U., $5; Wexford: Earl and Bessie Kidd: $2; Rochester: W. C. T. U., $1; Edenburg: Flora Robinson, $4; Williamsport: Baby Band, $5; Harbor Creek: Ella Cass, 50 cts.; Parker Ford: Lilian Wilson, $3.50; Factoryville, Mrs. A. E. Bush, $5; Verona: Y. W. C. T. U., $2.80: Newton: L. T. L., $2; Scenery Hill: W. C. T. U., $14.35: Slippery Rock: Effie Pearson, $2.
Tennessee—Nashville: James Turner, $25; Chattanooga: Mrs. Ferguson, $1; Nashville: Railway brakeman, 25 cts.; Tullahoma: Mrs. Maynard, $5; Dayton: W. C. T. U., $5.
Texas—Indian Gap: R. W. Stoddard, $4; per Mrs. Young, State Treas. for Acheson Tablet, $17; Kerrville: Clara Candler, $3.75;
Vermont—Johnson: W. C. T. U., $1; Winooski: W. C. T. U., $5; Montpelier: G. W. Parmenter, $1.20.
Washington—Latona: Mrs. A. V. Freeman, $2; Spangle: per Mrs. T. R. Gildea, $3.65; Olympia: Mrs. H. C. Brown, $2.50.
West Virginia—Wheeling: Mrs. T. D. Cushing, $1.
Wisconsin—New London: W. C. T. U., $2.27; Verona: A friend, $2; Madison: Miss Alice Carey, $5; Waterloo: W. C. T. U., $1; Ft. Howard: L. L. Douglass. $3.65; Baraboo: W. C. T. U., 36 cts.; Waukesha: W. C. T. U., $47; Menominee: W. C. T. U., $5: Mrs. E. Branch, $5; Sugar Creek: W. C. T. U., $12.40; Whitewater: W. C. T. U., $2.34; Kingston: W. C. T. U., $2.
South Africa—Paarl: W. C. T. U., $2.93; Durban: W. C. T. U., $47.73; British Women's Temperance Association, $97.40; A friend, $1; sales South African goods at Boston, $20; miscellaneous sales, $47.73; Models, $71.35.

ESTHER PUGH,
Evanston, Ill. Custodian of Gift Fund.

AFTER seven months of earnest, persistent work in Arizona, New Mexico and Old Mexico, and a series of meetings in El Paso, Texas, and Wichita, Kansas, and other places, Miss I. C. DeVelling has gone to Arkansas by the request of the Arkansas W. C. T. U. to make another tour of that state. This will be the fourth year of work Miss DeVelling has given to the state of Arkansas. Her tour of Arizona was the first continuous canvass of that territory ever made by a W. C. T. U. worker; and though abounding in hardships for the worker, contained many successes for and revivals of the temperance work in that far-off field of labor.

Her work in Old Mexico was the first work ever done in that Republic by a W. C. T. U. worker, and her subject was "a new gospel" to the people where she labored. The missionaries acted as interpreters for her in the meetings.

Publisher's Notes.

The New Y Manual,

by Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, National superintendent, is just what has been so long needed by the Y's themselves, and by those who desire to see young people enlisted in the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It contains a brief history of Y work, its purposes and its plans, gives instruction about organizing with a constitution for the Y. W. C. T. U., and to these are added an outline of department work, special hints, national, recommendations, and a catalogue of supplies. In short, it is a brief encyclopedia of Y work.

You Need It.

Price, only 25 cents per copy.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Woman in the General Conference.

The spring conferences of the M. E. Church begin with the Mississippi conference. January 6, 1892, the last one occurring April 16, in Maine. Every minister should read Dr. Hughey's book, "Woman in the General Conference," before attending these meetings. Each member of the W. C. T. U. should be especially interested in seeing that her minister has the opportunity to read it. Dr. Hughey's generosity enables us to offer this valuable pamphlet for this purpose at 15 cents per copy. Do not delay, but secure one for every minister in your town without delay.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Our Day.

The January number of Our Day, a magazine devoted to current reform, is fresh from our presses, and is a number of great interest. Rev. Will C. Wood gives "National Precedents for Sunday Closing of the World's Fair," and Julia Ward Howe talks of "Woman Suffrage as a Weapon in Vital Reforms." Other articles of great interest appear.

Subscription price $2.50 per year. To ministers and students, $2. Single numbers, 25c, to ministers and students, 20c.

Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Of Interest to All

is, doubtless, the fact that we can now appoint our own agents for

"Glimpses of Fifty Years."

This book has had a large sale, but there is still good territory to be had which has not been worked.

ALSO OF INTEREST

to any one knowing Miss Willard will be that her latest book, "A Classic Town," is sold by us exclusively. While highly entertaining to any one, it is especially so to Methodists, as it contains a history of the Northwestern University. Agents who have sold "Glimpses" should get our terms at once for "A Classic Town."

THEN, TOO,

there is "Childhood: Its Care and Culture," which by name at least is well known to you all. The agents who have sold from ten to a hundred copies know the value and selling qualities of this book. We earnestly urge professional canvassers, W. C. T. U. superintendents, school teachers, and any one in need of employment to at once on any or all these three books. Friends, the new year is here, but although just begun, there is no time to be lost if you wish to make the most of every hour. Let us hear from you.

WRITE FOR TERMS

SUBS'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Have You Seen

The beautiful book-marks we have on hand? They are very much admired. Made of celluloid, backed by ribbon of any color desired, with W. C. T. U. designs, or L. T. L., for the young people. Nothing could be more dainty. Price only 25 cts.

For Your Benefit,

or rather for the benefit of those who will use Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball's Sunday-school Temperance Lesson on January 17th, we announce that we have for sale at this office, a large chart of the diagram printed on the leaflet to illustrate the lesson.

The diagram chart is large enough to be seen at a distance, when posted on the wall, and will be a material aid in making the lesson more impressive.

It is inexpensive. Price, postpaid, 10c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

What Some People Say,

I want to make a Christmas present, and thought the Oak and Ivy Leaf would be best of anything, so inclose twenty-five cents and you will please send the Oak and Ivy Leaf one year to

MRS. M. E. S.

Below please find ten subscribers' names for the Oak and Ivy Leaf. We have just organized and feel the need of such a paper very much to keep us informed.

MINNIE E. KINGSWORTH,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Oh! if women and girls would only read of the grand, wonderful convention, surely they would all want our delightful Oak and Ivy Leaf, and many other good things provided by you. Long live the W. T. P. A.

M. A. MESSENGER,
Lawrence, Kan.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf comes to me regularly. I would not know how to get along with our Y work without it; more of our Y's take it this year than ever before.

SARAH L. HILL,
55 Portwatson St., Cortland, N. Y.

Do You Understand

That we have in course of preparation, nearly ready for distribution, an outline of the special readings for local unions for the year 1892, embracing Bible Readings, Responsive Readings, and Topical Readings. You can learn by reading this just what has been planned for your help during the year. Send one-cent stamp for this prospectus to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Price Reduced.

Now let us all see what we can do to place Miss Willard's address in the hands of thinking people everywhere. We will send it in tinted cover to any address for 5 cts. per copy, or at the rate of $4 per 100, in quantities of twenty-five or over.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Lady Gay and Her Sister.

This delightful book for little folks is the work of the well-known author, Mrs. George Archibald, and will be found very entertaining. By indirection a good moral is conveyed, and right tendencies are helped and strengthened by its perusal. Price 75c. per copy. Published by

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

"Oh! that bothersome shave." Why torture yourself?

TORREY

RAZORS will conquer the hardest beard, and make shaving A LUXURY.

STROPS are guaranteed to set a finer edge to a dull razor, or surgical instrument, than any other Strop in the world.

The Torrey Razors are forged from the finest steel. Each blade is carefully tested before it leaves the factory.

Every Razor sold under a GUARANTEE to Give Satisfaction. If not to be had of your dealer, send for Catalogue—tells how to sharpen a Razor.

J. R. TORREY RAZOR CO., P. O. Box 753 Z WORCESTER, MASS.

Sunbeams.

Who does not like sunshine? The little miniature booklets with above title deserve to be thus named, for they forcibly remind one of rays of light or of green fields dotted with all kinds of beautiful wild flowers.

They are a series of twelve booklets nicely put up in a package with only two alike in each. A text is given for each day of the month and displayed in a delightful fashion; on each little page are fine lithographed flowers such as, Lily of the Valley, Blue Bells, Forget-me-Not, Star of Bethlehem, Buttercups, Daisies and Autumn Leaves. These are some of the titles of each booklet: "Rays of Light," "Words of Grace," "Good Cheer," etc., etc.

We recommend them as specially appropriate in Kindergarten work, and they are vastly better for gifts than cards at several times the cost.

The price is 25 cents per package, but we will send them postpaid for 15 cents while the supply lasts. We cannot break packages. Order early.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Thumb-nail Sketches,

Compiled by the late Miss Julia A. Ames, are in great demand. Send your order now, as the price must soon be raised from 25c. to 50c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Read

Our special offer on page 15. Every one who does not now take THE UNION SIGNAL should immediately subscribe for it.

Now is the Time

To order the Willard Calendar for 1892. It is a beauty. Price 15c.

The testimonials received at this office in favor of The Young Crusader as a help in Sunday-school and Loyal Temperance Legion work are quite encouraging. If you have not tried it, send for sample copies.

For a disordered liver try Beecham's Pills.

Reduction in Clergy Fares via the Pennsylvania Lines.

The management of the Pennsylvania Lines west of Pittsburgh announces that the clergyman's rate on and after January 1st, 1892, will be one and one-half cents per mile, instead of two cents per mile, that is, half fare instead of two-thirds fare, as heretofore. This reduction has been made without solicitation, and will apply for all tickets sold on clerical orders, which will continue to be issued under the customary regulations.

FOUR HUNDRED MILES AS THE CROW FLIES

Is the distance covered in a single night by the Limited Express trains of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway between Chicago and the Twin Cities of the Northwest—St. Paul and Minneapolis.

These trains are vestibuled, electric lighted and steam heated, with the finest Dining and Sleeping Car Service in the world.

The Electric reading light in each berth is the successful novelty of this progressive age, and is highly appreciated by the regular patrons of this line. We wish others to know its merits, as the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway is the only line in the west enjoying the exclusive use of this patent.

For further information apply to nearest coupon ticket agent, or address, F. A. Miller, Ass't Gen'l Pass. Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Dayton National Bank.

DAYTON, OHIO.

The "Shoe Rest" made by Brown
Is the nicest thing in town,
And we use the one you sent us with much pleasure;
It is handy and it's nice,
At a very moderate price,
And the man who has a "Shoe Rest" has a treasure.
Dayton, Ohio, Jan 12, 1891.

Miss Willard says: "No greater good can be done for the race than to raise the standard of physical culture among women." Experts say the best means for home exercise for young and old is the elegant parlor cabinet of the Whitney Home Gymnasium Company, Rochester, N. Y. It is guaranteed to strengthen weak bodies rapidly. Circular free.

LADIES

We publish a household article THE HEALTH CALENDAR, a beautiful and helpful thought for every morning; a carefully prepared menu for each day of the year, of healthful and attractive dishes, with receipes for the same, and a variety of useful information. It retails for 30c., and sells at every house. It takes no experience whatever to sell them—as any housekeeper will want one as soon as she sees it. If you would like a profitable business for the winter, send 15c. for a sample copy and try it. Agents make from $3.00 to $10 per day. Address, F. E. HOUSH & CO., Publishers, Brattleboro, Vt.

SEE HERE

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office.

H. G. ROOT, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.

NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

For a Disordered Liver
Try BEECHAM'S PILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

NOW READY—THE JANUARY
FAMILY HERALD!

It contains Six New and Complete Stories, including

"A MODERN MYSTERY,"

in twelve chapters, together with serial stories and much useful and entertaining miscellaneous matter of great value in every household, forming one of the MOST ATTRACTIVE AND LOWEST-PRICED family magazines ever published. Price, 15 cents monthly; $1.75 yearly.

For sale by all book and news dealers.

THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, New York.

WIMODAUGHSIS COOK BOOK, contributed to by over 100 prominent women. Contains Frances E. Willard's recipe for White Ribbon Cake. Price 25cents. By mail, 35 cents. Address, Wimodaughsis, 1328 I. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

HOW'S THIS?

Reliable inch measure, letter opener, leaf cutter. Made of Aluminum, the wonderful new metal. Light as wood. Strong as steel. Cleaner than silver. Will not tarnish or corrode. Six inches long. Just right for vest pocket. Elegant for desk or library. You want one? 25 cents, please. Stamps will do.

R. S. Thain, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.

20 Hidden Name, New Emb. Basket, Plush Fringe Cards, 1 complete Fountain Pen 25 Games & Agts. Outfit 10cts. Typewriter and Photo Cameras free to Agts. Clinton Bros. Clintonville, Ct.

PLAYS Speakers, and books for public and social entertainments. Send for free catalogue. DRAMATIC PUBLISHING CO., Chicago.

DRUNKENNESS cured by using BOSTON DRUG. Absolute secrecy guaranteed or money refunded. Price $1. All druggists, or by mail, W. R. BROWN & CO., 105 Chauncey St., Boston.

Special Offer to Ladies—If you secure a Life Insurance policy in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association before January 1st, you pay no membership fee. Write at once for particulars. Geo. E Godward, Sec'y, 187 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Best & Goes Farthest."

"Once tried, used always."

"But Law, there's No credit in being Jolly when you Have VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA to Drink."

MARK TAPLEY.

PERFECTLY PURE.

Its great success has, of course, led to many imitations, but it is generally admitted, and a comparison will easily prove that none equals Van Houten's in deliciousness, and nutritive qualities.

The Standard Cocoa of the World.

Sold in 1-8, 1-4, 1-2 and 1 lb. Cans.

☞If not obtainable from your grocer, enclose 25cts. to either VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, 106 Reade St., New York, or 45 Wabash Ave., Chicago, and a can, containing enough for 35 to 40 cups, will be mailed. Mention this publication. Prepared only by VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, Weesp, Holland. A7.

COE & CONVERSE, Fort Atkinson, Wis.

Offer a large stock of best Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Vines and Plants adapted to the cold Northwest. Also choice Seed Potatoes. Send for descriptive priced Catalogue. Established 1879.

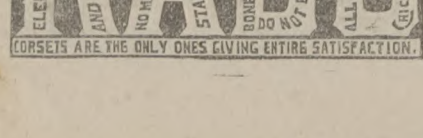
DRESSMAKERS We offer you Dress Bone FREE for a short time only. For further information address WARREN FEATHERBONE CO., Three Oaks, Mich.

PILES CURED FREE, New, Painless, Certain. Gives instant relief and lasting cure—never returns. To prove it we will send a trial package FREE, to any address. PYRAMID DRUG COMPANY, Box 35, ALBION, MICHICAN.

THE NEW IDEAL

EMBROIDERY MACHINE.

Perfectly Simple. Requires no Skill. Far Superior to any other.



3 sized needles with each machine.

We offer agents liberal terms. Send your address and get catalogue with new designs free. NEW IDEAL EMBROIDERY MACHINE CO., 44 S. Clinton-st., Chicago.

Normandie Plushes

Direct from the Mills. For HAT and DRESS TRIMMINGS.

SPECIAL MERIT for Painting, Embroidery, and all kinds of Fancy Work. Send 10c. for 30 good sized samples (no two colors same shade) and price list of remnant packages. Price of samples deducted from first order amounting to $1.00. Agents Wanted, Pleasant and profitable work. CONTREXEVILLE MFG. CO. 312 Grant Ave. Manville, R. I.

DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.

Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL. Ladies $1.50 Misses 1.25 Children. 60

Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best.

Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory.

Agents wanted everywhere.

H. A. Thomas & Co., Manf's 465 W. Van Buren St. Chicago.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid

Keeps the hair in curl for days. No Odor or Sediment. Harmless. Gives vigor and beauty to hair, increases its growth. A toilet necessity. At druggists or sent prepaid 50c. LADY AGENTS wanted. DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago.

ESPEY'S FRAGRANT CREAM.

Cures Chapped Hands, Face, Lips, or any irritation of the skin. Is a scientific food and tonic for the skin and complexion. Prevents tendency to wrinkles or ageing of the skin. Keeps the face and hands soft, smooth and plump. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM warranted to hold the Hair in Curl, Bangs and Frizzes. Is absolutely harmless. Both preparations for sale by dealers everywhere. Inclose 2-cent stamp for free Card Case to P. B. KEYS, 405 State St., Chicago, Ill.

FOR MANY LADIES THE

KABO

ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM — NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN CLOTHES — BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP — ALL GUARANTEED BY CHICAGO CORSET CO.

CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

Publisher's Dep't.

A Beautiful Memento.

The last work of our late editor, Miss Julia A. Ames, was the compiling of consisting of sketches of our workers, with their pictures. The following is the introduction she prepared for it:

Thumb-nail Sketches,

TO ALL OUR FRIENDS:—In this little book we have tried to group all the names included in the annual leaflet of the National W. C. T. U. for 1891.

It goes without saying that we have placed in the forefront the names of our distinguished and devoted fraternal delegates from Great Britain, Australia, and Canada, and our leading vice-presidents in the World's W. C. T. U. If any omissions have been made in this classification the press department is sincerely sorry, and will make amends in future editions. We believe this little book, brought out in much haste this year, will become a standard of biography in our annals later on, when there shall be time and opportunity to extend the sketches and rectify mistakes. We have intended this issue to be more than ephemeral, believing that after it shall have served its purpose in connection with the first World's and eighteenth National Convention of the W. C. T. U., in Boston, 1891, it will become a valuable handbook for our local unions in helping to create an interest in such lecturers, organizers and workers as will visit them from time to time. We all know the added power of personal acquaintance with those to whom we are to listen, and this book with its pen and photogravure pictures is intended to serve that important end.

Asking for suggestions by which we may improve upon this venture, we are,

Yours to serve,

JULIA A. AMES,

Supt. Press Dept. Nat'l W. C. T. U.

This little book was prepared to introduce our leaders to the press of the country, and to the visitors at the great Convention. It was greatly in demand on sight, and the hundreds carried to Boston were rapidly sold and the demand was not met, scores going away disappointed.

To this valuable book Miss Willard has now added a sketch of the compiler, Miss Ames, with her picture, which Miss Ames declined to insert in the original. Aside from its intrinsic merit and the aid it will prove to all our workers in keeping the press informed, and in advertising our speakers, it will now be a memorial of her who devoted the last active hours of her life to its compilation. Every W. C. T. U. worker will desire a copy.

Worth much more, we have decided to place it within the reach of all, and will send it to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

The price will shortly be increased, so order at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Our Club List.

For the benefit of our readers we have made arrangements by which we can make the following offer: We will send

THE UNION SIGNAL, Oak and Ivy Leaf, and The Young Crusader one year for $1.30.

THE UNION SIGNAL and the New York Weekly Witness, one year, $1.50.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Demorest's Magazine, one year for $2.50.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Our Day, one year for $3.

THE UNION SIGNAL, Our Day, and The Christian Statesman, one year for $3.25.

THE UNION SIGNAL, Our Day, and The Christian Statesman for three months, $1.

The three last named publications are the foremost in leading reforms, and are a wonderful bargain at these rates.

FOR THE TEMPERANCE HOME. THE BEST PIANO IS THE MARCHAL & SMITH

It is one of the finest pianos in the world, and is used in the homes of our Bankers, Merchants, Professional Men, and our best people everywhere.

WE MAKE IT EASY FOR YOU To buy of us no matter where you live, and by selling direct to families we avoid those useless, wasteful expenses which compel agents to sell an inferior instrument or to charge you double what we ask.

SEND FOR OUR CATALOGUE Select a Piano or Organ; you may make your own terms, and we will send it with a complete outfit for trial and guarantee satisfaction, or it may be sent back and we will pay freight both ways.

$180 PIANOS $1500

$35 ORGANS $500

The Marchal & Smith Piano Company,

ESTAB. 1859 235 EAST 21st STREET, NEW YORK. INCOR. 1877

COLUMBIA NATIONAL BANK

COR. LA SALLE AND QUINCY STREETS. CHICAGO

Opened for Business February 16, 1891

OFFICERS

L. Everingham, President
W. G. Bentley, Vice-President
Zimri Dwiggins, Cashier
J. T. Greene, Assistant Cashier

Transacts a General Banking Business

Solicits Accounts of Individuals Firms, Merchants, Banks, Bankers and Corporations

Most favorable terms allowed

Capital Paid in $1,000,000.00

Collections a Specialty

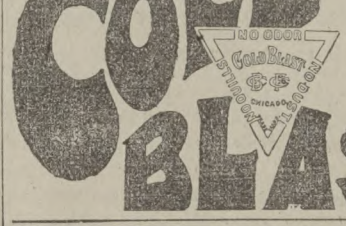
Our large list of correspondents East and West enable us to Guarantee Promptness and Moderate Rates

The Ladies' Department

A Separate Suite of Rooms, with Special Clerical Force and every Facility for Banking especially For Ladies

OUR MOTTO: "Safety, Courtesy Promptness Liberality"

COLD BLAST



Feathers and Feather Pillows

ARE SOLD GUARANTEED

Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS

AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.

ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM.

IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF FAULTLESS BEDDING CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonâfide.

DO YOU HAVE TROUBLE In trying to keep your Bangs and Curls in position? If so, send 50c. to A. B. AUSTIN, Manufacturer of Toilet Specialties, 627 N. 8th St., Terre Haute, Ind., for a bottle of COLUMBIAN CURLING CREAM, which will turn your trouble into joy

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them. YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

VALUE RECEIVED

For Your Money, When You Buy a

"Brown's Perfection Shoe Rest"

Holds Brush, Dauber, Blacking and Ladies' Dressing. A perfect rest for the foot while polishing the shoe. "Always ready and out of the way."

FOR HOMES, OFFICES, STORES, BANKS, ETC.

DESCRIPTION.—This Shoe-Rest is made of solid cast-iron, weighs 12 lbs., and is beautifully finished. It screws to any wall or door-case and swings entirely out of the way when not in use. No dirt and unnecessary to touch blacking while using it. LADIES, GENTLEMEN and CHILDREN USE IT

Warren 5c. Savings Bank, Peabody, Mass.

Gents—The Shoe Rest purchased of you recently just fills the bill. It is neat and tasty, takes up but little room and answers its purpose admirably. It is the most complete blacking arrangement I have ever seen. Yours truly, A. H. MERRILL, Treas.

PRICE BY EXPRESS, $2.00. Sent neatly packed on receipt of price Address, National Shoe Rest Co., Detroit, Mich.

Dealers write for circulars and prices

SALESMEN WANTED.

GENUINE STANDARD SINGER

Sewing Machines. Latest improved. Best made. Noiseless. Warranted 5 yrs.

SAVE MONEY now while you can get a } $35.00 Machine for $9.50 $45.00 " " $14.00 $55.00 " " $18.50

Complete set of attachments FREE. Adapted for light or heavy work. Light running. Nicely finished. Send for catalogue.

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 358-366 Dearborn St. B. 149 Chicago.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working, reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.

OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

BABY CARRIAGES ARE DELIVERED FREE to any place in the United States. Also Baby JUMPERS, BICYCLES, SAFETIES and GIRLS' TRICYCLES. One or more at wholesale price sent C. O. D. direct from L. G. SPENCER'S Factory, 221 W. Madison Street CHICAGO. $3 to $10 saved. Send 2c. stamp for new catalogue. The largest factory in the world. Latest Styles.

BICYCLES GIVEN AWAY

FREE TO BOYS & GIRLS UNDER 18. If any Boy or Girl wants an elegant High Grade Safety Bicycle (26 inch wheels) free on easy conditions, write at once to WESTERN PEARL CO., Chicago, Ill.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to M. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address, CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

103 E. ADAMS ST.

BABY CARRIAGES. We sell direct to customers. Delivered free to any point in U. S. Cat. free. Chas. Raiser, Mfr, 62 Clybourn av. Chicago

WALL PAPER Attractive styles. Extremely low price. 100 samples sent for 8 cts. Prices 5c. to 50c. a roll. A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St. Phila. Pa.

Good Paper 3c Cold Paper 5c PEATS THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT sells the best, the cheapest & does the largest business in

WALL PAPER

If you have any use whatever for Wall Paper, do not fail to send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent Free. Agents sample books, $1. 136-138 W. Madison-st. Chicago.

Stop that CHRONIC COUGH NOW!

For if you do not it may become consumptive. For Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility and Wasting Diseases, there is nothing like

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES
Of Lime and Soda.

It is almost as palatable as milk. Far better than other so-called Emulsions. A wonderful flesh producer.

Scott's Emulsion

There are poor imitations. Get the genuine.

THE
Owen Electric Belt
AND APPLIANCES
For Men and Women

Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.

They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.

CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.

[Trade Mark.]
DR. A. OWEN.

A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in

OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE

containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,
Main Office and only Factory,
181-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.
The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE.

A Christian woman's narrative of Mission work done "In His Name" in tough places, revealing the "inner life" of the underworld of New York "as seen by a woman." It describes Gospel work in the slums, and gives a famous detective's 30 years experiences. By Mrs. Helen Campbell, Col. Thos. W. Knox, and Inspector Thos. Byrnes (Chief of the N. Y. Detectives). With 250 engravings from flash-light photographs of scenes in Darkest New York by Day and by Night. Pure and good, full of tears and smiles, it is an ally of Temperance, a witness to the power of the Gospel,—a book for every home. Ministers say, "God speed it." Eminent women endorse it. 5,000 Agents Wanted, Men and Women. $200 a month made. Distance is no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to
A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

A SLUMBER SONG.

By Nina Lillian Morgan.

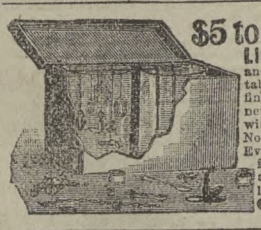
Beautiful cloth, postpaid - - - - - $1 10
Holiday binding, white and gold - - - - 1 35

"A book mothers can gladly place in the hands of thoughtful and aspiring daughters."

LILY PUBLISHING HOUSE,
161 LaSalle Street, Chicago.

STUDY LAW At Home.

Take a Course in the Sprague Correspondence School of Law. (Incorporated.) Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y,
DETROIT, MICH.
525 Whitney Block.



$5 to $15 per day, at home, selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating jewelry, watches tableware, &c. Plates the finest of jewelry good as new, on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. No capital. Every house has goods needing plating. Wholesale to agents $5. Write for circulars. H. E. DELNO & Co., Columbus, O.

Send to 319 W. 45th St., N.Y., for Samples of GARFIELD TEA
Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

Publisher's Dept.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy, per year, in advance, - - -	$1.00
" " " " not in advance, - -	1.50
" " " " 3 months, - - - -	.25
" " " " 1 month, - - - -	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies. - - - - -	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price, per year, - - - - - -	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly edition, one copy (12 Nos.) per annum, - - - - - -	.15
Per 100 copies, - -	1.00

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A Golden Opportunity.

We have made arrangements with the publishers by which we are able to make the following remarkable proposition to our subscribers or to any one wishing to become a subscriber. We offer in connection with THE UNION SIGNAL the following valuable books:

The life of Gen. Grant, bound in cloth. 734 pp., $2.50.

Life of Sherman, cloth, 608 pp., $1.50.

Life of Sheridan, cloth, 224 pp., $1.00.

Drummond's Addresses in one volume:

The Greatest Thing in the World,
Pax Vobiscum,
The Changed Life,
"First!"—A Talk with Boys,
How to Learn How, in one volume bound in heavy paper, $.35.

Miss Willard's Annual Address, $.10.

Red Letter Day Calendar, $.10.

Offer A.

The above foots up $5.55; we will send all the above listed and THE UNION SIGNAL one year (subscription price $1.00—worth more than twice that sum) for only $2.75. If you want the package sent prepaid add 40c. for expressage.

Offer B.

Or we will send THE UNION SIGNAL, one year; Miss Willard's Annual Address; the Red Letter Day Calendar, and Drummond's Essays, worth $1.55, for $1.15.

Offer C.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year and the Life of Gen. Grant, worth $3.50, for $1.50.

Offer D.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year; Life of Sherman and Miss Willard's Annual Address, worth $2.60, for $1.50.

Offer E.

THE UNION SIGNAL, one year, with Miss Willard's address and the life of Sheridan, worth $2.10, for $1.25.

Offer F.

THE UNION SIGNAL with the life of Grant; Life of Sherman and Miss Willard's Address, worth $5.10, for $2.00.

We require that when ordering you should add postage for these books: The Life of Grant, 21c.; The Life of Sherman, 15c.; The Life of Sheridan, 7c.; Drummond's Essays, 5c.

These are the greatest bargains we have ever announced.

The books will prove a desirable addition to any library, and be especially valuable in homes where there are children, as they give in interesting form valuable historical information.

A Special Proposition!

For five new subscriptions at $1.00 each, we will send the Life of Grant or the Life of Sherman without extra charge except postage. In order to get the book, the five names, with the amount, $5.00, must be sent in at once.

Remember, the above outlined privileges are for the benefit of old and new subscribers alike. Do not fail to avail yourself of this unequaled opportunity to get the best of books for almost nothing.

This offer is good until Jan. 31, 1892.

Address,
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

"The Crime of Not Insuring"

It may be plead in defense that old line companies charge so much and are so extravagant, and that assessment companies are so insecure, that it is no crime to refuse to trade with them. However that may be, here is a company which is NEITHER EXTRAVAGANT NOR INSECURE.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION . . . . OF AMERICA . . . . . .

Has its plans and rates adjusted to Insure at cost. Having only total abstainers as members, "cost" is reduced at least 30 per cent. under the charges of old line companies. Its expense account is $3.00 per $1,000—and cannot be more—instead of $9.32 per $1,000, the average of old companies. It has a guarantee fund of $64,000 securely invested. It stands almost, if not quite alone in paying one hundred cents on the dollar of every honest claim since its incorporation, July 24th, 1889. It has achieved, in two and one-half years, a success which old companies took about three times as long to reach. The company stands among business enterprises as an object lesson on total abstinence, which every good citizen should recognize.

WM. F. SINGLETON, PRESIDENT.
902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Large Profit in Chicago Real Estate

Large or Small Investors
Can make money by Calling on
ELLSWORTH Land Association,
Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.
We pay your R. R. fare.

Why

not buy best quality bunting flags? G. W. Simmons & Co., Oak Hall, Boston, Mass., will send catalogue.

BEST STEEL WIRE FENCING Woven Wire.

WIRE ROPE SELVAGE the BEST.
PRICES REDUCED. Sold by dealers. FREIGHT PAID.
McMULLEN'S POULTRY NETTING. Newthing. No sagging! No bagging! Extra Heavy Selvage.
The McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago, Ill.

How to Make a Fortune.

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line, or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 184 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

MAN TRAVELING BETWEEN Chicago and Denver SHOULD TAKE
THE
CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC
FAST VESTIBULED TRAINS, DINING CARS
VAN BUREN STREET DEPOT.
E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager. JNO. SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass'r Agt.
THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH
Estab'd in Chicago, '70. 3 Years in Cincinnati. Ret'd to Chicago, '91.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 State St., Chicago.

RUPTURE CURED!

(PATENT ALLOWED.)

Positively Holds Rupture.
WORN NIGHT AND DAY.
Has an Adjustable Pad which can be made larger or smaller to suit changing condition of rupture.
Illustrated Catalogue sent securely sealed by
G. V. HOUSE MFG. CO.
744 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY

DRUNKENNESS Is A DISEASE, and can be Cured, by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given without the knowledge of the patient, if desired, by placing it in coffee, tea or articles of food. Cures guaranteed. Send for free circulars. GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

F. P. VAN VALKENBURGH, Former Associate Physician and Surgeon to the Old People's Home, 3858 Indiana Avenue, Chicago, also examining Physician for the New York Life Insurance Co., Cures Drunkenness, Morphine, Opium, and destroys the desire for Tobacco. Cures guaranteed Correspondence solicited. Reference, Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Office, 103 State-st. Chicago

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept. G
C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free.
Address Dr. W. S. RICE, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

PILES INSTANT RELIEF. Cure in 15 days. Never returns. No purge. No Salve. No suppository. Remedy mailed free. Add. J. H. Reeves. Box 3290, N. Y. City. N.Y

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

ECZEMA NO CURE! NO PAY! Address DR. ROSS Grand Rapids, Mich.

TAPE WORM Removed alive, head and all, in three hours at your home. No starving required. Safe, sure and certain. Circulars free. 239 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

YOUR CHILD must be kept healthy, or she can not be beautiful. Sensible mothers buy the "GOOD SENSE" Corset Waist for themselves and their growing daughters.

Signal Notes.

LIBERIA imports 70,000 gallons of intoxicants for every missionary it receives.

A FINE new schoolhouse in Effingham county, Ill., has been named for Frances E. Willard, because it is situated just across the road from a big spring that gushes in an unfailing stream from the hillside and forms a rivulet that never runs dry.

MILWAUKEE, in her anxiety to attract visitors during the World's Fair, has received a proposition from one of her citizens to the effect that the seven big brewers of the city erect a mammoth beer mug on the City Hall square and keep free beer on tap for all visitors. What a proposition for an American city!

A SOCIETY event in Chicago on New Year's day was a gentleman's reception in the "upper ten" circles of the West Side. The papers emphasized the pleasing item that no wines were served, only coffee and chocolate. Cigars were not entirely left out, but reached the outside door, to be used only on exit.

THE first annual report of General Booth's great scheme is now published, and shows the expenditure of $500,000, to the farm colony, the match factory founded as an escape from the sweating shops, the food depots and shelters. The receipts from these institutions have been $130,000, a very satisfactory showing of one year's work.

THE stand taken by women against the slaughter of birds is making itself felt in a practical way. The Bird's Protection Society of England has just published its first annual report. In it the statement is made that a professional wild-fowler declared he had not shot a single Kittiwake gull or sea swallow this year, because there was no demand for them, though the year before he had filled an order for 8,000 of them to one dealer alone.

THE Advance, Congregational, asks, "What if in our next National Council some woman's voice should be heard?" It quotes Dr. Mackennal, who lately declined the secretariat of the Congregational Union, of England, as saying: "Before long we shall hear of them (women) as speakers in the Assembly and members of committees in Memorial Hall," and adds, "Well, we were nearly all of us—the worse for any who were not—brought up in mixed families. In the home assembly mother's voice 'drew audience' as surely as father's, and the big sister was as apt to say the right thing at the right time and in the right way as the big brother. And why not?"

THE Maine prohibitory law is prohibitory. People will begin to believe this after a while. The largest seizure, a whole carload, of liquors ever made in the state, was effected December 14, in the town of Lewiston. The consignment was made to a bleaching factory, and the cases containing the liquor were made after the fashion of those containing cotton cloth to be bleached. On measurement it was estimated to be 988 gallons, which at retail prices would amount to $5,000. Maine has officers loyal to her statutory laws, and they find it as easy to enforce a prohibitory law as any other. Prohibition does prohibit every time, when the officers are in sympathy.

IT does one good to read in a daily paper, as we do in the Brockton (Mass.) Dispatch, a two-column report of a no-license rally, held, the editor says, "under the auspices of that splendid organization, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," and which packed the largest audience room in the town, till there was not even standing room. The mayor of the city, Mayor Keith, presided, and his opening address had the true ring. "The Lord willing," he said, "I shall vote No, on election day, and while my official life continues my orders to subordinate officers shall be as heretofore, 'Let no guilty man escape.' The question which confronts you and me is, shall 'no license' be the continued policy of the city during the year 1892?" John G. Woolley followed with the assertion that "it is not easy to say whether republican government in American cities is simple lunacy or grand larceny; but, whichever it is, the trouble is alcoholic from start to finish. The cardiac arteries of the body politic are saloons, pulsing with the rhythm and resistless might of law, pumping torpor, crime and insanity into the brain of citizenship, paralysis into its spine, and pauperism into its home, and never resting day or night any more than a man's heart rests this side the grave."

THE WOMAN'S BAKING COMPANY.

Incorporated Nov. 10, 1891.

CAPITAL $250,000. SHARES $25 EACH, FULLY PAID and NON-ASSESSABLE.

The enormous profits in the Baking Business and a desire to create a great industry for women, is why this concern has been established.

PROFITS: Suppose we can sell 10,000 pies per day, which is a low estimate considering that four or five hundred thousand pies are consumed daily in this city. The manufacturer's profit on each pie is not less than 5 cents.

On this basis and on the basis of money being worth 6 per cent per annum, each share of stock now offered for sale at $25 will be worth about $304. It will require only a small portion of our capital for the pie business, and other branches, such as bread, cakes, buns, rolls, crackers, etc is equally as profitable, and as every article will bear our trade-mark, and guaranty of pure materials, the public will patronize us liberally from the start.

One Bakery in this city, with a capital stock of $75,000 paid a dividend to its stockholders amounting to $35,000 last year.

The stock of another bakery within the last few years has advanced over 700 per cent above par.

To establish a large plant in this city, we now offer for sale two thousand shares of stock at par. It will be absolutely non-assessable, no liability beyond the amount invested, price $25 per share, par value, payable, if desired, in monthly installments of $2.50 per share.

SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN

We desire agents everywhere to sell stock. Secure territory at once.

ONLY WOMEN EMPLOYED

There can be no safer or better investment for money, than this stock, and owing to the fact that the annual dividends promise to be very large, the present issue of 2 000 shares will be rapidly taken. Send a deposit, no matter how small, to show us you are in earnest, say how many shares you would like and we will reserve them until you have time to investigate or arrange your money matters. Our illustrated pamphlet, giving full information, will be sent free.

OFFICERS:

Mrs. Louise Rockwood Wardner (of the Illinois Industrial School for Girls) President.
Mrs. Lydia Rice Bentley (the well-known Vocalist) Vice President.
Miss Helen L. Hood (Corresponding Secretary Illinois W. C. T. U. and Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago), Vice-President.
Miss Caroline A. Huling, (President Working Woman's Improvement Association), Secretary.
Mrs. R. A. Emmons, (Secretary Woman's Lecture Bureau, W. C. T. U.), Treasurer.
Mrs. Frances E. Owens (Publisher of the "Owen Cook Book," and Treasurer of the Columbian Association of Housekeepers), Auditor.
Miss Ella S. Bass, (Proprietor Lily Publishing House), Auditor.

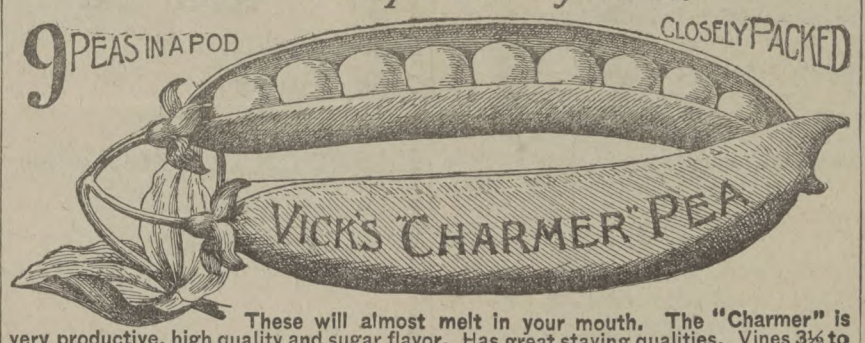
Make drafts, checks and money orders payable to

THE WOMAN'S BAKING COMPANY,

161 LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

A REGULAR SCIMITAR

That Sweeps all before it.



These will almost melt in your mouth. The "Charmer" is very productive, high quality and sugar flavor. Has great staying qualities. Vines 3½ to 4 ft. high. In season follows "Little Gem" and before the "Champion of England." We have thoroughly tested it, and confidently recommend it as the best ever introduced. Price by mail, per packet, 15 cents; pint, 75 cents.

GIVEN FREE, IF DESIRED, WITH ABOVE,

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE 1892,

which contains several colored plates of Flowers and Vegetables. 1,000 Illustrations. Over 100 pages 8 x 10½ inches. Instructions how to plant and care for garden. Descriptions of over 20 New Novelties. Vick's Floral Guide mailed on receipt of address and 10 cents, which may be deducted from first order.

JAMES VICK'S SONS, Rochester, N.Y.

ROSES BEGONIAS and CHRYSANTHEMUMS OUR SPECIALTIES.

Garden and Flower Seeds, Hardy Shrubs, Clematis and Hardy Vines—a general collection of Green House Plants. Send for our set of 3 Gem Roses—white and striped La France and Waban, only 75 cts.—beautifully illustrated on our catalogue cover. They should be in every collection. Our handsome illustrated Catalogue, containing Premiums that will interest you, FREE to ALL. See our Low Prices. 20 Roses, $1.00; 20 Geraniums $1.00; 18 Chrysanthemums $1.00; 18 Carnations $1.00. Guaranteed to be well rooted, a fine assortment of colors and to reach you in good condition. This offer is only made to induce you to give us a trial. Don't order your Roses, Plants or Seeds before seeing our prices. ☞ We can save you money. We have some fine novelties in Roses, Begonias, Chrysanthemums and Carnations that will please you. Address

GAUSE & BISSELL (SUCCESSORS TO HILL & CO.) RICHMOND, IND

WILSON'S 1892 PLANT, TREE AND SEED CATALOGUE. LIVE STOCK ANNUAL.

112 Pages, 200 Fine Engravings, Handsome Colored Plates. Full of useful and instructive information. One of the most reliable catalogues published. Describing all kinds of guaranteed Garden, Flower and Field Seeds, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Small Fruits, Choice Roses, Flowering Plants and Bulbs. Thoroughbred Land and Water Fowls. Registered Pigs, German Hares, &c. Sent free, on application. Address, mentioning this paper,

SAMUEL WILSON, SEED GROWER MECHANICSVILLE, PA

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer who will send me their Express and P. O. address.

T. A. Slocum, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

PURE GUM RUBBER GOODS

Of Every Description; also,

Mackintosh Clothing;

also, Japanese Tissue,

For Mending Without Needle or Thread,

ELASTIC TIP CO.

Headquarters 152-154 Lake St., Chicago.

Chicago's Growth.

YOU KNOW how Chicago is growing?—by location of new factories.

YOU KNOW where factories are locating?—in her manufacturing suburbs.

YOU KNOW which suburb affords them best facilities?—Griffith, having two fuel oil pipe lines and four railroads, including a Belt Line equaling twenty-two more roads.

YOU KNOW the history of investments in Chicago's factory suburbs?—uniformly profitable, returning five and ten fold in a few years.

YOU KNOW what ten Griffith lots bought now and held three years will do?—They will make you rich.

YOU KNOW prices and terms of Griffith lots?—$120 to $450 each, in monthly payments of $4 to $10.

YOU KNOW why we wish to send you full particulars?—So you'll know all about them; then you'll buy.

We are waiting for your address; here's ours.

JAY DWIGGINS & CO., R. 109, 136 Washington-st., Chicago.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D.W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O

SEEDS GARDEN, FLOWER & FIELD Seed Potatoes, FRUIT TREES, PLANTS & VINES, all best kinds. Our FREE CATALOGUE is a Novelty, as it has No Big Pictures, and gives Concise, Accurate Descriptions and FAIR PRICES for BEST GOODS. Don't miss seeing it before buying. Send address to-day to FRANK FORD & SON. Ravenna, Ohio.

BUY NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS

FOR 12 cts.

In order to introduce my splendid NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS everywhere, I offer postpaid

1 Pkg. Melon, 1 Pkg. Radish, 1 Pkg. Lettuce, 1 Pkg. Tomato, 5 Pkgs. Elegant Flower Seed, } Catalog Price 50 cts. Special Price 12 cts.

9 Pkgs. listed in no Catalog in America under 50c. 5,000 Acres used. Plants and Roses by the 100,000. Send 5c. for finest Plant and Seed Catalog published. Many Colored Plates.

Catalog and above 9 Pkgs., 17c.

JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.

JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.

16% and Sure Profit-Sharing.

An Absolutely New System of REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT

Address A. A. HOPKINS, 13 Astor Place, New York

MANAGERS WANTED Everywhere to take charge of our business. Advertise, distribute circulars & employ help to sell goods. WAGES $50 to $125 PER MONTH. Expenses advanced. State experience. Wages expected, also your preference for home work or traveling. SLOAN & CO., Mfrs., 294 George St., Cincinnati, O

WANTED! A Christian lady in every township to do writing at home. Pleasant, remunerative work, requiring only a portion of each day's time. Address The Yale Hygiene Co. Agency Department, New Haven, Conn.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send only five cents and receive a Large, Elegant Fashion Catalogue and how to secure 50c worth of dress patterns, FREE. Add. Young Lady's Bazar. 230 La Salle St., Chicago.

LADY AGENTS $10 DAILY selling "Victoria Protector" and rubber goods for Ladies & Children. Sample "Victoria" by mail $1. Mrs. L. R. Singleton, Box 985, Chicago, Ill.

LADY Agents $5 a day sure; new rubber under garment. Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago, Ill

LADY wanted, on salary, to sell Roses, Shrubs, &c Brown Bros Nurymen, Rochester, N.Y. & Chicago

More Money is Made every year by Agents working for us than by any other company. Why don't you make some of it? Our circulars which we send Free will tell you how. We will pay salary or commission and furnish outfit and team free to every agent We want you now. Address Standard Silver Ware Co.

Boston, Mass.

THE UNION SIGNAL

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S C[illegible]TIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY B[illegible]LAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 2.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January [illegible]2. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs
Ursula D Hentck
2419 19th st
92 92

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: Sunday Closing of the Exposition—The Brussels Treaty—Agricultural Papers and Temperance 8, 9
WATCH-TOWER: 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem. His Meaning. by Mary Lowe Dickinson—"Why I Married Your Mother," by Estelle Mendell—The Coffee House Movement in England. by Henry J. Osborne.. 2, 3, 4
CORRESPONDENCE: Our Second Round-the-World Missionary—How to Conduct an Evangelistic Meeting—Temperance Temple Items 4, 5
OUR PRESIDENT'S COLUMN: Our Yolande 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, Boys That are Wanted—Buying Gospel Water—Better Try to be Big Potatoes—Little Dorothy Made Him Go—Only One Glass 6
THE HOUSEHOLD: Poem, Squandered—An Every-Day Story—A Statement of the Case of John Smith, the Butcher—The Best Gift 7
QUEEN'S GARDENS: Mismatches 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: State Reporters, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Michigan—News in a Nutshell 10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: A New Year's Letter—Department of work for the Promotion of "Purity in Literature and Art." 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT: 14
SIGNAL NOTES: 16

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Six hundred Indians in the Cherokee strip are indulging in ghost dances.

A thousand street-car men strike at Indianapolis, causing great inconvenience to travelers.

The funeral of the Khedive of Egypt, who died January 7, was held at Cairo the following day.

The Duke of Clarence, eldest son of the Prince of Wales, is seriously sick at the palace at Sandringham.

A frightful wreck on the Monon route near Crawfordsville, Ind., January 11, killed two persons and seriously injured forty others.

The anti-smoke crusade in Chicago is meeting with the approval of her best citizens. A clean, smokeless city for the Columbian Exposition is now probable.

A terrible explosion occurred in a shaft of the Osage Coal and Mining company at Krebs, Indian Territory, January 7, in which nearly one hundred men lost their lives.

A cablegram without date came to Rest Cottage last Friday, containing these reassuring words: "Steamer Vigilancia arrived Rio yesterday. Mrs. Leavitt perfectly well."

A beer combination similar to the whisky trust has been formed by twelve breweries of Cincinnati, O., and Covington and Newport, Ky. The united capital is $2,500,000.

An enthusiastic mass-meeting held in Chicago Sunday last in the interests of the Sunday closing of the World's Fair gates was addressed by practical business men as well as prominent clergymen.

Dr. James Edmund, surgeon to the London Temperance Hospital, has just issued a book descriptive of one hundred and twenty-nine surgical operations of all kinds, successfully treated without the use of alcohol.

Ex-president Noah Porter, of Yale College, is lying at the point of death at his home in New Haven, Conn. For forty years he was a member of the Yale faculty, being president from 1871 to 1886, when he resigned. He was born in Farmington, Conn., in 1811, and had reached the ripe old age of eighty-one.

Count Tolstoi has established a number of eating-houses near St. Petersburg, Russia, where people with small means but no food are fed for the nominal sum of three shillings per month. The Count and his assistants partake of the same diet. He has erected huts of refuge for the homeless peasants, who have converted their houses into fuel, having no other means of heat, and, destitute of shelter as well as food, have been finally driven to tramp.

John G. Woolley left Chicago on Monday for Minneapolis to meet engagements in Minnesota and to arrange for a "Benefit" for his Rest Island Home for intemperate men, Lady Henry Somerset having agreed to speak for him in this interest January 31. Our gracious English comrade makes the trip to Minnesota for the express purpose of giving the material aid of her influence and voice to the Rest Island enterprise. Miss Willard accompanies her, and an impetus will be given to this institution for the gospel cure of intemperance by their united efforts.

THE $200 collected at the Boston Convention for Russian sufferers has been sent by Miss Esther Pugh, National treasurer, to Count and Countess Tolstoi, our "friends at court" in that far-off land brought so near by the cry of human anguish.

WE regret that a number of W. C. T. U. Temple articles came too late for the Temple number in November. Some of them were accompanied by electrotypes. If the senders wish these returned, and will please notify us we will send them.

UNITED States District Attorney Milchrist is of the opinion from evidence at hand that a gigantic whisky trust has been formed with the object to "restrict production and rob the retailers." He says that he will do his utmost to put an end to the combine. Why not "encourage" the combine to restrict production entirely?

THE Young Crusader dons a new dress of a better quality and double capacity for February. Its fine illustrations and bright stories will make it more than ever the joy of the children. Miss Guernsey, the editor, has introduced a new column in that issue, "Safe Business Openings for Boys," in which boys speak their minds freely "alongside" the men; their keen observation and unsophisticated expression of opinion is worth much. The girls will tell their minds out in like fashion in a later number. No home with children in it should be without this sparkling paper.

THE Great Petition is now in more demand than ever. Mrs. Woodbridge reports seventy-seven packages per day, sent to as many different localities, and Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth promises to send petitions from Salvation Army Headquarters to each local group in the United States. If every person who reads these lines would send to Mrs. Woodbridge, Ravenna, Ohio, for a copy of the petition and would secure five signatures, the second million would be attained. Miss Hood has taken measures to have the precious rolls of names already gained put into fire proof surroundings. Let the watchcry of 1892 be "Now for the second million."

MISS MARY ALLEN WEST, who for well nigh seven years has edited THE UNION SIGNAL, left Chicago January 6 with the International League of Press Clubs for an excursion to the Pacific coast. Miss West had been chosen to represent, among these leading journalists, the Woman's Press Association of Illinois, of which she is president, and it was felt to be desirable that she take her place among other leaders of her guild on this notable excursion; meanwhile her comrades of the W. T. P. A. determined that our editor should spend some time in the home of a beloved niece whom she has long desired to visit, and who lives near Los Angeles, so they insisted on her accepting a six months leave of absence. Miss West is a heroic worker who, like other of our white-ribbon leaders, would never voluntarily take a vacation. But the last two months of anxiety and extra work, consequent upon the illness and death of our beloved Miss Ames, have been a severe strain upon her health, and we believe this delightful outing will afford the recuperation that she so much needs. Arrangements are being made for extra help in the office during Miss West's absence, and will be fully announced in next week's issue.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET arrived in Chicago from Montreal, January 4, quietly established herself in lodgings on the North side, near D. L. Moody's Bible Institute and began her study of the institution, and attendance upon such of its lectures and exercises as she deems especially helpful in her own evangelistic work. She also met Miss Willard and a quorum of the general officers of the World's W. C. T. U. (the presence of Mrs. Woodbridge in Chicago making the number complete with the exception of Mrs. Ella Williams, of Toronto, treasurer). Arrangements were made for sending out Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler, of Pennsylvania, as superintendent of the effort to provide a Missionary Fund, by means of which, workers, whose business it shall be to "strengthen the things that remain," shall be sent to Japan, China, India and South Africa. Correspondence was ordered with white-ribboners of devotion and experience, whom the general officers deem adequate to these arduous fields. Mrs. Wheeler is now in Illinois, and further details of her plans will soon be given. Lady Henry Somerset sails from Vancouver, B. C., for Japan, in the steamer Empress of China, March 9. She will be accompanied by her son and his tutor and will remain six weeks, during which time she will do all in her power to help our Japanese white-ribboners to a more systematic knowledge of our work.

THE following communication has been received at our office from a friend who found it on the street. Whether it is an announcement for publication made in good faith, or an ironic presentation of the future respectability of the liquor business as a result of this official protection, let our readers judge. It reads:

TO THE PRESS.

To the patrons of saloons throughout the United States:

Inasmuch as the World's Fair directors have decided that no bars or saloons shall be operated on the grounds, but that liquor may be sold in hotels and restaurants, it is desired that in speaking of our places of business that you refer to them as Hotelrestaurants instead of saloons, and that our "bar" be known as our business counter, and instead of asking for the bartender, you will call for the dispensing clerk. We would urgently and especially request our American friends to be careful and observe the above rules, as we are desirous of impressing upon the minds of our foreign visitors that we are a progressive nation, and have long since abandoned the old vulgar practice of selling whisky from a saloon when we have visitors from across the waters.

HOTELRESTAURANTER.

IT is refreshing to see the enthusiastic indignation with which the better class of newspapers and the majority of the religious weeklies resent the action of the local directors in voting for the sale of alcoholic liquors on the World's Fair grounds. We so-called "prohibition cranks" are not fighting this battle alone. The alert, moral sentiment of the entire country is with us. Read these scathing words of truth from last week's Interior, the Chicago Presbyterian organ: "Disguise it as we may, soften it with whatever euphemism, this means that the local directory of this great International Exposition have decided to go into the saloon business. They are to be sharers in the profits of vending liquors on the Fair grounds. They are to be silent partners in the gains to be gotten from putting the bottle to men's lips in this high place of the nation. We brand this as a national insult. This World's Fair has governmental sanction and seal. It is no mere concern of a local directory. And yet the big brewers and liquor venders seem to have pocketed the Fair and to be determined to pocket a large proportion of the gross receipts. We must right this wrong. The American nation is not calling the people of the earth together to exhibit a beer-garden. In a jubilee celebrating the brain's independence, we do not want to show how brains are fuddled. The cradle of American liberty was not rocked in a saloon."

THE last issue of one of the National liquor dealers' papers shows the closeness with which prohibition sentiment is watched. Of the six articles on the first page, five are clippings from temperance papers, with attempted replies attached. One is a warning to the Chicago liquor trade based upon the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois to the effect that municipalities have a right to designate prohibition districts, and that such districts shall remain prohibitory, even when the municipality creating them has united with another municipality. The warning includes a call to "all the saloonkeepers, liquor dealers and brewers in the city of Chicago to increase and strengthen their protective associations, to thoroughly organize for action at election times and work in unison regardless of political partisanship." The second is a lengthy extract from a speech from John G. Woolley, "a notorious prohibition crank," in which he gives "a graphic and really enticing description of the typical saloon," according to the aforesaid paper, the article closing with a prophecy that Mr. Woolley will one day stand behind his own bar. With what fiendish delight this liquor dealer would place him there! The third selection is from the Woman's Tribune on "Women Preachers" and the fourth and fifth, clippings from The Lever's account of the prohibition banquet and press meeting, with a poor attempt at ridicule over the employment of the word "toasts" at a banquet where no liquor was drunk. Verily when the liquor organs are engaged in following up our sentiments with such pointless replies as these, we have nothing to fear from their journalistic influence.

Contributed.

HIS MEANING.

In Memory of Julia A. Ames.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

What could it mean? On the joy of our day
This swift gloom of night?
Can He mean us to work, or to think, or to pray
With her face out of sight?

Had He need of an angel, gracious and fair,
To wait near heaven's door,
To welcome the pilgrims entering there?
Ah, we needed her more!

What need in a land of such blessed release
From all sorrow and ache,
Of the voice and touch that were comfort and peace
To hearts here that break?

Could it be that up yonder, the souls, true and strong,
Their earth conflicts o'er—
Caught the thrill from afar of our battle with wrong,
And longed to know more?

Could it be that these angelic forces of God
Aye seeking new grace,
Could be stirred by her tale of the ways we had trod,
And the light in her face?

And throbbing and thrilling with news of our strife
For the tempted and lost,
Would rally all powers of the heavenly life
To help our "great host"?

God knows! If upon us fell power from on high
To strive and to pray,
If, each even, the banner we fling to the sky
Marked a conquering day—

If force unseen and divine held us up
When strength was nigh spent,
Our lips would find sweet e'en the dregs of this cup—
We should know what He meant.

"WHY I MARRIED YOUR MOTHER."

A Father's Confidential Chat With His Daughter.

BY ESTELLE MENDELL.

"Come here, Mollie," said the Rev. Mr. Barrows, in his most persuasive voice, but with a merry twinkle in his dark eyes. "I want to tell you why I married your mother."

"Why, papa Barrows! what do you mean?" asked the girl in undisguised wonder, at a proposition so irrelevant to the matter in hand—she was simply asking her mother which dress she had best wear to the concert that evening. "What has your marriage to do with this, pray? I guess your 'bout' with Deacon Muffler this morning must have slightly unbalanced your mind." Nevertheless a half conscious blush suffused her face.

"Your father's head is fairly level yet," smiled the pastor, drawing his daughter into the chair beside him.

"Is it a long story, papa?" trying to calm her feelings; "Mr. Austen will be here soon."

"Not very," stroking the soft, plump hand.

It was nothing unusual for the Rev. Mr. Barrows to indulge in a cozy, confidential chat with his daughter. From the time his children—there were three, Mollie being the oldest—could talk, he had considered it as one of his most sacred duties to have a confidential chat of a few moments with each one, before retiring. In these talks he adapted his thoughts and words to their plane—there was nothing stilted or preachy—and, indeed, the dear little things never suspected the wonderful lessons they were thus receiving.

It must not be inferred that Mrs. Barrows was remiss in these matters; but her husband possessed a power for entering a child's heart, which though as loving and faithful as he, she did not have.

Mollie Barrows was a womanly and accomplished girl of seventeen—the pride and joy of her father's heart. She had for some time been receiving the attentions of Robert Austen, a poor, but unusually promising young student at the university. He was now in his second year and his plans were laid for a long and most thorough course of study.

The Rev. Mr. Barrows was not a little interested in the young man, as he was in all trying to row against adverse winds. He watched him closely—especially of late; and from certain things in him, reminding him of the shoals on which he had nearly grounded his own bark when a young man, he felt he must utter a warning. His own experience likewise suggested that he could best do this through his daughter,—hence this story to her—and us.

"I have told you," Mr. Barrows at once began, "that I was a poor boy and had to work my way through college; and you know the romance that grew out of my wicked hazing, by the timely rescue of a strange Miss, for I have often repeated the story to you—so we may open at chapter two or three."

"I see," cried Mollie teasingly, "mamma saved your life and so you married her—that is an old, old story!"

"Not exactly," laughed her father. "I hope to show you a deeper and better motive. Well, as I have intimated, our friendship began at this time, and it continued to grow in spite of the fact that Miss Phelps was the daughter of a wealthy merchant, and I, only a poor, awkward, country boy, boarding myself and doing all the odd jobs I could find to help pay my way. To be sure I did not have as much time to study as some of the boys with more substantial backing; but just the same, I stood at the head of my class and could feel that my tutors admired and respected me.

"But some way, every time I saw Miss Phelps, my coat suddenly looked rustier and more ill-fitting than usual—my pants crept several inches nearer the tops of my coarse cow-hide boots, while my toil-stained hands seemed as big as palm-leaf fans."

"Oh, what a picture!" laughed Mollie; "it is worthy of Nast."

"But I have not exaggerated; and had these most uncomfortable feelings too, in spite of the fact that Miss Phelps always gave me the same friendly smile, whatever she found me doing.

"Leap Year Day of that first year will ever be a red-letter day to me. A dainty, perfumed note, asking the 'pleasure of my company for a ride' put my heart in a terrible flutter of ecstasy; but glancing down at my threadbare, and now, alas! patched suit—the only one I had—no money, no credit to get a new one, I was filled with unutterable dismay and chagrin.

"Recovering a little, I felt it would be a burning insult to her to accept this delightful invitation in my condition, and I at once sat down to pen a refusal. I spent some sixty minutes and nearly a quire of paper trying to frame one that suited me; and after all, in my weakness or strength, which was it, dashed off a short note of acceptance."

"Good for you, father, I always knew you were brave," exclaimed Mollie clapping her hands.

"Of course I had to go just as I was; only I brushed and sponged my clothes till they were several degrees thinner, and made my old, coarse, mended boots fairly glisten. And mind you, I had not a white shirt to my name, just gingham ones, but inking my rusty black necktie and donning a paper collar, I resolved to make the best of it.

"Dear, dear!" and some sympathetic tears stood in Mollie's soft brown eyes.

"Well, I had a very delightful time, for Miss Phelps was cordial and friendly, and being dressed very plainly, the contrast was not as glaring as I had feared. Once or twice after this, I called to return books she had kindly lent me, and saw her no more until the beginning of my second year.

"That vacation I worked for an uncle on a farm, hoarding up every penny I earned, and using every leisure moment for study. Perhaps I do not need to tell you that I often found myself thinking of Miss Phelps; and I resolved that she should have no occasion to be ashamed of me the coming year."

"But she hadn't been," interrupted Mollie warmly.

"No; but I foolishly thought she was just a little, you know, or at least that she would enjoy my company more if I was better dressed. Then I wanted the boys to look up to me. So I invested some of my scanty, hard-earned wages in a real nice suit of clothes, some ten dollars nicer than I could afford, got a half-dozen white shirts, fine shoes and stylish hat, together with the many other et ceteras of a genteel outfit. I also resolved that I would not 'chore it' any longer, though much to my chagrin I saw that I must continue to board myself. However, I wisely chucked my old clothes into my trunk, in case of an emergency."

"And did it come?" was the deeply interested inquiry.

"Oh, yes, and before the year was a quarter gone; for, you see, the boys finding the 'rust' pretty well rubbed off, became very agreeable; and in my assumed role of a 'genteel,' 'well-to-do fellow,' there was no end to the demands on my slender purse. I was 'bled to death.' Then, too, I felt that I might now become more attentive to Miss Phelps, and the concerts and lectures were thick and expensive, with reserved seats, 'bus fares, etc."

Mollie's face, poor girl, now began to redden, her eyes drooped, but her father, without appearing to notice it, continued.

"Of course I soon grounded; then for the first time, shame to my common sense! I saw that I could not go on at this rate. I became anxious and uneasy, could scarcely study, and heartily wished I was a 'poor boy' again," smiling, "but I could not beat a retreat now—I had not the moral courage—so I wrote my uncle for a loan of $200 to help me out. I at once received a check for $10, an out-and-out present to me, and a half sheet of the most wholesome, concentrated advice that a young man ever got—also gratis," the pastor's eyes twinkling at the remembrance.

"But weren't you angry?" put in Mollie.

"Why, yes; I felt just that important that I actually put the check in an envelope to return it, when my eyes fell on my livery and laundry bills, that this would only a little more than cover. That settled that matter, but not the main question of what I should do.

"That evening I was to take your mother to a lecture. I know I was not very agreeable company, I was moody and restless. She noticed it and tried to fathom the cause. I finally told her I was seriously thinking of giving up my college course. She was greatly shocked and insisted upon knowing the reason; but my replies were very evasive. How could I make a truthful confession after all the style I had been putting on?

"But thanks to your mother's quick discernment and promptness to act, she said to me as we were riding home (in a carriage, mind you), 'Mr. Barrows, may I have a plain talk with you?'

"'Why, yes,' I replied, though not a little startled.

"'And will you try not to think me forward or meddlesome?' a quaver in her sweet voice.

"'I am sure I cannot,' I said, 'in view of your past record.'

"'Well, I can but feel,' she then continued, 'that I am to blame for this unfortunate state of things.'

"In vain I protested—your mother, you know, does not take ground she cannot maintain"—a facetious smile lighting up the pastor's fine features—"a few more simple, straightforward but kindly words, and I was convinced she thoroughly comprehended the situation.

"'I have been very weak, yes, guilty,' she continued, 'in allowing you to take me to so many entertainments and spend so much upon me in other ways—I never could see why custom demands so much from a young man when waiting upon a young lady, but I have not been brave enough to say so, but led you on to the verge of ruin,' her voice getting husky.

"'Oh, no,' I stammered, 'not so bad as this,' but wishing with all my heart that an earthquake would swallow me up.

"'Well, what does giving up your course of study and preparation for the ministry mean, but the ruin of your aims and prospects,' was her earnest, convincing reply.

"I felt my cheeks redden with shame and was glad the street lamps were few and far between. I said nothing at this and for some moments there was to me a deep and awful silence, broken only by the rumble of the carriage over the pavement."

Mollie laughed outright and hid her blushing face in her hands as she asked, "And did you retreat, papa?"

"I did, my daughter, and I look back to that act, costing more resolution and humiliation than any one will ever know, as one of the bravest and noblest acts of my life. It was a crisis, a turning point in my course. Still I can claim scarcely a particle of credit; it was your mother's good sense and unfaltering championship through it all, that saved me."

"But tell me just how you did—itemize," persisted Mollie, with an interest very gratifying to her father.

"Well, your mother was the first to break the silence, by saying in her sweet, earnest way, 'And now, Mr. Barrows, I am sure you will not think hard of me if I refuse your company to entertainments after this; or, rather, ask you not to invite me unless you will allow me to pay my own way, as Elizabeth Cady Stanton says her father always insisted that she should. And remember, always, that I respect you for what you are, no matter what your circumstances may compel you to seem.'

"As she bade me good-night, she gave me her hand, and asked me not to be offended if she had spoken too plainly; and I blubbered out something about it being all true, and thanked her, and that I hoped I should yet regain her respect which I now saw my folly had lost me.

"I did not sleep much that night, but fought that battle out. The next morning, bright and early, I donned my colored shirt and old clothes, and applied to Professor Gilder for the position of chore boy, knowing that his help had left the day previous. He kept a horse and cow and was very fond of a garden, so I found it a pretty good and paying kind of a gymnasium. But it was tough! The Professor was surprised, of course; said he supposed some kind friend must be helping me this year. I seemed to be getting on so much better, etc., and I had to explain as best I could.

"And the boys, didn't they wonder?" inquired Mollie.

"Of course; for a time my life was a most sorry and bitter penance, but by your mother's help, I stood my ground and triumphed."

"And did you wear your old clothes all the time, now and never take mother anywhere again?"

"Not exactly, though I did make my 'folly suit' last me for best the rest of my course and for graduation; while for every day I bought only what I could afford. Your mother would not allow me to take her to an entertainment only very occasionally; and then she always insisted upon playing the part of Elizabeth Cady Stanton with me!"

"Then this is the reason you married her, I suppose?" with a mischievous smile, and a tweak at his iron-gray mustache.

"I fear you will never make a logician, Mollie," laughed her father, kissing her soft rosy cheek, "if that is the conclusion you draw from my story, but I am sure you have inherited your mother's good sense and courage," more seriously; and without further pointing the moral of his story, he added, "You will have to make a quick toilet now, daughter, for I see I have taken most of the time."

It is gratifying to add that Mr. Barrows was right. Mollie was a brave, conscientious girl, and heeding this timely warning took care that her friend and lover was not wrecked by those expensive courtesies which most young ladies accept, if not demand of their gentlemen friends, and so frequently, too, at a period as in the instances cited, when their time is more valuable than gold; and their purse—oh, so slender!

THE COFFEE HOUSE MOVEMENT IN ENGLAND.

BY HENRY J. OSBORNE,

Editor and Manager "Alliance Press Agency," London.

(Concluded.)

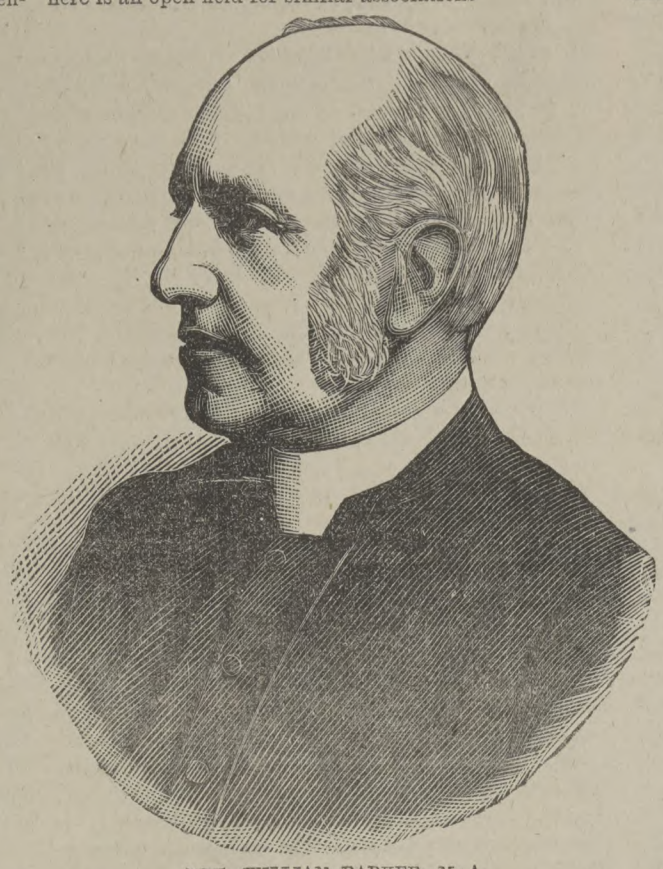
Leicester, also situated in the English midlands, a large manufacturing town, largely concerned with boots and shoes, is the seat of a flourishing "Cocoa House Company," owning thirteen houses, all situated in the best positions in the town. No pains or expense have been spared in fitting the houses for their purpose, and the success so well deserved has been achieved. One of these houses showed last year receipts amounting to over £6,000, or thirty thousand dollars. Generally the houses possess a large, spacious, and well-fitted ground floor; a superior style on the next floor above, where clerks and people with somewhat more money prefer to go; the appointments of which are unique and tasteful, with ivory-porcelain "bills of fare," abundance of glass and fresh flowers.

THE "RUTLAND" COFFEE TAVERN.

We give a picture of one of the Leicester houses, the "Rutland," so named after the Duchess of Rutland, an earnest abstainer, who has taken a deep and practical interest in coffee taverns, as in other phases of temperance reform.

For the greater part it will be seen, the movement in England has been developed by private or associate enterprise, moved, in the first instance by philanthropic or reformatory motives, yet proceeding along well-proved commercial lines. In Ireland, however, the Irish Temperance League has shown the way to union between this system and the regular propagandist work of a large temperance organization. In Belfast, the capital of the North of Ireland, the League has numerous temperance cafés, each in charge of a competent manager, but all under the immediate direction of the executive of the League and its able and energetic secretary, Mr. William Wilkinson. This League has added immensely to its prestige, and to the volume of its excellent work, by the unique success which it has achieved in this department. A very large business is done in these houses, the conduct of which is rightly regarded as by no means the least important or the least fruitful of the many labors which the League directs. This is, it is believed, the only instance of the business being wholly controlled and carried on by a purely temperance organization, but the conspicuous success in this case warrants the view that here is an open field for similar associations



REV. WILLIAM BARKER, M. A.

The movement is recognized by all temperance reformers as a most important and valuable auxiliary to that reform, Many prominent temperance workers have been among the leading promoters of this phase, and an universal chorus of praise might be constructed out of the public utterances of temperance leaders.

The necessary capital in the first instance was raised in shares, the interest on which was secured as a first charge on the profits. The whole capital, besides interest, was paid off out of profits in the course of a few years, and the League is now sole owner of the business and property. Last year the League was enabled to transfer out of the profits, from the trading to the philanthropic department, no less than £600.

Rev. Canon Barker, M. A., Rector of Marylebone, and honorary Chaplain to the Queen, one of the most eloquent and earnest of temperance divines in England has long been associated with Coffee Taverns, first in the Isle of Wight, and later in London. He is a director of one of the larger companies, and is an enthusiastic believer in the possibilities of the movement.

The following pregnant sentences are taken from a report of a recent address given by Canon Barker to a large company of Coffee Tavern managers and others.

"They, as temperance reformers, should learn from all sides. The founders of Coffee Taverns were sometimes too humble in their choice of sites. They should seek premises and carry on their work in good business thoroughfares. Residential localities were not good places in which to plant Coffee Taverns. Then he would have every Coffee Tavern give periodical entertainments. One of the greatest difficulties of the present day was to discover innocent amusement without the introduction of vice. Therefore, if they were to be a counteracting influence to those attaching to amusements of a baneful character, they must on their side provide harmless and profitable recreation for their patrons. Again, they should lay themselves out to provide dinners and teas for members of families. At one small establishment, which he mentioned, dinners were provided in a single year for no less than 22,700 girls employed in shops in the locality. It was imperative that the family portion of the community engaged in business houses should receive a great deal more attention from those who were interested in the moral welfare of the country than had been shown in times past. Coffee Taverns were the identical places suitable for providing places of resort where they could obtain a meal in consonance with their small and limited means. The movement had now attained the highest point of prosperity yet reached. The temperance movement was, he believed, on the eve of a great and triumphant issue of success. If in the providence of God they could retain their own principles, energy and determination, the day would come when drunkenness would hardly be known in their country, its unmistakable effects of crime, poverty and misery would become ancient history, and they would have cause to thank God for the extraordinary march of progress."

Further, writing so recently as October 22d to the present writer, Canon Barker said:

"I am very pleased to comply with your request respecting my opinion on the subject of the utility and future usefulness of the coffee tavern movement. I think the movement absolutely necessary as an accompaniment of the temperance movement, and unless good coffee taverns are provided men will go to the public-houses. Coffee taverns still require much improvement, but every one must see that there is already great progress in that direction. With the increased business of coffee taverns, and the consequent increase of profits, the taverns will improve more and more. I should say that the following impressions are worth thinking of: 1. Cannot the taverns, with very little risk of loss, be made attractive as luncheon bars, where the best provisions can be obtained? 2. Why should not the taverns be furnished with comfortable smoking, newspaper and billiard rooms? 3. Why should not managers of taverns encourage their customers and the young fellows of the neighborhood to use the rooms of the tavern for all club purposes, for debating and mental improvement societies, and for building societies? The thing is to get men to regard the taverns as comfortable, useful and cheap places of resort superior to the public-house. 4. Why should not managers sell packets of tea and coffee of the best quality at small profits?

Dr. Norman Kerr, M. D., F. L. S., no less celebrated as a physician than as a temperance reformer, the founder and president of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, is also an enthusiastic "coffee taverner," and is a vice-president of the Coffee Tavern Protection Society, a combination of managers and others for the promotion of mutual interests in both legal and social aspects.

Dr. Kerr has recently sent the writer the following valuable opinion:

"In my opinion well-conducted cocoa or coffee taverns constitute a valuable aid to the promotion of habits of abstinence. Simple and nourishing and unintoxicating beverages are specially valuable to the reformed inebriate in sustaining and comforting him when a feeling of weakness or despondency, or a craving for stronger liquor lays hold on him. Tea, not too strong, is useful for many such persons, but to such of the reformed as can take them, cocoa and coffee are more valuable than tea. Milk, hot or cold according to the season, is also an excellent stay to many persons. Special care ought to be taken to have the beverages and the viands genuine and unadulterated.

DR. NORMAN KERR.

For the prevention of intemperance, these temperance public-houses are also most useful. To the wearied abstainer, a refreshing and non-alcoholic cup will, in not a few cases, remove a strong temptation to resort for the moment to a narcotic "pick-me-up" which contains a latent element of danger. The only true moderate drinking is the moderate drinking of tea, coffee, cocoa and other genuine non-intoxicating liquids."

Sir John Harwood, Ex-Mayor of Manchester, was president, last year, of the National Coffee Tavern Association. In his inaugural speech, at the annual conference of the Association, held in Manchester, after referring to the Coffee House movement, as inseparably connected with the general temperance question, Sir John Harwood said:

"It stands as one of the ministering aids to meet the growing wants of those great communities in our large centers. It does not, and could not, stand alone, and if it did it would be powerless and helpless for good. The agencies which are now at work for the elevation of the lower classes in this country are legion, and they are all coöperating and converging into one great and glorious center for the uplifting of mankind and bettering the condition of those by whom we are surrounded. Now, I say it cannot stand alone. It cannot afford to remove far away from other agencies. If it did it would be doing something useless. In order to better the condition of man and society, we must not only improve man in one particular and special aspect of his character, but put into the whole nature the leaven which is to permeate his system, and make him an intelligent and strong citizen in every aspect of the question. . . . Now the Coffee Tavern movement has supplied a great want, and done a great work. I have had considerable experience in the building trade, and I, myself, have often had a cup of coffee at half past five in the morning, when going to work, and felt what a good thing it was, and I have looked with admiration on the persons making sacrifices in this direction. I have some little to do with the Coffee Tavern movement myself. I have looked on it as a movement in the right direction, and those who are interested in it are doing good, and lifting up men and women to a better and brighter life. In this way it has been partly philanthropic. I was told when I put my money into the movement that I need not expect it back; but I did get it, and on one or two occasions I grumbled at there being such a big interest. It would be a philanthropic move on my part, if I found a child wandering, with no home, and took him in my house, and kept him until he could walk and work, and when he got into that position he paid me back. I should have commenced with a philanthropic idea, but in the end it would be a profitable transaction, because, when he got able to help himself, he would have helped me. And so, in many instances, this was the case in regard to the Coffee Tavern movement, and very often its supporters became well remunerated for what they had been doing, although they might have been utterly unconscious of the good they were doing, and the beneficial results which would come back to them."

A few items will give an idea of the growth of the Coffee Tavern plan. The Birmingham Company has nineteen houses, besides a bakery and an aerated water manufactory. The Cobden, which was opened eight years ago, the late John Bright performing the ceremony, has now a very fine building, as shown by the cut last week, the exterior being in the best style of early French Gothic; it has one hundred and twenty bed-rooms.

Much more might be written as to the detailed plans of different proprietors, as to the formation and constitution of the companies, as to the thousand and one minutiæ of the business. But enough has been said to indicate the scope and character of the movement, its prospects and possibilities; and also, it is believed to show that wherever the right methods are adopted, phenomenal growth and corresponding success, as well as untold good to the community, will ultimately, if not immediately, follow.

[We are indebted to the editor of the Temperance Caterer and Refreshments News, London, for facilities afforded for copying several of our illustrations.]

Correspondence.

OUR SECOND ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—My thoughts are over across the waters often these days; I imagine I see you all busy in preparation for the World's Convention, and as I cannot be with you, I will send a line that you may know how the "cause speeds on the way." I have had a new experience, and it must be something strange, indeed, that I am able to record as a new experience. I have traveled in every kind of conveyance that goes on wheels, from a carriage with "four-in-hand" to a buffalo cart and wheelbarrow; sailed in everything that floats upon the bosom of the deep, from a great steamer to a "log raft;" slept on every kind of a bed from being half buried alive in feather-bed below and feather-bed above, down to the soft side (?) of a plank; and on two or three occasions have been very glad of six feet of good floor.

But it has been reserved for the good people of this land to send me to State's Prison. This unique experience overtook me in a recent visit to a city where I was sent to hold a mission, not with the prisoners, but with the people of the place. Among the prisoners was a Chinaman; when sentenced to some months of imprisonment he protested saying, "My cabbage spoilie, me no timie to go;" but his protest availed nothing and the thieving "John" was taken to the state boarding-house.

A successful Mission was held in the place, a number joining the union, which has been doing a good work since my last visit, more than two years ago. Going on to Clare we had grand meetings; the Institute was packed; we held a Gospel Temperance service and the next afternoon a woman's meeting; this was followed by a public tea in the same place, then a lecture in the evening, another crowd filling the Institute; after the lecture a coffee supper followed. I was delighted with the work done by this union. During sheep-shearing time the women go out to the wool sheds, where there are often a hundred men, and hold meetings among them in the evening; many have signed the pledge and much good has been done. During this visit to the Colony I have gone to a number of sheds to speak to the men and also to see the shearing. This is a great sheep country. I heard of one man who had a hundred thousand sheep; the largest Station I visited had twenty thousand sheep and many men were employed. The sheep are driven into a pen at one side of the shearing shed and come in fairly muffled in a great coat of wool, looking dirty and greasy; here they are caught one at a time and taken into the shed and soon come out minus the wool, white and beautiful. The shearers are often very cruel; the great shears used are very sharp; they begin to remove the fleece by cutting a large slit in the wool along the throat of the sheep (often great pieces of flesh are gouged out), and go over the whole body of the sheep, the fleece coming off in one large piece; this, when spread out, is often the size of a blanket. All the matted pieces are pulled out and thrown to one side as "second class" wool; then the fleece is rolled up, white side out, and packed in bales; these are usually sent to England. In some places, where there is plenty of water, the wool is cleaned, but in most places water is very scarce and it is sent just as it comes from the sheep. After they are shorn they are put into a pen and when let out they swim through or are driven through a pool of water. This contains some kind of "sheep wash" and is supposed to aid in the growth of a new coat.

My next Mission was held in Broken Mill, a mining city in New South Wales, but reached from this side. This is a typical mining town; four years ago it was just a wild waste, now there are about thirty thousand people. The temperance bodies are very strong, and all joined heartily in making the Mission a great success. I reached there early Saturday morning after an all night's travel. The rain poured down, but a number came to meet me, when I was driven to the home of an American doctor, where I remained for several days; we had many mutual friends, so meeting him was one of my greatest pleasures since leaving home.

The work began in earnest. Saturday night prayer-meeting, Sunday afternoon united children's service in town hall. Children gathered in the Reserve, formed into line many blocks long, and, headed by the Mission Band and the Temperance Drum and Fife Band, they marched to the town hall. The doors were kept closed till the children reached there; they soon filled up the great hall and many were unable to get in. In the evening hundreds were turned away. It was a time of great blessing and we all felt the Spirit was in our midst. Monday afternoon we had another children's demonstration after the same order, tea afterward being served for a thousand; it was the largest tea ever given.

In the evening was a great "temperance demonstration," the largest procession ever seen in the place, headed by the Mission Band; with the W. C. T. U. and other temperance bodies we marched through the principal streets. Coming to one corner we found the Army holding forth. As we passed them they cheered us and wheeled into line, and this living, walking protest against sin and vice seemed to stir the whole town; hundreds followed on to the hall, which was by far too small. The ministers of the city welcomed me and we had five minute speeches from a number. The meeting was most enthusiastic; the Army captain spoke; round after round of applause greeted him. So the meetings went on, the gospel was preached, public sentiment was educated, a Y was formed and the other unions strengthened. The lecture on "The Women of Asia" was well attended; after the lecture a social and tea was given in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, and at one o'clock a. m. I was on my way to my next appointment, taking a long journey of twelve hours (without sleep) in a freight train and reaching Petersburgh in time for a woman's meeting, where I formed a good union and was soon on my way north.

It is delightful to return to these places where two years ago it was such a struggle to start the work, and see how the women have done so much for "God and Home and Humanity." At Quoin, where I preached twice on Sunday, in the town hall, we had crowded meetings, many coming sixteen and twenty miles. Monday, woman's meeting and lecture, and on to Pt. Augusta. Near this place is one of the sights of Australia, indeed, I doubt, if not of the world—the great ostrich farm, a very large place of eight thousand acres, where about seven hundred birds run at large. A party moved out and the manager showed us over the place; as we drove along through the paddock some of the birds took fright and started to run; they have very long legs, they spread their wings and tails like sails and start off; they do not fly, but run, and go skimming on till they seem but a speck in the distance, and finally are lost to sight; they can outrun the fastest horse and a rider has never been known to overtake them.

We next went to the incubator where about three hundred and fifty eggs were being hatched; here we saw them in every stage of life, some with the shell just "picked" by the chick, others with heads out of the shell, and many just struggling to free themselves. The chicks are such strange looking things; as soon as escaped from the shell they get up and walk off with as much independence as though they were going out to celebrate the Fourth of July. I saw about a hundred, from five to fifteen days old, about as large as a half-grown goose with longer legs and shorter bodies, the neck and breast a beautiful fawn color, while the covering of the back is black and white quills, like a hedgehog. They have large, strong legs, and only two toes. When they are eight months old they are plucked for their first crop of feathers, but do not reach full growth till three years old. They are plucked every eight months; the feathers are not pulled out but cut off, and the roots drop out. They are driven into a pen, and a bag being put over their heads, they become perfectly helpless; then the feathers are gathered. The process is a dangerous one for they are so savage, their only means of defense being to "kick" literally; they have great strength and a kick has been known to break a man's leg. When the female bird is enraged she pulls her long neck down till only the head looking out from the breast feathers can be seen, opens her mouth and simply "roars" like a mad bull; this is the only sound I have ever heard resembling it; like other females, there are times when she "will be heard."

At Pt. Augusta temperance sentiment is very low; how low may be judged when we learn that the Church of England has just had a bazaar, in the advertisements of which we read such articles "will be raffled," and among refreshments, "Porter and Oysters, eighteen pence."

One of the deplorable things in this country is that the spirit of gambling is fostered even in many of the churches. I never was in any part of the world where the vice is carried on so openly among respectable people as here; old and young, rich and poor seem to be carried away by it; even the great dailies publish the Betting Market, and unless the press and pulpit make themselves heard, I am sure I don't know where this young country will land.

I am sorry I cannot be with you at the Convention, but "I have a great work to do and cannot come down."

JESSIE A. ACKERMAN.

Jamestown, New South Wales, Nov. 1.

HOW TO CONDUCT AN EVANGELISTIC MEETING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"Helpful suggestions as to how to conduct evangelistic meetings," is the frequent question of the workers. In the first place it is all-important that the leader of such meetings be deeply spiritual; she sustains the same relation to them that a general does to the army he commands for whose victories or defeats he may often be held in a large measure responsible. A religious leader realizing this, carefully and prayerfully prepares for the meeting; she does not know the spiritual condition or environments of many of those she addresses, but the Spirit discerns all things, and through this Divine Medium, she seeks for guidance that will enable her to speak to the hearts of her hearers just the message they need to receive; in preparing for such an occasion, of course, she will invoke the aid of the Holy Spirit in the selection of a theme and her manner of dealing with it. It may be appropriate here to add that the saintly Summerfield found inspiration in repeating the most spiritual hymns with which he was familiar, just before going forth to minister in holy things. Another successful soul-winner, who was once sought after to know why he was keeping his congregation waiting, was heard through his locked door repeating in earnest, pleading tones—"I cannot go without you." He was speaking to the Elder Brother, without whose presence and aid we can do nothing. Under His blessed leadership I have known illiterate persons to become towers of strength and their hearers to seem as wax in their hands.

If meetings do not begin promptly persons will make a practice of being tardy and the evil effects of such a course are often apparent throughout the services. At our union the Sunday afternoon meeting begins with a song service of ten or fifteen minutes; this is preceded by a very brief prayer-meeting held by the devotional committee, in an upper room, where earnest prayer is offered in behalf of the meeting just to be held in the adjoining hall. The audience is encouraged to take part in the exercises, either by prayer or testimony as the Spirit moves them; a verse or two, with a ringing chorus, fills up the pauses, but if musical interludes are too frequent, there is danger of timid souls being deterred from bearing testimony lest they be sung down, just as they begin. Music is an important part of Gospel Temperance meetings and a leader will find it profitable to emphasize this fact.

I was greatly impressed once by the manner in which Mrs. Ballington Booth announced a hymn; she read it as if she had suddenly come upon a storehouse of rich treasures that she wanted to share with every one; after her running commentary upon the opening hymn, she put additional power into it by occasional remarks between the singing of the verses; she seemed oblivious of her personality as she proceeded, and the utter absence of self-consciousness greatly heightened the effect of her powerful appeals.

Speakers should face the audience as much as possible and speak loud enough to be heard by all present; when God gives a message, He usually accompanies it with a voice strong enough to proclaim it. It is well for those who are active in temperance work to be distributed through the audience so that the prayers and testimonies can come from all parts of the house.

If persons are inclined to leave during the service, a kind, quiet invitation to remain may detain them, but annoyance should not be manifest if they abruptly leave; feeling at liberty to come and go as they please, they enter temperance halls when they would attend no other religious services; the right kind of a doorkeeper can exert a happy influence on this class of persons if he greets them pleasantly as they enter and on their departure invites them to come again, and occasionally gives them tracts; others than the doorkeeper or the ushers may profitably practice this method of winning outsiders.

The speaking sisterhood is usually in the minority; to overcome timidity it is helpful to pray aloud sometimes in the solitude of one's chamber. The leader may sometimes begin a sentence of prayer, others takeing it up, the leader finishing the prayer. Distributing Scripture references on slips of paper among the audience during a Bible reading on some very interesting theme, calling at intervals for those having the slips to read the passage referred to, is a good way of hearing from the silent fraternity. The children present should not be forgotten but the leader of the meeting will make friends among them if she addresses to them some pleasant remarks especially. After the leader has given the keynote to the meeting, those who follow her, in emphasizing it, will help to give character to the exercises far more than if they speak at random, regardless of what the leader has said. The latter needs always to have in view the salvation of souls, making Christ and His teachings prominent. The word of God should ever be held up as our guide book from earth to heaven. Evangelistic meetings should be what their name implies; if they degenerate into political meetings, they will injure our cause and keep away many whose attendance we are anxious to secure.

Lastly, I would suggest that white-ribboners always wear the white ribbon; shop-keepers with an eye to business always make their sign prominent, and why should not we who have a definite work to accomplish, show by our beautiful badge that we are members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union?

Yours in the work.

MARY GRANT CRAMER.

WHEN your faith is put into the crucible, you may know the "Great Refiner" thinks there is good metal in it.—Mother Thompson.

THE supreme object of the W. C. T. U. is to elevate the home and to protect its members, one and all—the stronger from legalized temptation, the gentler from oppression.—Frances E. Willard.

ITS own defiance of God's law and the demoralization it has wrought in every community where it has been tolerated have written the doom of the liquor traffic, and whether it be in a day or a year or more, in God's own time its destruction is sure.—Josephine R. Nichols.

Our President's Column.

OUR YOLANDE.

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith sent this comforting cablegram from London when Miss Ames went away:

"Happy Yolande! 'Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints.'"

From Mrs. Annie R. Knox, Janesville, Wis., my first teacher:

"Dear Miss Ames! How can any one say what is in our hearts when we know we shall never see her sweet face again! But, oh, my friend, she is not far away, for 'heaven is nearer than mortal strength' and she cannot be where God is not."

From Rev. J. W. Hamilton, Boston, Mass.:

"My heart has been sad beyond measure at the news of the sudden death of that dear girl, Julia Ames. I dreaded it from the beginning. I went to her the night of the great banquet in Music Hall and begged her not to remain. She was sweet-spirited, a great-souled and splendid enthusiast in her work. How you will miss her!"

Misses Louise and Cassie Smith write as follows from Pawtucket, R. I.:

"Our dear Miss West's pen picture of that ideal service at Rest Cottage was so complete that it was brought before us and seemed as if we had been there to weep with those who wept on that memorable occasion. It is clear to my mind that the Boston Convention was the most wonderful one held on the face of the earth; but we sincerely hope that no more of our beloved comrades will die of it."

Miss Rilla Norton, of Boston, writes:

"What wonderful women American women are! I was so sorry to hear of Miss Ames' death, for I knew how sudden it was to you at Rest Cottage. She must have been a wonderful woman. I have just one souvenir of her, and it is sacred to me now. She returned a little article I sent her on 'Convent Life in France' with a note so graceful that it was as if she had accepted my item. A few words, a small act, how much they tell us of one's whole life and character."

"DEAR MISS WILLARD:—I am overwhelmed by the thought of Miss Ames' death. She has long been a favorite in my mind and heart. There is nothing to be said; it seems to me, who am practically outside, an irreparable loss to the work, a calamity to the cause, and a sorrow too great to be touched by common words of condolence. My heart aches for you all. If it seems all this to me, what must it mean to you who lived with her day by day? My heart aches for myself, too, for I loved her. My love and tender sympathy to Miss Hood. I saw how tenderly she was shielding her friend in Boston. I wish she might have saved her, and know, if watching and care could have done it, she would be with you now.

"Faithfully yours, MARY LOWE DICKINSON."

A young Scandinavian, Miss Kate Lunden, of New Jersey, whom Miss Ames helped to develop, writes a most touching letter, from which we can take but these sentences:

"The mourning border in THE UNION SIGNAL told me the sad story. Somehow I had expected it ever since I saw the account of Miss Ames' illness. To me death is an old acquaintance and in his visage there is no terror left. I thought when I was a child that he had taken all I had, but the farther I go on life's pathway, the more I find to love and lose. It is, therefore, no wonder that I have a tear for her whom I loved without having seen, and to her memory be it sacred. Nothing of good is ever lost, and thy dear Yolande shall be a blessing through the ages to come."

Rev. Augusta J. Chapin, of Oak Park Unity Church, sings a thrilling note of appreciation in these sweet strains:

"I met her just three times and from the first her name was written in the book of my elect. The last time I saw her was at the reception given by Mrs. Carse to Lady Henry Somerset. As I saw her standing close to Lady Henry, in the midst of that splendid group of representative women, I was more than ever impressed by the rare and queenly soul clothed in the lovely raiment of earth—so soon to be laid aside. Yet young as she was she did a deathless work before she went away—a work that will go on by the hands of those who were and shall be inspired by her strong spirit, by her diligence, enthusiasm and consecration. But we do know that God is with us, and though He buries his workers He carries on His work."

"DEAR MISS WILLARD:—A few years since a letter came to me on Saturday night, announcing the dangerous illness of my only daughter, Rilla, then in St. Petersburg. It had been three weeks on its way when I received it. I was alone in my study when I received that letter. The first thought was, 'For aught I know she may have been in her grave more than two weeks.' I was in agony. It seemed to me I could hardly conduct my Sabbath services on the following day to which I had been looking forward. But that struggle was a brief one. It was as though God's angel had been sent to speak into my soul this precious thought, clothed in His own words, 'My God makes no mistakes!' At once I rose and walked my room in triumph. Those precious words brought me a complete victory. Quieted and comforted by them I rested sweetly that night. Upheld by them, inspired by them, I went through my services the next day as though all was well; as, indeed, I was sure all was well, whatever might be true of my loved one so far away.

"And now, dear friend, it is for you to know, and you to sing, 'My God makes no mistakes!' There you must rest your heart, come what will. And may the dear Lord, 'the God of all comfort' hold you up and give you peace. (Rev.) SMITH NORTON."

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The writer yesterday had the unspeakable joy of ascending to the very roof of the Temple, and looking out over the great city; had it not been for a driving snowstorm the broad waters of Lake Michigan would have been easily discernible on the east, and the great prairies of Illinois on the west. No woman has ever set foot above the first floor before. The last staircase was put in place yesterday morning, so it was the first moment possible for a woman to ascend. Crowds of workmen were found on each floor busily at work finishing the interior. Some were putting down the beautiful mosaic pavement in the halls; others were at work putting in the wainscoting which is formed of great blocks of white Italian marble beautifully veined; it is finished at top and bottom with bands of buff marble five inches wide, the whole being almost five feet high. There are over two hundred men at work on the building now; the outside is entirely finished with the exception of the carving on the stone on the grand entrance on La Salle street, and the entrance to Willard Hall on Monroe street. All offices will be ready for occupancy by May 1.

***

What a sight it was to stand on the roof and look down on three stories of dormer windows in every shape that could be devised in gothic architecture. I thought they looked beautiful from the street, but they were far more beautiful from above. As I stood upon the long stretch of flat graveled roof in the center of the building, almost two hundred feet above the noise of the street, protected on the south and north by high, gothic peaks, I said, "What is to hinder our having a flower garden here so near the blue sky? We can have the tropical plants of the south and the hardy flowers of the north side by side. Then we will have a little office built on the roof to receive our friends when they come to view the Temple; and we will have seats amid the sweet scented flowers where they can rest and enjoy the beautiful turrets and windows of the Temple, and look away over the tops of the great buildings of the city to the blue waters of Lake Michigan." Then I thought of the dear ones, old and young, all over the land who have done so much for the building, how they would enjoy this sort of hanging garden of Babylon up among the turrets of the Temple. Would they not feel as I felt, as though they were a little nearer the temple not made with hands, than they ever were before? But we shall see what we shall see.

***

Many of our friends have remembered the Temple generously with Christmas and New Year's gifts; among this number is J. L. Burrell, Oberlin, Ohio, who sent $100; James W. Fales also sent $100; Mrs. Emily Griswold, Wethersfield, Conn., sends a gift of $100; her daughter, Mrs. Denning, writes: "Mother is seventy-six years old; although deprived of many privileges and pleasures on account of deafness and lack of sight she is a continued example to us all of patience and cheerful courage. My sister reads THE UNION SIGNAL to her. When she heard of the Temple she became greatly interested and has been planning for months to send this gift." The following pathetic incident is told by Mrs. L. E. Alfred; she sends $2 for Mrs. A. C. Hitchcock, Westfield, Vt., and writes: "It comes from a poor woman who is not expected to live. She is not a white-ribboner, but has read THE UNION SIGNAL and heard through it about the Temple. When one of our ladies, Mrs. Miller, saw her last she said, 'Could I do something for the Temple before I die?' and handed her $2, saying, 'I wish it was a hundred.'" Mrs. S. Dickson, Oskaloosa, Iowa, sends $2, "One dollar of this," she writes, "was given by a widow who said to her son during her last sickness, 'If I do not get well remember and send $1 to the Temple for me.' The other dollar is from a woman in the country who lays aside all eggs laid on the Sabbath for missionary and temperance purposes." Mrs. Eliza J. Thomas, the wife of a Welsh minister, now living in Tracy, Minn., although her husband is in poor health and they have but little means to live upon, yet this noble woman has saved up from time to time by self-denial $100 for the Temple; she has just sent the last $5 which completes her pledge. Besides this she sends $12 from a mite-box opening of the Tracy Union. Mrs. Emma Taber Thorpe, Sanford, Fla., sends $25, her third installment on her pledge of $100. Mrs. J. Beaston sends $15 on a hundred dollar pledge.

***

Something over a year ago William Brooks, of Chicago, was called from the shadows of earth to the joys of heaven. To him no doubt an abundant entrance was administered, as he was a staunch temperance man and noble Christian; although 75 years old when his call came, up to within a short time of that event, every Sunday morning he would get up early and visit the prisons and hospitals of the city taking with him for distribution an abundant supply of religious papers. His loving words and cheerful smile comforted many a sad, sick heart. His daughter, Mrs. Robert L. Greenlee, of Chicago, has sent $100 to have his name placed in Willard Hall.

***

Dear Rosa Bennett, though dead yet speaketh. Her faithful mother sends $2 from Rosa's mite-box, her half-yearly collection.

***

All money sent to the Temple should be in the form of draft, post-office and express orders or in registered letters, and should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, and sent to her at Evanston, Ill. A two cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 149 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, will secure a Temple mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin.

Our Children.

BOYS THAT ARE WANTED.

BY CARLOTTA PERRY.

"Wanted—boys," this want I find
As the city's wants I read of,
And that is so,—there's a certain kind
Of boys that the world has need of.
The boys that are wanted are steady boys,
Unselfish, true and tender;
Holding more dear the sweet home joys,
Than the club or the ball-room's splendor.

Boys who have eyes for the sister's grace,
Swift hands for the household duty;
Who see in the mother's patient face,
The highest, holiest beauty.
Boys of earnest and noble aim,
The friends of the poor and lowly;
To whom forever a woman's name,
Is something sacred and holy.

Boys are wanted whose breaths are sweet,
The pure air undefiling;
Who scorn all falsehood and smooth deceit
That lead to a soul's beguiling.
Boys who in scenes that are glad and bright,
Feel their pulses beat the faster,
But who hold each animal appetite
As servant and not as master.

Boys are wanted whose strength can lead,
The weaker upon them leaning;
Boys whose "No" is a "no" indeed.
And whose "Yes" has an equal meaning.
Who are strong not only when life decrees
Its bitter and heavy trials,
But can practice its small economies,
And its every-day self-denials.

Who eagerly Fortune's smile to gain,
With wise zeal wait upon her:
But count all wealth as a treasure vain,
That is won at the cost of honor.
Doing their duty in every stress,
With love and with faith undaunted;
Daily growing in nobleness—
These are the boys that are wanted.

BUYING GOSPEL WATER.

BY MABEL GIFFORD

Little Katrina Kipley, with her face pressed against the chilly window-pane, was squinting at a very blurred vision of "wet sky, wet bricks and wet mud" outside the window. She could hardly make out the two elm trees opposite, protesting against the wind and rain in a melancholy fashion only to yield up their yellow, brown-speckled leaves after each struggle. Then before the wind could toss them the rain beat them down to the ground and pressed them into a brown mosaic.

All this Katrina saw through the watery perspective. It was very melancholy, indeed, yet she continued to kneel in the big black haircloth chair and pressed her face closer to the cold glass.

And why, do you think? Because inside the window-pane it was sadder than the outside. Mother was crying. She had been crying ever since noon when father came home and went to bed without speaking to anybody, and without eating any dinner.

By and by, mother said in a very choking voice, "It is time for you to take a nap, Katrina."

Then Katrina, left the dizzy, brown-speckled leaves to fall down into the mud without any one to pity them, slid out of the big chair and went over to the sofa where she took her afternoon naps. As she was about to climb up she half turned, not daring to look into mother's face:

"Could I go in still an' kiss farzzer jes' once?"

"Oh, no! he is sick, he must not be disturbed."

Then Katrina, with a very mournful little face, curled up on the sofa and mother came and covered her with her red plaid shawl, and a big tear dropped on Katrina's cheek. She shed a few tears to keep that one company, and then went to sleep. It seemed but a little minute when she woke up and heard some one saying,

"Yes, he's in a very bad way; there's only one thing that will ever cure him."

"What's that?" cried Katrina sitting up very straight, and looking hard at a pale, kind-faced man who stood at the door with his hat in his hand. It was Minister Records; Katrina knew him and loved him, because he was always so kind to mother.

They both started when Katrina spoke, and looked at each other and then at her.

"Gospel-water," said Minister Records, smiling a little; "gospel-water is what will cure him, and that is the only thing that will put out this cursed fire-water."

"What's Gos—" that's all Katrina had a chance to say, for mother hurried to talk about the weather, and the minister hurried home. Katrina's face was all alight; "Now, muzzer, we will go straight and get some Gospel-water and make farzzer all well, won't we?" She leaned against mother's shoulder but saw no answering light in the tear-dimmed face she looked up to.

"It's no use, no use," said mother covering her face with her hands. "They let the wicked folks sell him the curse, and follow him if he tries to keep away from it, and urge him to take it, put it into his hands and hold it to his lips. Why don't they stop them? They could if they would; there are millions of them, ministers and Christians. No; they let it all go on just to please the heartless people who prefer to make money by poisoning and killing other people instead of working. Then after the harm is all done they go about preaching salvation." Mother laid her head down on the table and cried harder than her little daughter ever had seen her before.

Katrina stood looking on in great consternation, her eyes getting rounder and rounder, and her alarmed little nose getting higher and higher, and I don't know when the corners of her mouth would have stopped going down if mother had not stopped crying a bit to say:

"Katrina, go down stairs and play with the Kilpatricks until I call you."

"Does it cost very much?" she asked, going backwards towards the door,—"the Gospel-water?"

"A great deal," said mother.

"Then I'll have to take the whole of it," said Katrina very decidedly to herself, and she went across the narrow entry to her own room on the opposite side, climbed up to the shelf and shook a little red house that stood there, upside down, until there was no more "jingle" left in it. She went down stairs with a hat and cloak on, and never stopped at the Kilpatrick's door. She went right out into the street where the mud was muddier and the wet wetter than ever. Little crooked rills of water straggled in and out of the brick pavement in every direction, and little pools of water filled every hollow. The people walking over the pavement were very wet and solemn, even the boys forgot to shout "Pickaninny," as Katrina passed them.

The little brown-cloaked figure pattered and slipped and splashed bravely up the street, and the rain ran down its face so fast you could not have told whether it was the weather, or Katrina, or both that were crying, Katrina could hardly have told herself.

She was frightened to find herself alone, out in the dismal, dripping streets. It was early, but so dark that lights already began to glow in the windows.

"I guess Mr. Sun forgot to come around this way to-day," mused Katrina, and then she turned another corner and came into the full blaze of a great window that displayed plates of tempting food, pretty glass bottles, bouquets of beautiful flowers, and evergreens all about.

"This must be the place," she cried in a rapture, and after one timid look at the great glass doors she went in.

There were many people, all men, in there, eating and drinking, chatting and laughing, and having the pleasantest time. The light and the pleasantness seemed to warm her poor chilled little body through, and she walked up to the counter with rising courage.

"Please, mister, I want ten cents' worth of Gospel-water."

"What?" cried the clerk in such a queer voice that Katrina began to wilt and wonder if little girls never bought that kind of water.

"Gospel-water," she repeated in a louder voice; the man might only be deaf. "Ten cents worth of Gospel-water."

"We don't keep that kind of water here," grinned the clerk, reminding Katrina of the organ-grinder's monkey.

"Who sent you here?" demanded a big voice over the clerk's head. Katrina looked up and saw a tall, black-whiskered, stern looking man with cross looking eyes. "Some trick of that temperance crew, I'll wager," he muttered, looking crosser every instant.

"I sent myself," answered Katrina with dignity, growing brave as difficulties thickened.

"Very well, then; what do you want of Gospel-water?"

"For farzzer; he's sick. Fire-water's got him. Fire-water's awful; when it gets farzzers, muzzers cry all the time, an' there isn't much to eat, an' it gets shady 'fore the lamps is lighted, an' big scissors have to go to work in a big, big house where there's lots of wheels that go 'whiz-z-z' all day, and little scissors don't have any good times or any nice cloze. An' the meetin' man said gospel-water would put out the fire-water. Couldn't you fix a little, don't you s'pose?"

By this time every one in the room was listening. A man in a russet coat, near the door, got up and went out. Then two more men started, as if they had just remembered an engagement.

The clerk stopped grinning, leaning over the counter and rolling horrible eyes at the little mite on the other side, he hissed loudly, "S-s-s-s-scat!"

Katrina fled in terror, and she heard the men laughing as she rushed from the bright room out into the dark street.

(To be Continued.)

BETTER TRY TO BE BIG POTATOES.

Among the visitors at one of the Chicago public schools was a retired farmer uncle of one of the pupils. Observing that her guest appeared much interested in the children, the teacher invited him to speak to them.

"Children," said the visitor, "how many of you ever saw a load of potatoes going to market?" Only a few hands went up, for Chicago school children are not so favored in that line as their town cousins. "Well," continued the guest, "any one who sees a load of potatoes going to market will notice that only the big ones are on top. The little ones are at the bottom. In the shaking up that the load gets in going to market, the big potatoes crowd the little ones to the bottom. This world of ours, my little friends, may be compared to a load of potatoes going to town. The people are the potatoes. You, here in school, are preparing to be a part of this load of potatoes, and to take your chances in the shaking up which comes in getting before the public and making a success in life. In school is where you begin to be either a big or a little potato. If you are learning your lessons and working hard to stand high in your class, it means that you are going to be a big potato when you leave school and go out into the world. If you are failing to get your lessons it means you will be a little potato in the world, a potato that is not much good and one that nobody will have much use for. Study hard! Get every lesson perfectly! Then you will be bright and intelligent, and when you go into the world you will be on top, you will attract attention, and people will pay well to secure you."

LITTLE DOROTHY MADE HIM GO.

What gentleness and kindness in the treatment of dumb animals will accomplish was demonstrated by a striking incident that happened on Prairie avenue yesterday morning.

A large truck-horse, harnessed to a heavily-loaded express wagon, had "become balky." The load had overtaxed his strength, and in spite of the savage blows that his enraged driver dealt him he refused to move. The man finally tried the experiment of striking the horse's front knees, but it was without effect. The animal seemed entirely discouraged under the treatment, and attempted to lie down in the harness.

The occupants of several of the neighboring houses were indignant witnesses of the driver's cruelty. He was warned that his action would be reported to the Humane Society, but the threat failed to stop him.

Finally, little Dorothy, the 13-year-old daughter of a Prairie avenue home, stepped out into the street.

"I'll start your poor horse," she said, and going up to the animal she stroked his neck, and brushed the snow and mud from his eyes. The horse seemed to recognize a friend in the little girl at his side. He raised his big nose up to her face, rubbed it against her shoulder, and then, at her command, settled down in the harness and gave a resolute tug at the heavy load behind him. It failed to move.

"Try again," coaxed the little girl, holding the bridle. There was a straining of straps and a creaking of wheels, and then the horse patiently started on his way, apparently unmindful of the deep ridges on his back and legs raised by his owner's brutality.

The little girl is a member of the Juvenile Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

ONLY ONE GLASS.

The Morning Star tells an interesting anecdote of President Lincoln: Abraham was not afraid to speak out about beer. He was once urged to drink a glass of lager by some man with whom he had business dealings. In vain he protested that he never drank liquors. Lager was then coming in fashion, and his friend told him that he must learn to drink it, as it was wholesome and would do him good. He drank it and they parted, but the lager made Mr. Lincoln very sick and he never forgot it. Many years later they met again. It was at a White House reception. The tall President, who was receiving, saw his friend coming afar off, and called out, "Mr. W——, I have never drank a glass of lager since!" and we may infer that he wished he had never drank that.

The Household.

SQUANDERED.

I wandered down by the sea,
The great deep-heaving, desolate sea,
And the waves came dashing up mightily,
The sun shone fair
And all the air
Was athrob and aquiver with light,
And the face of the waters grew bright;
The billows came galloping up the beach,
Their snowy manes tossing out wild on the breeze,
And as far as the eye could reach,
The white sails dotted the seas.

I was glad with a joy of the sea;
Glad with a joy that was born of the sea,
Of the waves that sparkled and danced to me
And smote the shore
With a heavy roar
That waked the echoes, or in wild rout
Leaped on the frowning rocks with a shout;
Glad with a gladness of all things fair,
Of the sky and the earth and the bounding sea,
And my hands held a treasure rare
The Master had left with me.

There were diamonds, and rubies, and chrysolite,
And opals that held in their milky white
A heart of fire. There were sapphires blue
As the far-off skies when the light breaks through
The rifted cloud when the storm is o'er;
There were emeralds green as the crystal arch
Of the waves ere they break on the curving shore;
And pearls as white as their crests when they march
Shoulder to shoulder along the strand,
Tossing their foam on the shining sand.

I was mad as I walked by the sea,
The cruel, crawling, treacherous sea;
For the waves were alive and they called to me.
They clutched with their hands
The shifting sands.
They filled the air with their sounding cries,
That smote the sapphire, sunlit skies.
"Fling us the jewels you hold!" they said,
"Fling us the treasure you count so rare;
We will bring you from ocean's bed
A million gems more fair!"

And I heard to the cry of the sea,
The lying, traitorous, false old sea,
And I flung my treasure away, ah me!
And alone I stand
On the darkening strand,
And the billows are mocking my wild despair;
With jeering laughter they fill the air,
And the wrack and the tempest bear down apace,
And what shall I say when my Lord shall appear?
How can I look on His face?
For I shudder in anguish and fear.

Will His calm eyes pierce through my soul with the look
He cast upon Peter? and can I brook
The infinite sorrow and sad surprise
And stern rebuke I shall meet in those eyes
When He calls for the treasures I flung to the sea,
For the jewels I squandered? Ah me! Ah me!

—Elizabeth F. Merrill, in the Courier-Journal.

AN EVERY-DAY STORY.

BY M. E. H.

I went to call upon a friend the other day, and after shivering for many minutes on the doorstep before an unanswered bell, I was just turning regretfully away when an agonized voice pealed from an upper window, "Oh, bless your heart! Wait one second longer and I'll let you in; I was taking my bath;" so I bided my time, and presently, seated in my friend's cozy parlor, I listened to the following tale of woe:

"I want to be written up! I ought to be written up," said my friend, "as a type of the forlorn class of women, unfitted by taste, inclination, or training to do their own work, yet obliged to get along without a servant. Look at Ned's income. It is inadequate to keep even the rats that overrun the cellar. We are liable at any moment to be arrested by the Humane Society because we do not properly provide for the seven cats a grim Providence has sent us. And yet, you know that thanks to rich relatives, I always dress well and keep up appearances. But oh, the misery of this housework; it is never-ending, and I loathe it. Do you suppose that Ned realizes what it is for me to grub in that old kitchen, tumble up-stairs with coal, beat paths to hang out clothes, sweep, dust, cook, clean etc., in a home that has more water bugs than conveniences, and more back-stairs than comfort? I tell you I hate my life so sometimes that I would elope with the first man who offered me surcease from kitchen drudgery forever. Just look at the door-bell, alone! I never yet took a bath but it rang nineteen times to the minute. And the rich ladies from the church are always calling and asking me to my own face, 'Is Mrs. Bender in?' take me for my own servant girl, because my hands look so, and my face is always smutty! I answer with a brogue, 'She is not, mum. She is afther goin' to a grand loonch on the North Side.'

"Rather than go on living this way much longer, I would rather die. I have got heart disease anyway, and some day I shall just topple over into a pot of soup, or into the wash-boiler, and be found that way when Ned comes home. What's the reason a man can't support his wife after he has married her, anyway? I'm awfully fond of Ned; he has always been good to me, but there is something lacking in a man when he can't make enough to keep a servant girl to save his wife."

I listened to this eloquent outburst with more sympathy than amusement; and yet what help is there for my friend, or the class she typifies? Poverty is no discriminator of persons. It binds the refined woman and the impracticable woman with the same chains that rest more lightly upon the broad shoulders of a round-faced Bridget, or a New England dame of "faculty."

To live in anything approaching comfort there is more work necessary in a household than mere onlookers have any idea of. The routine of a well-ordered house is like the steps taken by a sheep on a treadle, it is walk, walk, walk, all the time and forever, with no advance. There are more martyrs in kitchens than ever yet perished at stakes.

Smile at their discomfort and their trials if you will, but the woman doomed to perpetual housework, with neither uplift nor outlook, is a subject for tears rather than for scorn. There are only two palliatives for her lot; one is patient endurance, the other is to get out of it. To endure it, lift yourself high as possible from its environments. Cultivate (if God has not already bestowed upon you the priceless gift) an appreciation of humor. A good laugh will put to flight a whole flock of cares. Draw a heavy line between the essentials and the non-essentials of work. Never neglect the hygiene of the home, yet forego the frills. Toss a pound or more of copperas down your drains, use ammonia and carbolic acid freely as purifiers, but let your silver-polishing and your window-washing go when you are tired. Never allow your work to drive you. Better sit down a minute with the work undone, play a jig on the piano, or read the newspaper, than yield a slavish allegiance to the work that awaits you. Paste a lot of your favorite poems all about the wall and over the sink, so that the words shall greet you like an encouraging voice and keep your soul, at least, out of dish-water. Be heroic, be sensible, be sweet-tempered, so far as it be possible, and may the good Lord help and bless you whatever comes.

A STATEMENT OF THE CASE OF JOHN SMITH, THE BUTCHER.

BY ALWIN JOVENIL.

John Smith has a wife and three beautiful children. He is a butcher by trade, and as he thoroughly understands the work, he might command a salary of at least $60 per month the year round.

Naturally John Smith is an affectionate husband, a kind father, a good provider, and a diligent workman. He ought to be the head of a happy, comfortable home. But John Smith has one very bad fault; he drinks intoxicating liquors and has become a drunkard. His wife is known as the wife of a drunkard, and when the playmates of his children get angry they taunt them with, "Your pa's a drunkard."

Let us make a statement of the case of John Smith, the butcher, and learn as near as we can, what has been the actual cost of his liquor bill.

John Smith is now forty-five years old. At the age of twenty-five he was discharged from a position that commanded a salary of $60 a month, solely on account of drunkenness, and from that time to this he has had no steady employment. He works at his trade between sprees for butchers, who, knowing his failing and taking advantage of it, pay him small wages and treat him as they would not dare to, if he was a sober man. From the time of his first discharge until the present day he has not averaged earning over $30 per month. He might have had at least $60 a month.

ITEM 1: $30 each month for twenty years, from loss of employment and salary. Total, $7,200.

What liquor John Smith has drunk he has had to pay for. On an average his drinks have cost him twenty-five cents a day (not a high estimate) for each day of the twenty years; or, $7.50 per month.

ITEM 2: $7.50 each month, for twenty years, paid for liquor. Total, $1,800.

Add item one to item two and we have $9,000 as the price John Smith, the butcher, pays in hard cash for the privilege of being a drunkard during twenty years of his working life.

John Smith at the age of twenty-five was a strong, healthy, intelligent man, with a constitution like iron. Now, when barely past the meridian of life, he is a trembling, bloated wreck, a mental and physical ruin, and stands with one foot on the brink of a grave more awful in its rayless hideousness than the black depths of the bottomless pit.

ITEM 3: Health and Intelligence.

John Smith, the butcher, once had the love of his faithful wife, the affection of his beautiful children and the friendship and esteem of his neighbors. Now, his wife lives with him from a sense of duty, cherishing, it may be, a loving remembrance of the dead manhood of his youth, but not loving him—no good woman could; his children fear, nay, almost hate him, because he has brought suffering and shame to the dear mother, and woes innumerable and disgrace almost unbearable into their young lives; his neighbors look upon him as a drunken sot, a hopelessly ruined man, as one better in the grave than out of it.

ITEM 4: Love of Wife and Children and the Friendship and Respect of Neighbors.

Once John Smith held his head up proudly and was not afraid to look any man in the eye. Now he shambles along the street, with head bowed and bleared eyes bent upon the ground. He has lost his pride in self.

ITEM 5: Self-Respect.

John Smith was, naturally, a domestic man. He loved his wife and children, had a pleasant, comfortable home and was always well clothed and well fed. Now, he has lost his love for Mary and the little ones, lives in a tumbled down shanty, cares not how he looks, has little to eat and goes about a living synonym of wretchedness.

ITEM 6: Home's Blessings and Comforts.

Let us summarize:

Itemized account of the cost of the drink bill of John Smith, the butcher:

ITEM 1.—To cash by loss of employment and salary for twenty years	$7,200
ITEM 2.—To cash paid for liquor during twenty years	1,800
Grand total cash cost of liquor bill for twenty years	$9,000
ITEM 3.—To twenty years' constant use of intoxicating liquors	Health and Intelligence.
ITEM 4.—To the brutalizing influence of liquor on the mind and body by twenty year's use	The love of wife and children and the friendship and respect of neighbors.
ITEM 5.—To loss of pride in self by twenty years' use of liquor	Self-respect.
ITEM 6.—To poverty and the degeneration of home and home influences by twenty years' use of liquor	Home's blessings and comforts.

In return for all this, John Smith, the butcher, will live a wretched life, die on a pauper's bed, and sleep in a drunkard's grave.

THE BEST GIFT.

Were I permitted to choose for the young person whose weal is inexpressibly precious to me one gift, knowing that it would include most that I would have his, I would choose patience. I have by careful observation and analysis studied the elements of success, and patience is an important one of them. I will not assume that no impatient man succeeds, but I will affirm that I cannot now call to mind a single one who has made a pronounced success who is distinctly impatient, and I am certain that they are the exception and not the rule. Poor, indeed, are they who have not patience, whatever beside are their possessions, and their poverty of spirit makes them incapable of commanding themselves or their environments. Said a gentleman whose life had been full to overflowing of temptations, failures and practically limitless opportunities and success in every direction: "My mother's dignified, unfailing patience has all my life long been the strong bond that has held me more or less closely to the good and true. When separated from her the memory and the influence of it has been a harmonizing force, as it was when I was with her." It is patience that enables one to work and wait and to know that, although great work has been done in early life, greater work has been done later on. Alexander the Great and Napoleon were justly famed generals, Keats and Coleridge great poets, but not the greatest. It was not until late in life that Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln ripened into glorious manhood. There is a power in patience, which has, as yet, never been honored or sung. If you are skeptical as to this assertion just try it and you will be convinced. If you are a mother it will give you such perfect control of your children and such joy in their companionship as nothing else can; if you are an employé it will make you more valuable and enable you to work easier; if you are an employer it will insure to you faithful service; if you are anything save a hopeless drone in the hive of life you will find it precious beyond price. Rooted in fortitude and resolve, it may be cultivated in almost any soil, so those may possess themselves of it who will.—Antoinette Van Heusen Wakeman.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

EDITORS.
MARY ALLEN WEST, JULIA A. AMES.
ASSOCIATE.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
President—MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, 149 Ashland Boulvd , Chicago.
Treasurer—MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Elmhurst, Ill.
Secretary—MARY ALLEN WEST, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MISS ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
MRS IRA LEWIS, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Stroudwater, Me.
MRS. A. H. CHRISTENSEN, Beaufort, S. C.
MRS. L. D. CARHART, Marion, Iowa.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec.—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words, then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, thy father, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Isa 58: 13, 14.

SUNDAY CLOSING OF THE EXPOSITION.

"The combat deepens!" Never has there been such a stirring up of the nation on the subject of the Sabbath as is being caused by the proposition to open the Columbian Exposition on that day. It is drawing a sharp line of demarkation—on the one side are ranged the earnest Christians, the temperance people, and the great body of the working people; on the other are the so-called liberal Christians, the saloon men and the kid-gloved, self-chosen, representatives of the laboring classes. With them are undoubtedly many sincere men and women who have been deceived by the specious reasonings about "shutting up the Fair to turn people into the saloons," "The poor workingman's only chance of seeing the Fair," and the like.

The assertion has been made over and over and over again that saloon men unite with Christians in desiring a closed Exposition on Sunday, as they know that it means full saloons. Persons making this assertion can not read liquor papers; without exception, so far as we have seen, and we read these papers with care, they all ridicule the idea of having the Exposition closed on Sunday, speaking of it in very much the same way they do of the effort to exclude liquor-selling from the grounds. They know that Sabbath breaking by going to the Fair is a great incentive to drinking; Sabbath-breaking and drinking go together elsewhere; why should they not there? The assumption that if the Fair is closed there is nothing better in Chicago for the crowds to do than to go to the saloons is an insult to Chicago. If its church accommodations of to-day are not sufficient for the expected thousands, neither are its saloon accommodations; these will have to be greatly increased; why take it for granted that the others will not be increased likewise? We know that plans are now on foot to provide proper Sabbath accommodations for the expected thousands, notably those by Walter Thomas Mills, and we have no doubt that there are, or will be, many others. There is to be the immense auditorium for the World's Congresses; this can be utilized for proper Sunday gatherings and with such an earnest Christian man in charge of the Congresses as Judge Bonney, we have faith that this will be done. Then there is the Auditorium, Central Music Hall, the theaters and other public halls, some already utilized for Sunday services and more of them can be, Willard Hall in the Temple—rooms in every quarter of the city, and gospel missions, tents—and they can be multiplied indefinitely. Then as for preachers, there will be no lack of them in all languages. The arrangement of World's Congresses brings together in succession the world's workers in various lines, and from them can be chosen enough preachers of righteousness to fill all the pulpits, permanent or extemporized; for example the Religious Congress, in charge of Dr. Barrows, the Temperance Congress in joint charge of Bishop Ireland and Miss Willard and the various Philanthropic Congresses, most of them lasting over Sunday, will furnish abundant pulpit supplies for millions of people. So let us hear no more of there being no place for the crowds on Sunday but the Fair ground or the saloon.

As a Boston writer says: "Your Moodys and Sankeys, with their tabernacles, choral and orchestral gatherings, some mighty Gilmores of religious song, with oratorios and choruses of ten thousand voices, some magnificent and unheard-of combination of picture and music to set forth truth by day and by evening before myriads of people; some vast and varied assemblages of W. C. T. U., and the Y. P. S. C. E.; where is the Christian invention of America if it cannot plan on a huge scale, commensurate with the Exposition, to make that score of Sabbaths memorable forever for good and glad work?" Any one who has listened to Haydn's oratoric of the Messiah, as rendered by the Apollo Club at Christmas time, and remembers that its leader, Mr. Tomlins, a devout Christian man, is director of vocal music for the Exposition, can realize, in a measure, the possibilities for Christian worship through great song services at the Exposition.

The plea for the working men is equally specious. Again and again it has been demonstrated that it is made not by them, but in their name by those who have no right to claim to speak for them. It is a significant fact that the great majority of labor organizations which have met during the last year have declared against Sunday opening. Real working men know that Sabbath desecration for pleasure leads directly to Sabbath desecration for profit; that it is the beginning of which the end is seven days' work for six days' pay. Again, the rights of their fellows employed in and about the Exposition lead labor organizations to oppose Sabbath opening, for it means enforced seven day labor for 50,000 of these employés, whose six days' labor is exhausting enough.

From the way in which we are pelted with the epithets "Puritanical," "bigoted," "narrow-minded," "straitlaced," and the like, it might be inferred that those who stand for the Sabbath are only an insignificant sect, with minds darkened by prejudice and dwarfed by too narrow vision; and that we are contending for an innovation in the methods of managing great Expositions. History refutes this assumption. No Exposition carried on by English-speaking peoples, except that conspicuous failure, the New Orleans Exposition, has been open Sunday. If any have doubts upon this subject we advise them to read carefully the article by Rev. Will C. Wood, in Our Day of January, and Joseph Cook's prelude in the same magazine. Lest all of you may not see this we quote from it at length. Speaking of Sunday closing at Expositions Mr. Wood says:

At London, with its Crystal Palace, at New York and Philadelphia, the record of the English-speaking people has been uniform in this regard. Six hundred and forty-one medical men of London, including Dr. Farre, petitioned against the opening of the Crystal Palace for profit on Sundays. The English labor associations are against Sunday opening of museums.

The most noble precedent abroad, in the great expositions, is England's and America's action at Paris in 1878, 1881 and 1889. It is a glory to the Anglo-Saxon race, an "oriflamme of war," like Navarre's plume. It appears as an oasis in the Continental Sabbath desecration.

In the Paris Exposition of 1878, almost the entire body of the American exhibitors, together with the British and Colonial exhibitors, some 2,000 in all, refused to uncover their displays. This result was promoted by the ever-vigilant New York Sabbath Committee, Secretary of State, Wm. M. Evarts, and Commissioner-General McCormick. This course excited so much interest in France that 28,000 copies of "Le Dimanche aux Etats-Unis" were distributed among intelligent Frenchmen.

In 1881, at the Paris International Exhibition of Electricity, the same noble example was shown, through the effort of the New York Sabbath Committee, and the instructions of Secretary Blaine to Commissioner-General L. P. Morton and Commissioner Walker.

In the International Exposition of Paris in 1889 out of about 1,700 exhibitors from Great Britain, the Dominion of Canada, Australia and other British colonies, and from the United States of America, the highest number doing business on the Lord's Day, from May to October, was, from Great Britain, thirty-nine, and from America and colonial sections, twenty-six, being sixty-five in all. This almost unanimous refusal of the British and American exhibitors to uncover their goods was in the face of a peremptory order of the Director-General. But conscience and principle and moral courage triumphed. It remains only to add, that at the urgent request of the New York Sabbath Committee, the American Minister to Paris, and the American Commissioner-General were instructed by the present Secretary of State, with the approval of the President, "to recognize in their official capacity, the observance of Sunday, in accordance with the customs and laws of the American people."

But the great precedent, before all the world, is that of our American Centennial in 1876. Then and there was the most pronounced national Sabbath observance the world has seen. The Nilometer then recorded the highest rising. President Grant modestly opened the exhibition. Whittier poured out the libation of his magnificent devout Centennial Ode, "Our fathers' God, from out whose hand." Bishop Simpson offered up that Chalmerian prayer. In full keeping the Commissioners absolutely and peremptorily closed the exhibition on the Lord's Day. The facts are briefly stated in this communication:

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION, PHILADELPHIA,
May 26, 1876.

REV. WILL C. WOOD,

Dear Sir:—The original vote of the United States Centennial Commission, referring to the Sunday question, was taken two years ago, and was to this effect: The Exhibition shall be open from nine o'clock in the morning until six o'clock in the evening, daily, except Sunday.

Subsequently, about three months ago, the Executive Committee of the Commission affirmed the first vote. Still later, in April last, the Commission voted squarely on the question, "Shall the exhibition be open on Sunday?" and decided in the negative by a vote of 29 to 9. The last vote was by states, each state having one vote.

Yours very respectfully,
E. LEWIS MOORE.

In 1876, then, twenty-nine out of thirty-eight states of this union, more than three to one, by their representatives, declared that it is American to keep the Sabbath. Should America degrade herself and introduce the Continental Sunday, "her past, at least, is secure," in Webster's phrase.

Not only so. Two of the most distinguished men in that management fortunately put themselves on record imperishably. Immortal are the words of Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, president of the commission: "Before God I am afraid to open the Exhibition gates on the Sabbath." The noble words of Corliss will go down to posterity in equal honor with the memory of his magnificent engine: "My opinion on that point is very decided, and I am very free to express it. All the good that would be accomplished by this grand exhibition will be neutralized if it is opened on Sunday, and it would better never have been. I am ready to run at night, or at any hour, for the benefit of those who do not find it convenient to attend during the day, and I would favor a reduction in the rates for admission to such; but under no circumstances would I consent to have it run on Sunday."

Nine million seven hundred and eighty thousand visits were made to the Centennial Exhibition in the 159 days, about a million above what had been made in fifty days more* at the best attended previous World's Fair.

A Philadelphian declares his satisfaction and ours in that significant Sabbath keeping:

"Its object was, upon a gigantic scale, to teach American history, American manners, American customs, American progress, American religion; and the result of the Exposition has been the elevation of America in the eyes of the civilized world. It was closed on Sunday. Yes, so it was; and there is not a true man or woman who does not thank God that it was. The influence that went out from the fact of its being closed on the Lord's Day is an influence of which we, as Americans, may well be proud. We all, with love for America, learned to sing that grand old song, 'My country, 'tis of thee,' closing with the prayer, 'God bless our native land.' And we feel that that prayer was answered through the Sabbath closing of our Centennial Exhibition in 1876. We look back upon it with pride and gratification; and if a vote were now to be taken in the city of Philadelphia, whether another exhibition in that city should be open on the Lord's Day, I believe that only a very small number would have the temerity to vote in favor of its being open. We look back upon it with pleasure, because in that act we proclaimed the sovereignty of Almighty God, and the dependence of this nation upon His care and love."

It is now America's high duty and glorious privilege on this mountain top of her history, to reaffirm her grand precedent of the Centennial.

THE BRUSSELS TREATY.

If ever a Christian nation was called of God to stand for justice and right it is the United States to-day. On her decision hangs the weal or woe of 200,000 helpless people. To her they look for redemption from two of the greatest curses which ever inflicted mankind—the slave trade and the drink traffic. The Brussels Treaty, by most carefully prepared articles, draws the cordon of protection against these two enormities around the great Free State of Congo. To be effective, this treaty must be ratified by all the contracting powers. This ratification was to have been consummated before July 1, 1891; because our Senate "forgot" to ratify it before that time, the date was extended till the present Congress should have an opportunity to act upon it. It is now before Congress, and petitions should pour in upon the Senate unceasingly, asking its ratification.

*London Exhibition, 1851, 6,039,195 in 141 days; Paris Exhibition, 1855, 5,162,330 in 200 days; London Exhibition, 1862, 6,211,103 in 171 days; Paris Exposition of 1867, 8,805,969 in 217 days; Vienna of 1873, 6,740,500 in 186 days; Centennial Exhibition, 9,780,000 in 159 days.

Already Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Hungary, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Italy, The Netherlands, Portugal, Sweden, Norway, Turkey, Persia and Zanzibar have ratified it; Christian America alone stands aloof.

What does her failure to ratify it involve? The abrogation of the treaty. If she refuses or neglects to ratify, the work of all the other nations goes for naught. And that means turning back the hands on the dial of civilization a full century. For let this effort fail through the remissness or the greed of a leading Christian nation and not soon again can the jealousies, the antagonistic interests be so harmonized as they were by the patient, wise councilors who framed the Brussels Treaty and secured its ratification by all but one of the contracting powers. The great moneyed interest back of the slave trade and the drink traffic are now in arms and no other such a Conference as that of 1889 will ever again be possible till these arch foes of human freedom are overthrown.

As temperance workers, our thoughts have dwelt mainly on the terrible havoc wrought by the drink traffic; it is well for us to turn our thoughts for a time to the ravages of the slave trade. Judge Lambert Tree, in the January Forum, says that testimony presented to the Brussels Conference showed that provinces as large as kingdoms are depopulated for the purpose of procuring victims for the traffic. Vast areas of country are devastated and set back into a savage state, which had been under cultivation. The number of persons actually captured and sold into slavery does not measure the horrors of the situation; for each one of these at least four others are murdered or perish miserably on their way to the sea; the lowest estimate places the number disposed of in the slavemarts annually at 80,000, which added to the number slain brings the awful total up to 400,000, or more than 1,000 lives each day sacrificed to this Moloch. Yet for six months now our government is responsible for this slaughter of those for whom Christ died, but who have never heard of His salvation.

Add to this dark picture that drawn by Mrs. Leavitt of the ravages of drink in Africa and then ask yourself if you, as an American, are willing to have our country rest under the burden of all these lost souls. If not, do not sleep until you have sent an earnest appeal to your senator to use his voice and his vote to have the treaty ratified at once.

AGRICULTURAL PAPERS AND TEMPERANCE.

If one class of people more than another should stand for prohibition, it is the farmers. It is they who suffer the evil effects of the saloon without receiving any of even the boasted benefits of high license. No sidewalks are laid in front of their doors by license money, but they carry the biggest end of the burden of taxation imposed by the liquor traffic--county expenses for punishing men made criminals through drink, for caring for paupers, insane, dependents, made so by the licensed saloon. Their corn-fed beef is brought into competition with that fattened on distillery slops, and every bushel of corn sold to the distiller spoils the market for seven bushels which should go to feed drunkards' wives and children.

Worst of all, their children, in alarming proportion, go to swell the ranks of the terrible army marching to drunkards' graves. Going into the city they fall before the temptations spread out for them, temptations all the more alluring because they are unfamiliar.

These things being so, it is no wonder that farmers all over the land are waking up to the importance of the temperance question, to the truth that it is really the great question before the nation to-day. It is a sign of promise that leading agricultural papers are giving no uncertain sound on this great issue. The Western Rural, edited by that stanch temperance man, Milton George, loses no opportunity to make known its sentiments along this line.

The Rural New Yorker, that veteran in this field, the agricultural Bible of two or three generations of Eastern farmers, is equally pronounced. In its correspondence of a late issue it gave these two communications:

"Perhaps The Rural will kindly allow one who is not a candidate for any office to briefly state why he will vote the Prohibition ticket. In The Rural of late date, Mr. Seitz, the People's party candidate for governor of Ohio, states that 30,000 men own $30,000,000,000, surely an unjust proportion. But suppose these 30,000 men should combine this enormous wealth in one vast enterprise, and receive three per cent upon the amount invested, what would they receive? Just the same amount squandered every year by the people of this country in drink. At the close of the war our government was staggering under a load of debt so great that it was feared by many that it must fall. But if the people of this country would for three years save the money that is spent for drink, enough would be saved to pay the debt entire.

"Nine hundred millions of dollars is the sum spent each year for drink; turn this money into legitimate channels of trade; let it buy food and clothes, and who can picture the prosperity that will follow? A short time ago a contagious disease attacked our cattle. The government, with commendable zeal stamped it out. Last year there died 60,000 persons whose death was due to alcoholic liquors. What did the government do? In consideration of a payment of so many dollars it licensed men to manufacture and sell more alcoholic liquors.

"There are few things of more interest than a marriage. It is a ceremony that never grows old and never fails to draw both old and young. We feel in some way better for hearing a true man promise his protection to the woman at his side. But perhaps some wife may read these lines who has seen her husband, the man who promised to love her, cherish her and protect her until death's final separation, come home—drunk. And because the Prohibition party is the only party that raises up its voice against this evil is the reason why I shall vote the Prohibition ticket."

"R. N. Y.—It is a good time now to give the exact figures on this drink business. Below we give the statistics as furnished by the government. The first column shows the gallons of intoxicants of all sorts consumed in this country in the past five years. These include wines, malt liquors and distilled spirits. The other column gives the amounts of grain used in the manufacture of this stuff. These grains are wheat, rye, corn, barley, oats and different mill feeds. About seventy-five per cent of the total grain is corn.

LIQUORS CONSUMED,	Gallons.	GRAIN USED FOR LIQUOR.	Bushels.
1886	740,796,554	1886	19,195,332
1887	821,038,648	1887	17,959,565
1888	879,767,476	1888	16,122,509
1889	894,655,061	1889	20,990,924
1890	972,578,878	1890	25,202,901

"This liquor averages at retail considerably over $1 per gallon—including beer, wines and whisky. In other words, Americans spent more than $1,000,000,000 for liquor. Just compare this with a few other items of national importance.

Value of liquor consumed in one year	$1,000,000,000
Total exports for 1890	$ 845,293,828
Total income on all American railroads (1889)	964,816,129
Total value of corn crop (1890)	754,433,451
Total value of wheat crop (1890)	334,773,678
Total value of all cereals (1890)	1,320,255,398
Total income for telegraph service	22,389,029

"Is there any reason why this drink question is not a bigger one than the tariff, 'free silver,' income tax, 'World's Fair,' or any other since the days of slavery? This is entirely aside from any sentimental or moral view of the case. From a purely economical standpoint—a matter of hard dollars and cents—it is the greatest question of the age. Those men who argue that the liquor business provides a needed market for our grain had better consider this proposition. In 1890 the rumsellers used 20,310 bushels of wheat, 4,542,845 bushels of rye, 32,690 bushels of oats and 17,806,612 bushels of corn. They produced in 1890, 45,830,361 gallons of whisky, 1,657,808 of rum, 1,202,940 of gin, and 11,354,448 of alcohol. The wholesale price of a gallon of whisky is now about $1.20. Now just figure out what a blessed privilege it is to sell grain to these rumsellers!"

Commenting upon these letters the editor says:

"From figures given on another page it appears that the drink question is the greatest issue before the country to-day—considered either from a moral or a financial point of view. Thoughtful men may well ask themselves—what progress is being made towards mastering this evil? The Prohibition party seeks to cure the drink evil as it would cure wrongs of taxation or remedy mistakes in financial legislation. If one may judge by its party vote for President or for state officers, this party is not gaining in strength as the justice of its cause or the prophecies of its leaders would warrant. But there is another side to the matter. The party is not gaining many votes from the present generation perhaps, but it is capturing the coming generation at a rate that is astonishing. One cannot help observing how many of the best women in rural districts are interested in temperance work. Most of them are satisfied with an audience of their own children, and these audiences are the people that rumsellers will hear from later. So thoroughly is this work of home education being done that we confidently believe that within twenty years the rumshop will be driven into the larger cities and penned there."

Let agricultural papers continue to give thoughtful farmers such ideas to ponder on, and it will not be long before the farmer vote will go for prohibition of the accursed traffic.

The Watch-Tower.

Rarely is a beautiful life as appropriately enshrined as in the following tender tribute from Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap to the friends who are so recently "away." In a personal letter she says of Mrs. Downs: "I have had no speech since her going. I wanted so much to see her at Boston, but I have felt since that day we heard she was dead as if some great palm had fallen; or I had watched the wings of a far-sailing ship go out to sea. She was so true to all who trusted her, so fair an antagonist, so faithful a friend that the world seems poor with all that is left since her going. With Julia Ames my relations were peculiarly delightful. She finally won her way to all she wanted; it was so hard to say 'no' to her about the things she desired for her work. I have wanted to say something these weeks; my heartaches come slowly and stay long. My holiday has had in it the shadow of death, and the glory of the life eternal."

COMRADES TWO.

BY MARY T LATHRAP.

We stood in an eloquent silence,
These holiest days,
When thoughts of the Christ have been woven
In sweetest of lays;
We came where the years were dividing
The new and the old,
And pausing 'twixt grave-heap and garland,
We counted the gold
Of sands that for joy or for sorrow
Move on where awaiteth the morrow
With story untold.

All songs have seemed far in the stillness,
Like strain of a lute
That trembles alone o'er the waters
When voices are mute;
But years that divide do not move us
To sharpness of pain,
So little they seem with their burden
Of losses and gain
When souls have come near the immortals,
And treading the edge of life's portals,
Been thrilled with their strain.

We heard in the circle of silence,
The falling of tears,
Have scented the fragrance of roses
Love brought to a bier;
Have listened while low, tender voices
Half under their breath,
Were speaking of farewells and partings—
And talking of death.
But out from a glory supernal
There thrilled a great voice,—"Life eternal
I give them," it saith.

One life was a sheaf at its ripeness
Of goldenest grain,
Its wealth had the glory of sunlight,
And sobbing of rain;
Ah! who shall dispute with the Master
For whom it was grown,
That now in its day of completeness
He gathers His own?
Or who to earth's duty and sadness
Would call the great soul from the gladness
That heaven makes known?

One life was a flower prophetic,
Aglow with the June;
Why tarried it not for the fruitage,
But faded so soon?
Ah! who shall declare in what region
Should come to its best
The soul that so utterly loving
Is utterly blest?
Or who, in these days of bereaving,
Would break by a sob of our grieving
Ineffable rest?

Ah, comrades! we stand in the silence,
Homesick for a day,
But how can our anguish be bitter?
We follow that way.
Let us lift up our hearts, our beloved
Love on as of yore;
Who knows but in stress of the battle
They haste to the fore?
"Then onward, ye brave," to the duty;
Not far, with the King in His beauty,
We greet them once more.

Queen's Gardens.

MISMATCHES.

BY AMBER.

Imagine, if you can, the positive pain experienced by a sensitive person, if taken through one of Chicago's most beautiful collections of bric-a-brac immediately after an earthquake shock had shattered the fragile stock. All those unpronouncable bits of pottery, the enwreathed and slender urns, the antique pitchers, the decorated flagons and delicate cups, reduced to rubbish! Worthless fragments of beauty, once almost priceless. Heaps of unmatched crockery and ruined ware hopeless of redemption. No wonder that one should turn away from such a sight with saddened hearts and an aching regret. And yet, take your stand upon any one of Chicago's crowded thoroughfares, or in any assemblage of the world where the masses are wont to congregate, and a spectacle is presented you, the pathos of which outweighs any other, as Calvary transcends the mimic passion of a tawdry stage.

In all the faces that troop by, like the shifting pageant of a kaleidoscope, do you find one that is perfect? Do you find one whose beauty, undefiled by unworthy expression, shines like a star in memory? Do you find one that bears impress of a love, or of a faith, or of an honor uncorrupted by the world's gross contact? Note the sensuous curve of a mouth that underlies a pair of earnest eyes, or the shrewd cunning of the eyes that overlook the sensitive lips, and honest chin beneath them? Mismatched! Hopelessly mismatched forever! A Sevres fragment mislaid with common delf, or a priceless vase shattered at the stem and patched with clay. Surely such defacement no skill but the Divine can even hope to retrieve.

From one point of view humanity is, at best, nothing more or less than mismatched and damaged stock There are no absolutely perfect specimens of the original left. Eternity shall hardly prove long enough to restore the primal perfection. Old Titbottom, with his terrible spectacles, extracted about the same comfort from life that we do who yield to this discouraging view of things. He was utterly deprived of the solace sometimes found in shams, and therein lay the hopelessness of his misery. The conventionalities and sophistries of life, which deceive people who only take a surface view of things, Titbottom, and you, and I despise in spite of ourselves. In forever watching the cross-purposes of life, its turncoat faiths and recreant friendships, the deceits and blandishments and wiles of crafty human nature, there is danger that we become cynical and morose, faithless of the endurance of God's love, and regardless of the continuance of His covenant. Let us get into the way, if possible, of looking beyond the externals that only baffle and disappoint us, away into the loving purpose of heaven which, out of all the pathos and ruin of wrecked and mismatched life, is able at length to bring a perfect harmony and an unblemished peace. As well might one go mourning through the garden ways in February, complaining that nature had forgotten the buried souls of the flowers, and there would never any more be sweet peas, columbines and lilies! Be sure there is not a gossamer frond of a fairy fern forgotten in nature's bountiful purpose, and think you she shall remember the roses and God forget His saints! Let the mismatching go on then; let the delf and the Sevres be mixed in seemingly irretrievable confusion, it will only need a touch, by and by, of the strong and beneficent hand to redeem the broken and scattered fragments, and set them on high in the pavilion of His everlasting love.

THE NEW PLANE.

MAN has cleared away the forests and prepared the fields, and now woman is coming to plant the flowers.

He has torn away rude cabins and built comfortable houses, and she is coming to convert them into homes.

He has harnessed the forces of earth and air, and she is coming to teach him how to enjoy the results of his labors.

He has conquered the bullying spirits that engendered war and tumult, and she is coming to cultivate the fruits of peace.

He has battled long and strong to reach the plane of civilization lighted by the unshaded lamp of intelligence, and she is coming to enjoy it with him.

LET gentle, loving and cheerful woman come and drive from the home, the office and the church, all coldness, coarseness and hate. The times are ripe for her coming; yet we may have to wait until she has grown. The average woman is not quite the heartsome creature that the woman of the future is expected to be.

Possibly, indeed, quite probably—man is not capable of appreciating her, and that is just the reason she is not here. She has always been subject to him, and grew only as he permitted or desired. Now that she stands by his side on the new plane of civilization he will have to have a care lest she lead him in the coming race. It would only be fair that she should.

News from the Field.

STATE REPORTERS.

Alabama—Mrs. Jennie B. Gerald, Montgomery.
Arizona—Mrs. L. C. Hughes, Tucson.
Arkansas—Mrs. F. L. Sutton, 315½ W. Markham street, Little Rock.
California—Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, Oakland.
California (Southern)—Mrs. Mary E. Garbutt, Temperance Temple, Los Angeles.
Carolina (N.)—Miss Bettie D. Caldwell, Greensboro.
Carolina (S.)—Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Charleston.
Colorado—Mrs. S. L. Teetor, Denver.
Connecticut—Miss M. Belle Smith, Rockfall.
Dakota (North)—Miss Addie M. Kinnear, Fargo.
Dakota (South)—Mrs Irene G. Adams, Lake Helen, Volensia Co., Fla.
Delaware—Miss Annie Sutton, Smyrna.
District of Columbia—Miss Lizzie Kessler, 802 North I street, Washington.
Florida—Mrs. N. B. Irwin, Jacksonville.
Georgia—
Idaho—Mrs. Mary E. McGee, Nampa.
Illinois—Mrs. G. H. Read, 412 E. North street, Bloomington.
Indiana—Miss Sadie B. Whistler, Terre Haute.
Indian Territory—Mrs. Sarah Ford Crosby, Muscogee.
Iowa—Mrs. Clara P. White, Volga.
Kansas—Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, Le Roy.
Kentucky—
Louisiana—Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, Napoleon Ave., New Orleans.
Maine—Miss Mary French, Auburn.
Maryland—Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, Mt. Washington.
Massachusetts—Miss Emma W. Bumstead, 171 Tremont St., Boston.
Michigan—Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint.
Minnesota—Mrs. Amy B. Green, 2208 6½ avenue, Minneapolis.
Mississippi—Mrs. Olivia Fort Fitzhugh, Vicksburg.
Missouri—Mrs. Mary E. Jones, Humansville.
Montana—Mrs. W. W. Wylie, Bozeman.
Nebraska.—Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock, Beatrice.
Nevada—Mrs. Lena M. Westlake, Reno.
New Hampshire—Mrs. F. H. Bailey, Hopkinton,
New Jersey—
New Mexico—Mrs. Ada Morley Jarrett, Socorro.
New York—Mrs. Frances Graham, Lockport.
Ohio—Miss Hannah A. Foster, Berea.
Oklahoma—Mrs. Sue Brown, Oklahoma City.
Oregon—Mrs. L. A. Nash, Corvallis.
Pennsylvania—Mrs. Bertha Howe, Bradford.
Rhode Island—Miss Miriam Earle, Valley Falls.
Tennessee—Mrs. T. P. Holman, Fayetteville.
Texas—Mrs. Elizabeth Strong Tracy, Houston.
Utah—Miss Mary Howard Nutting, 2324 Madison Ave., Ogden.
Vermont—Mrs. Clinton Smith, Middlebury.
Virginia—Mrs. M. H. Whitehead, Richmond.
Virginia (W)—Mrs. Mary Cartwright, 1007 Main St., Wheeling.
Washington (East)—Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, Cheney.
Washington (West)—Mrs. J. W. Lee, Tacoma.
Wisconsin—Mrs. Maria F. Hanchette, 322 W. Washington Ave. Madison.
Wyoming—Mrs. Therese A. Jenkins, Cheyenne.

WISCONSIN.

DISTRICT AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Although the president of our state has been so ill during the whole of the year that we have not had her earnest, energetic work to assist us in the forward movement, yet I hope that when we go up to our annual gathering to be counted, we will find we have not lost one of those given unto us, and, it may be, have extended our lines. We had hoped so much, also, regarding our organizer's work. We had elected one with a comfortable salary, to go up and down the length and breadth of the state, not only to organize new unions, but to strengthen and instruct wherever she should hear the cry, "Come over and help us." Her mother—who was also our newly-elected superintendent of the department of systematic giving—was summoned to a better world, and duty said to our organizer, "Your mother's work in the home must be yours for the present, at least."

All these drawbacks, however, can be overcome if our district and county presidents rise to the occasion and consecrate themselves anew, every day, for that day's work. The acceptance of any office entails responsibility which must be met with all the ability we have if that office is to become one of the small rivulets which flows into the great ocean of reform, bearing on its way fruit good for the humanity of the present or the future. Time, the great sifter, as well as leveler, will show.

There has been considerable activity manifested along the line of conventions; the programs have been excellent, both as to subject matter and the interest manifested in them. The third district convention was held in Dodgeville, a thriving village. The Dodgeville union is carrying on a Juvenile Temple that, organized with thirty-one members, has increased to 138. Mrs. M. A. B. Smith, Madison, president of the district, gave an illustrated lecture on the "Modern Octopus."

The ninth district convention was held in Stevens' Point. Sixteen departments of work were taken up and superintendents appointed. All the delegates signed the World's petition in behalf of prohibition of stimulants and narcotics. Mrs. Helen M. Gougar gave two eloquent and convincing lectures in the M. E. Church.

The second district, although not having had an acting president for some time, responded to the summons, when called together by its newly-elected president, Mrs. E. E. Fellows, Waukesha, and met in convention at Beaver Dam. The reports showed that work had been going on, and every one was hopeful for the future. Mrs. Annie J. Bradbury, Milwaukee, state superintendent of juvenile work, assisted greatly in making the meeting a helpful one.

The convention for the fourth district was held in Milwaukee. A hearty welcome was given the members by Rev. T. B. Caldwell, pastor of the church in which the meeting was held, in which he spoke of the W. C. T. U. as the only Christian temperance organization. In the evening Mrs. E. S. Davis gave an address on "The Signs of the Times," which was greatly enjoyed by the audience.

District number eight was very fortunate in holding its convention in West Superior where the business men showed them much kindness and attention by inviting them to visit various places of interest, and the press sent reporters and distributed the papers containing the reports among the delegates.

The address by the district president, Mrs. L. M. Kimball, Black River Falls, was highly spoken of, and that it was clear and convincing, having no uncertain tones with their discords to bar the onward march of truth into the minds of the listeners, every one knowing her will concede. This is the first district to adopt the new department of systematic giving, and we hope it will bring forth such good results that other districts, beholding, will go and do likewise. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore gave two inspiring lectures here, and thus the good work goes on.

Fort Atkinson, the present home of our state president, was selected as a suitable place in which to hold the first district convention. All the counties in the district with one exception, were represented. The address of the district president, Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, Evansville, being a resume of the year's work, was very instructive, and a grand foundation on which to build for the coming year; this district also created a department of systematic giving. Mrs. E. S. Davis, president of the Milwaukee local union, addressed the convention in the evening. Our state president, Mrs. Amy Kellogg Morse, by her assistance added greatly to the efficiency of the meetings.

Many county conventions have also been held, Winnebago county delegates meeting in Eureka, where it was recommended that juvenile work be considered the special department, also the petitioning of the proprietors of shops and other public places to put up, where all can read the notice, "No smoking allowed."

New London entertained Waupaca county convention, at which all local unions of the county, but one, were represented, each member seemingly inspired with the spirit of aggressive temperance work. Among the plans of work was the appointment by local unions, of a committee to visit schools and see that instruction in scientific temperance is thoroughly carried out, also to look after temperance teaching in our Sunday-schools. At this convention the reading of temperance literature, UNION SIGNAL and W. C. T. U. State Work (our state paper) was urged upon the members.

Vernon county convention was held at Ontario and was made interesting and instructive by papers on various subjects and by an address on "Organization," by Mrs. R. H. Frater, of Viroqua, and one to the young people by Mrs. L. R. Gott, also of Viroqua.

Mrs. Gott likewise addressed the young people at the Richland county convention held in Richland Center. At this meeting scientific temperance instruction and mothers' meetings were made subjects of papers and discussion. Among the resolutions we find the following: supporting the closing of the Columbian Exposition on Sunday in favor of the ballot for women, and for reinstating the Bible in the schools of the state.

Conventions have been held in Pepin county at Durand and at Elkhorn in Walworth county. Both report full and interesting meetings, at the latter a Demorest medal contest was held in the evening, and the president's address, plans of work and resolutions are to be printed for distribution among the unions.

Much work and thought was expended upon the Columbia county convention, held in Portage, by its president, Mrs. Mary A. Wait, Lodi, which of course must have been amply supplemented by the good white ribbon sisters in the county as the program was a very attractive and educational one. Mrs. E. S. Davis, Milwaukee, also gave an address in the evening.

The "Keeley cure" was discussed at the Eau Claire county gathering, held in the city of the same name, Dr. Annette J. Shaw leading it. This convention protested against the system of protecting vice by licensing the sale of intoxicants, tobacco or opium in our own or foreign lands, and pledged their influence for the advancement of the principles of state and national prohibition. It also asked of ministers, laymen and teachers more interest and heartier coöperation in temperance work; protested against the indiscriminate use of alcoholic stimulants by physicians in their private practice, or in hospitals, and suggested that a part of each hospital be set apart for those desiring non-alcoholic treatment. They also urge women to use all the privilege granted them by law in the matter of voting. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore gave one of her able addresses in the evening.

Neillsville entertained the Clark county delegates. One of the instructive features of this gathering was the drill in the form of a school-meeting, in which all matters pertaining to such meetings were discussed and voted upon; this was followed by a resolution that mothers who do not attend school-meetings have no right to find fault with the teachers, the school-board, or the text-books adopted. Plans were made to build a much more commodious building upon the fair ground. The secretary gave Rev. Henrietta G. Moore a very handsome tribute of praise for her lecture.

At Beloit, where the Rock county conference was held, a resolution was passed giving to the loyal citizens of Beloit, who are attacking the strongholds of intemperance, the members' hearty sympathy and, so far as possible, their substantial aid in discouraging the use of alcohol as a medicine, although prescribed by a physician. Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, of Evansville, addressed the audience, in the evening, making many converts.

Out in the northwest corner of the state, Douglas county held its convention in East Superior last week. A Demorest medal contest, parliamentary drill, presentation of the need of the temperance temple, W. C. T. U. papers and literature and an address on "Young Women's Work," by Mrs. Bessie Laythe Scovell, state superintendent of the Y's of Minnesota, formed the principal features.

Where there is so much industry there can be no fear of death, for only stagnation brings that. The result may not prove to be all we hoped for, yet results are so scattered—so unequal in the length of time required for ripening who can say when we have ceased to reap them.

MARIA F. HANCHETT,
State Reporter, Madison.

TENNESSEE.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Few reports of work done have come in in time for my usual letter. Probably in the rush of the holiday season they have forgotten their poor state reporter, whom they thus give the hard task of "making bricks without straw." I hope when they read this meager letter from their own state, that all the unions will be sufficiently conscience-stricken to write me a long letter forthwith, containing reports of all the work done since our state convention.

Chattanooga sent in a good report some weeks since, which had to lie over until the present letter. Their report includes much of the year's work. They had with them during the year, Mr. Dill, of Kansas, and Mr. Odell, of Nebraska. The latter held a week's meeting, assisted during a part of the time by Miss Jennie Smith, National superintendent of the railroad department. The meetings were held in churches, railroad shops, factories, firemen's halls, and on the street.

They had with them also during the year, Mrs. Leiter, who spoke on the subject of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. They also had with them Mrs. French, of Knoxville, and Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan. Mrs. Lathrap addressed an audience of 1,500 people. A collection of $60 was made.

One of the most important works they have undertaken is the building of a working girl's home, which will also serve as headquarters for their local union. Towards this building they have a subscription of $5,000 in money, besides promises of work of various kinds, such as brick work, tinwork, etc. They hope soon to be able to remove from their rented house into a beautiful, commodious building of their own. They have had two concerts, one by the Y's, which netted them about $260. They are making an effort to secure the appointment of a police matron. Religious services are held twice a month in the railroad shop, and on Sunday afternoons in one of the firemen's halls. Much religious and temperance literature has been distributed among firemen, and placed in depots. Quite a number of UNION SIGNALS are taken. Their active membership is thirty-seven.

I see in the Issue that the Athens W. C. T. U. has been given the free use of a beautiful hall by one of its honorary members, Mr. M. D. Cone. He has furnished it with taste and comfort, supplies it with temperance literature, and furnishes them a janitor.

The East Nashville W. C. T. U. celebrated the eighteenth anniversary of the Crusade at Tulip street M. E. Church, December 23d, with exercises appropriate to the commemoration of that memorable event.

Mrs. M. M. Snell, of Mississippi, is now in our state, and is receiving grand encomiums wherever she goes, for the good work she is doing. I hope to be able to give a fuller report of her work in this state in my next letter. I had the pleasure of hearing this gifted woman at Nashville during our National Convention there, and I can assure the unions in our state that she will well repay them if they can but secure her services. We hope to have her in our town when the spring weather opens up. We are anxious that she spend as much time as possible in our state.

MRS. T. P. HOLMAN,
State Reporter, Fayetteville.

MICHIGAN.

ETCHINGS.

The grand meeting in Boston is over, and we of Michigan, proud and thankful that Mrs. Lathrap is "of ours," are taking up the work again, inspired to more patience, more courage, more faith in the ultimate, speedy victory by the helpful words of so many workers.

I would pay a loving tribute to Julia Ames whose words of praise or blame were ever helpful to us of this department—which she led so long—"Yet for her we mourn not but rejoice, rather believing as hers was the Christian's hope hers is now the Christian's immortality."

Our state paper, the Michigan Union, so ably edited by Mrs. Wheeler, is increasing in interest and circulation. The account of the National Convention by the editor was very full and complete. Every month there is a Bible reading by Mrs. B. B. Hudson, former state president; present topic "Bible Wines." In the last issue of the paper a letter from Mrs. D. M. Garner, president of the sixth district, contained these progressive items: At North Lansing through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. and Christian people, a saloon-keeper was induced to close out his business and the union has fitted up the saloon as a place of meeting. Mrs. Garner talked to the ladies of the union in the afternoon and delivered a public address in the evening. This union is to be called "Lathrap Union;" one of their good works is to educate a young girl at Miss Main's school at Dutton. Mrs. Garner spoke at Gaines, organizing a large union, also one at South Lyons. Livingston county convention was held at Howell; Mrs. Wm. Andrews, the new president, is a fine presiding officer. The exercises were of a high order, three fine addresses being, "Save the Children," by Mrs. Knapp, "The W. C. T. U. as an Educator of Women," by Mrs. Lewis, and "Progress of the Temperance Reform," by the district president.

The treasurer of the North Side L. T. L. of Flint reports a very successful entertainment held at Garland Street Church. As the one hundred children marched in with flags flying, singing, "We are a Band of Soldiers," with organ and drum accompaniment, the audience became very enthusiastic. A fine program was rendered without one omission or failure. The children gave evidence of their love for their superintendent, Mrs. William Stevenson, and their interest in the work by keeping perfect order, not one whisper marring the pleasure of the evening. God grant that the lessons fired from thos- L. T. L. guns may long be remembered.

Mrs. Benjamin, of Portland, begins a missionary tour of eighteen consecutive appointments in the seventh district, beginning at Lapeer.

The first district convention was held at Plymouth. This was a home-coming, as it was in Plymouth in 1879 that the convention of district workers was first held; fifty delegates were present, and many visitors, all of whom were entertained by the local union. The delegates were presented with hand-painted badges, and given a reception at the home of the president, Mrs. Jennie Voorheis. The reports of superintendents were all encouraging, as were also reports from several unions; $70 was raised toward the $100 for the Temple. Many valuable discussions were held, the subjects being, "Is the W. C. T. U. Needed?" "Which is our most Important Department?" "The Relation the W. C. T. U. holds to the Church;" "Do Women Wish to Vote?" The latter was led by Dr. Anna Shaw, who was present and helpful throughout, giving an address Thursday evening on, "God's Women." Friday evening Mrs. Rounds spoke on "Social Purity." One evening a Temple exercise was presented by the L. T. L. The president's annual address was full of earnest words. She said the day for small things was past. Among the recommendations was this, "That the lines of work be given those who can do their best," and "that for better carrying on of state work we increase our dues to twenty-five cents." Among the resolutions, the strongest emphasized working for franchise. Mrs Voorheis was unanimously reëlected.

Manistee county convention was held at Yates. There are seven unions in this county, with a membership of 179. Mrs. Obenauer was present and gave one of her helpful talks to mothers.

Eaton county convention was held at Grand Lodge. Dr. Delia E. Howe was present and spoke on China. She gave many facts in regard to this strange people and their customs. The president, Mrs. Ludwick, of Charlotte, followed with her annual address replete with suggestions Mrs. Marion Baxter gave the closing address on the last evening, which was eloquent and logical.

Items from the sixth district are as follows: From Williamston, a Union Temple Social, held at Mrs. Bowerman's; nine new members obtained for the Y's; receipts equally divided; a fine literary program. Lansing, a Whittier entertainment held with a fine program, music, recitations, paper on Whittier as a reformer; a good audience, a collection taken and given to Woman's Home and Hospital at Grand Rapids. Mrs. Crosby's union at Clarkston reports progress; the work has been circulating World's petition, and sending fruit and bedding to the hospital.

In the seventh district, Lapeer, the home of Miss Bissell, the newly-elected president, reports: "Our union, while it makes no rapid advance, does not lose its hold on its individual members. Mrs. Weeks has lectured to the children, also organized a Y. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin held parliamentary drills, and also visited every union in the county with good results. One branch of work taken up by the Y's is supplying depots with papers; their next is to be organizing and care of L. T. L's."

Carleton, Monroe county, writes of a series of lectures by Geo. H. Vibbert. He gave one lecture and was so well liked that, on one of the citizens assuming all expense, he came back and lectured from November 29th to December 6th.

The third district convention was held at Charlotte, sixty-five delegates present; addresses of welcome by Rev. Frank McAlpine and Mrs. Marion Baxter; response by Mrs. R. A. Bailey,—a most inspiring and beneficial convention. One of the finest papers was by Mrs. Dick, of Albion, on "The Need of the Hour." Mrs. Lathrap's address Wednesday evening was a powerful argument for prohibition. A gold medal contest was held Thursday evening; successful contestant, Miss Mary Gibson. The second prize, a silver cup, was won by James Hughes of Marshall. One of the finest features of the evening was the singing by Master Roscoe Clayborn, a little fellow of eight years, who has a voice of wonderful promise. The resolutions were eleven in number, covered the most ground, were the clearest cut and strongest we have ever read, not excepting state or National.

The white-ribboners of the twelfth district met in Calumet to hold their fifth annual convention. The first evening a reception was held in the Congregational Church and was well attended by citizens. The church was finely decorated; a large Y in evergreen, the word "Welcome" in kindergarten work, and many plants and flowers. Mrs. Campbell told of the work and made an earnest appeal for members. The reports of superintendents were very interesting, but the field is large, the laborers few. Mrs. Campbell, who has been their beloved president so long, leaving them for another state, recounted in her annual address the work of the years and encouraged them to better work by what had been done. Choice blessings follow her to her new home. Reports of county presidents were inspiring, notably, Marquette county. That has the banner Y, numbering ninety-five. They have done much work the past year, and were commended by the convention.

We cannot refrain from telling what a union of three members did in Jacobsville. Our noble Mrs. Baumgartner gave this grand report from a union of three women: "We have very few English-speaking people in our town, and when we began our work nearly every family used intoxicants as a beverage. We interested the Finlanders and they now have a total abstinence society of over one hundred members. We started a Loyal Temperance Legion which meets in my dining room. The children tell of the lessons taught them to their parents, and many who once loved liquor are abstainers now. We always attend the Finlanders' meeting (although we cannot understand a word) to show our interest." Surely "where two or three are gathered together," He is in the midst.

A gold medal contest was held, the Y's having charge. At election of officers Mrs. E. Norinne Law was elected president. The district completed its pledge of $100 to the Temple.

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON,
State Reporter, Flint.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

ANOTHER sister has "gone before." Mrs. Caroline Coulter died at her home in London, Pa., December 8th. By her death the W. C. T. U. has lost an ardent supporter, and every good cause a warm friend.

ONE to whom the SIGNAL and the cause it represents are very dear, begs the prayers of the white ribbon army for a loved brother whose long continued misfortunes seem almost too much for human nature to bear. That a higher power may turn the tide, is the only hope of his invalid sister.

THE local union at Greene, Ia., has recently lost a valued member as well as efficient officer in the promotion to her heavenly home, of Mrs. C. M. Greene. Her union, her home, and the entire community feel her absence most keenly. Her life was radiantly happy and her death triumphant.

THE daughter of our brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Ludlam, of Lake Bluff, was killed some time ago while getting off the railway train, under circumstances peculiarly painful. The young lady was a niece of Rev. and Mrs. T. G. Crowder, of Macon, Ill. Their friends have our Christian sympathy.

LAST November Dr. Rena Michaels gave the Albion, Michigan, W. C. T. U. such a stirring address on the right, privilege and duty of suffrage in the election of school officers that they succeeded in electing a woman on the school board. January 5, she gave the same union a very interesting talk on the National Convention. The ladies feel it a very great honor to have a member of their local union who can do these things in such a creditable manner.

ONCE more we are called upon to sympathize with Mrs. Elizabeth Hibben, the beloved president of the tenth district of Illinois, in a deep bereavement. Within a year she has lost by death a brother dearly beloved; then her aged and revered father, and now her mother has fallen asleep—a mother in Israel, full of years and abundant labors in the Master's service. In this fresh sorrow, Mrs. Hibben will have the most affectionate sympathy, not only in Illinois, where her friends know and love her best, but all over the country where she is so widely known, having preached and lectured in many places. The Master seems to be preparing her for a deeper consecration, and a more extended field of usefulness by thus emptying her arms of earthly jewels.

AT the meeting of the Central W. C. T. U., of Cleveland, O., November 24, three women reported the convention at Boston. Mrs. Perkins mentioned the moral heroism of Mrs. Leavitt, who had just given eight years of her second half century to encircling the globe with unions, and has come home as poor in purse as she started, with only two hundred dollars for the wants of the future. Mrs. Perkins said the ten thousand local unions of the country would willingly give one dollar each, if it were even suggested, and the interest of that sum, ten thousand dollars, at six per cent, would give one woman a comfortable support. Mrs. Leavitt ought never to be worried about money, after all her hard work for the cause. The ladies of the union said at once, "Let Cleveland lead and pay the first dollar!"

THE Japanese W. C. T. U. held its second annual convention November 26 to 28 in the Methodist Church of Yinza, Tokio. Twelve unions were represented. The Imperial Parliament had just assembled and must have profited by the public lectures and social business of the convention, for it accepted the counter petition of the union containing 2,366 names, against a high license bill and a petition of the brewers for a decrease of the tax on wine. It is recorded: "At a missionary meeting, the first held in New Guinea, a few months ago, one of the speakers picked up a spear and said: 'This used to be our constant companion. We dared not go to our gardens without it; we took it in our canoes, we carried it on our journeys, we slept with it by our sides, and we took our meals with it close at hand; but,' he said, 'we can now sleep safely because of this,' holding up the book of the Gospels. 'This book has brought us peace and protection, and we no longer require the spear.' What 'peace and protection' are our Christian breweries carrying along with the gospel to an abstemious nation, that already must petition its government, so recently idolatrous, against our Christian iniquity that slays more victims than 'sword, pestilence or famine.' Oh, the pity of it—the wrongs done in Christ's name!"

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Muskogee, I. T., are erecting a neat and commodious structure, the lower story of which will be used as a school room and assembly hall and the second as a library and reading room. The cost of the building when completed will not be far from $2,000. In addition to this will be the cost of the furniture and library. Through the persistent and untiring work of the members and their friends, nearly a third of the amount necessary to complete the work has been secured, and now, for the first time, they call upon their friends abroad to help. It is their ambition to establish a school for boys, and as there are several schools for girls and none for boys in this town it will be seen that no better location could be found. Teachers will be employed under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., the books used and the course of study will be under their control. From time immemorial the red man's worst foe has been strong drink; and although the introduction of liquors into this country is prohibited by law, yet "fire-water," as the Indians call it, is easily obtained and its use is hastening their destruction more rapidly than did the bullets of the Spaniards in the days of Cortez. Education based upon Christian temperance is the only hope for the Indian and such will be the teaching of this school. Contributions should be sent to Mrs. Laura E. Harsha, president of the W. C. T. U., Muskogee, Ind. Ter., who will gladly answer any inquiries relative to this matter.

THE following far-reaching "echoes from the National" are sent by the Rev. O. W. Scott, of Norwich, Conn.: "New Englanders will not 'recover' from the Boston Convention for months—if ever. On every side we hear the appreciative qualifiers, 'magnificent,' 'wonderful,' 'profoundly impressive,' and the like. To visit this remarkable Convention was the privilege of a lifetime. Man, lordly, ubiquitous man was there, listening, watching, as ready to criticise, possibly, as to approve. I can testify as to how one observer of the 'sterner sex' was impressed.

"1. The charmingly cheerful atmosphere of the Convention; everybody seemed good-natured; the spirit of kindness prevailed. Frequently at some witty 'Sallie,' ripples of laughter would sweep over the audience.

Nothing dull or prosy could be possible in such a Convention.

"2. Business methods: I heard a gentleman of extended experience remark that he 'never saw convention business carried forward in any convention of men in a more parliamentary and satisfactory manner.' Every observer must echo the sentiment, if true to the testimony of eyes and ears. Motions were made in a clear-cut and perfectly distinct manner, whether from the platform or floor. The balconies were delighted with this feature of the Convention.

"3. The thrilling 'passages,' that delightfully interrupted routine business, and stirred to tears and laughter the lookers on. Can any one forget the scenes of Tuesday afternoon? The call for the 'old Crusaders' to 'stand and be counted,' the appearance of Mother Thompson (and the 'dog stories,' so inimitably told by her) the testimony of the galleries to their sympathy with and personal interest in the work of the W. C. T. U., altogether these events formed a 'thrilling passage' in the Convention which will linger long in memory.

"4. The manifest presence of the Holy Spirit; the 'unction' was upon speaker and hearer. The 'believer' felt and recognized it at once, and said 'the divine approval rests upon these consecrated workers and their work.' Hence, the W. C. T. U. will surely succeed. This organization will become more and more a 'terror to evil-doers.' Although the state and city officials did not honor themselves by appearing before that convocation of 'devout women,' they are well aware that the most influential convention that ever met in Boston has come and gone. Let it go down in our National temperance history as 'the great Boston Convention,' for it was grand and glorious."

Official Communications.

A NEW YEAR'S LETTER.

DEAR TREASURERS:—I send you greeting with full appreciation of your hard work, but at the same time my new year watchword for you is: Magnify your calling. To you is given the most important office of the W. C. T. U. No matter how well all others may do their duty, the work and its prosperity depends on you. Without a faithful, competent treasurer to see after the finances, the whole must result in failure. Upon you in the last analysis depends all our data for membership, and your influence is not limited to the local union; it extends through every fibre of the organization up to the latest evolution—the World's W. C. T. U. Do not let one member be lost to the count by a lapse in collection of dues. Begin the year with the determination to be present at every meeting, and to be there to see that every woman's dues are paid. If the other woman is not present go for her dues; if in a large union this is too great a tax, ask for a finance or a collecting committee. Our dues are our only certain income, all that we can surely depend upon.

Rule your register with twelve columns, head them January, February, March, etc. Put down under the appropriate month the dues as they come in, thus:

Names	Jan.	Feb.	Mar.
Mrs. Smith	$1.00
Miss Jones	1 00
Mrs. Doe		$1 00
Mrs. Roe		1 00
Mrs. White			$1.00
Mrs. Black			1 00

Thus you can see at once when the year expires for any member. As you observe, I am hoping unions can make a $1.00 membership fee; if not educated to that, make it as best you can. Then at the end of the quarter, take a certain portion of your list, and pay the whole dues for the year for that portion to your state, district or county treasurer, as your constitution requires. Then at the close of the second quarter take the next part of your list, presumably about one-fourth each time, and pay for that fraction. Thus you will always have credit for your whole membership as the last quarter you pay for all remaining even if they only become members in that month, and you will not pay for any for which you have not received the money. Last year the National treasurer's books showed an increase of ten thousand members, but this by no means showed the actual gain.

I think nearly half the states came to me with the acknowledgment that there had been great delinquency in collecting the dues, and that their membership was thus very greatly curtailed. Shall the count of one member be lost this year by any dereliction on your part? Let this be the year of our greatest prosperity. This depends on you individually. See that every penny which goes into the work is credited on your books. Women give car fares, and small sums are paid out constantly, collections are paid over to speakers without being accounted for on the books. We should use especial care to know the sums paid out in our work, the aggregate would give us larger ideas of the importance of this cause committed to us. Yours for full count,

ESTHER PUGH.

Evanston, Ill., Jan., 1892.

DEPARTMENT OF WORK FOR THE PROMOTION OF "PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART."

This branch of the Social Purity work was made into a separate National department at the late Convention at Boston.

The whole strength, energy and experience of the superintendent of this department will be concentrated for the protection of the moral purity of our children. In the purity of the youth of our beloved land is the only hope for the preservation of our Republic. This work is patriotic and Christ-like. When we consider that twenty millions of the population of the United States are under twenty-one years of age, we can see the importance of this department. To make it successful will require the coöperation of each state president in appointing a superintendent for this work at the earliest moment. She must be a woman of rarest good judgment and one who will delight in this work of trying to suppress all that is obscene and indecent in books, newspapers and in the so-called works of art that are often exhibited in many of our art galleries. The magnitude of the work has led Miss Willard and the executive to make this department distinct and not a part of the Social Purity department of which Miss Willard is the National superintendent. Let each state president send me the name of a superintendent for "Purity in Literature and Art," and lines of work will be indicated. If the laws are deficient or inoperative I will suggest models of the laws from other states; plans for conferences, lectures, etc., instructing the people and arousing public sentiment. The kind of exhibits there shall be at the Columbian Exhibition in 1893 lies largely at our doors.

I have called to my aid as counselors: Anthony Comstock (Secretary New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, Room 85, Times Building, New York City) and Yates Hickey (Sup't American Railway Literary Union and Pure Literature Bureau, 1512 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.)

Yours for the time when the "pure in heart shall see God."

MRS. EMILIE D. MARTIN,
Nat'l Sup't, 111 West 75th St., New York City.

Our Book Table.

A SLUMBER SONG is a new book by a young author, Nina Lillian Morgan. It is a sweet, pure story, so charming that one will not lay it down till it is read through. There is nothing startling or original in its plot, a cause for thankfulness, as affording a rest from the novel of to-day, but from beginning to end it has a smoothness and sweetness befitting its name. Mabel, its heroine, learns on her fifteenth birthday that she is but the adopted child of those whom she had always supposed to be her parents. Her sense of gratitude to them led her to compete for a prize offered for a musical composition, and "The Slumber Song" was the result. Through it she not only won the prize, but discovered her grandfather. Throughout the book is a beautiful exemplification of Mabel's birthday text, "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want" any good thing. Lily Publishing House, Chicago. Price $1.

One of the latest of Houghton & Mifflin's white and gold series is ODES, LYRICS AND SONNETS, from the works of James Russell Lowell. It opens with the "Commemoration Ode," the grandest one the war, or our times has produced. Next comes "Agassiz," in which occur the lines:

"Yea, truly, as the sallowing years
Fall from us faster, like frost-loosened leaves
Pushed by the misty touch of shortening days,
And that unwakened winter nears;
'Tis the void chair our surest guest receives;
'Tis lips long cold that give the surest kiss;
'Tis the lost voice comes oftenest to our ears;
We count our rosaries by the beads we miss;
To me, at least, it seemeth so,
An exile in a land once found divine
While my starved fire burns low,
And homeless winds at the loose casement whine
Shrill ditties of the snow-roofed Apennine."

"Endymion," "Al Fresco," "The Flying Dutchman," "At the Burns' Centennial," "Zekle's Courtin'," "The Prison of Cervantes," and other poems show the wonderful versatility of Mr. Lowell. All lovers of good poetry will thank the publishers for giving these gems such an attractive setting. The Riverside Press, Cambridge, Mass. Price $1.

THE STORY OF GOTTLIEB, by President William F. Warren of Boston University, is just such a beautiful and inspiring story as we should expect President Warren to relate. As almost a matter of course, it deals with student life where its author is so much at home. Gottlieb is a refined young German, struggling for the true ideal of life. His gifted sister first awakens aspiration in his soul, and he strives to grasp the ideal by gaining high rank in scholarship; just as it seems within his reach, his sister's death plunges him into despondency; wandering forlornly, he chances upon the hospital of a monastery; he feels for a time that self-sacrificing for others is the highest ideal; turned from this thought, just as he was about to take monastic vows upon himself, he goes to the Holy Land, hoping by treading in the very steps of the Saviour to attain perfection. A broken limb confined him in the humble home of an American missionary on the side of Mount Lebanon, where the life lived and the simple words spoken by the wife and children in the home, opened his eyes to see the "Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." And thus he realized the highest ideal. Chautauqua Century Press, Meadville, Pa., Flood & Vincent. Price, 60 cents.

A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY.

Do You Not Want To Improve It?

READ!

WE WILL SEND

OFFER A.
THE LIFE OF GEN. GRANT, THE LIFE OF GEN. SHERMAN, Five of PROF. DRUMMOND'S ADDRESSES in one volume, MISS WILLARD'S ANNUAL ADDRESS, RED-LETTER DAY CALENDAR, and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, in all WORTH $5.55, for $2.75 with 40c. added for express charges.

OFFER B.
Or we will send THE UNION SIGNAL one year, MISS WILLARD'S ANNUAL ADDRESS, the RED-LETTER DAY CALENDAR, and DRUMMOND'S ESSAYS, WORTH $1.55 FOR $1.15, postage 5c.

OFFER C.
THE UNION SIGNAL one year, and the LIFE OF GEN. GRANT, WORTH $3.50, FOR $1.50, postage 21c.

OFFER D.
THE UNION SIGNAL one year, LIFE OF SHERMAN and MISS WILLARD'S ANNUAL ADDRESS WORTH $2.60, FOR $1.50, postage 15c.

OFFER E.
THE UNION SIGNAL one year, with MISS WILLARD'S ADDRESS and the LIFE OF SHERIDAN, WORTH $2.10, FOR $1.25, postage 7c.

OFFER F.
THE UNION SIGNAL with the LIFE OF GRANT, LIFE OF SHERMAN and MISS WILLARD'S ADDRESS, WORTH $5.10, FOR $2.00, postage 35c.

THESE ARE THE GREATEST

Bargains we have ever announced. The books will prove a desirable addition to any library, and be especially valuable in homes where there are children, as they give in interesting form valuable historical information!

THESE OFFERS ARE GOOD UNTIL JANUARY 30, 1892.

A SPECIAL PROPOSITION.

For FIVE new subscriptions at $1.00 each, we will send the Life of Grant or the Life of Sherman without extra charge except postage. In order to get the book, the five names, with the amount, $5.00, must be sent at once, with 21c. for postage.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, 161 LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

Publisher's Dep't.

For Fifty Cents.

No wonder prose is put to flight,
And poesy takes up the fight,
Since common language can't express
The true state of the case.

A drop in prices has occurred
More startling than has yet been heard,
And wildest flights of wildest dreams
Must fail in this mad chase.

That picture ye all know so well,
The far-famed, beauteous "Aquarelle"
That smiles upon so many hearths,
Can now be had—oh, hear!

For fifty paltry cents—no less;
Delay no longer! Let it bless
By its benignant presence there
Your homes and haunts so dear.

Come, oh, ye hosts, both great and small,
In school and court house, hut and hall,
Who love your Chieftain true.
Spare this small sum from out your wealth,
And rich rewards in weal and health
Shall daily follow you.

For Your Public Meetings.

The one thing needed more than any other in arranging details for a public meeting is music—good music. And this we can supply. Read what we have. If the children are to help, you cannot very well get along without

Marching Songs for Young Crusaders

By Miss Anna Gordon. Nos. 1 and 2. Price, 10c. per copy.

The Y Song Book

By the same author, just the thing. Price, 25c.

White Ribbon Vibrations,

By Flora H. Cassel, including that now famous piece, "There are bands of ribbon white, around the world." Price 35c.

Advance pages of Miss Gordon's new hymnal, 24 pages. Price 5c.

Make your choice and order so that you may have them in good season.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

To Local W. C. T. U. Presidents.

Why not, at your next meeting, collect 5 cents from each one of your members so that each can have a copy of Miss Willard's annual address? Every member of the organization, and many outside ought to read it. We will send ten or more copies at the rate of 4 cents each, and by securing 5 cents from each—a very low price, you will have some extra copies for Free Distribution.

If twelve members contribute you would receive for the 60 cents, 15 copies, and could place these without cost to you where they would do good. Why not try it?

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

WE will send Our Day, edited by Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, the leading magazine on current reform, price $2.50, and THE UNION SIGNAL, price $1.00, for $2.75. Send orders at once to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Of Interest to All

is, doubtless, the fact that we can now appoint our own agents for

"Glimpses of Fifty Years."

This book has had a large sale, but there is still good territory to be had which has not been worked.

ALSO OF INTEREST

to any one knowing Miss Willard will be that her latest book, "A Classic Town," is sold by us exclusively. While highly entertaining to any one, it is especially so to Methodists, as it contains a history of the Northwestern University. Agents who have sold "Glimpses" should get our terms at once for "A Classic Town."

THEN, TOO,

there is "Childhood: Its Care and Culture," which by name at least is well known to you all. The agents who have sold from ten to a hundred copies know the value and selling qualities of this book. We earnestly urge professional canvassers, W. C. T. U. superintendents, school teachers, and any one in need of employment to at once on any or all these three books. Friends, the new year is here, but although just begun, there is no time to be lost if you wish to make the most of every hour. Let us hear from you.

WRITE FOR TERMS

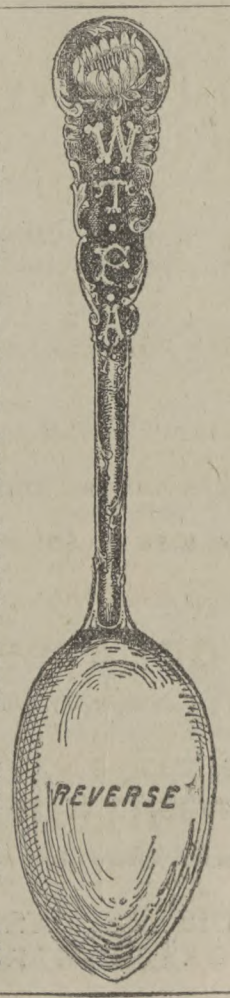
SUBS'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill

WHAT?

Why, the beautiful

Souvenir Spoon



which we have been preparing for our workers and all making a collection of spoons. Could it be more complete in design? It shows the beginning of the Great Reform in the bowl, where is pictured the little Crusade Church in Hillsboro, whence it sprang.

The culmination is emblemized in the World, belted with the White Ribbon at the extreme end, while the Medallion of the President of the National and the World's W. C. T. U. is embowered in the National Floral Emblem, the trailing arbutus.

On the reverse side are the World's Floral Emblem, the water lily, as also are the initials of the great Official Publishing House, which secured the production of the spoon.

Of course, every one will want one or more of these spoons—want them for personal use and as gifts. And we have decided to reduce the profits on the same to the lowest point of safety, so as to enable more to buy them.

NOTICE.—They are offered at a lower price than any sterling silver spoon on the market. Here are our rates for the different styles, all made of Solid Sterling Silver:

TEA SPOONS.

For single spoon,	$ 2.25
P r set of 6, - -	12.50
With bowl gilded,	2.75
All gilded, - - - -	3.25

ORANGE SPOONS.

For single spoon, -	2.50
With bowl gilded,	3.00
All gilded, - - - -	3.50

AFTER DINNER COFFEE SPOONS.

For single spoon, -	1.50
With bowl gilded,	1.75
All gilded,- - - -	2.00

SOMETHING TO LIVE FOR

Something well worthy of ev effort. From the Roman Cordelia's time, to our own, children have been the jewels of the good parents' pride and care. It's the exception to this only that excites comment.

But without good health one can neither well appreciate or direct the vigorous physical activity which is characteristic of the young, and yet the dread of delicate or depressed parents.

But how is the overtaxed parent to acquire fresh vitality? By means of Drs. Starkey & Palen's COMPOUND OXYGEN. Its mission is to build up, what work, worry and disease tear down. Enriched and magnetized air does the business, when put where it is needed, by way of the lungs.

Too simple, you say? That reply might upset a theory, but not a fact. A fact cannot be too simple. The helpfulness of our (notice the "our") COMPOUND OXYGEN is a fact—fixed, proven, clinched! The only vital questions about it are, Do you need help? Will you have it help you?

Send for large book of explanation and proof—free for the asking.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. 66 Church St., Toronto, Canada

---

IF you want to help the cause of the W. C. T. U. and create public sentiment in favor of its principles, push the circulation of our papers.

THE W. T. P. A. has published a memorial sketch of Rev. A. Kenyon, who was a co-worker with Wendell Phillips in the great cause of humanity, and with J. B. Gough in his labors of love in Chicago, and the last money he earned is in the woman's splendid Temperance Temple of Chicago. His book, price forty cents, a picture in every copy, can be had at 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Miss Willard says: "No greater good can be done for the race than to raise the standard of physical culture among women." Experts say the best means for home exercise for young and old is the elegant parlor cabinet of the Whitney Home Gymnasium Company, Rochester, N. Y. It is guaranteed to strengthen weak bodies rapidly. Circular free.

Special Offer to Ladies.—If you secure a Life Insurance policy in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association before January 1st, you pay no membership fee. Write at once for particulars. Geo. E. Godward, Sec'y, 187 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Beecham's Pills cure Bilious and Nervous Ills.

Van Houten's Cocoa—Perfectly pure, instantaneous

The Sower Should Take No Chances,

But assure the success of his planting by using seeds which have been put to the test and their virtue proven. In another column appears the advt. of W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, among the largest of Western seedsmen. The growth and success of this firm have been due to the prompt execution of orders and to the fact that their tested seeds when used cause no disappointment.

Reduction in Clergy Fares via the Pennsylvania Lines.

The management of the Pennsylvania Lines west of Pittsburgh announces that the clergyman's rate on and after January 1st, 1892, will be one and one-half cents per mile, instead of two cents per mile, that is, half fare instead of two-thirds fare, as heretofore. This reduction has been made without solicitation, and will apply for all tickets sold on clerical orders, which will continue to be issued under the customary regulations.

New Cook Book Free.

The Price Baking Powder Co., Chicago, has just published its new cook book, called "Table and Kitchen," compiled with great care. Besides containing over 500 receipts for all kinds of pastry and home cookery, there are valuable hints for the table and kitchen, showing how to serve, how to set a table, how to enter the dining room, etc: a hundred and one hints in every branch of the culinary art. Cookery of the very finest and richest as well that of the most economical and homelike is provided for.

"Table and Kitchen" will be sent postage prepaid to any lady patron who will state that she saw this notice in THE UNION SIGNAL, and who will send her address (name, town and state) plainly given. Postal card is as good as a letter. Address Price Baking Powder Co., 184, 186 and 188 Michigan Street, Chicago, Ill.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
(THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.)
Cure BILIOUS and Nervous ILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. Women write that "TOKOLOGY is worth its weight in gold." "Should my house take fire it would be the first book saved." "I think it is wicked for women to get along without TOKOLOGY—and suffer so much." "TOKOLOGY is indeed a bible for every woman.—Frances E. Salisbury." "I bought two TOKOLOGYS and gave them to two young ladies as wedding presents, saying to each: 'This book will do for your body what the Bible does for your soul.' They write me that I told the truth.—Mrs. A. D. Morris."

Prepaid $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO. 277 Madison-st. Chicago

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer who will send me their Express and P. O. address.

T. A. Slocum, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms

St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

WIMODAUGHSIS COOK BOOK, contributed to by over 100 prominent women. Contains Frances E. Willard's recipe for White Ribbon Cake. Price 25 cents. By mail, 30 cents. Address, Wimodaughsis, 1328 I. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

GOD AND HOME AND NATIVE LAND.—Introduction by Miss Willard. Contributions by 400 world's best authors; a home book for father, mother, son and daughter; everybody will want it. Agents can make $10 a day selling it. Group picture of fifty-eight distinguished people, size 18 by 20 inches given away. Write for terms. EASTERN PUBLISHING CO., Boston, Mass.

Lincoln Tea, guaranteed to cure constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and complexion purifier. Send for sample.

McLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Sold by all druggists.

NO BOY OR GIRL

should grow up without the amusement and physical training which the World's Parlor and Lawn Game gives. ELASTIC TIP COMPANY, 152-154 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

COMPOUND OXYGEN Price reduced. For information address

DR. A. H. HIATT, Central Music Hall, Chicago.

FRANK FORD & SON, Ravenna, Ohio, issue a concise, neatly arranged, readable catalogue of seeds, fruit trees and plants, which is mailed free, and should be in the hands of all before placing orders for such goods. See their advertisement in this issue

---

FOUR HUNDRED MILES AS THE CROW FLIES

Is the distance covered in a single night by the Limited Express trains of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway between Chicago and the Twin Cities of the Northwest—St. Paul and Minneapolis.

These trains are vestibuled, electric lighted and steam heated, with the finest Dining and Sleeping Car Service in the world.

The Electric reading light in each berth is the successful novelty of this progressive age, and is highly appreciated by the regular patrons of this line. We wish others to know its merits, as the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway is the only line in the west enjoying the exclusive use of this patent.

For further information apply to nearest coupon ticket agent, or address, F. A. Miller, Ass't Gen'l Pass. Agent, Chicago, Ill.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

THE

Owen Electric Belt

[Trade Mark.] DR. A. OWEN.

AND APPLIANCES

For Men and Women

Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.

They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.

CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.

A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in our

OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE

containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,

Main Office and only Factory,

191-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.

The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC Founded by Dr. EBEN TOURJÉE. CARL FAELTEN, Director.

Gives Unequalled Facilities for Thorough and Systematic Instruction in all departments of Music, the Fine Arts, etc., at very reasonable rates. A Safe and Comfortable Home for Lady Pupils. Special Provisions for Self Help offered to prospective pupils who are needy and talented and who can furnish satisfactory references. For full information address, Frank W. Hale, Gen'l Manager, Franklin Sq., Boston.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE. A Christian woman's narrative of Mission work done "In His Name" in tough places, revealing the "inner life" of the under-world of New York "as seen by a woman." It describes Gospel work in the slums, and gives a famous detective's 30 years experiences. By Mrs. Helen Campbell, Col. Thos. W. Knox, and Inspector Thos. Byrnes (Chief of the N. Y. Detectives). With 250 engravings from flash-light photographs of scenes in Darkest New York by Day and by Night. Pure and good, full of tears and smiles, it is an ally of Temperance, a witness to the power of the Gospel,—a book for every home. Ministers say, "God speed it." Eminent women endorse it. ☞5,000 Agents Wanted, Men and Women. ☞$200 a month made. ☞ Distance is no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

BABY'S BIRTHRIGHT is the title of a very artistic book, containing over 1100 Christian names from which to select a name for Baby. The preface is a literary gem. Book beautifully illustrated and ornamented. Printed in monotints. Bound with silk cord and tassel. Each book in a box. A handsome present for a young mother. Mailed for fifty cents.
H. M. CRIDER, Publisher, York, Pa.

Good Paper 3c / Gold Paper 5c PEATS THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT sells the best, the cheapest & does the largest business in

WALL PAPER

If you have any use whatever for Wall Paper, do not fail to send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent Free. Agents sample books, $1. 136-138 W. Madison-st. Chicago.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office.
H. G. ROOT, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

How to Make a Fortune.

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line, or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new; will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 184 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

PILES CURED FREE. New, Painless. Certain. Gives instant relief and lasting cure—never returns. To prove it we will send a trial package FREE, to any address. PYRAMID DRUG COMPANY, Box 35, ALBION, MICHIGAN.

A MAN TRAVELING BETWEEN Chicago and Denver SHOULD TAKE THE CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC

FAST VESTIBULED TRAINS, DINING CARS

VAN BUREN STREET DEPOT.

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager. JNO. SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass'r Agt.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

Publisher's Dep't.

Do You Realize

What a wonderful opportunity we are offering to all who are now, or may become, subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL? Lest you may not realize the great advantage within your reach, we again state our proposition in its varied form.

Will you not carefully read and act accordingly?

We will send to any address the following books and papers, selling price, $5.55, on receipt of $2.75 and 40c extra for express charges:

The Life of Gen. Grant, bound in cloth, 734 pp., $2.50.

Life of Sherman, cloth, 608 pp., $1.50.

Life of Sheridan, cloth, 224 pp., $1.00.

Drummond's addresses:

The Greatest Thing in the World,
Pax Vobiscum,
The Changed Life,
"First!"—A Talk with Boys,
How to Learn How, in one volume bound in heavy paper, $.35.

Miss Willard's Annual Address, $.10.

Red Letter Day Calendar, $.10.

Offer A.

The above foots up $5.55; we will send all the above listed and THE UNION SIGNAL one year (subscription price $1.00—worth more than twice that sum) for only $2.75. If you want the package sent prepaid add 40c. for expressage.

Offer B.

Or we will send THE UNION SIGNAL, one year; Miss Willard's Annual Address; the Red Letter Day Calendar, and Drummond's Essays, worth $1.55, for $1.15.

Offer C.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year and the Life of Gen. Grant, worth $3.50, for $1.50.

Offer D.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year; Life of Sherman and Miss Willard's Annual Address, worth $2.60, for $1.50.

Offer E.

THE UNION SIGNAL, one year, with Miss Willard's address and the Life of Sheridan, worth $2.10, for $1.25.

Offer F.

THE UNION SIGNAL with the Life of Grant, Life of Sherman and Miss Willard's Address, worth $5.10, for $2.00.

We require that when ordering you should add postage for these books: The Life of Grant, 21c.; The Life of Sherman, 15c.; The Life of Sheridan, 7c.; Drummond's Essays, 5c.

These are the greatest bargains we have ever announced.

The books will prove a desirable addition to any library, and be especially valuable in homes where there are children, as they give in interesting form valuable historical information.

A Special Proposition!

For five new subscriptions at $1.00 each, we will send the Life of Grant or the Life of Sherman without extra charge except postage. In order to get the book, the five names, with the amount, $5.00, must be sent in at once.

Remember, the above outlined privileges are for the benefit of old and new subscribers alike. Do not fail to avail yourself of this unequaled opportunity to get the best of books for almost nothing.

This offer is good until Jan. 31, 1892.

Address,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Do You Understand

That we have in course of preparation, nearly ready for distribution, an outline of the special readings for local unions for the year 1892, embracing Bible Readings, Responsive Readings, and Topical Readings. You can learn by reading this just what has been planned for your help during the year. Send one-cent stamp for this prospectus to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

"The Crime of Not Insuring"

It may be plead in defense that old line companies charge so much and are so extravagant, and that assessment companies are so insecure, that it is no crime to refuse to trade with them. However that may be, here is a company which is NEITHER EXTRAVAGANT NOR INSECURE.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION . . . . OF AMERICA . . . . . .

Has its plans and rates adjusted to Insure at cost. Having only total abstainers as members, "cost" is reduced at least 30 per cent. under the charges of old line companies. Its expense account is $3.00 per $1,000—and cannot be more—instead of $9.32 per $1,000, the average of old companies. It has a guarantee fund of $64,000 securely invested. It stands almost, if not quite alone in paying one hundred cents on the dollar of every honest claim since its incorporation, July 24th, 1889. It has achieved, in two and one-half years, a success which old companies took about three times as long to reach. The company stands among business enterprises as an object lesson on total abstinence, which every good citizen should recognize.

WM. F. SINGLETON, PRESIDENT.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Large Profit in Chicago Real Estate

Large or Small Investors
Can make money by Calling on
ELLSWORTH Land Association,
Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.
We pay your R. R. fare.

How to save money buying bunting flags! Write G. W. Simmons & Co., Oak Hall, Boston, Mass.

16% and Sure Profit-Sharing.
An Absolutely New System of REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT
Address A. A. HOPKINS, 13 Astor Place, New York

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE. Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and indorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your Grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it.
D. S. WILTBERGER, 233 N. Second Street, Phila, Pa.

PORTABLE BATHS. Best ever known. Wholesale and Retail. Agents Wanted Everywhere Send for Circulars. E. J. KNOWLTON, Ann Arbor, Mich.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send only five cents and receive a Large, Elegant Fashion Catalogue and how to secure 50c. worth of dress patterns, FREE. Add. Young Lady's Bazar. 230 La Salle St., Chicago.

LADY AGENTS $10 DAILY selling "Victoria Protector" and rubber goods for Ladies & Children. Sample "Victoria," by mail $1. Mrs. L. E. Singleton, Box 663, Chicago, Ill.

LADY Agents $5 a day sure; new rubber under garment. Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago, Ill

LADY wanted, on salary, to sell Roses, Shrubs, &c Brown Bros. Nurym'n, Rochester, N. Y. & Chicago

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes. Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved, cheapest, scientific, powerful, durable and effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspensories free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c-stamp for pamphlet.
DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH Established in Chicago, 20 Years in Cincinnati. Ref'd to Chicago, '92.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 State St., Chicago.

RUPTURE CURED!

(PATENT ALLOWED.)

Positively Holds Rupture. WORN NIGHT AND DAY. Has an Adjustable Pad which can be made larger or smaller to suit changing condition of rupture. Illustrated Catalogue sent securely sealed by G. V. HOUSE MFG. CO. 744 BROADWAY, N. Y. CITY

DRUNKENNESS Is A DISEASE, and can be Cured, by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given without the knowledge of the patient, if desired, by placing it in coffee, tea or articles of food. Cures guaranteed. Send for free circulars. GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

F. P. VAN VALKENBURGH, Former Associate Physician and Surgeon to the Old People's Home, 3838 Indiana Avenue, Chicago, also examining Physician for the New York Life Insurance Co., Cures Drunkenness, Morphine, Opium, and destroys the desire for Tobacco. Cures guaranteed. Correspondence solicited. Reference: Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Office, 103 State-st. Chicago

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago Ill

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept. G C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

PILES INSTANT RELIEF. Cure in 15 days. Never returns. No purge. No Salve. No suppository. Remedy mailed free. Add. J. H. Reeves, Box 3290, N. Y. City, N.Y

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. HISCOX, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

ECZEMA NO CURE! NO PAY! Address DR. ROSS Grand Rapids, Mich.

TAPE WORM Removed alive, head and all, in three hours at your home. No starving required. Safe, sure and certain. Circulars free. 269 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

Some Children Growing Too Fast become listless, fretful, without energy, thin and weak. But you can fortify them and build them up, by the use of

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES Of Lime and Soda.

They will take it readily, for it is almost as palatable as milk. And it should be remembered that AS A PREVENTIVE OR CURE OF COUGHS OR COLDS, IN BOTH THE OLD AND YOUNG, IT IS UNEQUALLED. Avoid substitutions offered.

BABY CARRIAGES. We sell direct to customers. Delivered free to any point in U. S. Cat. free. Chas. Raiser, Mfr, 62 Clybourn av, Chicago

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them. YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

DO YOU HAVE TROUBLE in trying to keep your Bangs and Curls in position? If so, send 50c. to A. B. AUSTIN, Manufacturer of Toilet Specialties, 627 N. 8th St., Terre Haute, Ind., for a bottle of COLUMBIAN CURLING CREAM, which will turn your trouble into joy.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE. OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

KENSINGTON ART NEEDLE.

FOR RAISED EMBROIDERY.

So simple a novice can use it. Agents Wanted. Send name and get 26 embroidery designs FREE. E. A. BURTON & CO., 34 W. Washington St. Chicago.

A Complete Line of Dress Reform Goods, INCLUDING THE NEWELL BUST SUPPORT, Equipoise Waist and Jenness-Miller Specialties. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue. MRS. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

TENNIS. BOATING. RIDING.

YOUNG LADIES SHOULD WEAR

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORDED CORSET WAIST

Permits Full Expansion of the Lungs. Perfect Freedom of Motion.

—Tape-fastened Buttons. Cord-edge Button Holes.—Clamp Buckle at hip securely holds Hose Supporter.

CAN BE WASHED WITHOUT INJURY.

Be sure your Waist is stamped "GOOD SENSE."

FERRIS BROS. Manufacturers and Patentees, 341 Broadway, New York.

For sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.

MARSHALL FIELD & CO., CHICAGO, Wholesale Western Agents.

FOR MANY LADIES THE BALLS PERFECT COMFORT WITH NO POSSIBLE INJURY TO BUST, NO METAL EYELETS TO PULL OUT OR IN OUT STRINGS, EASY THE FIRST DAY, BONES NEVER BREAK OR ROLL UP, FIT SNUG BUT NEVER TIGHT

CORSETS & CORSET WAISTS FOR OTHERS THE KABO ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM, NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN YOUR CLOTHES, BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP, FULLY GUARANTEED BY THE CHICAGO CORSET CO.

CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

Publisher's Dept.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year, in advance	$1.00
" " " not in advance	1.50
" " " 3 months	.25
" " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price, per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly edition, one copy (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Sunbeams.

Who does not like sunshine? The little miniature booklets with above title deserve to be thus named, for they forcibly remind one of rays of light or of green fields dotted with all kinds of beautiful wild flowers.

They are a series of twelve booklets nicely put up in a package with only two alike in each. A text is given for each day of the month and displayed in a delightful fashion; on each little page are fine lithographed flowers such as, Lily of the Valley, Blue Bells, Forget-me-Not, Star of Bethlehem, Buttercups, Daisies and Autumn Leaves. These are some of the titles of each booklet: "Rays of Light," "Words of Grace," "Good Cheer," etc., etc.

We recommend them as specially appropriate in Kindergarten work, and they are vastly better for gifts than cards at several times the cost.

The price is 25 cents per package, but we will send them postpaid for 15 cents while the supply lasts. We cannot break packages. Order early.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Thumb-nail Sketches,

Compiled by the late Miss Julia A. Ames, are in great demand. Send your order now, as the price must soon be raised from 25c. to 30c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Read

Our special offer on page 15. Every one who does not now take THE UNION SIGNAL should immediately subscribe for it.

Now is the Time

To order the Willard Calendar for 1892. It is a beauty. Price 15c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Price Reduced.

Now let us all see what we can do to place Miss Willard's address in the hands of thinking people everywhere. We will send it in tinted cover to any address for 5 cts. per copy, or at the rate of $4 per 100, in quantities of twenty-five or over.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N. 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Our Club List.

For the benefit of our readers we have made arrangements by which we can make the following offer: We will send

THE UNION SIGNAL, Oak and Ivy Leaf, and The Young Crusader one year for $1.30.

THE UNION SIGNAL and the New York Weekly Witness, one year, $1.50.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Demorest's Magazine, one year for $2.50.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Our Day, one year for $3.

THE UNION SIGNAL, Our Day, and The Christian Statesman, one year for $3.25.

THE UNION SIGNAL, Our Day, and The Christian Statesman for three months, $1.

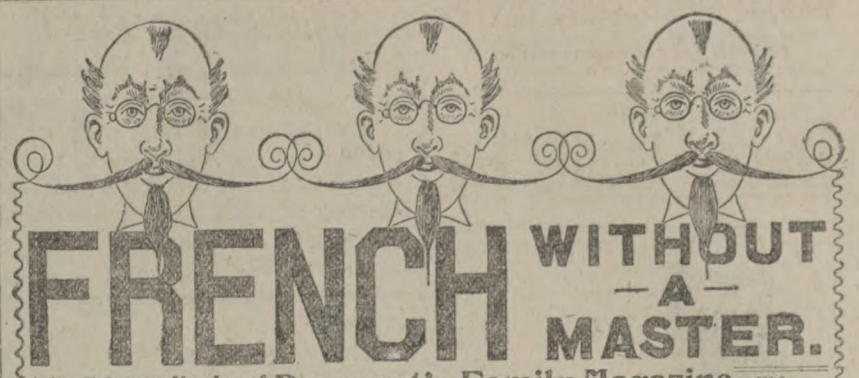
The three last named publications are the foremost in leading reforms, and are a wonderful bargain at these rates.



FRENCH WITHOUT —A— MASTER.

The February Number of Demorest's Family Magazine will be . .

WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD

TO ALL THOSE WHO WISH TO ACQUIRE A KNOWLEDGE OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE; AND WHAT MAN, WOMAN, OR CHILD DOES NOT?

Anyone following Prof. de Rougemont's clear directions in "French Without a Master," published in the February number of DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE (now ready), will be astonished to find in how short a time they will acquire a thorough and correct knowledge of French, without any other assistance, and be able to read, write, and speak it. Prof. A. de Rougemont is widely known through his connection with the Chautauqua Summer School, which is sufficient guarantee for the completeness and accuracy of his work. This February number also tells you How to Furnish every room in your house so as to get the most artistic effects with the least money. It is full of exquisitely illustrated stories and articles. Something to interest every member of the family. Single copies, 20 cents. Yearly, $2.00. For sale by all newsdealers; or, address the publisher,

W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 East 14th Street, New York.

COLUMBIA NATIONAL BANK

COR. LA SALLE AND QUINCY STREETS. CHICAGO

Opened for Business February 16, 1891

OFFICERS

L. Everingham, President
W. G. Bentley, Vice-President
Zimri Dwiggins, Cashier
J. T. Greene, Assistant Cashier

Transacts a General Banking Business

Solicits Accounts of Individuals Firms, Merchants, Banks, Bankers and Corporations

Most favorable terms allowed

Capital Paid in $1,000,000.00

Collections a Specialty

Our large list of correspondents East and West enable us to Guarantee Promptness and Moderate Rates

The Ladies' Department

A Separate Suite of Rooms, with Special Clerical Force and every Facility for Banking especially For Ladies

OUR MOTTO: "Safety, Courtesy Promptness Liberality"

We sell direct to Families

And make it easy for you to buy of us no matter where you live. The Marchal & Smith Piano is one of the Finest Pianos in the World, reliable as a Government bond, and is used in the homes of our best people everywhere.

OUR PRICES RANGE FROM

PIANOS, $180 to $1500 | ORGANS, $35 to $500

By selling direct to familes we avoid those useless and wasteful expenses which compel agents to sell an inferior instrument or to charge you double what we ask.

OUR OFFER We will send you a piano or an organ on approval, and if it does not suit you we will take it back and pay freights both ways. Send for our catalogue and list of Bankers, Merchants, Clergymen and others who have bought of us, some of whom you may know.

THE MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,

ESTAB. 1859. 235 EAST 21st ST., NEW YORK. INCOR. 1877.

COLD BLAST. NO ODOR COLD BLAST CO. CHICAGO

Feathers and Feather Pillows ARE SOLD GUARANTEED Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.

ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM. IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO. MANUFACTURERS OF FAULTLESS BEDDING CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents, F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co., 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D. C. H St., between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET. HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE. G. H. La Fetra, Prop

TESTED GARDEN, FLOWER AND FARM SEEDS PLANTS, BULBS AND TOOLS.

Catalogues Sent Free on Application.

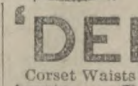
W. W. BARNARD & CO., Chicago, Ill.

Successors to MIRAM SIBLEY & CO.

'DELSARTE' Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.

Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

McMULLEN'S WOVEN WIRE FENCING. Best Steel Wire, Galvanized. Prices reduced. Sold by dealers. Freight paid. THE McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., Chicago, Ills.



YOUR NAME on 25 LOVELY CARDS, 1 RING, 1 LACE PIN, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 25 Album Verses, with the New and Popular Monthly, WAYSIDE GLEANINGS, THREE MONTHS FOR 10c. LAUREL CARD CO., CLINTONVILLE, CONN.

Signal Notes.

A TEXAS youth thinks he has discovered a way by which alcohol can be de-etherized. The Voice says: "The chemical formula of common alcohol is C^2H^6O. The chemical formula for ether is $C^4H^{10}O$. It does not require any knowledge of chemistry to see that $(C^2H^6O)^2—C^4H^{10}O=H^2O$=WATER. The discovery of water happened long ago. The trouble has been to get men to drink it. De-etherized alcohol is a hoax; don't trust a saloon-keeper to mix slops for you."

THE School of Medicine, the Sarbonne, the College of France, the Law School and the School of Fine Arts offer gratuitous advantages to students of every country, without distinction of sex, race, religion or color. They promise coöperation in the proposed establishment in Paris of an institution in which the American students shall be grouped together. The Woman's Journal directs that persons interested shall address M. Marcisse Cyr, Vendome, Springfield, Mass.

MR. W. S. CAINE, in the Alliance News, organ of the United Kingdom Alliance, says the legislation demanded by the British Temperance party is "Sunday closing, direct veto and no compensation. We do not greatly concern ourselves about the constitution of the licensing authority; all we contend for is that no licensing authority, however constituted, shall force upon the community any liquor shops against its direct will." American temperance workers send the Britishers hearty sympathy in their local option struggles, out of which we have grown into Prohibitionists.

THE Irish Temperance League is striving to enroll 1,000,000 in the Band of Hope. It says: 'The children—the to-morrow of the cause.' A grand temperance banquet held recently expressed the following sentiments: 'A faithful Christian church, the liquor traffic's dead-list foe.' A man to be a true church member must not support the liquor traffic. How many communicants in the past have helped to send to Parliament, and will do so again at the General Election, scores of men who have opposed empowering the people to veto the liquor traffic. If true church members may do this, what may they not do?"

THE Alcoholic Liquor Traffic Committee, appointed by the new Speaker, Mr. Crisp, seems to please the liquor traffic. Bonfort's Wine and Spirit circular says of the chairman: "Mr. Haynes is known to be a liberal-minded man who does not believe that rum is a curse, . . . and takes a 'wee nip' whenever he feels like it for his stomach's sake. Messrs. Taylor and Morse, who were also on last year's committee, are the only known out-and-out Prohibitionists, and they form a small and harmless minority." The Sentinel, the brewers' organ at the National capital says: "We knew our confidence in Mr. Crisp was not misplaced."

HONORABLE F. M. HUBBARD, district judge of the eighth judicial district of Iowa, in passing sentence upon some liquor dealers for violation of the prohibitory laws of the state, said: "While there are greater crimes known to the law which are punishable with great severity, there are none which involve more of those qualities known as despicable meanness and audacity than the selling of intoxicating liquors. One can have no adequate conception of a cataract until he has seen Niagara, nor of the terrible fury and grandeur of a storm in mid-ocean, until he has witnessed one; no one can know the utter degradation and total depravity to which his species can be brought, until he looks upon the desolate ruin caused by your hellish traffic. You are persistent, defiant law-breakers, and shamelessly boast that in defiance of the law and moral sense of the community, you will continue in your wicked and criminal practices. It has therefore now become the imperative duty of this court to let fall upon you so heavily the arm of the law that you shall either be driven from your nefarious traffic or ruined in your fortunes of wicked prosperity. You have become a stench to the nostrils of the community, and all the good men are praying that you be speedily reformed or summarily destroyed. By the providence of God and the favor of this court, these prayers shall be speedily answered by signal and exact justice for your crimes. And finally let me entreat you, if you are not lost to every sentiment of humanity, to desist from your criminal, vagabond traffic and betake yourselves to some honest calling for a livelihood, that you may yet become virtuous, useful citizens and entitled to the respect of a Christian community."

TEN LOTS WILL MAKE YOU RICH

IF BOUGHT NOW IN THE Town of Griffith

THE COMING GREAT

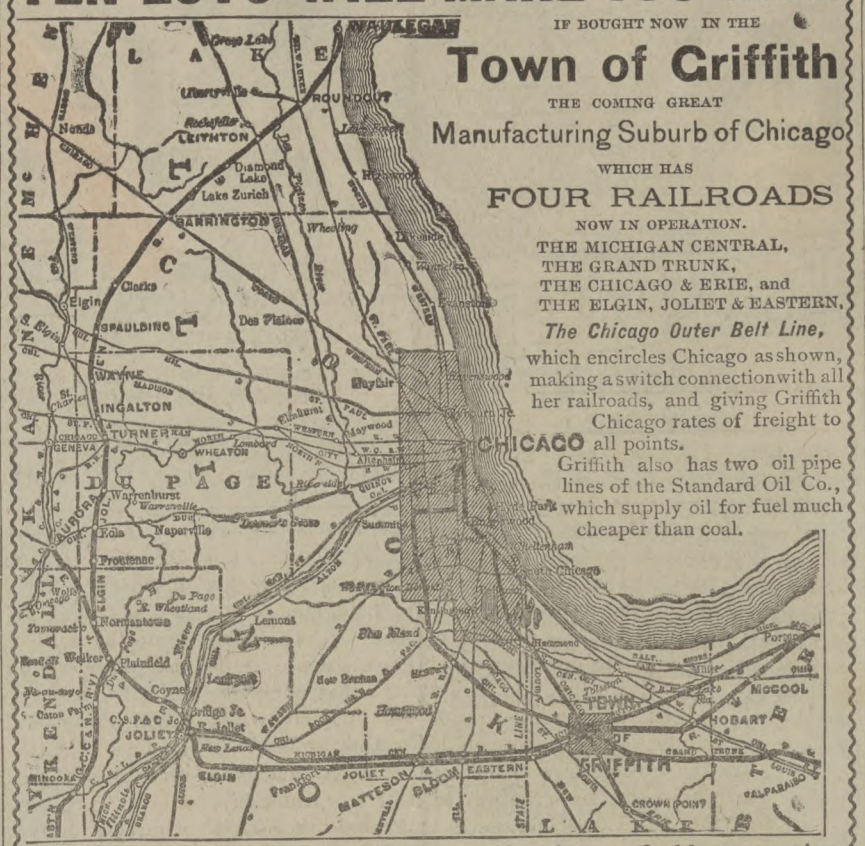
Manufacturing Suburb of Chicago

WHICH HAS

FOUR RAILROADS

NOW IN OPERATION.

THE MICHIGAN CENTRAL,
THE GRAND TRUNK,
THE CHICAGO & ERIE, and
THE ELGIN, JOLIET & EASTERN.



The Chicago Outer Belt Line, which encircles Chicago as shown, making a switch connection with all her railroads, and giving Griffith Chicago rates of freight to all points.

Griffith also has two oil pipe lines of the Standard Oil Co., which supply oil for fuel much cheaper than coal.

HOW is Chicago growing?—by location of new factories.

WHERE are factories locating?—in her manufacturing suburbs.

WHICH suburb affords them best facilities?—Griffith, having two fuel oil pipes and four railroads, including a Belt Line which connects with twenty-two more roads as shown by the map.

WHAT is the history of investments in Chicago's factory suburbs?—uniformly profitable, returning five and ten fold in a few years.

WHY will an investment in Griffith lots pay?—because it can now be had on the ground floor and values are constantly advancing by location of new factories.

HOW MUCH are lots in Griffith?—residence lots $120 upward; business lots $300 upward, on monthly payments of $4 to $12 if desired.

Write to-day for full particulars of lots offered. SENT FREE.
We are only waiting for your address. Here's ours:

JAY DWIGGINS & CO., Room 409, 136 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

The New Sunday School Temperance Catechism.

25 Lessons; 32 pages, 12 mo; 60 Cents per Dozen.

Improve the present opportunity to get this new book used in your SUNDAY SCHOOL for Responsive Readings, and so keep up the interest until the next Quarterly Lesson. A specimen copy will be sent FREE during January on application to

JULIA COLMAN,
17 Bible House, New York.

GOITRE, or THICK NECK.

I have a Positive, Speedy, Harmless and almost Inexpensive Cure. Come or write to me at 28 Livingstone Street, Cleveland, Ohio. It is no Iodine Smear. Cure made Permanent.

Dr. J. Caskey.

RHEUMATISM

CAN BE CURED,
Abbott's Rheumatic Cure
WILL DO IT.
All druggists and 290 S. Franklin Street, Chicago.
$1.25 Bottle { PARTICULARS FREE.

CANCER LUPUS AND TUMORS

Dr. McMichael of Chicago, who has made the subject a special study for twenty-five years, has recently published the result of his investigations in his treatise on "Cancer and Tumors." It is a work of sixty-four pages, characterized by plain unvarnished statements and its total absence of extravagant and bombastic claims inspires the confidence of the reader, whose reason and common sense are appealed to. Dr. McMichael is an authority in his special branch of science, and has achieved remarkable success. By his method he succeeds in effecting permanent cures in 80 per cent. of cases treated without cutting; while 97 per cent. of the cases operated upon with the knife eventually die from return of disease. The most remarkable features of the work are the reports of cases extending over a period of twenty years. In many instances the disease had been cut out by surgeons two and three times and then given up as hopeless and were afterwards cured by Dr. McMichael's method. Copies of the book will be sent free to any address. In writing please send the addresses of friends who would be interested, and copies will be sent to them also.

It does not advertise a medicine, or any other catch-penny device.

Address L. D. McMichael, M. D., 180 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

In writing, refer to THE UNION SIGNAL.

OUR VALUABLE —TREATISE— HOW TO HAVE GOOD TEETH. MAILED FREE. ADDRESS E. W. HOYT & CO. LOWELL, MASS.

My lady is the fairest, the daintiest, the rarest,
Her smile is like the sunshine, and bids the world rejoice.
Her breath perfumes the flowers, and the wild-birds in their bowers,
Entranced, in silence I listen to the music of her voice.
The reason she has told me, and I have no cause to doubt it,
She always uses Rubifoam, and wouldn't be without it.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D. W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

FREE CATALOGUE, SEEDS, PLANTS, BULBS, Etc.

HOME GROWN NORTHERN SEEDS.
Money made by buying my seeds. 35 pkts $1.00. 2c to 5c pkt. Presents with every order. Send postal card with name and address for catalogue.
A. R. AMES, Madison, Wis.

SEEDS GARDEN, FLOWER & FIELD Seed Potatoes, FRUIT TREES, PLANTS & VINES, all best kinds. Our FREE CATALOGUE is a Novelty, as it has No Big Pictures, and gives Concise, Accurate Descriptions and FAIR PRICES for BEST GOODS. Don't miss seeing it before buying. Send address to-day.
FRANK FORD & SON, Ravenna, Ohio.

MORE MONEY IS MADE

Every year by agents working for us than for any other Company; why don't you make some of it? our circulars which we send free will tell you how. We pay salary or commission as party prefers, and want you now. OUTFIT FREE. Address at once,
Standard Silver Ware Co., Boston, Mass.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. L. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

BABY CARRIAGES ARE DELIVERED FREE

to any place in the United States. Also Many JUMPERS, BICYCLES, SAFETIES and GIRLS' TRICYCLES. One or more at wholesale price sent C. O. D. direct from L. G. SPENCER'S Factory, 221 W. Madison Street CHICAGO. $3 to $10 saved. Send 2c. stamp for new catalogue. The largest factory in the world. Latest Styles or commission, to handle the new Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g Co., LaCrosse, Wis. X 213.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prizes. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, B'way, New York.

Torrey Razors —AND— Strops

Highest in Quality.

Known the world over as incomparably The Best. Some troubles are difficult to dodge. Shaving troubles can always be avoided by the use of TORREY RAZORS and TORREY STROPS. Every Razor sold under a GUARANTEE to GIVE SATISFACTION. If the dealer will not supply you, DON'T take any other, but send for Catalogue, telling how to select, sharpen, and keep a Razor in order.

J. R. TORREY RAZOR CO.,
P. O. Box 753 Z WORCESTER, MASS.

BUY NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS

FOR 12 cts.

In order to introduce my splendid NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS everywhere, I offer postpaid

1 Pkg. Melon, 1 Pkg. Radish, 1 Pkg. Lettuce, 1 Pkg. Tomato, 5 Pkgs. Elegant Flower Seed, } Catalog Price 50 cts. Special Price 12 cts.

9 Pkgs. listed in no Catalog in America under 50c. 5,000 Acres used. Plants and Roses by the 100,000. Send 5c. for finest Plant and Seed Catalog published. Many Colored Plates.

Catalog and above 9 Pkgs., 17c.

JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.

JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOUNDED 1883

Mrs. Ursula D. Hettick 2419 19th St 92492

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 3.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January 21, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: Directors' Meeting—Our New Departure—Flower Mission—Citizen, the Highest Title—Glasgow's Forward Movement—Amenities of the Movement... 8, 9
WATCH-TOWER: ... 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem, Judgment, by Emma P. Seabury—What Prohibition Means to Woman's Life, A True Story, by Elizabeth Cummings—The Maine Law and After It, by Neal Dow—Heredity Again, by T. D. Crothers, M. D.... 2, 3, 4
CORRESPONDENCE: From Our Paris Correspondent—From Our World's Fair Correspondent—Mississippi Appreciates Mrs. Harriet B. Kells—Opium, Progress in the Fight—Temperance Temple Items... 4, 5
OUR PRESIDENT'S COLUMN: ... 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, Dorothy or Barbara, Which?—Never Begin to Sin—Buying Gospel Water—How God Teaches the Birds—The Golden Text... 6
THE HOUSEHOLD: Poem, Are the Children Safe?—The Tantrums of Amanda Huggins—Just a Few Words... 7
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.: Christmas in Australia—A Temperance Campaign in South Africa—History of the Province of Manitoba... 10, 11
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: Massachusetts, Kansas, District of Columbia, ... 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: In Memoriam—Dr. Kate Mitchell's Itinerary—The World's Petition—The New Education—Treasurers' Envelopes—Qualifications of Foreign Voters—Parlor Work—The Miners' Department... 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT: ... 14
SIGNAL NOTES: ... 16

To Our Subscribers:

We appeal to you with especial stress and confidence. Will you not, as a token of your love to Julia Ames, send the paper for which she toiled so faithfully and long, to one subscriber more? Will you not send us one more in token of your appreciation of seven years' editorial service of Mary Allen West? Will you not send one new name as a tribute of appreciation to the noble English lady who is working for THE UNION SIGNAL with might and main, although this loving service interferes with her own purposes and plans? Will you not secure one for her sake whom Miss Ames called the "Chieftain," and who in love and grief has taken this new burden on her shoulders? Best of all, will you not send us a name apiece for each of these? In no other way so practical can one and all show their good will, and help our holy cause.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Duke of Clarence passed away on January 14.

Cardinal Manning's death occurred January 14, in London.

John L. Sullivan, the noted pugilist, signed the temperance pledge at Tacoma, Washington, last week.

Chauncey M. Depew was reëlected president of the Union League Club of New York City on Thursday.

A broken rail telescoped a car on the Northern Pacific railroad near Brainerd, Minn., January 15, causing the death of two passengers and injuring twenty-five others.

Randolph Rogers, the celebrated American sculptor, whose statuary adorns every prosperous home, died in Rome, January 16. He was born in Waterloo, N. Y., in 1825.

Four million pounds of flour have been contributed by the United States to the famishing Russians, and arrangements are now in progress with British ships for transporting it to Russia.

The International League of Press Clubs opened its sessions in San Francisco on Thursday, January 14. The delegates are being royally entertained by the California press. It is proposed to found a national home for aged newspaper writers.

The New York Mail and Express has applied to the Columbian Exposition directors for space on which to erect a building for demonstrating the editing and publishing of an American newspaper. A diagram of the proposed building was submitted with the application.

THE seal of the World's W. C. T. U., displayed for the first time on our new title page this week, was designed by Lady Henry Somerset.

WE do not agree with the Rev. Dr. Buckley, of the Christian Advocate, on that greatest question—the civil and ecclesiastical emancipation of woman. For this very reason we are the more glad to thank him for his recent editorial on the club life of men. He is a veritable knight of the new chivalry in his insistence on the regnancy of home life, the faithful love that holds true sons and husbands to the fireside with its serene and sacred ray; the miserable selfishness that makes men leave those whom they should render happy, and who above all others have a right to their companionship, that they may eat, drink, smoke and amuse themselves in that great corporate caravansary, the modern club. The times are out of joint; ours is a transition age; "these things must be in every famous victory;" but men and women will yet banish all clubs but one—the fit survival, "Home, sweet Home."

THE present flurry about Chili reminds us that in the nature of the case, war will be put away in exact mathematical proportion to the degree of influence that women attain in government. Next in this regard is the power of commerce to bring about a similar condition. Commercial nations desire peace, that their great business projects may be carried out successfully. It was in the age of commercialism in Italy that women began to be well educated, some of them even attaining positions of the highest grade in the universities. When war succeeded to this happy formative interval, women were remanded to the covert of home life and were preoccupied in lines of industry relinquished by their brothers when forced to take up fighting. It is significant in view of these facts of history that in London 1,400 business firms have entered into an association for the settlement of all disputes by arbitration. Finding that this works well, the business community will some day see that it is adopted by the great business firm of all, "we, us and company," otherwise the government of the people, and women will come to their own intellectually, industrially and in the management of public interests. How pitiable is the present newspaper sentiment in favor of war with the perturbed little nation south of us. Arbitration—so much talked of and so little appealed to—is the only sane way out.

JUST as we go to press comes an interesting letter from Miss West, descriptive of her trip across the continent. It will be published in next week's issue. Mrs. Nellie Blessing Eyster, a representative press woman of California, as well as one of our own prominent white-ribboners, writes us of Miss West's reception to San Francisco as follows: "Beneath the bluest skies, in one of the fairest harbors on earth, upon the handsome ferryboat, Piedmont, a small party of Pacific Coast press women met and welcomed Miss Mary Allen West to our hospitable shores at three p. m. of January 13. What a joy it was to meet and greet her in the name of the W. C. T. U. of California as well as that of our noble army of literary women. The bow of the vessel on which we stood was crowded with the other distinguished members of the International Press League. Only five days before they left the East in the midst of a driving snowstorm. Rain, snow and sleet followed them along the dreary stretch of plain and hill, even to the very summits of the Sierras. This morning they awoke in San Francisco, found violets, roses and heliotrope blooming around them, and had strawberries and freshly plucked oranges for breakfast. The Pacific Coast Woman's Press Association will give their reception to the visiting delegates next Monday evening, at an elegant hotel (the Pleasanton) whose proprietor and manager is a woman. The best of San Francisco and Oakland society will be present; the menu will represent hundreds of dollars, but nothing more harmful than coffee, tea and lemonade will be served for drink."

CARDINAL MANNING is mourned to-day not only by the church of which he was so bright an ornament; his loss is national and world wide. The powerful grasp he had on the social questions of the day, and his great sympathy with all that could uplift humanity, have marked an era in the annals of catholicism. An ecclesiastical dignitary, stepping out of the atmosphere of the Archiepiscopal Palace to mediate for the wage-earner, a cardinal priest, holding out helping hands to protect the sacredness of womanhood, and uplifted to join in the mighty conflict against the drink traffic, are pictures which are rarely limned in the gallery of history. Cardinal Manning's devotion to the temperance cause was ever enthusiastic. His advocacy of local option,—the measure which in England is believed to be the stepping-stone to prohibition,—was based on his knowledge of the deep injustice of her license laws. "What I claim is," he said, "that if a rich man has by right of property the power to put away the pestilence from his door, the poor man shall have by power of law the right to do the same." Ever ready to come forward on every platform where humanity's wrongs were to be redressed, the grave, ascetic face gave that best benediction, his prayers and sympathy, to the meetings in which he spoke with Mrs. Josephine Butler, W. T. Stead, John Burns, and Sir Wilfrid Lawson,—true Catholicity, which if better understood, would build the Church of Rome on surer foundations than the exclusive possession of Peter's rock. The Pope's encyclical letter, published in 1891, was the Nunc Dimittis of his life. Speaking to a friend, a few months ago, he said: "I have lived to hear all I wanted said from the Vatican." Ere that great soul winged its way to eternity, he received the papal blessing, but we believe a diviner benediction was spoken by the voice of the great humanity whom he sought in his Master's name to bless by the consecrated labor of his life.

THE angel of death, who stays not his hand, but alike leads forth the rich and poor into the great beyond, has crossed the threshold of the Sandringham Palace. The mighty strength of love, blindfolded, perhaps, as yet to visions of the greater good, could not arrest his footsteps, although with impotent entreaty it sought to guard its new-found treasure. The young Prince, Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence and Avondale, lies dead, and England has lost one over whose happiness she had but begun to rejoice. The peal of wedding chimes is stilled, and the low, muffled tone of the passing bell rings in its stead. In an age, when princes are judged on their individual merit, or by their capacity to fulfill the duties of their calling, and not by the mere accident of their birth, there is no sentiment which leads us to mourn any but those who have shown themselves worthy of their people's confidence. Every woman's heart, however, will sorrow to-day, and a wave of sympathy will reach from shore to shore, when we picture the young girl, in all the brightness of her dawning womanhood, who but yesterday was receiving a nation's welcome as their future queen, and to-day kneels by that still form, with all the agony of widowed grief in her young heart; and the great, outreaching love of the world's motherhood will be with the sorrowing Princess who has lost her boy. To England, the loss is perhaps even greater than she knows. There was, in the lad's nature, the Divine spark that can be kindled into greatness; and his love for his mother was with him a religion. He wore upon his watchchain a little medal which she had given him when he first went out from the shelter of his home, on which the simple inscription was engraved, "Our Father." "I could not go far wrong," he said to a friend, "when I think of that, and of her love for me." The difficulties and temptations which are the heritage of princes would, apparently, have been removed by the true-hearted, simple goodness of the girl whom he had chosen for his wife.

Contributed.

JUDGMENT.

BY EMMA P. SEABURY.

I, frowning, passed her on the street one day;
My friend, not understanding, said, "How fair!"
I saw a hot wave sweep up to her hair,
Her sweet eyes droop, my own they would not meet;
I said, "Yes, fair, but very indiscreet;
We have to show her she must have more care
About her ways, if she our grace would share;
Society has laws we cannot cheat.
Our children's good we have to keep in sight,
And show that wrong its punishment will bring;
I know your way is charity alone,
But church and home are sacred, right is right."
"But have you thought," she asked, "what 'tis to fling,
As one without a fault, the judgment stone?"

She sought her out amid the hurrying throng;
Temptation, danger, walked on either side;
Unconscious of them both, she seemed to glide
Defiant, bitter, scornfully along.
She heard them singing loud their siren song,
She heard them say, "Whatever may betide,
We promise not to sting and goad your pride,
As so-called Christians, vaunting they are strong."
She took her by both hands: "I'm glad, indeed,
To meet you; I have work for you to do."
Her love was like a mantle round her thrown,
Her soul responded to its greatest need;
She saved her; I, who sat in judgment, knew,
And prayed I ne'er again might cast a stone.

WHAT PROHIBITION MEANS TO WOMAN'S LIFE.—A TRUE STORY.

BY ELIZABETH CUMMINGS.

The missive lies before me. The writing is cramped, the spelling imperfect, the paper cheap, but it carries a message to the world, and so before I give it, I want to introduce the writer.

Short and sturdy, with dark, gray eyes, and a certain homely, elusive beauty of expression that instantly suggested the peasant faces chosen by the great masters to picture the Virgin Mother of our Lord, she came to me one December day, seeking work. "I can cook in Cherman fuss rate," she said modestly, "und some in English, und I vill try to do all as you tell me, efferytings, oxcep,—" she paused, flushed, and cast down her eyes, then went on firmly, but with evident effort, "oxcep,—you tell me to clean, vat you call dose?—ach,—I rememper, spit-toon. I try dot vonce, und I neffer vill again for nobodies."

I assured her that trial came to no one under our roof, and her face cleared then sobered again. "Und my ree-lig-on,—I hass to tend 'em! But I vill go to early mass. You see," here her voice became argumentative, "Cattolicks dey ain't like Protestants, dey mus' tend to dere ree-lig-ons."

Assured upon this point she promised to come the next morning, and come she did. Before noon we discovered we had more than a mere domestic, that we had in fact a warm, loving heart in the house, ready to be our affectionate friend, and yearning to receive in turn a friend's regard. We soon found out, too, that her dearest wish was to do everything "like as Americans." She soon discovered that there is a difference in "Americans," and informed me that I said "good-morning" quite differently from her priest, who said "'good-marnin' djust like dot Irish Mary Sullivan dot work nex' door." She had never worked in a house before coming to this country, only in the fields, and before coming to us had lived with English-speaking people but two months, but her desire to learn, and her quick gratitude for being taught, made things easy. She came to us directly from a German Catholic family, whose visitors she knew, and the first time she answered the door-bell she greeted a very dignified lady in this fashion, "Yas, she pe home. Djust coom right in, und sot down in dose parlor, und pe comfortable, und I git her for you."

A gentle explanation of the manner in which Americans like to have their callers received was sufficient. She carried out my instructions to the letter.

Alone, when she was but sixteen, she had left a little hamlet near Stuttgart, for the new world, leaving behind her a step-father and a step-grandmother. To the latter she wrote dutifully, but she sometimes said touchingly after sending off one of these epistles, "Dose step-relations not like own."

She knew I detested noise, and one day I found a pair of new shoes belonging to her, half full of water. Hastily emptying them, I asked why she had so spoiled them.

"Dey queek," she answered calmly, filling them again. "You s'pose I plague you mit dose talking shoes? Vy, dey go 'queek! queek!' every step. Dot water stop 'em."

She was very tender-hearted and would give away her last penny. I once expostulated with her for giving away a pair of rubbers which she had just bought, and sorely needed.

"You see Amalia Hoffman's fader peen haffin' dose viskey fits dey has in diss country, und Amalia she say she's peen giffin' all her vages to her moder, poor ting," she explained.

"But," I urged, "Amalia has brothers to help her, and she is quite as able to go about with wet feet as you."

"Naw," Louisa shook her head. "Dose prudder do nottings. Und 'Malia's shoes vas older as mine. I git anoder pair nex' veek. Und you know, it says in de Pible as dem as giffs to de poor, giffs to de Lord." Her voice trembled, and her face twitched, as she glanced up at me. Then she added impulsively, "Naw, I djust couldn't see dose girl mit her foots all pare."

One day I found a tall, blonde young man in the kitchen. With many blushes Louisa explained it was Gusthoff Meyers from her native village, and who had been eight years "alreatty," in America, but was "kind of dumm" about speaking in English before strangers.

"Goose," as Louisa pronounced his name, rose, made his manners, and sought about desperately for English words. "I know her since she dot high," he said, spreading his hand about two feet from the floor. "I rememper ven de stork pring her."

"Goose" came regularly twice a week after this, and the wedding was to be in three months, but soon I saw Louisa was not happy, and one Sunday afternoon in September she poured out all her grief to me. "Goose pe a Lutteran, und all dose people I know here say de priest vill not marry us pecause of dot, und pecause Goose pe a free Mason. I don't care ef he won't, und I vill not ask him; I vill go to de squire, like as 'Mericans, pecause I haff nopody put Goose, und dose step-relations ofer in Chermany."

I assured her her clergyman would marry her, but he must have his bishop's permission, and knowing that she could not live without the consolations of her church, I at last persuaded her to see Father O'Dowd, though she went off shaking her head and declaring that "she didn't pelieve he would have anyting to do mit dose weddings."

Ten days after Father O'Dowd pronounced the nuptial benediction over these two; "Goose" not only came home drunk, but brought a friend with him and several bottles of whisky, and they made a night of it, and turned the two rooms that Louisa had long saved her money to help furnish, and had taken such simple pride in, into styes. She flew to see us early in the morning. She had told us "Goose" was a good machinist, and received $2.50 a day, which was true, but she had not spoken of the liquor habit. "Oh!" she cried despairingly, "he bromised me he neffer touch more as one glass o' peer ven he tired, und now I pelieve he vill pe as his fader, who vas our schoolmaster, und he drink till his hand shake so he haff to tie a handkerchief to his right hand, und put it offer his shoulder, und mit his left draw up his right hand mit de glass to his mouth. Ach! He talk to me so bleasant pefore we vas married, und bromise efferyting, und las' night he tell me—vicked, ven I try to save my goot quilt you giff me, from him und Hans Seitlers ven dey heave up. I say nottings, vor he trunk, but ven he soper I tell him I shall not go to no such a blace as he say."

Two sorry years passed. It was impossible for Louisa to be sad, if there was any possibility for her to be glad, but her face grew care-worn and lined. A little girl was born to her in a twelvemonth, and she was within two months of her second confinement when her husband had a chance to go to Pierre. He went on first, and she followed with her child and few belongings. My eyes filled as I watched the pitiful figure make its way through the cars. The lunch we had given her would last to St. Paul. She had barely enough money for a second-class passage from her husband, who had used up the savings of weeks ten days before he went away. I felt the little I could give her was not adequate, and prayed that some good Samaritan would appear if she needed help.

"Don' you worry apout me," she said at parting, "I clad to go vere dere iss no visky solt, if it pe so as you say."

It had seemed incredible to her when I told her about prohibition. "Put you iss alvays right, so meppe it iss so. Goose und me, we git along smart, if it vasn't vor dose visky."

I had taught her to write English script. She wrote well in her own language. I received a brief note telling me of her arrival. Six months later I received a letter, the labor of two weeks, and in it was the following. I change only the spelling:

"It was a long time afore we went to Dakota that I said my beads every day about Guss, and our going to this place was an answer, for it is just as you say, there is prohibition. Sometime somebody comes from some place and gives Guss a drink, but not a whole bottle, and we are saved, and have begun to buy a piece of land. And Guss was good to me more as he was when he could drink when he wanted to, and I have a warm shawl, and a new rocking chair. Every night I thank God for prohibition, and every night when Guss is not looking or knowing, I put my hand above his heart, it is when he is asleep, and I pray the blessed mother of Jesus to intercede that we may be kept here.

"Your respectful, loving friend always,
"LOUISA."

THE MAINE LAW AND AFTER IT.

BY NEAL DOW.

Your issue of the 17th of September last had an article of mine entitled "Before the Maine Law." The purpose of it was to show what the condition of Maine was as to the effect of the liquor traffic, spread abroad everywhere through the state, with no law which could possibly suppress or even embarrass it. The liquor sellers and manufacturers had everything their own way, with none to hinder or make them afraid. That was up to 1851 from the earliest time when it was a dependency of Massachusetts. But during the preceding ten years there had been a great deal of active and persistent missionary work among the people in every part of the state, the object of which was to show that the grog-shops were a great mischief to every public and private interest; more evil coming from them than from all other sources of mischief combined; at the same time, that no good to the value of a shilling came from them to nation, state, or people. This teaching had been very effective in arousing public opinion, and exciting public indignation against the saloons as an intolerable public nuisance.

I intend this article—so far as your columns will permit me to do it—as a complement to that of the 17th of September and to show as briefly as I can what the actual results of prohibition have been and are, down to the present time. Maine was Democratic at the time, as it had been for many years before. The party was then as ever since and now, the staunch, reliable friend of the grog-shops. There was a Democratic governor personally opposed to prohibition; a Democratic legislature with a Democratic President of the Senate and Democratic Speaker of the House, and all the surroundings and influences about the State House were of the same stamp. Was there ever an enterprise more forlorn than was the attempt to obtain prohibition from such a body of men? But this was the way of it.

From the preceding legislature we had endeavored to obtain a law against the grog-shops but were beaten by a vote of two to one. At the ensuing election we defeated almost every man of them who had voted against us. Cumberland county, in which I live, was the strongest Democratic stronghold in the state. Its four Senators were renominated, three of them, lawyers, had voted against us, one of them, Farmer Skillings, had voted for us. Him we reëlected triumphantly while we defeated the others in a most humiliating manner. Cumberland county was the Democratic "star in the east," known as such throughout the country because it was the only county in Maine which had chosen an elector for Jackson. The defeat of the entire Democratic ticket here upon the prohibition issue made a profound impression upon the politicians throughout the state, as did the municipal election in the city of Portland shortly before the meeting of the legislature. At that election the entire city government with one exception—an alderman—were temperance men chosen on that issue. The Mayor elect was a radical of the radicals—more obnoxious to the rummies, both Whig and Democrat, than all the others combined. His election over the most intense opposition was regarded as a special sign of the times. Portland was the chief city in the state and was supposed to be the headquarters of the rum influence, both Whig and Democratic. The overthrow of that influence in Cumberland county and in Portland, so easily and so thoroughly done, was regarded by rum politicians as a handwriting upon the wall, a special warning to them.

This Democratic legislature was in the last week of its session, May, 1851. It was to adjourn finally on Saturday, the 31st. Warned of this by a friend, a representative from Portland—Henry Carter, now Judge Carter, of Haverhill, Massachusetts—the Mayor went to Augusta on Thursday with the Maine Law in embryo in his pocket, and on Friday had a public hearing before the legislature in the Representatives' Hall, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. A special joint committee had been appointed to hear the argument, of which Noah Smith, of Calais, was chairman, a radical enemy of the grog-shops—a Whig. All the members of this committee were suggested by the Mayor to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, and were accepted by them.

—a committee packed in the highest interest of the state and people, and not in the way common in such cases, in the interest of the liquor traffic, as the thing is now managed in Congress.

At the close of the hearing, Mr. Smith received the bill, handed to him by the Mayor, and said to the committee, then standing: "I propose that we accept and report this bill precisely as it is; what do you say?" The answer was, unanimously, "yes." Then turning to the Mayor Mr. Smith said: "Unless the bill is printed to-night, and upon the desks of the members to-morrow morning it cannot pass this session." The Mayor replied that he would take that matter upon himself, and it was accomplished. On the next day, Saturday, the bill, without any change whatever, was passed through all its stages, to be enacted by a vote of eighty-six to forty in the House and eighteen to ten in the Senate—a Democratic legislature!

During all this time the Mayor did not lose sight of the bill. It was he who carried it from the House to the Senate and from the Senate to the House several times each way, and it was he who carried it to the engrossing clerks. The reason for this was that the bill should not disappear accidentally or otherwise, as obnoxious bills sometimes do, and are thus defeated for the time. There was a Senator from a wild eastern county, a famous Democratic politician, a village rumseller, wholesale and retail, who strove to defeat the measure, by declaring that it was the Lord Mayor of Portland only who was pushing it, and who had come to Augusta to coerce the legislature to do his will; and he was not disposed to yield to him.

A curious incident occurred at the final passage of the bill to be enacted which raised a laugh at the time. A large number of engrossed bills, each in a separate roll, were on the speaker's desk to go through the mere formality of enactment; the Mayor sat by the speaker's side. Each bill was marked with its title upon the outside. The speaker took several bills one by one reading its title, then said: "These bills having had three several readings, and having been passed to be engrossed are now reported as correctly engrossed; shall they pass to be enacted? 'Tis a vote." By and by he took up a bill and quickly laid it aside when he saw its mark; I knew what bill it was! When he had no other bill before him but this he took it up and after a glance or two about the hall, as if to appeal for help from some rummy member, he read very deliberately with significant pauses between the words:

"An act for the suppression of drinking houses and tippling shops: this bill having had three several readings and passed to be engrossed, and now reported as correctly engrossed . . . is it your pleasure . . . that—it—now—pass—to—be—enacted?" then looking all over the hall, appealingly and piteously, after some delay, he added: "It is a vote." The Mayor said, so as to be heard by many who were near: "And very sorry are you to be obliged to declare it a vote!" The Act, to take effect on its approval by the governor, was signed on Monday the 2d of June. The governor's chamber was crowded with Democratic politicians and legislators begging him to veto the bill. The governor with the pen in his hand said: "Gentlemen, my views of the wisdom and policy of this measure are of no moment; the people have indicated in many ways (by their petitions and their votes) that they want this bill to become law, and in obedience to their will I sign it;" as he did then and there.

There are many intelligent people who do not believe in the intervention of Providence in the affairs of men; I am not one of them. How else can we account for the adoption of this extraordinary measure by such a legislature? The liquor traffic was a great industry all over the civilized world, recognized and protected by law everywhere. "Its potentiality of wealth was beyond the dreams of avarice." In many parts of the world and of our country, most respectable men were engaged in the trade—first-class merchants, church members, deacons; and such men as in England are made over from brewers and distillers into Peers of the realm. "Barons of Bung," the temperance men irreverently call them. The trade was much larger and far more influential than any other, as it is now in every civilized country except in three or four states of our union, of which Maine is chief. Far more money is spent in it by the people than in any other department of trade. Food, clothing, education, wool, cotton, iron, none of them absorb so much of the wages of industry and the profits of business as does this trade in strong drink. It controls the governments of the nations absolutely, so far as its interests are involved. Statesmen from the highest to the lowest bow low before it, hat in hand, and hasten to do its bidding, fearing its resentment far more than God's displeasure.

In one day the legislature of Maine struck down and outlawed this tremendous sin, shame and crime; at that time not recognized as such except in Maine. Everywhere else it was almost omnipotent; the men who ostensibly governed our nation, our states, and our cities were eager to promote its interests in order to win its favor, and secure its vote; but in one day in Maine, it was put under the ban of the law as a thing unfit to be, as in deadly hostility to every interest of nation, state and people. Its stock in trade was everywhere to be seized, confiscated and destroyed as a thing engendering pestilence, and spreading deadly disease among the people. It was declared not to be property by a distinct provision that "no action shall be had in, or maintained in any court in this state for the recovery of intoxicating liquor intended for sale in violation of law, nor for the value thereof." Men like those of whom England makes Peers, whom New Hampshire sends to Congress, in Maine are sent to jail. Such was the law which passed the Democratic legislature of Maine in one day, overthrowing the policy of the whole civilized world which had existed without a break for many centuries. Everywhere the liquor traffic was established by law as a good thing; but in Maine, in one day it was stripped of its prestige, of all claim to toleration, and was put into the category of gambling houses, brothels, robbery and piracy. Desperate attempts were made to kill the bill by amendments, but no amendment was suffered. It was driven through the legislature—intensely Democratic—in one and the same day; that extraordinary measure was signed by the president of the Senate, and speaker of the House before adjournment. It is a great joy to me to recognize the hand of God in that wonderful work which seems to me to give assurance that it will go on until our nation and the civilized world will be redeemed from an evil from which comes far more mischief than from all other sources of evil combined.

On his return from Augusta, after the approval of the Maine law by the governor, the mayor met in the street a friend who was a great importer of molasses for the distilleries. He said:

"I am very glad that your law has been enacted, though it will destroy my business."

"How is that? I had not thought of it; I think you are mistaken."

"No, I'm not mistaken; your law sweeps away the distilleries and every other manufacture of intoxicating liquors, and my molasses all goes to the distilleries. I do not complain; it's a good thing and I am heartily glad of it."

"But you are mistaken as to the effect of the law upon your trade. Two quarts of molasses will now go into the families of the people, as an article of food and luxury, for every quart which was consumed before in the shape of New England rum."

Within the year he told the Mayor that his prediction as to the effect of prohibition had been verified, for his business had never before been so extensive and so successful as it had become since the enactment of the law. The distilleries were closed, and the people bought far more molasses, and far less rum.

Immediately on his return from Augusta, the Mayor, through the newspapers, issued a proclamation to the rumsellers, in which he said:

"By the law recently enacted by the legislature entitled, 'An Act for the Suppression of Drinking Houses and Tippling Shops,' all your stocks in trade are liable at any moment to be seized, confiscated and destroyed. The law was enacted suddenly, without notice of any kind to the people of its coming, thus taking you by surprise with large values on your hands for which all sale in this state is absolutely cut off. A reasonable time will therefore be conceded to you in which to send off your liquors to other states or countries whose government permit their sale to the people."

The immediate result of this notice was a speedy hegira of great quantities of liquors of all kinds to the wharves and railway stations seeking places of safety beyond the jurisdiction of Maine. The streets were crowded with carts and drays of many fashions, loaded with rum, gin, brandy, wines, cordials, shaking from their wheels the dust of Portland and Maine! This was a glorious sight to the friends of temperance and good order; a triumphal procession; but one of anger and humiliation to people of the other sort.

But liquors continued for a time to be brought into town by sea and by land; it was promptly seized by the police, part of the force being at every wharf landing and at every railway station. Large quantities had accumulated; it was stored in the police station, filling the cells and corridors previously occupied by drunken men and women. In the area, paved with brick, was a large grating communicating with the harbor through a sewer. A day of execution came and with it a crowd of witnesses. The Board of Foreign Missions was in session here at the time; a great many of its members were present. A spectator said to the Mayor:

"What a shame that is!"

"What is the shame?"

"Such a destruction of property!"

"Don't you see, my friend, that it is very much as it was before when it went into the gutter, drunkards and all; now it goes alone to the gutter and the drunkards are sober men. Isn't that a better way?"

He made no reply and went off sulkily when the Mayor said: "Would you drink it? That's the worst use to make of it?"

It will require at least one more article to tell your readers about the "After It" of the Maine Law.

HEREDITY AGAIN.

BY T. D. CROTHERS, M. D.

A very startling illustration of the power of heredity has recently come under my observation. Not long ago the financial circles of a large city were shocked to find that a noted bank president had proved a defaulter. For years he had conducted a system of swindling and perjury that was a matter of astonishment to all. He was a temperate man, and held a high place in both society and church, was liberal and had many noble qualities of character.

All sorts of theories were offered to explain his conduct, and many clergymen made this case an example to show the deceitfulness of the human heart. No one thought of tracing back his history for the causes of this fall, along the line of heredity. The fact that he had a praying mother and a reputable father seemed sufficient. Something was wrong; there must be some causes farther back to explain this terrible fall. This man was well, and possessed of excellent business judgment; he was not miserly, the ordinary motives of selfishness and grasping for money could not obtain in his case. He was not ignorant of business, and could have clearly foreseen the end of all such wrongs.

A study of his heredity brought out the following facts: His father came from a neurotic and gifted family in which insanity and all forms of eccentricity had existed for a long time. He was left a fortune which was soon lost in a wild course of dissipation, leaving him a chronic inebriate. He married and after a few years of irregular drinking, signed the pledge and became a temperance lecturer and revival exhorter. He worked as a clerk, but did not command respect in private life regarding his honesty, although he passed as a very religious man. He was poor and seemed to be grasping and dishonest in little things which he hoped would not be noticed. He died suddenly and left several life insurance policies which were disputed for various alleged frauds.

His only son was born before he signed the pledge. This man's wife, the mother of the bank president, came from a family of sailors and fishermen, who were all moderate or occasional excessive drinkers. She was nervous, emotional and a deeply religious woman, who brought up her son in the strictest principles of the Christian faith.

He was very devoted to her and joined the church when young, and until her death held daily prayers in her room. He began as a clerk in a banking house early in life, and rose steadily to the eminence from which he fell. He became wealthy, married an excellent woman with more wealth, and lived externally a very reputable, temperate life.

From these facts the following seems clear. He inherited from his father a degree of moral palsy, or a defective consciousness of right and wrong. While he recognized honesty and duty in the abstract in others, he was blind to its practical obligations in his own case. He was color blind in a figurative sense, and circumstances kept him from revealing this condition. It was a defective brain development which no amount of training could change, and like other latent degenerations, awaited some particular exciting causes to spring into activity. His father as an inebriate would naturally suffer from palsy of the higher brain centers, and no matter what he was originally, would have a defective conception of right and wrong. This was apparent in his later life, and its transmission to his son would be a certainty, whether recognized or not. If the son had been brought up differently, and exposed to drink temptations, he would most naturally have become an inebriate. If he had lived in a different position where no responsibilities of strict integrity had been imposed, he would have no doubt escaped and passed for an excellent man.

It is the same old story that is repeatedly heard in maritime circles. The ship goes to sea with a concealed defect, which appears at an unexpected moment and under conditions of great strain, followed by a wreck. In the same manner every inebriate and moderate drinker transmits to his children a hidden defect which will appear somewhere, particularly if exposed to a peculiar train of exciting causes. It may not be inebriety; it may not appear in the next generation, and it may be averted by marriage with a stronger, healthier race.

This double life and dishonest conduct had a physical basis, and pointed to a defective brain. This fact does not lessen the responsibility, but only changes it. His willfulness becomes weakness and incompetency, and instead of punishment he needs the care and protection of others. He has shown his incapacity to act honestly and independently. The officials are to be blamed for placing a man with this heredity in such a position.

Heredity from inebriate parents does not always result in drinking children. Other, and often more serious defects break out. Criminality of all degrees, pauperism, including prostitution, and all forms of complex insanities, with every grade of mental weakness down to idiocy and extinction of the race, are the common sequences.

It is not a matter of accident or chance that this man proved to be a defaulter. The same laws of cause and effect are in operation here as elsewhere. The power of prayer and good training may do much to control the diseased tendencies, but behind this comes the larger truth, "freedom from temptation." The boy or girl who has an alcoholic heritage should not be exposed to the strains and drains of sharp, competitive life. They are unfitted and will break down early in some way. Every advance of science confirms the suspicion that a large part of the crime and disease of the present begins in the sins of the fathers. From this point the possibility of committing the unpardonable sin in crippling future generations assumes a terrible magnitude.

The reformed inebriate who gives his time and energy to help others is making atonement in a small degree for the wrongs and sins he has committed. No greater truism was ever uttered, than that the iniquity of the fathers is visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.

Correspondence.

FROM OUR PARIS CORRESPONDENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The American white-ribbon wearer who comes to Paris expecting to study the temperance question has a peculiar task before her. She sees drinking everywhere, but very little drunkenness. After two months in Paris, much of which time has been spent on the street, I can count on my fingers all the drunken men I have seen. Perhaps I would be safe in saying that I could count on my fingers, also, all the men I have seen who had not been drinking. The consumption of wine, beer, and alcohol is enormous. It is sold at all hotels, cafés, and restaurants. The milk-woman from whom you get your café-au-lait and rolls in the morning has a shelf of wines, beers, brandies, and absinthe. In the corner of the carbon shop where you go for your bag of coal and bundle of fagots you will find a cupboard of cheap drinks. Every grocery has pyramids of wine and whisky bottles to match those of canned fruits and pickles.

It is drunk with the greatest freedom. No matter how small the shop, it furnishes slender little round stands and light chairs for its customers to use on the sidewalk. No matter how narrow the sidewalk the customer ordinarily goes out there to drink his wine. Many a time when reconnoitering in the old and narrow passages of Paris have I been obliged to take to the driveway because the narrow sidewalk was occupied by the chairs and tables of a tiny restaurant. So long as the weather permits this practice continues.

In the poorer parts of the city whole families frequently pass their evenings in the saloons. With a company of McAll mission workers I visited one night the streets of Ivry, a low quarter of Paris. In nearly all the cafés we found these family groups, but there was no disturbance, no signs of drunkenness. They all had their beer mugs or petits verres before them, but were quiet and well-behaved.

How much wine and liquor are drunk in Paris in a year it is impossible to say, even with the superior Parisian statistics before one. Every gill brought into the city is taxed. The octroi, as the tax is called, shows that in 1888 the total amount of drinks consumed was 58,883,217.49 hectolitres. In 1889 the octroi on all the imports of the city amounted to $30,154,881.02. Of this $12,815,036.75 came from alcohol and other drinks. This tax, however, cannot be considered an exact or sufficient figure. Smuggling is one of the great industries of Paris. The smuggler concerns himself with very little but drinks.

In spite of the greatest watchfulness on the part of custom house officers fraud thrives. Tall hats are furnished with false crowns which will hold a pint or more. Gun barrels are used as bottles; men go out lean and come in round as Falstaff, padded with tin or skin wine flasks. The report in the French Budget for 1892, now before the Chamber, deals facetiously with the smuggling describing how a coffin was allowed to pass the gates which contained instead of a corpse, several hectolitres of wine, and how a stately lackey riding behind his master turned out to be a zinc wine keg in human form. While this goes on no accurate figure of the consumption of Paris can be furnished.

The effects are most difficult to estimate. They are much more subtle and hidden than in America. Reeling, brawling crowds are rare. Dissipated, haggard faces are not common in Paris. Unquestionably most of the drinking is moderate. There are no statistics which show the relation between crime and drunkenness in France; it is not possible to know when jury and tribunal take it into consideration. There is a law, what is known as la loi du 23 Janvier, 1873, which aims at the suppression of drunkenness. In the first fifteen years after its passage, 1,075,591 applications were made in all France. The number decreased each year. This would be hopeful did not Maurice Block, the great popular statistician of France, warn us that it was not less drinking, but less severity in applying the law, which caused the decrease. It has been estimated that one twentieth of the violent deaths of the country can be traced to alcohol, and one tenth of the suicides.

It is not figures which make the effects of liquor in France alarming. It is features for which figures cannot be given. One of the most serious and obvious of these is the amount of absinthe drunk. One cannot pass a restaurant without seeing the greenish-white drink; especially is it used by women. The effects of absinthe on the body are disgusting enough, but its deadening, debasing effect on the moral sense is a thousand fold worse. With the women of Paris drinking absinthe in quantities there is reason enough for temperance agitation. Alcoholism is steadily increasing among women in France, especially among the lower classes. One of the very few temperance publications which circulate here is on this very subject, La femme et l' Alcoolisme. M. Devoisins, the author, is a physician. He draws his conclusions largely from what he has seen in his practice, and describes a state of things which, if not checked, must produce disastrous effects on future generations.

There are other features more forcible even to the thoughtful. Is there not a direct connection between the astonishing consumption of wine and alcohol, and the immorality, the scoffing, the flippancy of Paris? Would the café-chantant flourish as it does in Paris if she drank less? May not the shocking figures for illegitimacy—twenty per cent of the births is 1887—have a relation to the figures of wine consumption? May they not explain why obscene pictures and vulgar reading stare one in the face at every newspaper kiosque, and in many of the best photograph shops and book stalls? Is there not a connection between them and that pitiful, common sight in Paris—prostitutes seeking their victims?

In my mind there is no doubt but what is called the "peculiar life" of Paris is nourished and incited by the wine she drinks. She is never brutal in her drinking. We are that in America, but she weakens her conscience and her reason by her "moderate drinking."

And what is done to correct these evils? That I must leave until another letter. IDA M. TARBELL.

Paris.

FROM OUR WORLD'S FAIR CORRESPONDENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is at last made public that the sale of liquors will probably be permitted on the Fair grounds. The directors advise the members of the press to say nothing about it. The secretary of the Ways and Means Committee admits that the Exposition will get a percentage of the receipts, but says the newspapers had better not publish the fact, "as it might make trouble." President Baker, assuming a slightly different attitude, assures the reporter that "it's old anyway, too late for news now, and to have the papers take it up would cause annoyance and harm the Exposition. Saloons would not be tolerated, but restaurants will furnish liquors." In other words every rumshop in the Exposition will have to adorn itself with some sort of lunch counter. The bill of fare will be a necessary coupon of the dram-shop license certificate.

Evidently they think that in secrecy is strength. Their hope lay in getting the matter quietly before the national commission for approval without provoking any agitation. But the hare is loose and every moral or religious influence in the land should give chase. It is not "too late to say anything." Only the local directory has consented to bargaining away the conditions of decency "for a consideration," and some of its members deny that the action is final with them, but "it is understood that liquors will be sold." Is it not possible for order-loving men and women to make it understood that a respectable number of people do not take it for granted that the great memorial of our national growth and grandeur will, in morale, fall below the standard of a county fair?

"Going to the World's Fair" will be the first going away from home for hundreds of young men and women. It is of world-wide importance that the place be wholesome in every way. Those who, for a consideration, would make it an international beer garden anticipated trouble if their purpose should become known. May they not be disappointed.

Summer and winter, day and night are alike at the Fair grounds, where two thousand four hundred men are continually at work. Art and science queen it over labor in these days. For example: when Chief Architect Burnham wants to know just the state of progress of any building, instead of going to the site to wade through sand, stumble over boards, upset the white-wash bucket, getting after all an imperfect and dismal view, he calls for his big album in which an expert artist keeps photographic record of the growth of every building. In his office chair, with a bunch of roses on his desk, he learns the exact stage of construction.

Mr. Arnold, the photographer, has spent years in making studies of European architecture, at the same time collecting the finest views of European cities, of which he is now preparing lantern-slide negatives for stereopticon illustrations of a course of free lectures he purposes giving to the workingmen of Jackson Park, who are off duty by turns during the evening. Altar-piece and shrine may have fallen into disuse, but who shall say that it is not true in this as in past ages, that the best work of every art is done unto God?

The Forestry Building, where the natural woods of the country will be displayed in both finished and unfinished state, is going together with hickory pins, not a nail, bolt or spike being used. The building is 500 by 300 feet, and probably the largest ever built without the use of metal fastenings.

The Woman's Building, however, continues to be the "pet" of the grounds. I forgot to say in my last letter that the United States standard number four flag, hoisted upon this building, was the first national colors displayed. American women are receiving most encouraging recognition in the realm of art, and it is a notable fact that the prizes have been drawn by young women. Boston boasts the architect; Miss Hayden is now upon the site overlooking the execution of her plans. A young Southern girl models the caryatides, while the contract for design and execution of models for the attic cornice and pediment is awarded Miss Alice Rideout, of San Francisco, said to be yet in her teens. Bright girls are not peculiar to any particular section. It is rumored that a young Chicago poetess will write the poem for the opening ceremonies. Miss Rideout's groups are nobly conceived. Designer-in-Chief Atwood, speaking for the committee of awards, commends them as remarkable for originality of design and technical skill, and expresses the gratification of the committee at having secured them. There are three groups, representing respectively, Woman's Virtues, Woman's Place in History, and Woman as the Genius of Civilization.

In the first group woman's virtue is illustrated by a slender central figure ten feet in height, with upturned face and wings. On her left is sweet Charity garbed as a nun, laying her jewels upon the altar. On the right, beautiful Maternity holds her babe to her breast with one arm, while she throws the other round a dimpled, bare-backed boy clinging to her skirts.

As the Spirit of Civilization, woman appears descending bearing the torch of wisdom. The figure at her right shows the modern student and littérateur, pen in hand, looking steadily upward, while on her left is that of a "female" in the darkness of barbarism, chained, groping, downcast, not lifting so much as her eyes toward heaven.

The third group, designed for a gable panel, is historic of woman's work. The central figure is majestic, standing in the foreground of scientific and religious effort, bearing in one hand a myrtle wreath, in the other the scales of justice and a Bible as guide-book. Her head is crowned with Schiller's celestial roses. Five other figures represent woman in literature, in art, as benefactor and reformer, as protector of children and youth from cruelty and temptation; and finally as the center of a sub-group of three, father, mother and child—where she personates the genius of home.

Miss Emma Sickles, lately returned from a tour in the Northwest, where as chairman of the Woman's Branch on American Indian Ethnology she has been arranging for an Indian exhibit, describes the noble first settlers as coy about coming themselves, although they gave her many rare and beautiful samples of their work.

"They do not want to come at all if they are to come as cattle to be stared at for so much a stare," says Miss Sickles. She urges that they be recognized as a race, to show their productions and costumes as the Chinese and Japanese do—not as an "exhibit." In no other way can the world see and learn of the marvelous store of curiosities, legends and lore of the people to whom Columbus' great discovery meant more perhaps than to all the rest of the world. They are chary, too, about having their names translated. A fiery young chief doesn't mind being called Tashurkakokepopi, but to be addressed as Young-man-afraid-of-his-horses, breaks his spirit. Miss Sickles brings with her the ghost belt and beads from the grave of the last Sioux brave laid away upon a scaffold, according to the ancient custom. She has also secured thirty-eight verses of the song chanted by the Indians in the ghost dances of last year. The melody is weird, beautiful and expressive.

One of the latest and most interesting loans to the archæological department is that made by the Pope, of the first map of America, upon which Diego Ribero worked for more than thirty years. It has never before crossed the Atlantic, and its transit will be guarded with great care, as it is one of the treasures of the Vatican. Upon it Pope Alexander VI. drew the famous bi-secting line dividing North America between Spain and Portugal, and, in his mind, settled their claims for all time. It was an important pen stroke, even now apparent upon the map of South America, for by it Cuba and Porto Rico became Spanish provinces and have remained so until the present, while Brazil, until very lately, paid tribute to Portugal.

In the space allotted it is impossible to even mention all or any large numbers of the palaces rising to receive the choicest products of two hemispheres. I can only try to select the items of most interest to THE UNION SIGNAL readers. In fact, a city is building there, all its parts going up harmoniously together on the seven hundred acres constituting the site. Much thought is given to perfecting the sewerage and water supply, if possible to make that the most healthful spot in the city. Typhoid fever has been the scourge of every great exposition, and Chicago will win laurels if she succeeds in sanitary arrangements to avoid it. B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

MISSISSIPPI APPRECIATES MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The departure of Mrs. Kells was so hurried and unexpected, the unions of the state were not afforded an opportunity of expressing the earnest "God-speed" which was affectionately felt and would be heartsomely extended to her on any life-way ordained for her faithful steps to follow.

It is just that she should know that the air of her native heath grew dense with sighs when it was known that her footsteps had grown silent upon our shores, and that the golden link of her gracious presence had fallen from the chain of precious associations encircling "the first works" of temperance in this state.

The full loss of her influence and services can only be computed by the higher Mathematics of Time. Her rare gift of imparting earnestness, coupled with grand executive ability, made her a veritable pillar of strength in the state work; besides there are tones of exquisite tenderness in her flute-like voice that have wondrous power to awaken responsive echoes on the harps of other lives, which is of priceless value in the advocacy of any cause.

Her able management of The White Ribbon was a source of pride and gratification to her friends, and a subject of most favorable comment by many pronouncedly unfriendly to the principles she upheld.

Throughout a long, loyal and laborious service in the cause of temperance in this state, Mrs. Kells fully verified the Scriptural proverb: "A gracious woman retaineth honor," for though small of stature, there is a subtle something about her that inspires the sense of looking upward.

To the close friends who love her with unutterable tenderness, there has come a bereavement like that of a white rose being uprooted and torn from their lives, whose clinging branches, snowy blossoms and fragrant presence were wont to make hallowed haunts for tired hearts, and with every thought of her will ascend the prayer that God will give His angels charge over her to keep her in all her ways. MISSISSIPPI.

OPIUM—PROGRESS IN THE FIGHT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You kindly published my recent letter upon "Present Aspect of the Opium Warfare." Allow me to correct an error in its contents where you say the Anti-Opium News furnished the names of nearly 3,000 PETITIONERS presented from certain parts of England on a single day set.

You should have stated 2,000 petitions were sent in on a single day, which is a distinction with a considerable difference on the right side of this great battle of the Lord against the mighty.

Since the date of that letter there has been a greatly increased activity in India, China and Burmah, and many have come to the front to contend nobly for this cause of righteousness from all creeds and castes. Local anti-opium associations have been organized, lectures have been delivered in Madras, Poona, Lucknow, Calcutta and other large cities; more, too, are promised.

Leading men who know the iniquity and terrible ravages of the foe speak with force and vigor against the base traffic.

Perhaps one of the most hopeful signs of the movement in connection with the petition to Parliament, which is still being signed by thousands throughout the country, is the fact that the miserable opium slaves themselves have come forward to sign for abolition.

The great revenue cry raised by the defenders of this vice and immorality, has been ably met by a recent pamphlet from the pen of Mr. Robert Brown of Glasgow, who has proved clear to demonstration that fresh taxation would not be required to make up any temporary deficit of revenue arising from stopping of the production and sale of the drug. He pleads mightily for retrenchment in all departments of the government's service; one, which by fair exposure, he has proved to be one of the most extravagant in the world. Should any of your readers wish the most recent and reliable information upon this monster iniquity, the opium traffic, let them address WALLACE J. GLADWIN, Sec.

31 Paternoster Sq., care Dyer Bros., London, England.

President's Column.

In her new capacity of editor, Lady Henry Somerset will give us the world's outlook, not on white ribbon lines so much as in the larger sense that her wide knowledge of the world implies. There is hardly a great character in Europe with whom she has not some personal acquaintance, and at the earnest request of her present editorial partner, she will, with the strength and delicacy for which her style is already well known among us, write some of her "Recollections of noted men and women." The first of these sketches will appear next week.

***

Oliver Wendell Holmes says in his sententious fashion,

"Leave what you've done for what you've got to do,
Don't be consistent but be simply true."

In pursuance of this design it behooves me to mention that I find myself unable to keep my word given two years since about not praising folks. The promise was made in entire good faith and the effort was honestly—even if gaspingly!—put forth. But it has fallen to me in life to be surrounded by beings of such an order that my bump of admiration constantly develops and demands the right to "wreak itself upon expression"—mildly, at least. In brief, the non-praising coat is too straight for me, but, as charitable-minded Bessie Gordon long ago said in these columns, "I'll use only one adjective henceforth, where three were formerly driven tandem!"

***

For a year or two, having been so much more at home than usual, the practical problems of life have, for me, centered in the question, "How can I be driven from my chair at the big desk in the Den and made to go out doors for air, exercise and variety, instead of sitting here from morning till night answering letters?" Every one in the inner circle of household friends tried to compel an improvement, but the combination of age, occupation and vis inertia was too strong for their kind hearts. None bewailed the situation more than our precious Yolande Ames. How little did she dream, and how little did the elder sister to whom she was so dear, that the emergency in which we are would drive me from my retreat into the rush of city streets and the unenviable variety of an editor's career.

***

Some good people who say that the world is getting worse, and thereby distress the souls of optimistic folk, do not really mean anything that separates them widely from said optimists. For instance, the Rev. Dr. Gordon, of Boston, who represents what has been wrongly called the pessimistic view, told me in talking the subject over informally, that he would illustrate his position in this wise: "Our forefathers in New England illumined their log cabins with a tallow dip. It gave a dim light and cast a shadow as flimsy. Later on, the hardy whalers brought home sperm oil. It gave a brighter light, but cast a darker shadow. Still later, gas was used as a substitute for sperm oil. It gave a brilliant light, but cast a shadow proportionately deep. Last of all has come electricity. It dazzles by its radiance; the eye cannot gaze upon it with impunity, but its shadow is black as ink. So, as the light of God penetrates the human heart and transfuses our civilization, it gleams more brightly from age to age, and because of this very fact the wickedness of the world seems more appalling. For instance, the wickedness of London, and the ingenuity of French vice, indicates an intricacy of the thinking faculties unknown in other ages; but meanwhile the McAll Mission shines out with a beauty and radiance unknown to Paris since its earliest days, and General Booth's mission to the slums of London is a growing glory. The Paris mission has gathered to its fold more warm, true hearts than ever rallied to the standard of Christ in that city of electric light and Cimmerian gloom, and darkest London begins to send forth light. The fact is that the wheat and the tares shall grow side by side until the harvest but the wheat is always gaining on the tares."

***

There are two books that have so strongly impressed me by their value in our work that I must specially indicate them to our women. The first is "A Song of Life," by Miss Moreland, published by Houghton & Mifflin. It seems to me that every mother should carefully study this pure and beautiful little volume, with its unique illustrations from the vegetable and animal kingdoms. If she will do so, it will become easy for her to speak to her little people in answer to the questions they naturally ask, and which are often replied to by a stupid, silencing process that breaks confidence between parents and children, or else are so answered as to do positive harm. A true kindergartner has written this book, and we know how delicate and ingenious those blessed women are.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Yolande! at the mention of that name one of the fairest and dearest faces I have ever looked upon on earth comes before me. I see eyes, honest, large and loving, once looked into you could never doubt the owner. And the lips so sensitive, tender and tremulous, what a world of sweetness gathered about them. Who could resist her pleadings—when such lips spoke she won all hearts. Her aim was always high, and every undertaking succeeded that she enlisted in, because she gave herself unselfishly to it with such enthusiasm and honest, earnest work that success was inevitable. A character more rounded and beautiful I have never known. She was ripe for the heavenly home.

Sweet young comrade! the tears rush unbidden to my eyes as I think of the poverty of earth without you—but surely heaven seems richer, nearer, brighter and more to be desired for your going. Yolande Ames, at thirty, had lived longer and accomplished more than most women at three score and ten. We must remember that high aim, not years, is living. Her life and memory should be kept in loving remembrance by our young women. Could not our Y's each send in a small sum toward a memorial window in Willard Hall to her memory? I would have upon it her glorified face rising triumphant above the clouds of earth—with cherub forms waiting to receive her.

***

We would like to see carved on the marble panels of Willard Hall the name of every Y union in the land. What is to hinder? Some certainly are going to have their names recorded there.

Mrs. Jessie Church sends $100 for the Y's of Belvidere, Ill. She writes, "We hope it is not too late to have our names inscribed in the beautiful Temple built through woman's prayer and work. We are glad to read how rapidly the work is progressing and add our little mite with our prayers for its completion."

The Y's of Moorestown, N. J., send $21. The Duluth, Minn., Y. W. C. T. U. have pledged one hundred dollars and send an installment of $22.20 towards it.

These stirring Y unions in Pennsylvania send the following amounts: Tionesta, $3; Grove City, $10; Pardo, $2. The Y's of Grand Crossing, Ill., send $28 on their pledge of one hundred. The Scio, N. J., Y's send $3. The Carthage, Mo., Y's send $1. The Y's of Fairfield, Neb., send $5, and $5 comes from the Effingham, Ill., Y's.

***

From the twelfth district of Michigan comes $36.35; this completes their pledge of $100. They wish to have Mrs. Campbell's name carved on the tablet; she was their president but has now left the district. The W. C. T. U., of Kalamazoo, Mich., send $15 to be credited towards their hundred dollar pledge. It seems that by mistake we credited $12 to the Savannah union when it should have been credited to the Fayette, Mo., W. C. T. U., on their hundred dollar pledge. Mrs. S. K. Huse sends $50 which completes the hundred dollar pledge of the Caledonia county, Vt., W. C. T. U. The Northfield, Minn. W. C. T. U., also send $50 which completes their hundred dollar pledge. The Wabasha, Minn., union send $11.37 on their pledge. Miss A. M. Henderson sends sums less than ten dollars from several unions in Minnesota which will be found in Miss Pugh's report. The Minnesota unions are certainly coming up grandly to aid in the building of the Temple. Hardly a union of any importance in the state but is at work raising a hundred dollars. By some oversight it seems the North Adams, Mass., W. C. T. U., did not get credit in this column for completing their pledge of $100, which they fully paid up some time ago. Mrs. A. R. Bullock sends $90 which completes the hundred dollar pledge made by the Cambridgeboro, Pa., W. C. T. U. Mrs. D. R. Prindle, Waukesha, Wis., sends $25 from the union of that place which completes their $100 pledge.

***

We are glad so many are sending in for Baby Band lists. No better work can be done than getting the names of the little ones on these lists, thus pledging their parents to bring them up as total abstainers. Mrs. Emma Stout, of Delaware, Ohio, mother of the bright little editor of the Midget, sends a full Band of one hundred names with a check for $10. The money is to be credited to the Mrs. Trego tablet fund, which The Midget is securing in honor of Mrs. Trego. The St. Louis, Mo., Carondelet union send $10 for a full Baby Band through Mrs. J. A. Glazier. Mrs. L. P. Thompson, New Castle, Me., sends $5.80, the proceeds of a Baby Band. She writes, "This is about all I could get, as I am no longer young; past seventy-one years of age." Another aged saint, Mrs. L. J. Phelps, M. D., Syracuse, N. Y., aged 76, sends $10 for a full Band which she has secured. She also sends $5, her own donation with the names of five friends for the Record book; besides this she sends $3.75 from her mite-box. She writes, "You may be sure I want the Temple to be finished and paid for too. It is only by close economy I am able to do anything for it; my time is short. I purpose to do all I can for the good of humanity while I stay." If all our white-ribboners would follow this noble example the Temple would be paid for in a year.

***

The silver models of the Temple are about completed, they make at the same time a perfect bank and beautiful parlor ornament. We are also getting out models in the form of inkstands; they hold one ounce bottles—one for red and the other for black ink, with a place in the center for a sponge; when closed the model of the Temple is perfect. It certainly makes the most unique and beautiful inkstand we have ever seen. The price of these will be $2, and 25c. for expressage. The price of the bank is $1.50 and 25c. for expressage. We have given up making the nickel plate, as we could not finish them as we desired. The silver ones are now so finished that they will not require cleaning and will not tarnish.

149 Ashland Boulevard.

Our Children.

DOROTHY OR BARBARA—WHICH?

DOROTHY DUMP.

Dorothy Dump, Dorothy Dump,
Sat in her palace forlorn;
She ate honey, and counted her money,
And moped from morn to morn.
"What a dolorous world!" said Dorothy Dump;
"I wish I had never been born!"
Who'll be Dorothy Dump?

BARBARA BRIGHT.

Barbara Bright, Barbara Bright,
Toiled for the wretched and poor;
She gave them money and fed them with honey,
And taught them how to be truer.
"What a beautiful world!" said Barbara Bright,
"'Tis good to be living, I'm sure!"
Who'll be Barbara Bright?

—St. Nicholas.

NEVER BEGIN TO SIN.

BY H. B. J.

Oh, Loyal Temperance Legion!
Our hearts with hope are strong,
As, in every clime and region,
You rally against wrong;

For, in every baby's prattle
As in God's word, we read—
And we think it means this battle—
"A little child shall lead."

Starting out with life before you,
You cannot help but win,
If you are always brave and true,
And ne'er begin to sin.

You shall lead by always choosing,
And doing what is right,
By keeping your faith, nor losing
Your purity—so bright.

Minute by minute, day by day,
Doing the present thing;
Leaving the future far away,
Whatever it has to bring.

Meeting temptations strong, may be,
Gaining strength by the fight—
As in the storm the tender tree
Grows stronger in its might.

Do not fear the greater evils,
The deep sea depths of sin:
Stop short at the harmless revels,
Simply "Never begin."

—Selected.

BUYING GOSPEL-WATER.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

(Concluded.)

She did not stop running until she was out of sight of the "shine" of the great glass doors. Leaning against the wet brick wall nearest her she sobbed and shuddered and could think of nothing but the terrible face that had leaned towards her so spitefully, until she heard a kind voice say, "Don't cry, little girl."

Looking through her fingers she beheld a kind, big-whiskered face, red and smiling. She was so glad they were not black whiskers.

"I saw you in the saloon, and followed you, because you were alone. Are you lost?"

"Yes'm; no'm; no, sir;—I guess I don't know. I haven't thought so far yet." Katrina smiled up at the red whiskers, making an April sky of her face in the dreary autumn twilight.

"It is late for a little girl to be out alone. I want to take you home."

Then Katrina remembered her errand. "I can't go home yet, I want to find some more stores. P'raps you can tell me where they keep it, the Gospel-water, you know."

The big man looked at the little mite a moment, rather puzzled, then he brightened up,—he was so cheerful to look at out in the lonesome street. "They don't keep Gospel-water at the stores, my dear, but I know just the place where you can get all you want. Come right along with me."

They soon stopped at one of the doors that opened into the endless wall of bricks, and after climbing two flights of stairs in the dark, they came to a dim landing and found another door that had big gilt letters on it.

"What does it say?" asked Katrina.

"Welcome," replied her companion, pushing open the door and leading his little charge into a dimly lighted room, where Katrina made out a few tables and a good many chairs. There were papers on the tables and a bookcase against the wall. It was a dingy, bare, lonesome looking place.

Katrina looked up to ask another question; but the big man was not there. She was going to be frightened, when a tired-looking woman stepped out from somewhere and looked in amazement at the drenched and dripping little brown figure standing still as a statue in the middle of the room.

"Look here; do look here, quick!" she called; and some one else began to come out from somewhere; this one was a man, and after a sudden look of recognition, and a sharp squint through the uncertain light, to make sure, Katrina sprang into his arms.

"My min'ster, my min'ster!" she cried; "I never fought how you might keep it."

"Why, my dear—my dear—my dear," stammered Minister Records in bewilderment.

Katrina hurriedly told her story and out of her damp little fist dropped the precious pennies. "Will this be enough?" she asked anxiously Minister Records blinked and rubbed his eyes and put on his glasses, took them off, rubbed them, held them up to the dim light swinging in the center of the ceiling, and put them carefully on again before he said with considerable "a-heming,"

"My dear, my dear! keep your pennies; it don't cost anything, it's free." Then as if thinking to himself, he muttered, "If I did not have so many engagements for this evening." Then to Katrina, "My dear, I am going to send you home immediately with a friend of mine, and I will send the directions to your father so that he can get all the Gospel-water he wants. I hope you haven't caught your death, my dear."

A slip of paper was put into Katrina's hand, and she was put into a hack, and fifteen minutes later a little, limp, brown heap was taken out of the hack and carried up a flight of dark stairs by the Kilpatrick's door, up another flight, right into Mother Kipley's neat little sitting-room.

Mother Kipley gave one look, and throwing up her arms shrieked such a heart-broken shriek that Father Kipley, who had been sleeping himself sober all the afternoon rushed out very pale and frightened, and Katrina aroused and sitting up very straight cried out joyfully: "I've got the d'rections, farzzer."

The hackman hurriedly dumped the little brown passenger on the black haircloth sofa and disappeared. Mother gave another shriek, of joy this time, and seizing the spongy heap on the sofa proceeded to disrobe and bathe and rub until the chilled little body was all in a glow, and a very sleepy, comfortable voice murmured,

"I've got the d'rections, farzzer."

"She's wandering," said mother, and her tears fell thick on the crumpled bit of paper as she smoothed it out, and with father looking over her shoulder, read:

"Ask, and ye shall receive. Seek, and ye shall find."

The heavy eyelids lifted once more. "It's how to get the Gospel-water, you know. Now, farzzer'll be all well."

All that night they sat by Katrina's bedside and listened to her mutterings, and with fear and trembling thanked God for bringing their darling safely back to them. And before the gray light of dawn lifted the black pall that smothered the huddled brick walls, Katrina's father went to the curtained shelf where mother always kept the Bible, and carrying it to Katrina's little bed held one of the restless, hot hands over it and said solemnly:

"God give me strength never again to touch the cursed stuff."

Katrina fell into a sweet sleep. In the morning her first words were,

"Did you find some, farzzer?"

"Yes, Katrina."

A beatific little face shone from the white pillow for a moment, then another thought came.

"Farzzer, what made the wicked man's parlor so beautiful and bright, and the dear minister's so lonesome?"

Father hesitated;—"The children of darkness are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

"I don't hear that well," said Katrina in a troubled voice, "and I'm 'fraid they'd never find the 'Welcome' 'way up there in the dark."

"It means, Katrina, that the wicked folks take more trouble to shine out bright than the good folks do."

"Can't we 'splain things so the good folks will shine more?"

"We'll try, Katrina, you and mother and I."

And they did; and the "Welcome" has come out to the street door where every one can see it, and it's very bright inside and pretty and pleasant. The wicked clerk and the black-whiskered man cry "S-s-s-s-scat!" hard as ever they can, but it doesn't scare any one now, and the "Welcome parlor" grows bigger and brighter all the time.

"If you want your farzzer to be like my farzzer," says Katrina, "you must get him some d'rections for Gospel-water."

Abington, Mass.

HOW GOD TEACHES THE BIRDS.

On the Island of Java grows a tree the leaves of which are said to be a deadly poison to all venomous reptiles. The odor of the leaf is so offensive to the whole snake family that if they come near to the tree in their travels they immediately turn about and take an opposite direction.

A traveler on the Island noticed one day a peculiar fluttering and a cry of distress from a bird high above his head. Looking up, he saw a mother bird hovering round a nest of little ones in such a frightened and perplexed manner as to cause him to stop and examine into the trouble. Going around to the other side of the tree he found a large snake climbing slowly up the tree in the direction of the little nest.

It was beyond his reach; and since he could not help the little songster by dealing the death-blow, he sat down to see the result of the attack. Soon the piteous cry of the bird ceased, and he thought, "Can it be possible she has left her young to their fate, and has flown away to seek her own safety?"

No; for again he heard a fluttering of wings, and looking up saw her fly into the tree with a large leaf from this tree of poison and carefully spread it over her little ones. Then alighting on a branch high above her nest, she quietly watched the approach of her enemy. His ugly, writhing body crept slowly along, nearer and still nearer, until within a foot of the nest; then, just as he opened his mouth to take in his dainty breakfast, down he went to the ground as suddenly as though a bullet had gone through his head, and hurried off into the jungle beyond.

The little birds were unharmed; and as the mother-bird flew down and spread her wings over them, the poison leaf (poison only to the snake) fell at the feet of the traveler; and he felt, as never before, the force of the words, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? yet not one of them shall fall to the ground without your Father," for who but He who made the dear little birds could have told this one the power there was in this little leaf?—Good Words.

In the building of a heathen temple in Kioto, Japan, strong ropes were wanted with which to haul the huge timbers; so the women in the country all around cut off their long black hair, and gave it to them. This hair rope was a great sacrifice, for the Japanese women are very proud of their hair.

THE GOLDEN TEXT.

I like to think on the Lord's Day morn,
Of the hosts of children far and wide,
Their faces fair and their brows unworn,
Who blithely sit at a mother's side
Conning in tones so low and sweet,
Over and over with patient care,
Till by heart they know it, and can repeat,
The Golden Text, be it praise or prayer.

For praise or prayer it is sure to be,
The beautiful verse, a polished gem
Culled from the sacred treasury,
And fit for a royal diadem.
I like to think that the children dear
Will know that truth when their heads are gray;
That the hallowed praise their souls will cheer,
Many a time on the pilgrim way.

I sometimes muse on the Lord's Day eve,
When the Golden Texts have all been said,
And my tender fancies I like to weave
Over many a small, white bed.
The children sleep till to-morrow's morn,
Armed for whatever is coming next;
Their strength and courage alike unshorn,
And the sword they will carry, the Golden Text.

—M. E. Sangster, in the Christian Intelligencer.

The Household.

ARE THE CHILDREN SAFE?

BY MRS. V. A. LEWIS.

Thank God that my darling is resting
Safe in the bosom of God!
Praise Him for little hands folded
Under the churchyard sod!
I'm glad that on the white forehead
I've printed the last, long kiss;
Do you ask why I'm glad and thankful,
And can praise God so for this?

Last night as I sat in my window,
Looking out on the moonlit street,
My neighbor's once beautiful boy
Went by with unsteady feet;
And I remembered how I had envied
His mother, that sorrowful time,
When God sent His white-winged angel,
And leaving her boy, took mine.

But now she sits in her lonely home,
In tears, broken-hearted, and old;
While the stainless feet of my darling
Are walking the streets of gold.
Thank God for taking my child so soon,
Lest he might have gone astray!—
For none are safe while doors of sin
Stand wide as they do to-day.

I pity the children of years to come,
And mothers, who little know
What lies for them in the future
Of tears and bitterest woe:
For as long as men are licensed to sell
The horrid, accursed thing,
If we cry not aloud against it,
The curse on ourselves we shall bring.

The stamp of sin may be printed next
On your boy's pure, white brow.
Draw him ever so carefully, lovingly,
Tenderly close to your heart;
Remember the day is soon coming
When mother and son must part,
When he must go out in the busy world,
Alone, a man among men.

We all have a voice in the matter,
And you and I'll have to stand
In the last great Day of Judgment
At the bar at God's right hand,
To give account whether for or against
This evil we raised our voice;
How for God or sin, for gold or souls,
We made everlasting choice.

THE TANTRUMS OF AMANDA HUGGINS.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

"Plain John" sat on the door-step looking pensively down the street, but shaking his head as stray small boys on bicycles nodded or called.

"Not now; after tea maybe," he shouted to one of the most imperative, and as the voice came back, "What's the matter anyhow?" answered under his breath, "I'm sure I don't know, but it's mamma's tantrum day."

"What?" said an amazed voice, and John looked up seriously into a pair of bright, brown eyes belonging to Uncle Tom Barton.

"You ought to know," said John with decision, "for you're one of them."

"One of what, plain John?"

"A Barton. Hepsy says that all the Bartons have tantrums, and mamma was a Barton and so she has to live up to her name. She's got one to-day because Hepsy broke the new chocolate pot and I tore a round hole in the front of my best jacket, and her name is Huggins. She said she might have got over the other things, but whenever everything got in a twist, she always remembered that she was a Huggins and that finished them up brown. Do you feel that way, Uncle Tom?"

Uncle Tom first roared a mighty roar of laughter, and then sat down by his small nephew, who still eyed him pensively. Evidently the name weighed upon him also. In fact it had begun to weigh long ago, in the days when he had first heard the demand upon him to be an example to his little sister, and had remarked,

"If I've got to be example for her, who's going to be example for me?"

"I shall try to be," his mother said, and John, after a moment of consideration, replied,

"What kind of a tantrum can I have then, mamma?"

Amanda Barton, the daintiest, brightest, most sparkling of the galaxy of girls in the little college town in Michigan, had fallen in love tumultuously, in return for even more tumultuous suit on the part of Leander Huggins, the most brilliant fellow in his class and a rising lawyer in the town where they had settled. But even in the first ardor, Amanda had said,

"Amanda is bad enough even with Barton, but put it with Huggins and it becomes unbearable."

"I'll help you to bear that and everything else," said Leander, but she went on,

"Amanda and Leander! Leander, I insist that before we are married you appeal to the legislature and have your name changed. It is of the backwoods. With a name like Huggins there ought to be no trifling. Samuel or Daniel or John Huggins has a certain gravity and propriety, but Leander! It makes me shiver."

"Call me Lea, then, as my mother has always done."

"But that does not alter the fact of the underlying obnoxiousness. It is a serious matter, Lea; I really shake when I repeat the two."

"Don't repeat them then."

"But one can't ignore a thing. It will be the Mordecai at my gate if you do not."

"Can't you find solace in the old chief justice who struggled along under the same name and left it for me after fifty years of using it?"

"No, nor in forty chief justices. I beg you, for my sake, to change it."

"It takes money, Ama, and we have not one penny to spare."

"I'll give you Grandmother Henderson's legacy."

"And have nothing left for our new house and its furnishing? My child, the name is part of my capital."

"If you won't do it now when you most want to please me, you will never do it," Miss Barton said with dignity, and refusing to be consoled by any ordinary methods, said good-night, and left her lover to ponder what might, could, would, or should be done. Personally, he would have been ready for any change; in fact, had already said at home that if a woman gave up her name willingly he did not see why a man should not. But a few days later, just after he had announced to his fiancée that he would take the necessary steps as soon as possible, his uncle, Leander Huggins, the oldest son of the old judge had died, and his will revealed some premonition on his part of the state of things. It had been remodeled a few days before his death, and in a codicil he added, that any change of name on his nephew's part would make the legacy in the body of the will null and void.

Leander shook his head, and then, bent upon having all difficulty over as soon as possible, sat down at once and wrote every detail to Amanda.

"If you still feel so," it ended, "money has very little weight as compared with your happiness. I leave the matter entirely in your hands."

Not to be outdone in magnanimity Amanda wrote by return mail that she should make no further objection, and having posted the letter with her own hand, fled to the woods, and sitting on a log in a desirable thicket, whose acquaintance Leander and she had made together, wept for an hour over the general contrariness of things, and then wiping her eyes, went home determined to make the best of it.

She had done this faithfully for a year and more, and her husband took for granted that she had buried even the memory of it till the birth of John and the letter of congratulation from his own people.

"Hail to Leander the Fourth!" wrote his aunt Jane, and Amanda with a flush of anger cried: "Never! Hezekiah, if it must be, but he shall go nameless before I will allow another unfortunate to be saddled with that absurd combination. Plain John, plain Thomas; anything but Leander."

"You poor little thing," said the magnanimous Leander. "So that is the way you feel still, is it? Plain John let it be, and never will I hear the faintest peep of remonstrance from anybody."

He had kept his word but more literally than he meant, for as the baby grew, "Plain John" was the name to which he answered, and at last a Chinese servant transformed it into Plenjun, and Plenjun it remained.

In the meantime Mrs. Leander had become the leading spirit in the Woman's Club and half a dozen of the other organizations of the town, but even when most deferred to, gnashed her teeth as she read her own most obnoxious name at the head of this or that.

"If I were a man, an editor for instance, I should never hear the last of it," she thought. "It is lucky that women are less given to running each other."

Even this faith was shortly taken from her, for as she came out of the club one day into a beating rain, and stood for a moment concealed by her umbrella, the voice of a new-comer said as it passed her, "It takes philosophy to accept a president with such a name, doesn't it? She is charming, though."

The last clause had no power to undo the first. Mrs. Huggins dissolved in tears as she went, even when reproaching herself for her weakness, and from this time dated what Hepsy called the "tantrum days." The fact is she was overworked, nervous, and ready for an attack of nervous prostration had not sensible habits gone far to head off such disaster. But with each nerve protesting, she had fallen into an irritability as depressing to herself as to every one who faced it, and laid the responsibility more and more on the obnoxious name.

She had come down-stairs but a few moments before the appearance of her brother, and sitting down in the open window, the half-turned blind shutting off the street, had leaned her head against the casement, and shut her eyes, too unstrung to think. Then came Plenjun's little wail, and her start of astonishment as she heard the words. So it had come to this. She, who had always thought herself the synonym for good temper and forbearance was known publicly as a creature given to "tantrum days," whose family were victims of her temper. To go back to bed was all that remained, but as she rose, Tom's voice said,—Tom who had always defended her:

"Plenjun, you mustn't talk about things unless you understand. It is perfectly true that Huggins is a very unmusical, ugly name and mamma loves everything that is beautiful, and would like to have all of you as well as herself have a better one."

"Is there anything anybody could do to give us a better one?" asked Plenjun.

"Nothing whatever as matters stand."

"I don't know what that means," returned Plenjun, "but if there isn't anything that anybody can do, what's the use of making a fuss about it? But if mamma really feels bad I'll never say another word, no matter how many tantrums."

"Hush!" said Uncle Tom, for he had heard a movement, and went in just in time to miss the escaping mother who appeared at the tea table with a face so bright that Plenjun, after a moment's examination, flung his arms about her with a mighty hug.

"You're a beautiful mamma," he said. "I'm glad I belong to you."

"You shall be gladder some day," she said, and she has kept her word. To waste no thought on the thing that cannot be helped has become her daily life, and as the entire family work on this plan, there is a harmony and satisfaction so thorough that if Congress itself abolished the name of Huggins to-morrow, it is doubtful if peace could be increased.

JUST A FEW WORDS.

BY E. A. E.

In the November twilight we left home to take the cars for Philadelphia. As we sped along through the deepening darkness, I remembered how I had taken that same ride years ago, with a heart, as now, filled to the brim with eager expectation. With what delight almost with what fear, I had looked forward to seeing and hearing George Mac Donald! Would my ideal be realized—perhaps the highest I was capable of forming?

Yes—the measure was filled to overflowing. The beautiful, blessed thing hoped for came true. The memory of that evening has been a light that has not yet burned dim.

And now, again, from English shores comes a soul with its message. Will Lady Henry Somerset be as true, as earnest, as sweet and gracious as we have pictured her?

A little while, and in that crowded hall the answer came. I think no one who had the happiness to see her will forget that beautiful, womanly presence. No one who heard it will forget that thrilling, tender voice.

It seems almost strange to me, that, as I sat down to-night to try to shape my thought of her into words, my eye should have fallen, by the merest chance, upon this passage, quoted by her from George Mac Donald:

"I know, now, that it is by loving and not by being loved, that one can come nearest the soul of another. I know that love gives to him that loveth power over any soul beloved, a power that cannot be but for good."

When we were little children, we so delighted to play that we were noble. We were each one "my lady" in those happy days. With those dear old memories in our hearts, we rejoice that this lovely lady is what she is—in the boundless opportunities that come to her from wealth and station—that, in her, the poet's vision finds fulfillment; since hers with "the coronet" and "the Norman blood," is "the kind heart," the simple faith.

Sweet English rose! Surely our lives are richer for the beauty and the fragrance that she has shed upon them.

Sweet sister! Would that her words might kindle our cold hearts to love and life—might lead us to the foothills of the mount of blessed service whereon she stands.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH,
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

President—MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, 149 Ashland Boulvd., Chicago.
Treasurer—MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Elmhurst, Ill.
Secretary—MARY ALLEN WEST, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill,
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MISS ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
MRS IRA LEWIS, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Stroudwater, Me.
MRS. A. H. CHRISTENSEN, Beaufort, S. C.
MRS. L. D. CARHART, Marion, Iowa.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec,—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

For we are saved by hope.—Rom. 8: 24.

DIRECTORS' MEETING.

The regular quarterly meeting of the directors of the W. T. P. A. was held January 13, 1892. Present, Mesdames Carse, Plumb and Hagans, Misses Willard and Pugh, with Lady Henry Somerset and the business manager, Mrs. Rastall. After the announcement, last week, that Miss West was to have a six months' vacation, we doubt not our readers are on the qui vive as to how her place is to be supplied. The business committee meeting which released Miss West, prepared for the directors and THE UNION SIGNAL a grand surprise, dependent on the ratification of the directors.

Can you imagine that such fortune has come to THE UNION SIGNAL as to have Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset regularly installed as editors during Miss West's absence? Of course that ratification was only a form. But you will see the pennon at the mast-head. We do not commend or recommend these distinguished women to you, we only congratulate you. Miss Margaret A. Sudduth and Mrs. Harriet B. Kells were made office editors. Miss Jennie Stewart, of Toledo, Ohio, was appointed office assistant, which will doubtless rejoice the Y's.

The usual quarterly report of the business manager was presented, giving very much of encouragement and cheer. Interest at six per cent for the fractional part of the year was ordered to be paid to the stockholders.

The change in the form of The Young Crusader promises to give great satisfaction, and the demand for it is very large.

Miss Pugh was elected acting secretary, and Miss Willard a member of thebusiness committee, each to serve for Miss West.

Quite a number of minor matters were disposed of and the meeting adjourned. ESTHER PUGH, Acting Sec.

OUR NEW DEPARTURE.

"Let me go when I am most beloved and shall be missed the most." From girlhood she had said this—the beautiful, genial young woman whose name, after six years of delightful service, we tenderly take from this editorial page because it is carved upon a tomb. Times without number, in the six sorrowful weeks now ending, we have pitifully said in the depths of hearts that adored her, "It had to be Yolande."

The eyes that sparkled, the lips dewy with smiles, the spirited head with its heroic pose, the mellow voice, the warm hand-clasp—it had to be these on which death's smiting fell. But " 'tis looking downward makes one dizzy," and we will not look into our loved one's grave, but up into the transcendent spheres to which she went when

"Gently drawn in loving arms
She swooned to That from This."

She had her wish; when most beloved and missed most sorely she left our world. The new names that appear this week where hers was wont to stand would doubtless never have been there but for this grievous loss.

Our Mary Allen West, editor, leader and veteran, is a worker of tremendous force. Her mind and pen move like chain-lightning, and because she can do so much, work in full measure is always hers to do. She has been with us in the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association from its founding in 1880, and has edited the official organ seven years with the exception of nearly one, when the responsibility fell upon Miss Ames.

By the work, wear and weariness of the memorable two months just passed, Miss West's health and vigor have been taxed beyond telling, and her comrades determined that she should have a six months' rest with near friends of hers in California. As always, she was loth to leave her post, but when she found that her present associates were willing to stand under the load, she consented to go.

In the rearrangement of the editorial corps, Miss Margaret A. Sudduth, who has been one of its members for four years and a half, becomes, with Mrs. Harriet B. Kells, of Mississippi, one of our two office editors, the make-up of the paper, News from the Field, and other important departments being assigned to Miss Sudduth, who also edits as heretofore from the date of publication (1887) the Oak and Ivy Leaf. In this she will be assisted by Miss Jennie Stewart, of Toledo, Ohio, one of our leading Y's, who has journalistic talent and experience. In Miss Sudduth we have a young woman greatly beloved by Julia Ames, who always worked at the desk adjoining hers and bore frequent testimony to the excellent judgment, ready pen and steadfast qualities of this true yokefellow who had been Miss Ames' school-mate in other days.

Especial interest attaches to the name of our new associate, Mrs. Harriet B. Kells, of Jackson, Mississippi, on account of her brave record in the South, where she founded The White Ribbon, leaving an advantageous position in the field of woman's higher education that she might join forces with us, and for her loyalty to our most advanced positions, having her office repeatedly broken into and materials injured or destroyed by unknown vandal hands. Mrs. Kells takes the vacant chair so lately wreathed with flowers in memory of our loved and lost. This fact, with others mentioned, renders her position in the office one of unique interest to all our readers. Mrs. Kells has the departments headed "Contributed" and "Correspondence," in both of which her own trained pen will often be employed.

Miss Ada Melville, a Minnesota white-ribboner, who has been "general utility woman," as well as editorial stenographer, in the office for many a day, and is fully competent to that laborious and thankless task, will write the book notices.

For the first and the two inside editorial pages the editors-in-chief are alone responsible.

So much for the personnel of our office at headquarters. On the return of our vice-president at large of the World's W. C. T. U. to England, we expect to issue an English edition of which she will be editor. Our paper will there be called The World's White Ribbon, a name that flings to every breeze the banner we have loved so long and which appears this week as a sub-head on our title page, which is also adorned by the new seal of the World's W. C. T. U.

The platform of THE UNION SIGNAL is well known. Its loyalty to all the principles of the white ribbon movement, and to our motto, "No sectarianism in religion, no sectionalism in politics, no sex in citizenship," has become proverbial, while its peace-loving spirit, fairness to opponents, and fearlessness to take new departures, have endeared it to our great constituency of "the unterrified" in every land. Naturally enough it now comes as an open letter from headquarters; a universal telegram to the whole army, an individual bugle call to each one of our soldiers.

The truth is not only a power, but a trust. We are bound to "pass it along like bread at sacrament." Hence, the opinion held by any honest mind is precious, for it may be true, and one of the best characteristics of white-ribboners is that as a class they are glad to give such an opinion a place on their lengthening list of potentialities. This THE UNION SIGNAL has been quick to do, and its hospitality to new ideas has been, and we hope will always be, one of its salient features.

After the Board of Directors had chosen the new editors on January 13, and these had held a meeting for mutual consultation, we all knelt in prayer, and the highest aspiration of each heart was expressed by one of our number in these words: "O Blessed Master, grant that the touch that Thou shalt give these busy hands, now set to write Thy messages, may through us help to heal the hearts for which Thy heart has bled." We ask our comrades the wide world over to breathe for every one of us, as we enter on our new and responsible duties, this tender prayer.

THE FLOWER MISSION.

"For others' sake" is writ on every flower that blows. "For e'en a tiny cup can bend to share its dewdrop with another near." Form, color, fragrance, all combine to spell out for us, "God is love."

In this century of systematic blessing, it was natural that women should think what flowers might do to brighten the sorrowful shut-in ones of the defective, dependent and delinquent classes, and if their beautiful evangelism could but be written it would furnish a whole "body of divinity" on the Godward side, and on the human a most winsome commentary on the tenderness of hearts considered hard, and lives looked on as hopeless. Our white-ribbon flower mission has now gone to the world's end, Miss Jennie Casseday, who has stood at its head in "the National" since 1881, having recently been elected to this largest of all parishes, belted by the flower-wreathed equator itself. One of the fairest phases of this work is the devotion manifested toward it by the Y's, and their "honorary" brothers. These latter are falling into the custom of helping tend the posy beds whose blossoms are culled for prison and hospital, thus planting the flowers of noblest manly tenderness in their own hearts.

We wish that every white-ribboner would have a garden-bed with sweet, old-fashioned flowers for this mission that has grown so great. Country homes would by this means participate in city work, and children trained to think on the loving, helpful lives thus put before them, must grow up more mellow-hearted. Most of all we wish that "mother's boys" might be taught to care for a gospel endeavor so pure, and so fragrant of His life who sent the wise and proud to "consider the lilies of the field." Talk up the subject at your firesides; draw plans of the "white ribbon garden spot" you mean to have next spring, parcel it out among the young folks; send to a trusty seedsman for "the raw material;" sweeten these snowy days with the perfume of roses, pansies and mignonette, and tinge the winter landscape with the dear old "fast colors" of dahlia, tulip and nasturtium.

CITIZEN, THE HIGHEST TITLE.

Wherein lies the great change which has so largely affected the attitude of man to man? is the question we must continually ask as we look out on the ever-widening horizon of our world. How do we trace through the history of the past the line of thought which is growing and spreading on all sides to-day—this wonderful to-day! unfolding almost hour by hour the beauty of higher, wider concepts? An age in which we hear from the lips of emperor and labor leader alike the sentiments that speak of the brotherhood of the race, and the ever-increasing network of integral interest which binds man to man and class to class.

"See how these Christians love one another," was the comment forced from the Roman soldiers by the tender bearing of their victims, the early martyrs, each to each. Alas! prosperity and the poison of power long since has killed this common charity, and in the century gone by "most Christian" majesties bartered their soldiers for gold and bargained for provinces and kingdoms as the appanages of a royal house, for all the world as if their subjects' lives and souls and happiness concerned no one so little as their sovereign. Churchmen fell as low as they, for nearly every high place was filled from the royal and noble families who fattened on the degradation of the people. Such disastrous corruption could not last. As early as 1750 Lord Chesterfield had foretold that in another half century the trade of king and priest would not be half so profitable as it then was, and predicted that conformity to reason in the governor would be the sole security for obedience in the governed.

It was, however, left to Jean Jacques Rousseau, a seer whose life commands one's admiration as little as Lord Chesterfield's, to awaken in the world the cry of brotherhood that had slumbered in men's hearts too long already in England and America. John Wesley had roused his countrymen from the lethargy that had fallen on religious life and feeling. Already the great movements of philanthropy which ended in the abolition of slavery, poor-law reform, Father Mathews' great temperance crusade, and the steady work of others along the same line, were gathering force on each side of the Atlantic. On the European Continent the inspiration went no further than politics; ennobled, indeed, by patriotic ardor, consecrated by the national hopes and yearnings that it sought to satisfy.

First France, driven by the tyranny of her own kings and nobles; then Spain, driven by the tyranny of the French emperor, awoke to consciousness of national liberty. Spain inspired Germany, Greece and Italy were not long to follow, and perhaps the cry of Ireland for a nation's right is the last the world will hear until the great wave of these wonderful new times sweeps over the plains of starving Russia with saving deliverance.

We of to-day, however, breathe an atmosphere of wider hope than did any of the pioneers of the past in the spread of citizenship; the wide knowledge that prevails of the economy of states; the better acquaintance that has come about between the workers of different nations tending to teach the people that it is not the greed of kings that they must fear and fight, but the greed of fe lowmen. The holy hopes that have come into the world are common to all countries, and whether we labor for the freedom of our race from the slavery of drink, the uplifting of woman to her true place in the economy of the world, or for the better lot of those whom daily hunger drives to labor, and whose free acceptance of their wage is based on the free choice to toil or starve—whatever be the work that makes our life, we find in every land, and speaking every tongue, a thousand thousand comrades whose hopes go hand in hand with ours.

The philanthropist as a man apart—the impassioned pleader for the poor, their go-between with the powerful and the rich—and the patriot as the exponent of his country's wrong whose advocacy can win a freedom from those in power, will soon be figures belonging to past times. To-morrow we shall all be in power—the patriot and the philanthropist, side by side with the hand-worker and home-keeper, and all titles of the past merged in that great, brotherly, world-title, the citizen.

Through the darkness, the turmoil and the strife men's minds have ever turned to this glorious ideal, and all their noblest work is but the process of perfecting humanity for this great calling. It has been slowly and surely carried on through the ages by the divine hand of the Master, and the day is dawning when the true citizen shall stand as the perfected evolution of Christ's gospel working in the great life of the world.

GLASGOW'S FORWARD MOVEMENT.

The city of Glasgow has lately been the scene of some very interesting experiments in civic rule.

A new police bill was formulated about twelve months ago, and when it came on for discussion, it was decided that it should be read that day six months, which being interpreted meant, that its postponement should in reality be indefinite. A fortnight ago, however, the bill arose, Phœnix-like, from the ashes to which so many would have consigned it, and was triumphantly carried, in a manner that was unlooked for, even by the most sanguine.

Glasgow is commonly supposed to be a drunken city, and the whisky shops that everywhere abound, give it undoubtedly undeniable preëminence in that direction; but a strong and growing temperance sentiment has been steadily gaining ground. The Y. M. C. A. organized a plebiscite some time back, to ascertain the professed opinion on the drinking question. One hundred and fifty thousand houses were visited, and voting papers left. More than 100,000 of these papers were filled up and returned, constituting the largest vote of its kind ever taken in the United Kingdom. The question submitted read as follows: "Are you in favor of local option?" Seventy-eight thousand answers in the affirmative; 8,000 negatives. By ten to one, therefore, it was decided that the power over the liquor traffic should be placed in the hands of the people.

If this vote represents the voice of Scotland, and she will be true to her convictions at the next election, the members whom she will return to Parliament will be pledged to this measure.

On the question of the total prohibition of the drink traffic, 57,000 householders voted in favor of the measure; 19,000 against it. That which perhaps makes the vote the more remarkable is the fact that the larger number of those voting for a clean sweep of the liquor traffic were to be found among the industrial classes, and not among the wealthier inhabitants of the city.

The result of the interest caused by this expression of public opinion was shown in the municipal election, the early part of last month, which turned almost entirely on the temperance question. Glasgow embraces several suburbs, and has a population of 100,000.

Women householders now possess the municipal franchise, and almost without exception the women worked with a strong, determined purpose, and contributed largely to the temperance victory.

In one district, five candidates were put forward on the temperance ticket; all were returned by sweeping majorities, and out of the total seventy-seven members in the newly elected City Parliament, twenty-nine pronounced total abstainers were elected.

The battle was by no means an easy one, and the temperance party worked against immense odds. It is an open secret that bribes were freely offered by the publicans, and that drink flowed like water on the election day, while many voters were dragged to the polls hopelessly intoxicated. The power underlying sucha victory soon made itself apparent, and the result was manifested in an unlooked-for way.

The details of the new police bill are almost, perhaps, unique, in their direct and summary way of dealing with questions regarding the public morality: (1) Full control of places of public amusement, and smaller shows, which had hitherto been a source of moral corruption, was placed in the hands of the police, as was also the control of billiard-rooms and gambling houses; (2) punishment of the habitual drinker, and after six convictions in any one year, a lengthened imprisonment may be imposed, without the option of a fine; (3) the punishment of solicitation to immorality, alike by men and women; (4) penalty for street betting, and for the publication of sporting results in shop windows thus gathering a crowd, and producing street obstruction, and for the holding of lotteries at church bazaars, charity fairs, or elsewhere.

We cannot help feeling that not only in the victory that has been won, and which will so effectually tell for the benefit of the temperance cause all over Scotland, but also in the spirit which pervades the legislation which has followed, the real benefit of woman's influence and woman's vote has been signally felt.

AMENITIES OF THE MOVEMENT.

Every word that helps to eliminate personal bitterness from the mighty struggle we are in ought to be cherished. In this conviction we publish the following letter from a Boston liquor dealer to a Boston paper, which repeated the untrue statement that our English leader, leased her property to inn-keepers.

THE LADY AND THE TIGER.

To the Editor of the Record:—

Please find room for this expression of regret that an unkind allusion to Lady Henry Somerset appeared in last night's Record.

I am in the liquor business, and certainly have no sympathy with the opinions on temperance which this lady holds; but she has a right to be thought sincere, and even if the fact stated in the parliamentary statistics is true, it is to be assumed that some satisfactory explanation can be made, Let us be courteous enough to suppose her honest, and respect and admire the self-sacrificing life she leads, however widely we may differ from her conclusions. LIQUOR DEALER.

Boston, Dec. 28.

In a note to one of our editors this liquor dealer (who gives name and address) writes:

Of course no one who was privileged to attend your recent meetings here would do the lady the injustice to suppose that she was capable of double dealing. I stood up for about two hours in Tremont Temple to be present at her sermon that Sunday afternoon, and would have been glad to listen for another hour. It was one of those things that touch the heart. If she owns a saloon, I am sure it must be through oversight of her business manager and not by her direction. I am sorry to read that your National President is sick; I hope and trust that she will soon be well again.

Wishing you ladies the happiest of New Years,

I remain, YOUR FRIEND AND ENEMY.

THE Associated Press dispatches from Washington, Jan. 12. contained this significant announcement, confirmed by private telegrams from our white-ribbon leader, Mrs. S. D. La Fetra:

"The Senate has ratified the commercial treaty with Congo State and the African slave trade treaty." Care is taken to omit "and the treaty prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages." But all these are "parts of one tremendous whole." We are glad that the President in his recent message recommended the adoption of the Brussels Treaty, although he referred only to that part of it relating to the abolition of slavery, and not to the prohibition of the liquor traffic. We think that its adoption by the United States Senate marks a notable advance in that it distinctly antagonizes the large liquor interests involved in the sale of rum upon the Congo. Score one for the Senate, two for brave Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, three for the temperance people everywhere, and one hundred for the Gospel whose flowing tide is with us, even as "the crazy drinks" are this world's ebbing tide. Ten years ago prohibition could not have been secured upon so large a scale, even at so great a distance. It has been long delayed, even now our nation being last of all and loth, but the Senate, with its Republican majority, has done the right thing and shall have its credit mark at the point of a Prohibitionist's pen.

AT a Salvation Army slum meeting in one of our great cities, the Captain who was leading, expatiated on the fact that this vast organization was mainly supported by the pence of the very poor, and dwelt on the unreadiness of the rich to help God's work. A poor woman, on a back seat in the hall, whose whole wardrobe would hardly have fetched half a dollar at the pawn-shop, after listening to all he said, with the light of God's love shining on her toil-worn face, looked up and murmured half under her breath, "Poor rich, they have a deal to contend against." Sitting next to her in that motley gathering, was one who knew the profound truth uttered almost unconsciously by that simple heart. "Poor rich!" We should deal, perhaps, more tenderly with all the apparent failure of many a life surrounded by all the world holds best, if we knew more of the cramping environment, and the stunting effects of an education from which is too often excluded the awful realities that make up the history of this great, struggling world.

The Watch-Tower.

It is said that when Bret Harte became editor of the Pacific Literary Magazine they brought him the title page upon which was the traditional and conventional California symbol, namely, a bear, teeth, claws, and all. The young author looked upon the doughty emblem, then took a foot rule and drew beneath its ponderous claws two parallel lines representing the Pacific railroad. He had correlated his subject, and given, we believe, the two most significant lines that, great and gifted as he is, he ever penned.

***

Intemperance is a wild beast, and was so represented in all the work of the early reform movement. The chief material of the founders of that movement was recitals of its horrors. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union came along, drew beneath this symbol of intemperance two parallel lines that indicate its relation to civilization, to the home, the school, the church, the state, for it is the grizzly bear that stands upon the track of progress. That was a mighty change to come over the movement. More and more we must study to keep this relationship of the curse to the country before the people. We have never dwelt much upon harrowing personal vicissitudes, but have treated the subject in a larger way. Generalizations are now the order of thought, and it has been no small gain to us intellectually, that we have spread the temperance propaganda along scientific, economic and philosophic lines, instead of narrowing our survey to personal results, as was done in early days.

***

The lawyers are all willing we women should be physicians, the physicians all think us admirably adapted to be lawyers, the ministers would gladly see us in either of these two professions; but when their own comes up, their very looks say to us, "Take any shape but that." Meanwhile the lawyers and physicians think that of all other vocations we ought to enter on the pulpit—so steadily proscribed. So the question recurs on the original motion: "What shall the poor woman of the nineteenth century do for herself?"

***

Our old-time friend, The Christian Statesman, comes to us with a clear-cut new heading and sixteen pages that smell of ozone. Rev. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts have not a sleepy hair in their respective heads, and the Statesman will be under the management of these two, and their coadjutors, including our comrades, Mary A. Woodbridge and Josephine C. Bateham, more wide-awake than ever.

***

In a letter received at Headquarters, Col. George W. Bain says: "The Boston Convention was the greatest meeting I ever saw of any kind. Such a meeting ought to revolutionize a city or country. My faith in the W. C. T. U. was never so great as since that meeting."

***

Every well regulated mind should have one pigeon hole labeled "Bright Sayings." It is unpardonable in any intelligent person not to be able to cite at least a witticism apiece from Sidney Smith, Douglass Jerrold, Charles Lamb, and others of like genius in the past; also from our own unique humorists in America. We purpose to give one or two of these scintillations every week, asking "our folks" to ratchet them into their brains and have them to brighten the next sociable or nigh tea that they attend.

Sidney Smith was walking in a garden with a beautiful young lady, who showed him a favored sweet pea plant which she feared, in view of the unfavorable season, would not blossom as delightfully as usual. She made the remark: "I fear this pea will not come to perfection;" whereupon, gallantly taking the beautiful young lady by the hand, Sidney Smith marched her up a little nearer to the posy, saying, "Very well, then, I will take perfection to the pea."

Douglass Jerrold gave a dinner to a man somewhat distinguished, who considered himself a great wit, and rattled off several of his very best things almost in a breath. Jerrold did not pay the expected tribute of a smile. At this the egotistical visitor remarked, with some asperity: "I see, Mr. Jerrold, that you do not know a good thing when you see it." "Don't I, indeed," replied that famous joker, "try me with one."

It is said that Charles Lamb went to his grocer to buy a piece of cheese. When the purchase had been effected, and the cheese was placed before him on the counter, he said, in his stammering way: "Can't—you—let—me—have—a string?" "What for?" asked the grocer, curiously. "Why, if I had one I think I could lead this piece of cheese home."

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

CHRISTMAS IN AUSTRALIA.

Christmas has come and gone. Year after year the old familiar festival comes around almost as a fresh surprise, stealing upon us with measured tread often before we are aware. This year it found me in a place where the landscape swirls in summer heat instead of veiling itself in a robe of snow, so unlike a Christmas at home.

This Christmas found me resting for a short time in Sydney. The travels through the East have told so upon my strength, I was forced to take complete rest for some weeks, and I concluded to spend the time in Sydney, although I had been told the heat would be very great. The season has been a most unusual one, for I have not felt the heat in the least. I was so thoroughly "baked" in China and Siam that I am proof against any Australian climate.

During my rest weeks I was the guest of a very wealthy English lady whom I met in Japan. I threw off all thought of work, and was quite given up to change; went to all the great concerts, and heard the "largest organ in the world," was entertained at numerous dinners, meeting many of the principal people of Sydney. My friend gave a number of dinners in my honor, entertaining persons of note, among them the Primate of Australia, who has since presided at some of my meetings. He has come recently from England, and his "make up" is somewhat amusing. He is very tall, above six feet, wears low cut shoes with silver buckles, long black silk hose, knee breeches, after Oscar Wilde fashion, and an upper garment which I cannot describe. We found him delightful to know personally, and I am sure he will be very popular with his people. He is a temperance man, also in favor of woman's work, and said in one of the meetings he believed the "temperance reform rested almost entirely in the hands of the women."

After a delightful rest, greatly strengthened and able to bear the fatigue of "tramping" in this country, I began work again early in January. Several city churches invited me to hold meetings. This done, I proceeded across the bay to Balmain where I held two afternoon meetings and two evening ones, which were very largely attended, and I was thus able to form a union of fifty members. The Good Templars invited me and made all arrangements. After local expenses were met they had a balance over the collections of some fifteen dollars. Their committee of arrangements voted this to the new union. This was a great help for them. A number of young men gave their names for the I. O. G. T. so the work was greatly strengthened. Leaving here I went to Waverly, a large suburb of Sydney. The rain fell in torrents, but the hall was filled, many having come out from the city. Sabbath was spent in the city. In the evening I preached the anniversary sermon at the Bathurst Street church, which was built fifty-four years ago by convict labor, and is the oldest and first Baptist church south of the equator. Early the next morning I started on a three months' tramp through the Colony, going first to Parametta, some twenty miles away, where I held a three nights' mission in the town hall, making one night a pay lecture for the benefit of the mission fund. My subject was "The Women of Asia." A number of local ladies helped me, dressed in the native costumes. The affair was a complete success.

So far I have been unable to visit the country places, that is, the districts—but a special call came from Castle Hill to which I responded. The afternoon meeting was held in the Church of England school-room, and in the evening we went to Odd Fellows Hall, a building only partly finished. It was crowded, the people coming from far and near, most of them having never heard a woman speak in public before. The place was far too small. Boys climbed up and sat on the cross-beams and rafters. Candles in bottles stood about; on the table stood one ancient candlestick, and in the only partly lighted hall the audience looked about three shades darker than in the daylight. It was a grand meeting. The people as a rule are in favor of temperance and are doing all they can to keep saloons out of the District.

I stopped at a farm-house, old-fashioned and full of comfort. The good Christian people, whose home it is, have lived here nearly sixteen years. The four girls are women grown, and the father said to me, "My mother was the fourth white child born in Australia. I have lived nearly seventy years in these parts." They cultivate sixty acres of land, planted with many kinds of fruit, oranges and lemons, as well as the common fruits. It was refreshing to get away from the din, dust and rush of city life and spend a day in this spot of beauty. I formed a union with twenty-three members, and started again for other fields. An hour on the train brought me to Penrith, a city near the Blue Mountains. The Wesleyan minister met me, and I was driven to the home of one of the ladies of the town.

The united temperance bodies gave me a welcome tea in the Temperance Hall. The ministers made addresses of welcome, after which I gave an address on temperance. A weeks' mission was held, and a good, strong W. C. T. U. formed. The women have the sympathy of most of the ministers. Some think we are partly demented, but as a rule we have their support. All seem to recognize the fact that women are the greatest sufferers and should be the greatest workers. The women are very slow to move, but when they undertake anything, as a rule they do carry it through. The Good Templars are very strong in this Colony and are doing good work. They have done much to aid me in the forming of unions, and always work hand in hand with us.

Leaving there I went on to Katoomba, a beautiful health resort, on the very summit of Blue Mountain; it was most refreshing to breathe the cool mountain air, though not wholly free from the taint of rum. Here I preached Sunday evening to a crowded house, and held public and women's meetings during the week, forming a local union with a live, wide-awake little woman as president. As amusements were few, and anything, even a temperance meeting, was acceptable, we had a good hearing. The morning papers were filled with the account of the recent local option poll; the question of "Shall we grant new license to more public houses?" was submitted to the vote of the people, and in Sydney and suburbs it was carried by a large majority, "no more saloons." This is a temperance victory in its way, but really has no bearing on the principles involved as to the right to legalize the traffic. It is encouraging to know that sentiment is strong and still growing, gathering force from week to week, and doubtless will soon roll and sweep its way to the very doors of Parliament, and there demand at the hands of the lawmakers that for which they are now pleading.

Leaving Mt. Victoria I crossed one mountain range and came down into one of the most beautiful and fertile valleys of this section. Here the town of Lithgow, with its five thousand inhabitants, stretches out before me. It is a place of interest. There are good-sized factories, iron works, pottery and coal mines. Here coal is bought for a dollar and a quarter a ton. The men get twenty-five cents a ton for mining it. The first meeting was on Sunday evening. The School of Arts was packed and many were unable to get in. The same interest continued the four nights with the result of a large union being formed and twenty miners joining the Good Templars. I have had some delightful experiences among the miners. Little is being done for them by way of temperance effort, so I try to visit the mines when possible to interest them. On one occasion I went to a very large mine where several hundred men were at work. I went at the noon hour that I might have a word with them. To my surprise they invited me to lunch with them. When the gong sounded the men came up from the mine so black with coal dust no one could have known them. They went to a long water trough and after a hasty application of soap and water, which by the way, failed to remove all the black, they sat down under the shade of a very large tree to refresh the "inner man." A camp fire had been kindled, an old black tin pail, called "a billy" was filled with water and placed on the burning pile; the flames rolled round the pail and the smoke curled itself higher and higher till lost in the air, but left its traces in deeper black on the sides of the pail till at last one cried out, "She boils, Jack." Jack, a tall, lean, lank youth of twenty-four or five, with a circle of black around his eyes which had escaped the soap, took from a tin can near by a cup of sugar and threw it into the boiling water; from another tin he took a quantity of tea. This followed the sugar, when all was removed from the fire on an iron hook. All passed up their tin cups and the beverage seemed most satisfactory. Meantime I found a seat on a stone under the same tree, as did the minister who was with me. One after another brought up their dinner pails, and we helped ourselves to a sandwich from one, crackers and cheese from another, etc., chatting all the time with those nearest us; then I spoke to them for a few moments and appealed to them in the names of their homes and little ones to sign the pledge. Nearly a hundred put their names on my pledge book and I came away very glad of the opportunity of having a word with them.

While in Lithgow I went over the mountains to Hartleyvale to hold some women's meetings. One of the ministers kindly offered to drive me over. I never shall forget the drive. We crossed the range, making our way slowly up one side and rushing at break-neck speed down the other, the horses dashed round a sharp curve, down a steep incline, faster and faster, till I began to feel we should be thrown down the ravine and land in the river below, instead of in the town. For some miles we saw no signs of life. The blue gum tree covers acres and acres of land. This unshapely tree mars the landscape, but could not shut out the last rays of the setting sun, now going down behind the mountain we had just crossed. As we neared the village these trees disappeared, giving place to scenes of greater beauty—cattle wading the stream on their homeward way; sheep grazing in the meadow, lift their pretty heads as they catch the sound of the rolling wheels, and everything seems to welcome us to this fair scene. True country life! how refreshing! The evening was perfect, the air soft and balmy. The sweet briar growing everywhere in the wildest confusion shed its fragrance about us; the heavens seem tinged with the brightness of another world. I felt sure heaven must be nearer to mortals here than I had ever felt it before; everything spoke of the greatness of nature's God—even sleep is sweeter, and if I could but spend a few weeks in this place, I am sure I should be stronger in mind and body to continue the work, but duty calls and on the morrow I go again to new fields.

JESSIE A. ACKERMAN.

A TEMPERANCE CAMPAIGN IN SOUTH AFRICA.

It has been suggested that you might be interested in hearing of our work in Natal, and of a recent ten days' campaign at the Volunteer Camp at Pinetown.

Our W. C. T. U. dates from Mrs. Leavitt's visit, January, 1889, and though we have over fifty members, the workers are under rather than over a dozen. We meet fortnightly in Durban, and have a flower mission in connection with the hospital, and a temperance tent, on the market square, every Saturday for the sale of tea, coffee and aerated waters to gentlemen attending the sales.

Many are glad of a sandwich and a nice cup of tea on the spot, and we believe our work there is much appreciated and saves many a man from going off to a canteen in search of refreshment. One of our members we pay to attend every Saturday, and others—volunteers—take turns in assisting. Temperance tracts are always on hand for distribution.

This W. C. T. U. tent we took up to the Volunteer Camp to try and save some of the lads from the canteen authorized by the chiefs of departments to sell drink on the ground. Four ladies made their home at Miss Scott's, Glenugie, Pinetown, so as to be in constant attendance. The tent was pitched on Miss Scott's land, nearest point to the camp, and from 6 a. m. till dark, good tea, coffee and cocoa were supplied at a small charge to any and all who came. Buns and sandwiches, etc., were also dispensed. Each evening after closing up our tent we adjourned to Miss Scott's house, and held a gospel temperance meeting for any or all who chose to attend. The interest shown was great, and, if we could have had a larger place and nearer the camp, more good might have been done.

Two or three gentlemen helped us greatly with these little meetings, and Captain Elizabeth Galloway, of the Salvation Army, responded to our invitation and was with us three evenings. Her lively songs attracted numbers, and her personal dealing was blessed to several of the men. We hope, next year, by applying early to headquarters to get permission to pitch our tent right in the center of the camp, and to be able to carry on a hand-to-hand fight with the sins that are so open—drunkenness and swearing. It was pitiable to think that the cadet-corps, composed of boys only entering their teens, should be permitted to camp out those ten days, seeing and hearing things that must have smirched their young minds. Many of them we were told were taking their first lessons in drinking, copying their elders and fancying themselves men. The prayers and thanks of many of the men in behalf of our work in the cause of temperance made our hearts glow within us that God had led us to that sphere of work, and with renewed trust in Him we can go forward, assured of His smiling approval, and of ultimate victory.

After paying expenses, we had about twelve dollars towards a scheme that lies very near to our hearts. We long for a permanent building in Durban that we can call our own, where young men can spend a pleasant evening, either reading, studying, debating, or listening to a lecture or music. We want a tea and coffee room as well, where a lunch can be bought at a moderate rate by men and girls in stores or offices, and visitors for shopping purposes to Durban. Some of our ladies look forward to establishing an inebriate home under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., but it seems only fair that those who manufacture drunkards should support their own children. An inebriate home is sure of inmates as long as canteens abound, but let us make the prevention of drunkenness our special work, and that is a work that will last.

We have £50 in a building society as a nest-egg, and as the Gospel Temperance Mission have written asking us to coöperate with them in trying to secure a common meeting place, we are sanguine that before long we shall be able to rear our heads and show a bold front in West street, Durban.

Since my daughter's return from Huguenot seminary, Wellington, Cape Colony, she has been very successful in organizing two Y's; a very enthusiastic one in our little village of Sydenham, with twenty members and twelve honorary members. They have parliamentary drill at most of their meetings as well as scientific temperance instruction. They have a well organized flower mission (general) and a committee which superintends the songs and recitations of the little ones for the Bands of Hope. They plan to start an L. T. L. before long, and they have decided to occupy their fingers at the meetings in making garments to send to the hospital in Durban, at Christmas. Their first open meeting—a month ago—was a most decided success, and pleased all the friends. The other Y is in Durban and has twenty-four members. It is only a month old and the work is new to them, but we hope to see good work done, and a beneficial influence exerted when once they feel their feet.

God is opening up our way wonderfully, both with old and young, and the interest in temperance is increasing everywhere.

That God's best blessing may rest on all work undertaken for Him, is the earnest desire of Yours faithfully, M. F. FERIME.

Sydenham, Natal, S. Africa.

HISTORY OF THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

In 1883 Mrs. L. Youmans, the devoted and beloved pioneer woman in the temperance cause in our Dominion, visited Winnipeg and organized the first W. C. T. U. in Manitoba. In 1886 in passing through our Province on her way home from California where she had been spending some time in company with her niece in search of health, she organized at other points and, in view of organizing a provincial W. C. T. U. when she reached Winnipeg, secured the recommendation of names for officers as she passed along. She succeeded in appointing officers and in laying the foundation of a Provincial organization, but in this country of busy women and frequent removals nothing further was done, and a few months found all or nearly all of our general officers, including president, vice-president and treasurer, removed either to some other part of the Dominion or the United States, and the society had practically ceased to exist.

We were in this condition when Miss Willard and Anna Gordon visited Winnipeg in June, 1887. After consultation it was decided to again attempt a Manitoba W. C. T. U. Officers were appointed to fill the vacant places, a plan of work was formulated, and the constitution carefully gone over and adopted. Mrs. Andrews was chosen president; she is the wife of a Methodist minister, Rev. A. A. Andrews, now of Virden, Manitoba, and who is so well and favorably known throughout the Dominion and elsewhere as a leader in Sabbath-school work. She had previously had some knowledge of the work, and soon began organizing. Mrs. Andrews is now superintendent of W. C. T. U. work in the Northwestern Territories.

Since then the work has steadily grown. Brandon, Portage la Prairie and Winnipeg, the largest places in the Province, have each a W. C. T. U. and a Y. W. C. T. U. who are doing good work amongst the children in night school, Loyal Temperance Legions, etc., also in flower mission and other departments. With the exception of Morden and two or three other places, our towns are not very large, and there is difficulty sometimes in securing women who will take office, still the spirit of work is amongst them, and it is a pleasure and delight to visit places where it is thought impossible to organize, and, after meeting with the women, and telling them how work may be done, to find them banded together, and accomplishing what had been unthought of before, because the talent which had been hidden away had been exercised, and has developed into active effort for God and Home and Humanity.

We have many noble women in our ranks: Mrs. Gordon, wife of a Methodist minister, who has herself preached for many years, and the people say quite as well as her husband; Mrs. Watt, whose system of Bible study, which she has developed, is both simple and effective and is being so extensively adopted by Christian workers; Mrs. Smith, a model secretary, and one of whom it has been said we may be proud; Mrs Dolsen, by whose quiet but persistent efforts scientific temperance instruction in our schools has been secured, and Nos. 1 and 2 of the Pathfinder series has been placed upon the curriculum of school study. There are many others who might be mentioned, did space permit, but everywhere the estimation in which our W. C. T. U. is held is evidenced by what is expected of us. Whatever others may do we are expected to declare ourselves on every question affecting the moral safety of our people and to lead in every reform movement.

Our Province has a license law with a local option clause which is, or ought to be (by the expression of the people), the rule in 85 out of 103 municipalities, but experience proves that here as elsewhere this liquor traffic is no respecter of law, while on the other hand where it has been enforced we have had practical demonstration that "prohibition does prohibit." Our motto is "Onward," our help is in God, and with white ribbon sisters the world round, we clasp hands and unite our prayers that this gigantic evil may be destroyed; that it with all other associated evils may no more prey upon the manhood and womanhood of this otherwise beautiful earth.

L. CHISHOLM.
Pres. Manitoba W. C. T. U.

News from the Field.

MASSACHUSETTS.

NOTES OF VICTORY.

That Massachusetts women have not been sitting down with folded hands since the National Convention is manifest by the valiant work done in the no-license campaign just ended. In many quarters a stronger fight than usual was made, which in nearly every instance met with marked success.

The result shows twelve cities which have secured a "no" vote. Of the twelve, Quincy, Newton, Maiden and Somerville have had a clean record for the past ten years, while Boston and Holyoke are the only cities that have voted each year to grant licenses. Cambridge is the largest city in the United States which voted "no" at the last election, it being the sixth year of no-license for this center of learning. Great was the enthusiasm among the citizens. Seven of the prominent ministers, with Dr. Peabody as chairman, made arrangements for a grand rally, which was followed by a meeting in which the ministers of all denominations assisted. The Sunday before election the churches were thrown open and packed with attentive audiences, while the ministers went from one church to another making rousing speeches. At St. Mary's Catholic Church a dense mass congregated to hear Rev. Father Elliot, of New York, and Father Scully.

Tuesday was election day. When the vote was declared at three o'clock Wednesday morning the ministers, with Rev. D. N. Beach as leader, left the city hall and repaired to the churches to ring the glad tidings of victory.

Chelsea made a grand fight. As early as last June campaign meetings were held and continued in the Fall up to the time of election, most of the addresses being made by prominent clergymen and citizens. The great enthusiasm called out the largest vote that has ever been cast for no-license. On election day the W. C. T. U. women provided breakfast and dinner for the men who had been at the polls all day. They write, "We are rewarded for our toil by seeing the 'paw of the rum tiger of Boston which rested here in Chelsea, sleek and smooth, show its claws and gradually draw back over the bridge into Charlestown.'" Charlestown, with its Bunker Hill!

Brockton made a gain of fifty per cent over last year, its "no" vote being 954 majority, while Springfield's "yes" majority was smaller than in any previous year In Fall River, where we are told there are 1,500 saloons, there was a great gain in the "no" vote as also in Boston. Who can estimate how great a factor the National Convention proved to be in this marked victory?

We are planning a regular snow-storm of petitions to blockade our representatives and senators at the State House, February 1. We trust it will be so overpowering that they will be kept at their posts of duty until they grant our request, "For the enactment of a law which shall give equal facilities, irrespective of sex, in the registration of names for voting; for the enactment of a law under which all citizens, irrespective of sex, shall have the right to vote in relation to licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors; for the enactment of a law under which all citizens, irrespective of sex, shall have the right to vote in the election of municipal officers," "also for the repeal of the law granting licenses of the sixth grade to apothecaries, and a law enacted whereby salaried agents shall be appointed under proper regulations in each no-license city or town, whose duty it shall be to furnish pure liquor at cost to inhabitants and residents only, for medicinal, mechanical and chemical purposes.

A monthly letter stating the position of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., its work and aim, will be sent to the prominent daily papers. It first appeared on New Year's day, and answered the oft-repeated query, "What is the W. C. T. U. doing?" It gave a brief history of the past and the special legislative work for the coming months. It showed that the white-ribbon women of Massachusetts are alive and using every available weapon against the relentless foe.

The invigorating effect of the National Convention is being felt in every nerve and fiber of the white-ribbon organism of our state. Organization is at a premium, the young women's work is taking a fresh start under the earnest enthusiasm of its leader, Elizabeth M. Fessenden, and we are in for a solid year of victory.

EMMA WARD BUMSTEAD,
State Reporter, Boston.

KANSAS.

AGGRESSIVE EFFORTS.

Since writing my last letter to THE UNION SIGNAL, the "angel of death" has invaded our home and taken from us my husband's aged father, eighty-eight years old. The religion of Christ was a reality to him, and was his strong staff in the hour of death. A few days before his decease he told me of his early work in the temperance cause. He signed what was called the "cold water pledge," when a young man, teaching school in Cayuga county, New York, in 1827, which was thirteen years before the inauguration of the Washingtonian movement. There were two "taverns" in his district, and drinking was the general custom of old and young. His school was affected by it, and as he "boarded around" he saw much of its evil workings; finally the people themselves began to see that something must be done to check the ever-increasing drink habit, and the movement was begun which afterward became widespread. He said that it required a great deal of determination to take and keep a temperance pledge at that time but by God's help he was enabled to do so. I give these facts, as owing to his advanced age he may have been the only witness left to testify concerning that early temperance crusade.

WEAR THE WHITE RIBBON.

The following from one of our own white-ribboners so forcibly illustrates the power of our little badge that I give it a place, hoping it will have an influence on those members of the W. C. T. U. who are careless about the wearing of our emblem of purity. She says, "On my return from the state convention last year I had to stop over two hours in a depot in the suburbs of Salina. I was, oh! so tired. There was no one in the waiting room, but presently a little girl about ten years of age came in, (selling something) and, as I like children, I began to talk to her. In our conversation I said, 'I do not know any one in your city except Mrs. Laura M. Johns'. Her eyes brightened, and she said, 'Why, do you know her? I know her, too, and she is a nice lady,' then shyly added, 'I think all the women who wear the white ribbon are nice.' So we talked on until night was approaching, and I advised her to go home, as little girls should not be so far from home when night comes. Presently I felt a little arm around my neck and a warm kiss on my cheek, and she with a smile started homeward. This sweet act of the little stranger maid touched my heart, and I reflected: Now if I was a young, handsome, sparkling girl, that would not seem strange, but me, a grandmother, what does it mean? Suddenly I thought: Oh I see! it is all owing to the little white bow; it did it, and since then, even more than before, I always wear the white ribbon when I go out of my own home. I think some one will see it, and be reminded of what it means."

First District.—The Morrill union in this district is deserving of mention. It has forty active members, and fifteen "honoraries;" has superintendents for nearly every department of W. C. T. U. work, and an L. T. L. of fifty members. The union gave a dinner and supper on election day and thus added $16 to their treasury. They secured the services of J. Howard Moore for three lectures, and will organize a Y. W. C. T. U. in the near future. They have contributed $1 to Our Messenger fund, also $1 for the booklet, "Redeemed," to be sent to the military prison. They hold regular meetings semi-monthly. Twelve copies of Our Messenger and three of THE UNION SIGNAL are subscribed for by the members of the union.

Third District.—Our new state president, Mrs. S. F. Grubb, spent twelve days in December in the third district, speaking seventeen times, and organizing one union. New members were gained and new life and enthusiasm infused into every place visited. Glowing accounts are received from the unions, and the wish is expressed that she might visit every union in the district this year. A grand time is expected at the district convention to be held at Independence in February. Mrs. Grubb is to be present during the entire convention.

Sixth District.—Mrs. Alice M. Henderson, state superintendent of evangelistic work, sends the following from her district: "I wish you to know just how alive we are. Mrs. Barry, our district president, is a tower of strength to us all. She is brave, energetic, and has an abundance of faith in the final triumph of right over the hosts of darkness, to start the fires of enthusiasm all over this big district. Our county and district conventions are well attended, and show a large amount of work being done in many departments. We have had some very good lectures the last few months. Rev. Eugenia F. St. John spent several weeks in our district, and was greeted everywhere with large and enthusiastic audiences. Her name alone is sufficient to insure a full house. We also have had a large number of lectures by J. Howard Moore, the young prohibition orator who was so warmly indorsed in the Pennsylvania amendment campaign. He is now working under the National Lecture Bureau of Le Roy, New York. We would like to bespeak for him a warm welcome from all white-ribboners wherever he may go. He is a faithful and brave knight of the new chivalry, and bids fair to excel on the platform as an advocate of prohibition and moral purity. Medal contest work is largely carried on by our workers, and much good is being done in this way.

"In the little town of Mankato we have cleaned out one low dive, the proprietor skipping to Nebraska, for greener fields. We have now secured, through one of our honorary members, a letter from the internal revenue collector, at Topeka, telling that 'hop tea' comes under the head of malt, and the government exacts $20 per annum for the sale of it. We now expect to rid the town of this abomination also, which will be done by prosecution under the 'Original Package' law. We sincerely hope that Kansas and all the other prohibition states will fight this evil in every town and city until it shall be a thing of the past, for when the government declares it to be intoxicating, we need fear nothing, but go forward with our prosecutions."

The quarterly convention of Linn county met at LaCygne December 9th and 10th, with the county president, Mrs. J. E. Moore, in the chair. All the county officers, eight superintendents and nine delegates were present, also many visitors. The report of druggist permit work, by Mrs. Eda Moon, showed active endeavor in this department. The superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Hattie Stanley, reported ten visits made, forty-two garments donated, twelve meals, besides fruit and jelly, given to the sick, Scripture reading and prayer when desired. The superintendent of almshouse work made a report showing a careful supervision of that department. Scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. Clara Brewster, superintendent, showed a good report, the teachers of the county having interest in teaching according to state law, and the LaCygne schools having Temple mite-boxes. The work among colored people was reported as follows: Six mothers' meetings held, eight visits to the sick, fifty-four garments donated, provision given to the sick poor, and 1,500 pages of literature distributed. Six ladies gave $1 each toward the home for colored people at Leavenworth. The departments of social purity, juvenile, fair, literature, railroad, franchise, jail, petition, soldiers, and Sunday-school are all taken up by Linn county. The devotional services were a solemn uplifting of earnest hearts. The convention closed with a mothers' meeting of great interest and value. Topics considered. "Perfect motherhood" and "Temperance education of our children." Discussions of the papers were general and animated. All felt that it was one of Linn county's best conventions. In the evening session Mrs. Ella Saunders, of LaCygne gave the welcome address, and Mrs. Anna Austin, of Pleasanton, responded. Rev. M. L. K. Morgan of the M. E. church gave a rousing address from the text, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor strong drink."

STRAY ITEMS.

As one of the results of our last state convention, a W. C. T. U. was organized at North Lawrence, with twenty regular, and eleven honorary members.

The minutes of the state convention are now being distributed free to all district, county and local presidents, and each state superintendent and district superintendent can secure copies at ten cents each. Others will be charged cost price, probably twenty cents.

The Equal Suffrage Association of Kansas is opening a vigorous campaign, Rev. Anna Shaw, Miss Susan B. Anthony and Miss Florence Balgarnie are to be the chief attractions.

Kansas to Oklahoma, Greeting:—I noticed by the SIGNAL of December 31, that Mrs. Sue Brown, late superintendent of press work of the fourth district, in Kansas, whose recent removal to Oklahoma I mentioned not long since, has been appointed Territorial reporter. The gold watch presented her on leaving Kansas will enable her to keep a "watch" out for news items, and to be on "time" in reporting them. She will no doubt "run" well in this new field of labor, and with her "face" ever set toward the right, she will conscientiously do with her might what her "hands" find to do.

MRS. S. S. WEATHERBY,
State Reporter, Le Roy.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

THE QUARTERLY MEETING.

The quarterly meeting of the District W. C. T. U. was held December 30th at the Fourth St. M. E. church. One sister remarked that it was the best meeting she had attended in seven years. We are confident she is not in the habit of attending W. C. T. U. gatherings. The Holy Spirit was in our midst many times: during the day some one would frequently suggest that we sing the doxology in grateful acknowledgment of the Father's blessing on our endeavors. The corresponding secretary's report was most encouraging, showing four mass-meetings held by the District union. The auxiliaries reported excellent work done; some have been fighting against saloons getting their license; in one case where the application was rejected the proprietor still continues selling. This is an old story. What can be done? The only answer is that we have not men in public office who will enforce law. In this case commissioners and police are the ones to enforce the law of the latter class. Many of them, we fear, are lax because of obtaining their drink from these very places free of charge.

One president reported that since her union was organized (which was some few years ago), three women have gone from it to become presidents in other places.

The treasurer reported $389.74 received, and $355.64 disbursed, also $147 paid by special contributions from various friends on the subscriptions made at the last annual meeting of the union to the colored Y. M. C. A. which has been recently organized.

Mrs. M. E. Griffiths, National organizer of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, gave a Bible reading in which she presented a portrait of the saloon-keeper as given in the 10th Psalm, also the promise of God, Isaiah, 42d chapter, and the fulfillment of the prophecy in Luke, where Christ came to fulfill the same. Superintendents of departments reported good work done.

Lunch was served in such a manner that the ladies who prepared it were not deterred from enjoying the meeting, which is a very desirable feature; it consisted of sandwiches, tea and coffee.

During the afternoon session the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, The Woman's Christian Temperance Union in convention assembled, knowing that it is the custom with many to serve wine, punches, etc., at the New Year receptions, and the result of the same being temptation placed in the way of young men, do most earnestly plead with the mothers wives and sisters who will be hostesses on that day all over this city, to abolish all alcoholic drinks from their receptions, and so help us save the young men and women for whom Christ died.

The above was published in the Evening Star, which has a very large circulation. It was decided by a vote of fifty-seven to send a protest in regard to alcoholics being sold at the Columbian Exposition.

The following resolution was also passed:

WHEREAS, Hon. John M. Mason, United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has recently made a tour of inspection of the leading distilleries in Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina and Illinois, and, whereas, Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular editorially says: "He was much pleased with what he saw and spoke in high praise of his entertainment, etc., saying the trip was of great benefit to him in giving him practical insight into the service, and into contact with a number of gentlemen who had close business relations with his office, etc." And

WHEREAS, The Honorable Commissioner, in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, gives us the aggregate of special liquor tax-payers as 254,469, who though representing great wealth and are an especially protected class under the government, are still a small minority of our 60,000,000 of people. Therefore,

Resolved, That we deplore the attitude of our government toward these destroyers of everything that is pure and lovely in our homes and nation, and deeply regret the personal and active and approving interest which our Commissioner of Internal Revenue apparently takes in this desolating business, and we entertain grave doubts that any official can so far aid in promoting a nation's curse, and still be true to the declaration that the first concern of all good government should be the temperance and sobriety of its citizens.

L. C. KESSLER,
District Reporter, Washington.

Official Communications.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following minute, prepared by Lady Henry Somerset, comes from the officers of the World's W. C. T. U.:

The general officers of the World's W. C. T. U. record with profound sorrow the loss of one whose presence at their first convention so recently held, was one of its brightest inspirations. Miss Julia Ames was loved and admired, not only by her American sisters, but she had won the hearts of England's women during her brief sojourn in that country, and across the water many loyal souls will echo the voice of mourning which is heard in this land. Her rare talent and her great gifts had earned her a place of almost unprecedented importance for one so young; but of her it may be well said: "The best of any life escapes record; its fragrance and beauty and song, its joy and its pathos are too evanescent for memorial."

We do not understand the reason why our Heavenly Father deemed it to be well that she should be sent as our World's delegate to the "land that is very far off," we only know the Master had need of her and that as her life was consecrated to His service, so it may be He had work that we know not of for her to do. On her the choice has fallen, and we who sorrow, yet for her rejoice, echo the words of one to whom it has been given to see much of the mystery beyond, and say with Hannah Whitall Smith, "Happy Yolande." Our deepest sympathy is with the hearts that, bound to her by the ties of blood and closest friendship, sorrow most or all.

Our tenderest thanks are offered to those true comrades whose medical skill and loving, faithful hands tended her during the long hours of her illness and death.

We look in sure and certain hope to the day when we shall meet that great, loyal heart again. We feel that the time is short, and it remains for us who linger here awhile, devotedly to carry forward that work for the great suffering world for which she was ready to lay down her fair and brave young life.

World's W. C. T. U.
FRANCES E. WILLARD, Pres.
ISABEL SOMERSET, V. P. at large.
MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Sec.
ANNA A. GORDON, Ass't Sec
ELLA WILLIAMS, Treas.

DR. KATE MITCHELL'S ITINERARY.

To our White-Ribbon Comrades:

Dr. Kate Mitchell, of London, Eng., a thoroughly educated physician and a popular lecturer on the scientific aspects of the temperance question, has made an excellent reputation on the temperance and suffrage platform in England. Dr. Mitchell is now in America and we wish strongly to recommend her to the local unions. Dr. Mitchell contemplates a trip to the Pacific Coast and we hope our state and local presidents will correspond with Mrs. R. A. Emmons, secretary of the Lecture Bureau, 161 La Salle street, Chicago, concerning her engagements.

ISABEL SOMERSET,
FRANCES E. WILLARD.

THE WORLD'S PETITION.

Thanks, good friends! Your many questions show your interest in the great petition, and cheer the hearts of those having charge of the work, but they are so numerous that if any seem to be overlooked, please think they are to be texts for other epistles.

We want millions of signatures that we may say to rulers of every land as we present the petition, Herein and hereby the will of the people is expressed."

1. We want the names of women who are the petitioners.

2. We want the names of men (on another copy of the petition) who approve and indorse this effort of the mothers and sisters of every land.

3. We want an expression of approval from public assemblies, organizations, societies, orders, etc: 1st, to call the attention of the people to the endeavor of the World's W. C. T. U.; 2d, to prove that the general trend of public opinion is in harmony with it.

4. Only persons over twenty-one years of age should sign.

5. We are thoroughly constitutional, inasmuch as the right of citizens to sign this petition "shall not be denied nor abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." We would welcome the signature of the President of the United States, or the ruler of any nation, and their humblest subject.

6. Will each person sending for blanks give the number desired? Each canvasser must have two copies, one for women, one for men; thus when ordering, multiply the number of canvassers by two, and send us the result as the number of copies needed for your locality.

7. With the date of your letter or card please give the name of your town (or city), and the state, as Boston, Mass.

8. Many have written: "If there is any charge and you will inform us, we shall be happy to remit." There is no charge, but the expense is great, and those who wish to lighten the financial burden of the World's W. C. T. U. can do so by sending postage with the order; one cent for four or six blanks, two cents for double the number. When circulars, reports or literature are to be added, the postage is somewhat increased. This is a small amount to each local union, but in the aggregate a large sum for the World's union.

9. All blanks however to be used are of the same form, but easily adapted to all proposed use. At the close of the petition are the words, "The above petition is heartily indorsed by." When the petition is circulated for signatures of women (they being petitioners, not indorsers) run your pencil through those words, in all other cases let them stand. First, for signatures of leading men (against whose names should always appear their profession or occupation). Second, for indorsement of churches, societies, etc. In places of ordinary size (not large cities) all churches can place their indorsement upon one blank, as:

The M. E. Church, Burlington, Vt.	300 Members, M. E. Jones, pastor.

This will fill but two lines, and other churches may follow, each taking the same space, and if more room is required, paper can be pasted across the bottom of the sheet.

10. It will be impossible to transport the immense roll of signatures the wide world over, but we can, first, display every foot of it at the Columbian Exposition, at Chicago, in the most advantageous manner; and second, copies of the petition in sufficient number can be printed on linen, to which can be appended the names of the highest officials in each nation who are petitioners, with the exact number of women in the land who join with them in the plea; a record of the societies and the number of their membership, who indorse the petition, also of government officials, of ministers, lawyers, merchants, physicians, etc., etc., and the aggregate of all these for the world. But to have these of convincing power, the petition itself must exceed anything before known, and we believe the W. C. T. U. is the organization through which such victory will be achieved.

(The above is the method of presentation now proposed which will, however, without doubt, expand as the days go on, and if we, with those who indorse our effort, "pray without ceasing," have we not reason to hope, that as leading Christian women stand face to face with the rulers of the earth, pleading for the protection of their homes, the Spirit of the Lord will move upon the royal hearts to grant the request?)

11. Send all petitions, when signed, to Miss Alice Briggs, office secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill., and send for blanks to

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
Sec. World's W. C. T. U
Ravenna, Ohio.

THE NEW EDUCATION.

The department created at Atlanta, and from prevailing habit of expression rather than fitness of term, called Physical Culture, has passed its first year. This has been devoted to preparatory effort. All plans for the future have kept faithfully in view the work mapped out by the National Executive—viz:—securing eventually, laws in the states that shall make physical education a part of the public school system.

Experience with scientific temperance has taught us that general favorable sentiment should precede the enactment of law, in order to secure proper enforcement with any marked degree of success. In this department the coming year shall be faithfully spent preparing the way for legislation.

It will not be difficult to-day to persuade a listening public that something is seriously lacking in the training of our children; but when we come to talk of making systematic, progressive, physical education a success in all grades, with the limited facilities of the ordinary school-room, we need something more practical than utterances from the platform. Under this imperative demand, the department has been fortunate in calling to its assistance as "associate," Miss R. Anna Morris, of Des Moines, Iowa, who is not only well versed in physical love, and properly equipped in every respect for conducting popular classes, but has had an experience of four years at Des Moines, testing successfully her plans for adapting this education to the various grades in the public schools. This addition to the department promises much for the coming twelve months.

The National Department will make all engagements for Miss Morris, furnishing to unions information necessary to conduct a series of lessons in practical work, covering a period of two weeks in each place.

Such an engagement will include ten lessons for an adult class (married and young ladies) ten lessons for a junior class of boys and girls; six normal lessons in the school-room, with pupils and teachers; three lectures and a closing "public," exhibiting the management of these classes, with some of the results of class drill. The services of Miss Morris as elocutionist—whose testimonials in this direction also are of the highest order—cannot fail to make the "public" an enjoyable, as well as profitable, evening, in any community. An eclectic system is used, including the Delsarte principles of expression.

These engagements will begin in February. The "Plan of Work" is already in available form; also the circular giving instructions in detail for such a school. These, with a copy of the three department leaflets, can then be obtained by sending ten cents in money or stamps. If suitable effort is made, there need be no financial risk. On the contrary it is possible to leave in the home treasury a surplus.

Miss Morris stands, preëminently, a teacher and specialist, and is not a stranger among the educators of the country. She comes to the front in W. C. T. U. work at a significant time, and with a consecrated purpose of heart. States desiring her services are requested to make application to me at once, and efforts will be made to name dates as speedily as possible.

Address all letters of inquiry to

MRS. FRANCES W. LEITER,
Mansfield, O. Nat. Supt. Physical Culture

TREASURERS' ENVELOPES.

Again is your attention called to the treasurer's or the adaptation of the envelope system to our needs. No better contrivance can be made for a sure income. It is also equally adapted to churches and Sabbath schools, and has the highest commendation from the Christian Endeavor. Hear what one pastor says:

NEWFIELD, N. J., Dec. 11, 189
MISS ESTHER PUGH:

Dear Friend:—We received the Powell Envelope Outfit from you about two months since. We are delighted with it. It has greatly increased our revenue. The contributors take to it grandly. Everybody here in the church, and there is no fuss about it. Wishing you abundant success and God's blessing, I am respectfully

J. E. KEYLOR,
Pastor Newfield Baptist Church.

The price has been greatly reduced; we have a few which we are very anxious to dispose of. Price three dollars a set, sent at our expense. Address,

MISS ESTHER PUGH,
Evanston, Ill.

QUALIFICATIONS OF FOREIGN VOTERS.

As numerous inquiries have come relative to the qualifications of voters in the several states I will be glad to give the names of the states where aliens can vote in one year after coming into such states. The list was made up to January, 1891, and was corrected up to that date by the Attorneys General of the respective states.

There are eleven states that give aliens the right to vote with one year's residence in the state. These are; Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Louisiana, Missouri, North Dakota, Oregon, Texas, Wisconsin, New York, West Virginia and Massachusetts. The first eight of these require the alien to file his intention to become a citizen, New York, that he has been a citizen of the state ten days; West Virginia, that he be a citizen of the state (not the United States). Massachusetts goes further than any of the others in requiring that the person desiring to vote be able to read the constitution, and to write, and has paid tax since coming in. How many of her hundreds of thousands of Irish voters are ever required to put the ability to read the constitution to the test, is a conundrum.

Six states require only a six months' residence in the state and the filing of an intention to become a citizen. These states are Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, Michigan, South Dakota and Wyoming. In Minnesota the alien can vote in four months after landing if he has immediately declared his intention to become a citizen.

This gives us eighteen states where the foreigner can vote in one year after arriving in the state and he can reach any of these states within five days after landing on our shores. The laws of these states are not in harmony with the United States law, which requires a residence of five years, before becoming a citizen of the Union; but such states act in harmony with their several constitutions which give the right to their legislatures to define the qualifications of voters.

MRS. S. F. GRUBB,
Nat'l Sup't Work among Foreigners.

PARLOR WORK.

Owing to a severe attack of La Grippe, induced by a heavy cold contracted in Boston and followed by the alarming illness of my husband, it has been impossible to get out the new plan of work which I had expected to issue by the first of the year. I trust soon to be again actively engaged in my work, as my husband is mending and the physicians give hope that he may entirely recover. Superintendents desiring to order fifty or one hundred of the new plan for state work, or county superintendents for county work, please notify at once,

MRS. ANNA M. HAMMER,
Seminary, 43d and Chestnut Streets.
Philadelphia, Pa.

THE MINERS' DEPARTMENT.

At the late meeting of the National W. C. T. U., work among the miners was made a regular department. Mining is one of the leading industries of our nation, and because of its utility is of interest to every citizen. Unlike most industries, whenever there is any irregularity in its productions by way of "strikes," or other hindrance it reaches into every home and fireside. Because of reasons which will be given through other channels, there is need of special work among all classes of miners. We earnestly urge all states and territories having any kind of mines in their boundaries, to take up this department and appoint a superintendent who will write at once to me that we may be able to get the department in good working order before our next annual gathering.

Will all state superintendents now at work in this department write to me, giving their names, addresses and an outline of their work? I desire this information as soon as possible, as it is necessary to prepare some literature having a direct bearing on this subject. Will each state president make a note of this, and see that action is taken as soon as it can be?

MRS. W. F. ENGLISH,
Nat. Supt. Work among Miners.
1441 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

Publisher's Dept.

A Soliloquy.

wor
com
the
and an dor pre as h wh is t
Mr
has quir
tion
the of s mer tior
wha exp
the mo
C wl
th pr sp en hi
he r g
s w

iss Willard is editor-in-chief of THE ION SIGNAL!

ady Henry Somerset is one of the edit-, too!

Why, these are the wonderful women th attracted such large crowds at Boston, that thousands were turned away disappointed!

How I would love to see them!

And if I could have a few words with em—why, I should remember it as long I live!

And if one of them should write me a tter, how I should treasure it!

And they are going to write for THE UNION SIGNAL every week!

Why, that is writing to me! Funny I never thought of it before!

And I can get a letter from each of them for the price of a postage stamp to put on one! Well, I declare! I never thought of it that way before!

A letter from two notable women each week, and much good reading besides, for the price of one postage stamp!

It is the cheapest thing I ever heard tell of!

I will hurry and send my subscription, and get my friends to send, too. I am sure Mrs. Jones, and Mrs. Smith, and Mr. Evans, and many others will be glad to send if they understand what they can get for two cents. I will raise a club right away!

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Special Offer to Ladies.—If you secure a Life Insurance policy in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association before January 1st, you pay no membership fee. Write at once for particulars. Geo. E. Godward, Sec'y, 187 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Childhood, Its Care and Culture.

Encouraged by the last year's record, we are now ready to push the interests of this book harder than ever. We shall appoint agents wherever such are not already at work, as we believe (and experience proves) that a larger number will thus be introduced than if simply for sale at this office. Hundreds of dollars were paid in commissions to our agents during 1891, and many had reason for gratitude for pecuniary aid through the agency. It is a fact that you can earn several dollars per day by becoming our agent, not to speak of the good and added impetus thereby given to the temperance cause!

Here are a few adjectives which denote the character of the book:

CRISP,
COMPLETE,
PRACTICAL,
INTERESTING,
EASY TO UNDERSTAND.

Will it sell? Judging by the large number of orders for 10, 20, and as many as 50 books, it undoubtedly both has "taken" and will in the future.

It sells just as well now as before the holidays—in many places, better. We want an agent in every town and village; the one first applying will be appointed. Can you afford to miss the opportunity? Friends, it is an opportunity to better yourselves and to do untold good.

As an inducement to hard-working agents, we allow a special commission when 20 have been sold.

A complete outfit will be sent prepaid for $1.00; and this amount will be refunded when the agent has sold twelve books; it is therefore practically a Free Outfit.

Will you not respond now? If unable to take up the work yourself we would appreciate it highly to have your assistance in getting some one else to canvass your town. Address,

SUBS'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Have You Asthma?

Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn., will mail a trial package of SCHIFFMANN'S ASTHMA CURE free to any sufferer. He advertises by giving it away. Never fails to give instant relief in worst cases, and cures where others fail. Name THE UNION SIGNAL, and send your address for a free trial package.

Van Houten's Cocoa—Send for a can.—See advts.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer who will send me their Express and P. O. address.
T. A. Slocum, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

NEW QUEEN CARNATIONS.

All Colors and Shades

OFFER No. 1.—The enormous size of these rare Carnations and their rich fragrance, together with the wonderful growth of the plants and profusion of bloom is something astonishing. This class far surpasses the Marguerite Carnations, which we introduced last season. Many of the flowers measure over 2½ inches in diameter, and are of the most dazzling shades and colors, ranging from the deepest crimson to the lightest shades of cream and pink, and nearly all are PERFECTLY DOUBLE.

Sow this seed in the house, January, February or March, and you will have these magnificent plants covered with their beautiful blossoms through the entire spring and summer. They may be taken into the house in the fall and they will continue in bloom all winter.

This superb class originated in Italy, and we offer them for the first time this season. At an enormous price we succeeded in obtaining a supply of the seed direct from headquarters. Price, 25c. per pkt., 3 pkts. for 60c.

An Amaryllis FREE to readers of the

The Amaryllis is one of the loveliest flowers in cultivation, and as easy to grow as a geranium, but on account of its high price it has not been within the reach of every one; many of them cost as high as $8 or $10 each. The Mexicana is one of the most beautiful of these plants, growing rapidly, and throwing out grand blossoms of a rich, velvety scarlet color, fine for either pot or out-door culture.

TO INTRODUCE OUR SEEDS we will send 1 bulb of this rare Amaryllis free to every person who names this paper, gives number of offer and sends us 25c. in silver or postal note (not stamps), for a packet of these superb Carnations.

Grand Upright Piano VALUED AT $650 and thousands of other desirable premiums will be distributed among our patrons this season.

OUR CATALOGUE the finest illustrated work of this kind ever published, containing colored plates, and over 80 pages of NOVELTIES will tell you all about the premiums. This book will be mailed free to all ordering a packet of this seed, or on receipt of 25c., which amount may be deducted from the first order sent us.

THIS OFFER WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN
L. L. MAY & CO., St. Paul, Minn.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE
Fairbank's Gold Dust Washing Powder.

Raise The BIGGEST PONDEROSA TOMATO
AND BOTH
GLORY and PROFIT AWAIT YOU.

FOR WE WILL PAY
$500.00
FOR THE Heaviest Single Fruits
OF PONDEROSA
A TOMATO

so valuable that we paid $250 last year for the NAME alone when sold under the No. "400."
This year we think more of it than ever and to aid in making its merits still wider known we have doubled the amount of the money prizes.

NOW THEN FOR 1892 WE OFFER $500.00
for the heaviest single fruits raised from seeds of Ponderosa bought in 1892 in our sealed packets. Full details in Catalogue mentioned below, where also its fine qualities are told at length. It should be grown in

Every Garden in the Land

because the essential features of EARLINESS, SIZE, WEIGHT, COLOR, SOLIDITY and QUALITY, that make the ideal Tomato, this Ponderosa variety possesses in the superlative degree. Delicate persons will always prefer it because it is nearly seedless.

Price per packet 20c, 6 packets for $1, 12 packets for $1.75, 25 packets for $3.

DON'T FORGET, that with every order for a packet or more we will send FREE, our CATALOGUE of EVERYTHING for the GARDEN, (which alone costs us 25 cents) provided you will state where you saw this advertisement. This Catalogue of 150 pages is bound in illuminated covers, and is the largest and handsomest ever issued. It is replete with many engravings and colored plates of all that is new and desirable in SEEDS and PLANTS.

If Catalogue alone is wanted, we will mail it on receipt of 25 cts., which amount can be deducted on first order from Catalogue. Postage stamps accepted as cash.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35 & 37 Cortland Street, NEW YORK.

Metal Tipped. EVER READY DRESS STAY Will Not Cut Through.

See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.

Acknowledged the BEST DRESS STAY On the Market

Made with Gutta Percha on both sides of steel and warranted water-proof. All other stays are made differently and will rust. Beware of Imitations. Take none but the "Ever Ready."

Manufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

SPECIAL DEPOTS. { MODEL DRESS STEEL CO., 74 Grand St., New York. BROWN & METZNER, 535 Market Street, San Francisco.

LADY Agents $5 a day sure; new rubber undergarment. Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago, Ill.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory. Agents Wanted. Also DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

LADY wanted, on salary, to sell Roses, Shrubs, &c Brown Bros. Nurym'n, Rochester, N.Y. & Chicago

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

THE
Owen Electric Belt
AND APPLIANCES
For Men and Women
Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.
They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.
CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.
A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in
OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.
[Trade Mark.] DR. A. OWEN.
The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,
Main Office and only Factory,
191-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.
The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE.
A Christian woman's narrative of Mission work done "In His Name" in tough places, revealing the "inner life" of the underworld of New York "as seen by a woman." It describes Gospel work in the slums, and gives a famous detective's 30 years experiences. By Mrs. Helen Campbell, Col. Thos. W. Knox, and Inspector Thos. Byrnes (Chief of the N. Y. Detectives). With 250 engravings from flash-light photographs of scenes in Darkest New York by Day and by Night. Pure and good, full of tears and smiles, it is an ally of Temperance, a witness to the power of the Gospel,—a book for every home. Ministers say, "God speed it." Eminent women endorse it. 5,000 Agents Wanted, Men and Women. $200 a month made. Distance is no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to
A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

SIR HENRY THOMPSON, the most noted physician of England, says that more than half of all diseases come from errors in diet.
Send for Free Sample of Garfield Tea to 319 West 45th Street, New York City.
GARFIELD TEA Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

How to Make a Fortune.
WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line, or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser—Patents recently issued Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new; will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1 with circulars, price-lists and terms Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO No. 184 Hermon St., Worcester Mass.

STUDY LAW At Home.
Take a Course in the Sprague Correspondence School of Law. (Incorporated.) Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH.
525 Whitney Block.

Good Paper 3c
Gold Paper 5c
THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT
PEATS sells the best, the cheapest & does the largest business in
WALL PAPER
If you have any use whatever for Wall Paper, do not fail to send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent Free. Agents sample books, $1. 136-138 W. Madison-st. Chicago.

I CURE FITS!
When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office.
H. G. ROOT, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City. 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths.
Address, CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

WALL PAPER Attractive styles. Extremely low prices. 100 samples sent for 8 cts. Prices 5c. to 50c. a roll. A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St. Phila. Pa.

Publisher's Dep't.

One More Week.

Just one more week, and the "Golden Opportunity" we have extended to you, by which you may secure the best temperance and literary paper in the country, and some of the best historical, biographical books, will expire. You cannot afford to let it go unimproved. We will therefore state once more, for your benefit, what we can do for you in this direction. Read through, and then write to us. This offer is for old or new subscribers alike.

Offer A.

We will send to any address the following books and papers, selling price, $5.55, on receipt of $2.75 and 40c extra for express charges:

The Life of Gen. Grant, bound in cloth, 734 pp., $2.50.
Life of Sherman, cloth, 608 pp., $1.50.
Life of Sheridan, cloth, 224 pp., $1.00.
Drummond's addresses:
The Greatest Thing in the World,
Pax Vobiscum,
The Changed Life,
"First!"—A Talk with Boys,
How to Learn How, in one volume bound in heavy paper, $.35.
Miss Willard's Annual Address, $.10.
Red Letter Day Calendar, $.10.

Offer B.

Or we will send THE UNION SIGNAL, one year; Miss Willard's Annual Address; the Red Letter Day Calendar, and Drummond's Essays, worth $1.55, for $1.15.

Offer C.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year and the Life of Gen. Grant, worth $3.50, for $1.50.

Offer D.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year; Life of Sherman and Miss Willard's Annual Address, worth $2.60, for $1.50.

Offer E.

THE UNION SIGNAL, one year, with Miss Willard's address and the Life of Sheridan, worth $2.10, for $1.25.

Offer F.

THE UNION SIGNAL with the Life of Grant, Life of Sherman and Miss Willard's Address, worth $5.10, for $2.00.

We require that when ordering you should add postage for these books: The Life of Grant, 21c.; The Life of Sherman, 15c.; The Life of Sheridan, 7c.; Drummond's Essays, 5c.

These are the greatest bargains we have ever announced.

The books will prove a desirable addition to any library, and be especially valuable in homes where there are children, as they give in interesting form valuable historical information.

For five new subscriptions at $1.00 each, we will send the Life of Grant or the Life of Sherman without extra charge except postage. In order to get the book, the five names, with the amount, $5.00, must be sent in at once.

Remember, the above outlined privileges are for the benefit of old and new subscribers alike. Do not fail to avail yourself of this unequaled opportunity to get the best of books for almost nothing.

This offer is good until Jan. 31, 1892.

Address,
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

THE most individual and complete journal of reform that this country has produced thus far is Our Day, edited by Joseph Cook, of Boston, and now published by our own house. It is a high compliment to us that this magazine, for several years printed by the famous Riverside Press, should have been given to us to issue; and we are equally proud of the first number, just at hand, with its clear-cut type, excellent paper and ship-shape appearance. It was like its famous editor, known as a man who has always the courage of his convictions, to perceive that women could do this work well enough to meet even his own fastidious standard. If our white ribbon women would keep abreast of the various phases of reform in this country and abroad, and would refresh themselves by the robust, courageous, God-smitten utterances of its editor, let them send to our business manager, Mrs. F. H. Rastall, for a specimen copy, and then keep on sending for other copies.

Frances E. Willard

Send for Color Samples and Price List. Patented February 23, 1887. Examine closely Stamp on inside of Waist
TAKE NO OTHER.

THE GENUINE JACKSON CORSET WAISTS
ARE MADE ONLY BY THE
JACKSON CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.
The manufacturer's name is printed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of clasp in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. You should have one of them.

BE SURE and GET the RIGHT THING.

Large Profit in Chicago Real Estate
Large or Small Investors
Can make money by Calling on
ELLSWORTH Land Association,
Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.
We pay your R. R. fare.

16% and Sure Profit-Sharing.
An Absolutely New System of
REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT
Address A. A. HOPKINS, 13 Astor Place, New York

COE & CONVERSE, Fort Atkinson, Wis.
Offer a large stock of best Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Vines and Plants adapted to the cold Northwest. Also choice Seed Potatoes. Send for descriptive priced Catalogue. Established 1879.

"HOME OF THE WHALEBACK."
$100 LOTS. Send for our paper on investments, "How to Get Rich."—Joseph L. Henvis & Co., West Superior, Wis.

SEA MOSS
From the Pacific Ocean, out of which any one can easily make beautiful Booklets, Cards and Souvenirs. Large Sample with full instructions by mail, postpaid, Ten Cents. Address, The Pacific Souvenir Co., Anaheim, California.

Lincoln Tea, guaranteed to cure constipation Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and complexion purifier. Send for sample.
McLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.
Sold by all druggists.

DRUNKENNESS cured by using BOSTON DRUG, Absolute secrecy guaranteed or money refunded. Price $1, All druggists, or by mail, W. R. BROWN & CO., 105 Chauncey St., Boston.

MORE MONEY IS MADE
Every year by agents working for us than for any other Company; why don't you make some of it? our circulars which we send free will tell you how. We pay salary or commission as party prefers, and want you now. OUTFIT FREE. Address at once,
Standard Silver Ware Co., Boston, Mass.

GENUINE STANDARD SINGER
Sewing Machines. Latest improved. Best made. Noiseless. Warranted 5 yrs.
SAVE MONEY now while you can get a $35.00 Machine for $9.50
$45.00 " " $14.00
$55.00 " " $18.50
Complete set of attachments FREE. Adapted for light or heavy work. Light running Nicely finished. Send for catalogue.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 358-366 Dearborn St. B, 149 Chicago.

BEST STEEL WIRE FENCING Woven Wire.

WIRE ROPE SELVAGE the BEST.
PRICES REDUCED. Sold by dealers. FREIGHT PAID.
McMULLEN'S POULTRY NETTING. Newthing. No sagging! No bagging! Extra Heavy Selvage.
The McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago, Ill

A MAN TRAVELING BETWEEN Chicago and Denver SHOULD TAKE THE CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC
FAST VESTIBULED TRAINS, DINING CARS
VAN BUREN STREET DEPOT.
E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager. JNO. SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass'r Agt.
THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH
Estab'd in Chicago, '70. 3 Years in Cincinnati. Ret'd to Chicago, '91.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 State St., Chicago

RUPTURE CURED!
AXION ELASTIC TRUSS
(PATENT ALLOWED.)
Positively Holds Rupture.
WORN NIGHT AND DAY.
Has an Adjustable Pad which can be made larger or smaller to suit changing condition of rupture.
Illustrated Catalogue sent securely sealed by
G. V. HOUSE MFG. CO.
744 BROADWAY, N. Y. CITY

DRUNKENNESS is A DISEASE and can be Cured by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given without the knowledge of the patient, if desired, by placing it in coffee, tea or articles of food. Cures guaranteed. Send for free circulars. GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

F. P. VAN VALKENBURGH, Former Associate Physician and Surgeon to the Old People's Home, 3858 Indiana Avenue, Chicago, also examining Physician for the New York Life Insurance Co. Cures Drunkenness, Morphine, Opium, and destroys the desire for Tobacco. Cures guaranteed. Correspondence solicited Reference: Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Office, 103 State-st. Chicago

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept. G
C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

PILES INSTANT RELIEF. Cure in 15 days. Never returns. No purge. No Salve. No suppository. Remedy mailed free. Add. J. H. Reeves. Box 3290, N. Y. City, N. Y.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N. Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

ECZEMA NO CURE! NO PAY! Address DR. ROSS Grand Rapids, Mich.

TAPE WORM Removed alive, head and all, in three hours at your home. No starving required. Safe, sure and certain. Circulars free. 269 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. L. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or commission, to handle the new Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g Co., LaCrosse, Wis. X 213.

WANTED! A Christian lady in every township to do writing at home. Pleasant, remunerative work, requiring only a portion of each day's time. Address The Yale Hygiene Co. Agency Department, New Haven, Conn.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send only five cents and receive a Large, Elegant Fashion Catalogue and how to secure 50c. worth of dress patterns, FREE Add. Young Lady's Bazar. 230 La Salle St., Chicago.

LADY AGENTS $10 DAILY selling "Victoria Protector" and rubber goods for Ladies & Children. Sample "Victoria" by mail $1. Mrs. L. E. Singleton, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

"Once tried, Used Always."

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Best & Goes Farthest."

"Confound those Boys! They are Always asking for 'More' since the Board introduced VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA."

BUMBLE.

PERFECTLY PURE.

VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS increases by 50 PER CENT. the solubility of the flesh-forming elements, making of the cocoa bean an easily digested, delicious, nourishing and stimulating drink, readily assimilated even by the most delicate.

☞If not obtainable from your grocer, enclose 25 cts. to either VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, 106 Reade Street, New York, or 45 Wabash Ave., Chicago, and a can containing enough for 35 to 40 cups will be mailed. Mention this publication. Prepared only by the inventors VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, Weesp, Holland.

The Standard Cocoa of the World. 38.

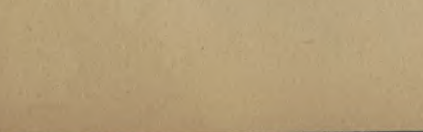
103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTIGIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

DRESSMAKERS We offer you Dress Bone FREE for a short time only. For further information address WARREN FEATHERBONE CO., Three Oaks, Mich.

DO YOU HAVE TROUBLE In trying to keep your Bangs and Curls in position? If so, send 50c. to A. B. AUSTIN, Manufacturer of Toilet Specialties, 627 N. 8th St., Terre Haute, Ind., for a bottle of COLUMBIAN CURLING CREAM, which will turn your trouble into joy.

THE NEW IDEAL EMBROIDERY MACHINE.

Perfectly Simple. Requires no Skill. Far Superior to any other



3 sized needles with each machine. We offer agents liberal terms. Send your address and get catalogue with new designs free. NEW IDEAL EMBROIDERY MACHINE CO., 44 S. Clinton-st., Chicago.

Normandie Plushes

Direct from the Mills. For HAT and DRESS TRIMMINGS. SPECIAL MERIT for Painting, Embroidery, and all kinds of Fancy Work. Send 10c. for 30 good sized samples (no two colors same shade) and price list of remnant packages. Price of samples deducted from first order amounting to $1.00. Agents Wanted. Pleasant and profitable work. CONTREXEVILLE MFG. CO. 312, Grant Ave. Manville, R. I.

DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.

Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL. Ladies $1.50 Misses 1.25 Children. 60

Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best.

Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory.

Agents wanted everywhere. H. A. Thomas & Co., Manf'g 465 W. VanBuren St. Chicago.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid

Keeps the hair in curl for days. No Odor or Sediment. Harmless. Gives vigor and beauty to hair, increases its growth. A toilet necessity. At druggists or sent prepaid 50c. LADY AGENTS wanted. DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (11) LaSalle St., Chicago.

ESPEY'S FRAGRANT CREAM.

Cures Chapped Hands, Face, Lips, or any irritation of the skin. Is a scientific food and tonic for the skin and complexion. Prevents tendency to wrinkles or ageing of the skin. Keeps the face and hands soft, smooth and plump. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM warranted to hold the Hair in Curl, Bangs and Frizzes. Is absolutely harmless. Both preparations for sale by dealers everywhere. Inclose 2-cent stamp for free Card Case to P. B. KEYS, 405 State St., Chicago, Ill.

FOR MANY LADIES THE KABO CORSET IS THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION. ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN CLOTHES BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP OR BY ALL GUARANTEED CHICAGO CORSET CO.

Publisher's Dept.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy, per year, in advance,	$1.00
" " " not in advance,	1.50
" " " 3 months,	.25
" " " 1 month,	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies,	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price, per year,	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly edition, one copy (12 Nos.) per annum,	.15
Per 100 copies,	1.00

Address all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Now is the Time.

The new eight-page Young Crusader is highly appreciated by its subscribers, and many kind words are constantly being received through the mails. For instance:

Hurrah for the neat, bright and natty Young Crusader! I am sure our young folks will like it better than ever. It is like a pretty bird out in a bran new coat. And, best of all, its song is clear and true. May the young soldier prosper more and more, and bring thousands of new recruits into our blessed army. "For God and Home and Every Land," is the wish and prayer of FRANCES E. WILLARD.

I think the Young Crusader, in its new form, will meet the wants of the times. I am pleased with it and will do what I can to have the Sunday-schools become acquainted with it. K. V. STEVENS,
State Supt. S. S. Work, Wisconsin.

I have read the Young Crusader, and am well pleased with it. It is well adapted both for Sunday-schools and L. T. L's. At my request it was put into our Sunday-school last year, and we have decided to take it again this year. I presume our order has reached you. Am very desirous to have it for temperance Sunday, January 17th. Sincerely,
MRS. G. S. BARNES,
State Supt. S. S. Work, Michigan.

A copy of the Young Crusader, in its new form, is received. I am much pleased with the change.

I shall aid its circulation as much as is in my power during the coming year. I am sincerely, CLARA W. MUMFORD,
State Supt. L. T. L. Work, Maine.

But we cannot take more space at this time. If you cannot accept such testimony, just send for sample copy.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A Good Example.

The state superintendent of literature for the Illinois W. C. T. U. sets a good example to others. The January number of the state paper, The Watchtower, contains a letter full of good suggestions. We would like to copy it all but have not space. For the benefit of others we reproduce a single paragraph, hoping many may profit by it:

"How many unions in Illinois would like to own a library of W. T. P. A. publications? How many will make the start this year? Begin by buying all the leaflets bearing on our work; get as many of these stitched in sets as possible. We need these for the use of our members, as well as to lend to those whom we wish to interest in some special work. The department manuals should be owned by every union. Books for older ones, and then the good, pure books especially for the young. Look over the catalogue of publications and make your selections. Every union making a start, however small, in this direction, and adding from time to time one or two books, as they can afford, will in a short time have as their property a nice little library. What union will try? Write to me and see if we cannot help each other. Do not ay, 'By and by we will make the effort.' Yesterday I read these words: 'By the street of By and By one arrives at the house of Never. Putting off means leaving off. Going to do, is going undone.' 'There is no room in all the infinite future for a single deed that ought to be done now.'"

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A NOVELTY OF STERLING MERIT. TRIED AND PROVED.

Praised by all who have tasted it. Flavor very rich.

Ears medium size, 12 rows, average over 500 kernels!

Price, 15 cents per packet. Try it. Sure to please

Send Ten Cents for VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, which gives full particulars of above, and over 2,000 favorite Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Plants, &c.

Price of Floral Guide can be deducted on first order, or sent free with an order for any of our novelties. These occasionally give out, SO ORDER EARLY.

Twenty-two 1892 Novelties.

"Brilliant" Poppy,	15c.
6 Rare Chrysanthemums, Each 50c.; Set	$2.50
6 Choice Geraniums, Each 25c.; Set	$1.00
Dwarf Calliopsis "Golden King,"	20c.
2 Elegant Roses, both	50c.
Ten Weeks Stock "New Imperial,"	30c.
Tulip-flowered Poppy,	25c.
Garden Pea "Charmer,"	15c.
Sweet Corn "Golden Nugget,"	15c.
XXX Potato "American Wonder," 1 lb.	30c.
New 40-lb. Oat. Given for trial.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE mailed free with any of the above.

Any one not now a subscriber can have VICK'S MAGAZINE 1 year free, who orders $1.00 worth from us, before May 1st.

JAMES VICK'S SONS

Mention where you saw this. Rochester, N. Y.

"The Crime of Not Insuring"

It may be plead in defense that old line companies charge so much and are so extravagant, and that assessment companies are so insecure, that it is no crime to refuse to trade with them. However that may be, here is a company which is NEITHER EXTRAVAGANT NOR INSECURE.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION . . . . OF AMERICA . . . . . .

Has its plans and rates adjusted to Insure at cost. Having only total abstainers as members, "cost" is reduced at least 30 per cent. under the charges of old line companies. Its expense account is $3.00 per $1,000—and cannot be more—instead of $9.32 per $1,000, the average of old companies. It has a guarantee fund of $64,000 securely invested. It stands almost, if not quite alone in paying one hundred cents on the dollar of every honest claim since its incorporation, July 24th, 1889. It has achieved, in two and one-half years, a success which old companies took about three times as long to reach. The company stands among business enterprises as an object lesson on total abstinence, which every good citizen should recognize.

WM. F. SINGLETON, PRESIDENT.
902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

COLD BLAST Feathers and Feather Pillows

NO ODOR Cold Blast CHICAGO STEAM RENOVATED

ARE SOLD GUARANTEED Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.

ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM. IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO. MANUFACTURERS OF FAULTLESS BEDDING CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. MOCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

GOITRE, or THICK NECK. I have a Positive, Speedy, Harmless and almost Inexpensive Cure. Come or write to me at 28 Livingstone Street, Cleveland, Ohio. It is no Iodine Smear. Cure made Permanent. Dr. J. Caskey.

GOD AND HOME AND NATIVE LAND.—Introduction by Miss Willard. Contributions by 400 world's best authors; a home book for father, mother, son and daughter; everybody will want it. Agents can make $10 a day selling it. Group picture of fifty-eight distinguished people, size 18 by 20 inches given away. Write for terms. EASTERN PUBLISHING CO., Boston, Mass.

BABY CARRIAGES. We sell direct to customers. Delivered free to any point in U. S. Cat. free. Chas. Raiser, Mfr, 62 Clybourn av, Chicago

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

BABY CARRIAGES ARE DELIVERED FREE to any place in the United States. Also Baby JUMPERS, BICYCLES, SAFETIES and GIRLS' TRICYCLES. One or more at wholesale price sent C. O. D. direct from L. G. SPENCER'S Factory, 221 W. Madison Street CHICAGO. $3 to $10 saved. Send 2c. stamp for new catalogue. The largest factory in the world. Latest Styles

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer $12 Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE. OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

Signal Notes.

THE latest rendering of the letters Y. M. C. A. is, You Make Christianity Attractive.

THERE are 10,000 Teetotalers in the railway service of Great Britain, and 12,000 among the sailors in the naval service.

IN the Hawaiian Islands there are about fifty native temperance societies, with a membership of over 2,000. Their pledge includes opium and awa as well as alcohol. Awa is an intoxicant manufactured by the natives, and said to be more disastrous in its effects upon the human system than even the imported liquors.

A WRITER in the Fortnightly Review, an English traveler, says, "The very air of Africa reeks with rum and gin, imported from England; every hut is redolent of its fumes. Over large areas drink is almost the sole currency, and in many parts the year's wages of the negro factory worker are paid altogether in spirits."

TORONTO is congratulating herself on the result of a campaign in which important public questions were fully discussed. Sunday street cars were decided to be a necessity by a majority of nearly seven thousand voters. The by-law providing free text books for the pupils of the public schools was carried by a very large majority.

SAMUEL DICKEY, chairman of the Prohibition committee, cast the first ballot of his life in 1872 for the Prohibition party, he being then just of age. He rose to prominence in the party in 1882, by being made chairman of the state prohibition committee of Michigan. Upon the death of John B. Finch in 1887 he was elected to his present position which he has most acceptably filled. Chairman Dickey is now on a lecturing campaign in central and northern Illinois and is making many converts to our cause by his convincing arguments.

A MOVEMENT to organize a Protective Association of Saloon-keepers is on foot in Detroit, Mich. The preliminary meeting was held on a Sunday afternoon. The Detroit Public Leader, organ of the wine, beer and spirit trade, regrets that there was not a larger attendance and more enthusiasm, which "would have gone a long way to assist in encouraging a movement never more meet or proper than now." Appreciating the value of organization as he evidently does, the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the saloon-keeper is as significant as his desire to secure power and protection for his iniquitous trade.

FLORENCE, the actor, once gave some advice to a friend in these words: "My dear ———: One gallon of whisky costs about three dollars, and contains nearly sixty-five fifteen-cent drinks. Now if you must drink, buy a gallon and make your wife the bar-keeper. When you are dry give her fifteen cents for a drink, and when the whisky is gone she will have after paying for it, $6.76 left, and every gallon thereafter will yield the same profit. This money she should put away, so that when you have become an inebriate unable to support yourself and shunned by every respectable man, your wife may have money enough to keep you until your time comes to fill a drunkard's grave."

THE National Convention of the Prohibition party, to nominate candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States, and to transact such other business as may properly come before it, will convene in Music Hall, in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, at 10 o'clock a. m., on Wednesday, June 29, 1892.

The basis of representation has been fixed by the National Convention, as follows:

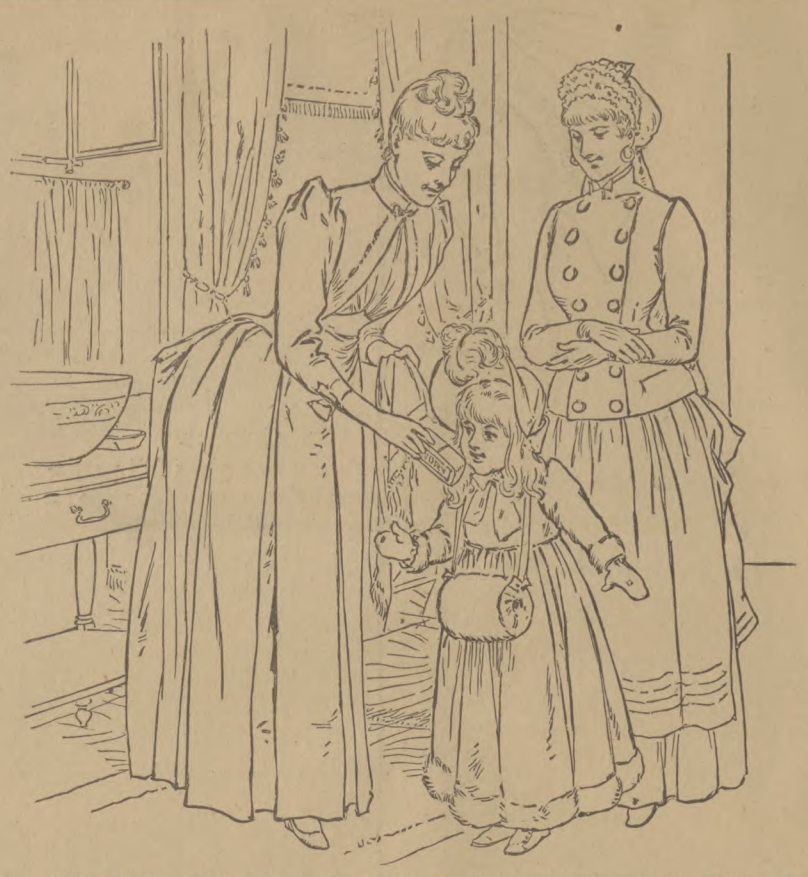
1. Each state is entitled to four delegates-at-large.

2. Each state is also entitled to twice as many delegates as the number of Congressmen which the state is entitled to elect in 1892. (This is the new apportionment.)

3. Each state may send one additional delegate for every one thousand votes, or major fraction thereof, cast for Fisk and Brooks in 1888.

4. Each Territory is entitled to two delegates. The District of Columbia is entitled to two delegates.

The time and manner of selecting these delegates will be determined by the Prohibitionists of the various states and territories, subject only to this provision, that in every state where the party has an organized state committee the delegates must be chosen by such Congressional or state conventions as the state central committee may call for that purpose, or by the state committee itself in such manner as it may determine upon. A full list of alternates should also be chosen.



What about highly perfumed soaps? Just one word. Distrust them! And the same applies to colored soaps. They may be safe. But you take a risk every time you use them.

The color of Ivory Soap is simply NATURE. It is the natural result of using an improved method of manufacture and the finest materials.

COPYRIGHT 1891, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

Woman's Baking Co.

LESS THAN 2,000 SHARES OF STOCK ARE NOW FOR SALE.

PROFITS.—If we only make one-half a cent a loaf on bread and 1 cent a pie on pies, with 25 bakeries, averaging 3,000 loaves of bread and 1,000 pies daily, our annual profits will be $183,500, which will pay a dividend of $18.35 on each share of our capital stock.

OUR PLAN is to establish a number of bakeries throughout the United States. Our charter also admits of lunch counters being established where we have bakeries. Where practicable

ONLY WOMEN TO BE EMPLOYED.

We own the right to equip as many bakeries as we may desire with the only patented machinery that successfully kneads dough and separates it into loaves of bread.

The actual cost of labor in manufacturing one barrel of flour into bread without this machinery is $2.50, and the actual cost with this machinery is 50 cents. It will thus readily be seen that we have a MONOPOLY wherever we see fit to operate.

We will supply better—more wholesome—bread, pies, cakes, etc., for less money than the housewife can make at home, and being a woman's concern, owned and operated by women, are we unreasonable in expecting an unlimited demand for our goods? An unlimited demand for our goods means unlimited profits to our stockholders.

An ordinary bakery in this city, with a capital of $75,000 paid a dividend last year amounting to $30,000 and its stock has advanced over 700 per cent above par.

STOCK SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN.

Absolutely Non-assessable, and there is no liability beyond amount invested. Price $25 per share, payable, if desired, in monthly installments of $2.50 per share.

No better investment for money can be found than our capital stock. Invest in it now while the company is new and reap the benefits paid in dividends, perhaps for the balance of your life.

Send a deposit, no matter how small, to show us you are in earnest, say how many shares you would like, and we will reserve them until you have time to investigate or arrange your money matters. Our illustrated pamphlet gives full information and is sent free.

OFFICERS:

Mrs. Louise Rockwood Wardner (of the Illinois Industrial School for Girls), President.
Mrs. Lydia Rice Bentley (the well-known Vocalist), Vice-President.
Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge
Miss Caroline A. Huling, (President Working Woman's Improvement Association), Secretary.
Mrs. R. A. Emmons, (Secretary Woman's Lecture Bureau, W. C. T. U.), Treasurer.
Mrs. Frances E. Owens (Publisher of the "Owen Cook Book"), Auditor.
Miss Ella S. Bass, (Proprietor Lily Publishing House), Auditor.

Make drafts, checks and money orders payable to

THE WOMAN'S BAKING CO.,

161 LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Burpee's Seeds Grow

And produce strong, thrifty plants and these plants develop into the choicest vegetables and most beautiful flowers after their kind. Burpee's Seeds are tested, not only for quality, but also for trueness to type; each variety is maintained in purity and many are improved by constant and intelligent selection, so that we can honestly state BURPEE'S SEEDS are the Best, the VERY BEST it is possible to produce, and are warranted. Do you want such seeds? If so write to-day for BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1892, which gives honest descriptions, faithfully illustrated, of all the best seeds, including Burpee's Bush Lima and other rare novelties of surpassing merit. Every progressive farmer and gardener should read it. Free to those who intend to purchase.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

Good Sense CORSET WAISTS
Fit all ages. Infants to Adults.
Are made of the best material and workmanship

ASTHMA—CURED DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial BOTTLE FREE
THE DR. TAFT BROS. M. CO., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

PRACTICAL BOOK-KEEPING TAUGHT BY MAIL. I will instruct one person in every town FREE. Address, with stamp, F. H. HENDRYX, Bath, N. Y.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

FREE
Grandest Illustrated Garden-Guide.
SEEDS 1 cent a packet.
Up if rare or costly. Cheapest. Best of all.
Free by mail. 500 000 packets of extras to Customers. Send at once for Free BOOK. R. H. Shumway, Rockford, Ill.

WRITE —TO— US If you are going to BUILD.
Sample designs of MODEL HOMES sent on application.
Our New Book—
"Cottage Souvenir" No. 2 with over 200 illustrations, is A GEM for all who want to build. Price $2.00.
Send for prospectus and sample pages—free.
Geo. F. Barber & Co., Architects, Knoxville, Tenn.

WORST CASES CURED TO STAY CURED IF UNCOMPLICATED BY ORGANIC DISEASE. Incurable cases declined.
ASTHMA
WE WANT NAME OF EVERY ASTHMATIC. Examination free by mail.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M.D.
BUFFALO, N. Y.

HALF-A-JIFFY COFFEE MAKER.
MAKES COFFEE UNSURPASSED WITHOUT ATTENTION ONE GOES WITH EACH
SELF-POURING POT.
That pours by pressing the lid as illustrated. Get list.
PAINE, DIEHL & CO., Phila., Pa.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D.W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

PURE GUM RUBBER GOODS
Of Every Description; also,
Mackintosh Clothing;
also, Japanese Tissue,
For Mending Without Needle or Thread,
ELASTIC TIP CO.,
Headquarters 152-154 Lake St., Chicago.

20 Hidden Name, New Emb. Basket, Plush Fringe Cards, 1 complete Fountain Pen 25 Games & Agts. Outfit 10cts. Typewriter and Photo Cameras free to Agts. Clinton Bros. Clintonville, Ct.

STILL THEY COME.

ANOTHER BIG MANUFACTORY FOR HARVEY.

A. J. Sweeny & Son to Remove from Wheeling, W. Va.—New Buildings and Leases.

This company is engaged in the manufacture of plate glass machinery, traveling cranes, rolling-mill and steel-works machinery, nail cutting and rolling machinery, and structural and architectural iron. The company by the terms of its agreement, agrees to locate a plant which will employ 300 men at a minimum annual pay roll of $180,000. The company has been allotted as a site the five-acre tract lying between the Grand Trunk railroad on the south, the Calumet Terminal railway on the north, Lincoln street on the east and Robey street on the west. This land and a bonus of $30,000 is one of the considerations which tempted the company to decide on its removal. One of the members of the firm of A. J. Sweeny & Son is connected with the Westinghouse Electric company. Plans have been drawn for the new plant, which is to be built at once. Three buildings, in all 160 feet wide and 350 feet long, have been provided for. These are to be of brick, one story high, with center lifts for the purpose of giving suitable light service. —From Chicago Tribune, Jan. 8, 1892.

The works are located adjoining the Academy Addition on the west, and will largely increase the value of every lot in that addition. The opening of the Academy last week gives Harvey the best of educational facilities. Send to WALTER THOMAS MILLS & Co., 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, for the only plat showing these lots.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

Mrs. Ursula D Hettick 9292 2419 19th st

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 4.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January 28, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: Our House Beautiful—Recollections of Noted Men and Women—Important Communications.... 8, 9
WATCH-TOWER: 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem. Cables. by Adaline Hohf Beery—One Woman's Way, by Marie J. Hesse—Is a Liquor License Law Constitutional? by B S. Taylor—Railroad Ties, by John G. Woolley—"The Next Thing," by Marion Beech... 2, 3, 4
CORRESPONDENCE Across the Continent—Woman Suffrage, the Strategy to Win Speedy Success—Temperance Temple Items 4, 5
OUR CHILDREN. Poem, A Member of the L T. L—Old Joe—The Presidents 6
THE HOUSEHOLD Poem, At Concert Pitch—His Voice on the Dry Hills—Work and Workers—Reflections After Reading Report of M. Blouet's Causerie, "Woman" 7
QUEEN'S GARDENS: Out of Line 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: State Reporters, Maine, Maryland, Alabama Dots, "Where Rolls the Oregon," Minnesota,—News in a Nutshell 10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: Received for Fund for Busts of Miss Willard and Mrs. Carse—Literature—Woman's Lecture Bureau 12
LIBRARY TABLE: Magazines Received 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT: 14
SIGNAL NOTES: 16

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The National Democratic convention will meet in Chicago June 21.

Mrs. Jefferson Davis has been elected honorary vice-president of the United States Daughters of 1812.

Two Japanese World's Fair commissioners are en route to Chicago to secure space for the erection of a national building.

The distinguished jurist, Judge Bradley, died in Washington, January 22, and was buried from his late residence in Newark, N. J., on Monday.

The National Surgical Institute of Indianapolis was burned to the ground January 21. Over twenty people were suffocated and many others severely injured.

It is estimated that the preparations for the contemplated war with Chili have already involved an expenditure of $3,000,000, the single item of telegrams amounting to $50,000.

A water famine was experienced in Chicago last Thursday. For eight hours not a drop of the fluid could be obtained, due to the ice blockade at the crib. Fortunately no serious fires occurred.

At the eleventh hour on Monday, an apology was received at Washington from Chili, offering to withdraw the offensive note sent by Senor Matta to all the Chilian Ministers abroad, and also to withdraw its request for the retirement of Minister Egan.

A Detroit, Mich., man has just announced a scheme by which every large city in the country will be supplied with an annunciator indicating the exact second of the formal opening of the Columbian Exposition, the button to be pressed by the President of the United States.

The Northwestern University Settlement Association was established in Chicago last week, with a resident secretary, and a board of managers from the faculty of the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill. The work will be conducted on the same plan as similar settlements in London.

BY means of a new plan the Evanston W. C. T. U. earned $75 at an afternoon meeting which will be graphically described; therefore, white-ribboners will please "watch out."

A SPECIAL article will be published next week from the pen of Miss Elizabeth P. Gordon, entitled "How one Local Union made Money." Its suggestions will prove financially important to every local union in the land.

CARDINAL MANNING was a cosmopolitan so thorough that the Jews presented him with an address at his ordination jubilee, and the Salvation Army held memorial services in token of their affection for a Catholic ecclesiastic.

IN this number we begin the promised series of personal recollections of noted men and women by Lady Henry Somerset. A more fortunate subject could hardly have been chosen than Lord Shaftesbury. This will be followed by a sketch of Elizabeth Barrett Browning who was born and reared within two miles of Eastnor Castle.

ONCE when the late Duke of Clarence was a schoolboy he overran his allowance of pocket-money. In his financial strait he wrote his grandmother asking for $25. The Queen indited a lengthy answer, refusing the money and exhorting her grandson to learn frugality. He certainly had a thrifty streak in his composition, for he replenished his exchequer by selling, as an autograph, the Queen's letter for $37.

THE steady rise of Christian civilization—more nearly equal on all shores than we are apt to think—lifted the late Khedive above polygamy. When in Egypt twenty years ago we heard of the better life that this young prince was learning, and now it but confirms what was then said of him in Cairo—this sentence from a Chicago morning paper: "The late Khedive left four children, born to him by his one wife, the princess Emineh." The dignity of woman is the truest measure of man's development.

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE is untiring in her work as secretary of the World's and the National W. C. T. U. She has been in Chicago preparing the minutes of both societies, which will soon be issued. A petition from each National auxiliary of the World's W. C. T. U. to the managers of the Columbian Exposition has been sent out by her. Mrs. Woodbridge also wisely suggests that each World's and each National superintendent send a departmental petition to the same authorities. All petitions should be forwarded to her at Ravenna, Ohio.

IN the evolution of civilization men have learned that insult is not to be avenged by personal violence, and honor need not be protected by fist or sword. The logical conclusion must surely be that national law must be based on the ethics that govern individual conduct. A nation's wrongs need not be wiped out in bloodshed, nor her tarnished honor burnished by the tears of those who mourn lives sacrificed to the Moloch of a false standard of patriotism. To-day (January 25) forty-four state and five territorial presidents have been telegraphed from Headquarters urging them to add the protest of their respective constituency against the Chilian war. Arbitration is what all these presidents will urge, and by its means the "national honor" that tolerates the licensed liquor system can be amply unguented and healed.

WHITE-RIBBONERS have not moved against the barmaid invasion any too soon. One of our Southern correspondents sends us the following:

WANTED.—Ten young girls to wait in a saloon at a salary of $10 per week. Address Geo. Wilson, Bay View Theater, 526 S. Palafox St., Pensacola, Fla.

We feel sure that our comrades in the South will not permit this abomination to pass without their protests uttered where they will do the most good, namely: By a petition borne by a commission of women to the state legislature of Florida. We urge the utmost watchfulness, for it is at the beginning that we can do best execution against this most atrocious thing. When anything for good or evil is started in the metropolis it counts for the whole country, and we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there are barmaids to-day in several saloons in New York City. We are glad to know that Mrs. Burt, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes and our New York leaders have put their heads together and prepared a petition to the state legislature now in session at Albany. We urge every white-ribboner in the Empire State to make it her most immediate work to secure signatures of good men and women to this wisely worded protest of the homes against the hoydens.

MISS MARY MORLEY is a prominent and influential worker in the Young Women's Christian Association in England, and a member of their central council. She is the daughter of the late Hon. Samuel Morley, whose powerful advocacy of the temperance cause and devoted philanthropy are of world-wide renown. Miss Morley has, for some years past, given much time to working among the young women employed in the London bars and gin shops. In a letter addressed to an officer of the World's W. C. T. U. she urges the American white-ribboners to take action, and by united effort endeavor to resist the introduction of women labor in the liquor traffic. "We see no plan in England," she writes, "except by parliamentary investigation and interference as regards hours, wages, conditions of service and the like. We have obtained a hearing for our case before the Royal Labor Commission, and this will, we trust, lead to further investigation of the facts by lady sub-commissioners. We should, of course, be thankful to see this mode of earning a living closed to women, and we trust this may be so in time, but meanwhile we are anxious that in the states they should be alive to what is the beginning of the same great evil on the other side of the Atlantic. It seems pitiful that the 'barmaid' should be introduced there, with the inevitable consequences of lower morality among those who frequent the saloons. I have read to-day, in an American magazine that there are, in the United States, 1,308 women already employed as bar and saloon tenders." We do not believe this estimate to be correct, but heartily welcome the coöperation of our British comrades in resisting this new and insidious form of tyranny over women. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

A BANQUET was given, recently, at the brilliant Auditorium Hotel, Chicago. Speeches were made by men of talent not now in office but who aspire to be, in the party now in power. Gen. Alger was there, Hon. John M. Thurston, et al. The report of their sayings fills six columns of The Inter Ocean, which informs us that "two hundred and fifty gentlemen sat down to dinner." The same report says: "At the quartet's own gallant request it sang 'Annie Laurie' to the ladies behind the gallery screen." This comes in naturally enough as a sequel to the statement that "the after-dinner exercises began when cigars had been lighted." Compare this condition of things with the latest news from Kansas where the state convention of the Prohibition party has just been held and five women are among the number chosen, Mrs. John P. St. John's name being enrolled alongside that of the Ex-Governor. Compare it with the People's Party and its women delegates and leaders. Compare it with the Sherman House Prohibition banquet recently, where women and men were guests and, seated side by side, responded to toasts in most amicable fashion. Meanwhile, at Republican banquets they sit "behind the screen" in the gallery, inhaling the tobacco smoke of their lords, and at Democratic banquets they are not present at all. We have not a harsh thought of our brothers who exclude women that they may include cigars. They are "in their conditions," that is all. But we of the new world cannot but smile in contemplation of these fading glories of a world that hastens to be gone. Buoyant with the sturdier life of the society and politics that have banished alcoholics and tobacco, those two great separatists between women and men, we can but bewail the condition of those fume-bewildered ladies "behind the gallery screen."

Contributed.

CABLES.

BY ADALINE HOHF BEERY.

There is a heart-home somewhere in the deep,
Star-misty concave, fashioned of a thought,
With gem-set doors and light-spun curtains wrought,
Where rhythmic waters under green banks sweep,
Where skies their faultless balm and tintings keep,
And sweet-faced neighbors think and speak of naught
But pure-white truth and loving-kindness, caught
In that blest air, which needs no charm of sleep.

'Tis our home, my home! built and kept for me,
By my best Friend. I may not go there yet;
But every day I send a message up,
And ask, "Art there?" Word flashes back—"'tis He!"
So trust I; and thus waiting I'll forget
When I shall drink from His own vintage cup.

Huntingdon, Pa.

ONE WOMAN'S WAY.

BY MARIE J. HESSE.

"Please, don't go down town to-night, Tom," said Mrs. Burton, a sweet-faced little woman, as she pinned a rose on her husband's coat.

"I won't be gone long, dear, only a few minutes," said he, as he looked into the pleading face between his large hands, which he hurriedly kissed. "I promised to meet Jim Graham at seven, but I'll be home early. Good-bye." He smiled over his shoulder as he started on a brisk walk to meet his engagement.

"I might have stayed at home to-night to please the dear girl," thought he. "She don't ask for many favors now days." Then his thoughts ran back to her girlhood days. "What a pretty girl she was, and a mighty lucky fellow I was to win her!" he mused, as he threw back his head and stepped like a king.

Then his mind centered on his boy, the sturdy little fellow, who lay all pink and white in the crib at home; he was on the point of retracing his steps when he met Dick Herman, a jovial, hail-fellow-well-met sort of a man, who seemed to hold the leading strings over many a manlier nature.

"Halloo, old fellow! You're just the man I want to see. How are you?" shaking his hand heartily and slapping him on the shoulder in a familiar way.

Tom, who had been happy in his thoughts of home, was annoyed to have them thus rudely interrupted, but Dick's jolly face and captivating way soon made him forget the vision of his wife and child.

The evil powers that be seem to lie in wait and gently ply their art to draw from the heart the better and nobler impulses, and implant only selfish ones. So Tom Burton stepped lightly along with his friend, whose way often led to Sam Thirsty's saloon.

It was one of those nice, respectable saloons, large and roomy; everything looked fresh and clean; the spray from a miniature fountain danced and glistened in the bright lights and fell in soft, tinkling cadence on the border of graceful ferns at the foot. On the bar stood a fine bouquet of roses, hanging their heads a little as though they were apologizing, yet sending delicious fragrance through the room; the warm, cheerful look would hardly suggest the secret, damning influence to men's souls!

The door swung open as the two men entered.

"Oh, here's Tom and Dick. Halloo, boys!" welcomed a familiar voice from one of the small tables, around which sat several men.

"Tom, Dick, and here's Harry, ha! ha!" laughed one of the men. "That takes in everybody; here, make room for them. Here, boys!"

Then followed a general shuffling of chairs to seat the newcomers.

A convivial spirit soon rose and glasses were emptied and filled again by the obliging young man in a snowy apron, who jauntily picked his way among the tables, as they began to fill with the usual number of customers.

Cigars were lighted and the room was soon surging with song, jest and smoke.

The hour hand pointed to eight, then nine, then ten. Once through Tom Burton's mind flashed the promise made his lovely wife and he rose to go.

"Oh, come, Tom," coaxed the jovial Dick; "don't go yet; it isn't late, sit down, sit down." Tom hesitated and was lost. Dick clinched his request by saying,

"Wait a few minutes and I'll go home your way."

More beer was ordered and Time kept at his work of thieving the minutes into hours.

. . . . . .

Mrs. Burton had stood with folded hands and sad eyes as she watched her great-hearted husband out of sight

Turning round softly she went to their cozy sitting-room and sat down alone. It looked so desolate now. She recalled how for weeks she had used every effort to make it more attractive to her husband, but she had failed, for every evening after tea he began to be restless and would then find some excuse to go down town.

She condemned herself for her selfishness.

"I am sure he needs other recreation after a hard day's work, beside coming home to baby and me."

She sighed as she remembered how happy he had been in his home and how much pleasure he once found in her company.

The tears came to her eyes as she stepped to the glass and looked at herself critically.

"Perhaps I'm growing old and ugly," she thought, but she saw only the same blue eyes and fair cheeks that Tom admired so much. "Oh, that can't be," she sighed, "for he is so tender and true," and her delicate lips quivered as she gazed lovingly at a miniature likeness of Tom which stood on the dresser.

Seating herself, the house seemed so silent; the clock's ticking jarred on her ears. Once she heard footsteps. Jumping up and hastily brushing aside a tear, she went to welcome her husband. The footsteps died away and she sank back into her chair with a heavy heart, only to doubt, and then condemn herself for doubting.

The clock struck nine, then ten. For a half hour she sat almost rigid. A thought seemed to flash upon her mind, her eyes brightened with a look of desperation, her colorless lips tightened, the flush had left her cheeks. She rose, then sat down again, saying. "I can't do it." Her courage rose again. "If it's best for Tom, it's best for me," she panted. Clinching her hands till the nails left prints in her palms, she rose resolutely and dressed with unusual care, donning a gown and bonnet given her by her husband. She even pinned a bit of bright ribbon at her throat to relieve her paleness. After a satisfactory survey of her toilet she slipped into the nursery to look at baby, but refrained from kissing him lest he waken, and her courage fail her. Softly she slipped from the house and hastened toward Sam Thirsty's saloon. Once at the door her heart beat wildly; clasping her hands over her heart she looked to heaven for strength. "Help me, O Father!" she breathed. A moment she halted, then a strange composure came over her. She opened the door and walked in, with a very white face, but a brave smile.

She knew just where her husband sat, but refrained from looking that way.

It was some time before her presence was discovered. She walked quietly down the aisle and seated herself at one of the tables, composedly drawing off her neatly fitting gloves.

The look of surprise on the faces of those who first saw her soon became contagious, and before many minutes every customer felt a strange presence.

A hush fell upon the place. The astonished customers could hardly believe their eyes when the cultured, refined Mrs. Tom Burton beckoned to the polite young man and said in a clear voice,

"Please bring me a glass of beer."

Something queer happened then.

One after another of the customers slipped sneakingly out and left only the bewildered Tom and Mrs. Burton.

He tried to rise once but found his knees too weak. At last, summoning all his gallantry he walked to where Mrs. Burton sat before her untasted beer—laid down the change, raised his hat and offered her his arm, which she accepted. Together they walked out.

Neither spoke, for her heart throbbed with wild forebodings, while remorse, chagrin and disgust warred in Tom's.

Once within their cozy home he seated her gently; her head fell wearily back, showing a white, set face. The next moment she would have fallen heavily to the floor, save for her husband's quick, strong arms. He carried the prostrate form of his wife to a couch. The nervous strain had been too great, and nature sought to redeem herself. So for weeks Tom Burton hardly ate or slept as he watched in deep anxiety beside the wife whose precious life hung on a slender thread.

"My darling, forgive me! I've been a brute to subject you to such a trial—I, who ought to have protected you! I've been blind; oh, Jennie! don't you hear me?" he cried in the bitterness of his grief. "Through all these months you have never reproved me. You did it all for me. Oh, forgive me, dear!" but she heard him not; she only repeated in her unreasoning raving, "I'm—so—lonely, I'm so lonely."

At last life came slowly back. The sweet face was thin and pallid, but there was no reproach in her eyes or voice. Only loving, tender looks and words.

They found it hard to speak of that which had given them both so much pain, so the subject was not alluded to, but both felt a new era in their lives had begun.

One bright day, when Mrs. Burton came to the table, the first time since her illness, she was not a little surprised to find five burly men, Tom's boon companions, about it.

She smiled them all a hearty welcome and kept her own counsel.

There was silence for a moment, when Tom began in a husky voice,

"Boys, when a man does a wrong action publicly, it's his duty to confess publicly."

Mrs. Burton looked appealingly at him, but he gently interrupted:

"Let me go on, Jennie. I want to get back my self-respect and the respect of these friends." His voice lowered,

"I need not tell you how I've done wrong, you know too well—I want to say I am ashamed of it—I always was. I will say nothing of the wrong done my dear ones, but, thank God"—fervently said Tom with tears in his eyes—"with His help, I will throw off the power that would have destroyed my soul and body. I want to commit myself—I want it to be no secret—from this day. I mean to be a decent man." Here he held up a pledge and said, "I want to sign this in your presence."

Before he had written his name, Dick Herman jumped to his feet and said earnestly,

"So do I."

"And so do I," responded John Burr.

Before many minutes every member of the dinner party had signed the pledge.

Dick Herman moved that it be entrusted to Mrs. Burton's keeping, who accepted the sacred charge with glad tears coursing down her pale cheeks.

Right doing seems not to impair digestion, for that dinner party was a success!

Often after this these five men met at Tom Burton's and brought their wives.

Sam Thirsty wondered not a little that they never came and after numerous unsuccessful attempts to lure them back, gave them up for lost.

Mrs. Burton archly alludes to the experience of that night as "her spree," but her husband gravely says, "It was, for me, well-nigh a Waterloo."

IS A LIQUOR LICENSE LAW CONSTITUTIONAL?

BY B. S. TAYLOR.

In the present crisis of the prohibition discussion in Iowa, a subject of increasing and wide-spread interest, I desire to submit a negative answer to this question based on legal and constitutional grounds. I wish to treat the subject under four phases:

1. The History of the Present Law and Amendment.
2. The Adverse Decision of the Supreme Court.
3. Relief proposed to the Legislature of 1892.
4. Conclusions.

My citations of law are from McLain's Annotated Statutes of Iowa, 1884.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE AMENDMENT AND THE PRESENT PROHIBITION LAW.

The prohibition amendment was submitted to popular vote at a special election June 27, 1882.

The present statute was passed by the next legislature, i. e., 1884. The amendment inserting prohibition in the constitution of Iowa as required by the constitution was first presented to the eighteenth General Assembly (1880). By the nineteenth General Assembly (joint resolution No. 8) the following proposed amendment was agreed to, as having already been in due form agreed to by the previous General Assembly. (18 G. A. joint resolution No. 8.)

By 19 G. A. ch. 172, this proposed amendment was submitted to the people at a special election held June 27, 1882. By proclamation of the governor dated July 29, 1882, this proposed amendment was declared adopted. (19 G. A. ch. 7.)

THE AMENDMENT.

Art. 1. Sec. 26.—No person shall manufacture for sale, or sell, or keep for sale, as a beverage any intoxicating liquors whatever, including ale, wine and beer. The General Assembly shall by law prescribe regulations for the enforcement of the prohibition herein contained, and shall thereby provide suitable penalties for the violation of the provisions hereof.

The above amendment in this form thus passed the eighteenth General Assembly; in this form was signed by the governor, the president of the Senate, and the speaker of the House; in this form was entered on the Journal of the House and certified and filed by the secretary of state, in the records and office of the secretary of state in 1880. And according to the constitution (Art. 10, Sec. 1) this proposed amendment was agreed to on a joint resolution of both houses, and duly and lawfully entered on the records of both the Senate and the House, and in this form was agreed to as having already been in due form agreed to by the previous General Assembly, and in this form was signed the second time by the governor, by president of the Senate and speaker of the House, and in this form again certified by the secretary of state and placed on file in the records of his office.

Thence: according to the constitution and statute (16 G. A. ch. 114), the secretary of state caused the proposed amendment in this same form to be published in two newspapers of general circulation in each congressional district in the state for the time provided in Sec. 1, Art. 10, of the constitution, and the secretary of state reported his action in the premises to the next succeeding —19th— General Assembly. And in this form the proposed amendment was by proclamation of the governor submitted to a vote of the electors at the special election in 1882; and in this form on hundreds of thousands of official ballots, the amendment passed by over 29,000 majority. And in this form the state board of canvassers declared the result and entered the same of record immediately following, and in connection with the proofs of publication.

And in this form the governor of Iowa issued a proclamation July 29, 1882, declaring that the amendment was adopted, and was henceforth a part of the constitution of Iowa. Such is the history of its adoption.

II. THE ADVERSE DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Now let me give, verbatim, the decision of the supreme court in the case of Koehler v. Hill, 60, 543.

Under Art. 10, Sec. 1, the court says:

"It is the design and intention of this provision that the proposed amendment should be so entered upon the journals that it can be known from an examination of such journals what it is that has been agreed to by the houses of the General Assembly, and such entry is the highest evidence of what the amendment is which is agreed to by each house. Therefore, where it appeared from the journal of the Senate of one General Assembly, that the proposed amendment, as passed by it, was different from the same amendment as concurred in by the subsequent General Assembly, and submitted to and voted upon by the people: held that it was not legally adopted, and did not become a part of the constitution, although the joint resolution of the General Assembly first acting upon the amendment, which was signed by the presiding officers of the two houses, and by the governor, and preserved in the office of the secretary of state, showed such amendment to be the same as that subsequently concurred in and submitted; also held that the recital in the joint resolution of the General Assembly which submitted said amendment to vote of the people, that it had been agreed to by the previous General Assembly was not conclusive upon the court." "The provisions as to the amendment of the constitution are not simply directory, and the legislative department is not the sole judge as to whether or not they have been complied with, but the courts have jurisdiction to inquire into the question whether these requirements have been observed, and if not to declare the amendment invalid."

"For irregularities in entering this amendment upon the journal (of the Senate not the House) of the eighteenth General Assembly, and a want of agreement between the amendment as there entered, and as subsequently agreed to by the nineteenth General Assembly, this amendment as submitted to and adopted by the people, did not become a part of the constitution."

Such is the text of the decision of the supreme court which has repealed the Prohibition amendment to the constitution of Iowa. Thus, on the merest straw of technicality, on the most treasonable grounds of usurpation, at the behests of the saloon power, do three men and a hired clerk, all in the pay of the people, and sworn to support the constitution, throw out the most solemn and orderly expression of state sovereignty by the people, and trample under foot the rights, the liberties and the laws of the citizens of Iowa. The men that dare to be guilty of such treason and usurpation deserve infamy and punishment as the highest criminals that seek to destroy the authority, the law, the liberty and the constitution of the state. For proof, this impeachment notice:

(a) The constitution gives the supreme court appellate jurisdiction, but it does not grant it jurisdiction over the constitution. Notice the following: "All political power is inherent in the people," Art. 1, Sec. 2. "Political power consists of legislative, executive and judicial authority, and these all inhere in the people in the first instance," Stewart v. Board of Supervisors, 30, 9.

(b) The constitution creates the supreme court. (See Art. 3, Sec. 1.) Hence, the court has no jurisdiction for excluding an amendment voted by the people. "It shall have jurisdiction over all appeals, and shall constitute a court for the correction of errors at law, under such restrictions as the General Assembly may by law prescribe. Art. 5, Sec. 4, constitution. It is "under the restriction of the General Assembly," according to this article, and hence, has no jurisdiction over the amendments duly certified by all the officers of the legislature: Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Speaker and Secretary of State, and the popular vote.

(c) For proof of this let me quote the statute and decisions of the supreme court, itself, on this very point: Under Sec. 31, p. 6, the statutes read: "The original Acts of the General Assembly shall be deposited with, and kept by the secretary of state." And the court decided: "The Acts thus deposited are the bills which receive the signatures of the officers, etc., and behind them it is impossible for any court to go for the purpose of ascertaining what the law is." Duncombe v. Prindle, 12, 1–11. Here, then, we have an older and previous decision of the supreme court on this very issue. This decision makes the certified copy of a bill, "the bill," and not the Assembly journals, not the errors of a clerk, not the carelessness of subordinates, but the original copy of a law, duly signed by the executive officers, certified by the secretary of state, and placed on file,—this is law, and behind this it is impossible for any court to go for the purpose of ascertaining what the law is.

(d) The state records go to show clearly and plainly that this amendment was thus passed, signed and filed, and became law by the proclamation of the governor: and, as the voice of the people, becomes a part of the constitution; and whether the clerk of the Senate crossed all his t's and dotted all his i's in his journal or no, by its own decision it is impossible for the court to go behind the official certificate to inquire. So it is clearly a case of a modern court, in a measure of mere technicality, reversing the old and established rulings of the previous court. Hence I charge it with usurpation.

(e) But it is a well defined and established principle of law, common and statutory, that courts should disregard any error that does not affect substantial rights. Even if we concede that there is a very slight discrepancy between the "bill" and its "record," an error of one word, the court had already decided (under Sec. 2690) that it "must disregard all errors which do not affect substantial rights." This is common usage in all courts, where indictments and affidavits contain errors which are shown to be without prejudice to either party. The adverse decision quoted (in Koehler v. Hill), while showing irregularities, on its very face admits that the joint resolution and the amendment as submitted to the people were the same. The only flaw in the procedure is the clerk's error of record in copying the bill. But shall this defeat the whole purpose and intent of the legislature? I see no reason why it should. Because:

1. The legislature of 1892 is competent to correct the clerical error of ten years ago: and

2. The supreme court is competent to decide that clerical errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the people shall not act to overthrow the constitution of the people. Hence, let us have a Curative Bill passed by the coming legislature to correct the record, and a decision by the supreme court that the error of record does not affect the legality of the bill as passed and filed in the records of state, and proclaimed by the governor. The Statute on Appeal, Sec. 4538 reads: . . . . "The supreme court must examine the record and without regard to technical errors and defects which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, render such judgment on the record as the law demands."

3. Again under statutes 1-31: "The original acts of the General Assembly shall be deposited with and kept by the secretary of state." The supreme court declares: "The original act thus deposited with the secretary of state is the ultimate proof of the statute, whatever errors there may be in the printed copies thereof: and the court will inform itself and take cognizance of the true reading as thus shown." Clare v. The State, 5, 509. This, it seems to me, affords good authority for sustaining the amendment.

III. RELIEF PROPOSED TO THE LEGISLATURE OF 1892.

I have already stated what I esteem the legal method of the legislature and the supreme court. Let the legislature pass a "curative act," and give the people relief from the clerk's errors, and the supreme court hear a test case. The amendment is de jure if not de facto a part of the constitution of Iowa. The legislature has never repealed it. The people have never rejected it, but have sent up a larger majority than ever this year on joint ballot, pledged, on the strongest kind of a platform, to prohibition. It has had ten years successful exercise as a wise, popular and useful law. Now let the amended constitution be legally relieved of all clerical errors of record, and stand as the constitution of Iowa written and sealed. It is now truly and in fact the unwritten constitution of Iowa. In proof of this Art. 1, Sec. 25, constitution says: "The enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others, retained by the people." Which is affirmed by the supreme court thus: "There is, as it were, back of the constitution, an unwritten constitution which guarantees and well protects all the absolute rights of the people." Hanson v. Vernon, 27-28, 73.

IV. CONCLUSIONS.

But from the present adverse decision it would seem that the slips of a clerk's little finger were more to be heeded than the solemn and legal ballots of two million people. What security and guarantee do courts and legislatures afford under such decisions? "Usurpation, treason, treachery," are mild terms to express the infamous trickery of sworn officials thus to toss the constitution of the people into the ash barrel. The party leaders who engineer such political craft are feeling the wrath of an outraged people. Simply let the thing get abroad, and let either old party further tamper with the law and a revolution will burst upon us. The unwritten constitution which protects the rights of the people has been treacherously overthrown. Iowa has always been a prohibition state. For forty years she has had no other policy, and she has never had a license policy. Therefore let the Rum-paid politicians beware how they trifle with the constitution written or unwritten. This decision of the supreme court has thrust the dagger into the vitals of the Republican party. Ever since 1882 when this decision was rendered, her majorities have fallen, and if this state is to be delivered, gagged and bound, to the rumocracy, the best and stalwart elements of the party propose to clear their skirts. Sixty thousand prohibition Republicans will vote the third party ticket in 1892, and send the rum-wrecked-remnants of republicanism up the same "salt river," that received the old Whig party in 1856 to final oblivion.

Des Moines, Ia.

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

Everybody loves to shoot, but carrying the game—that is different.

What a convenience it would be if "hit" birds would fly into one's kitchen!

The hardest thing about evangelistic work among drunken men is to know what to do with the converts. They need warmth and strength to offset the cheer and fellowship of the saloon. They must "be filled with the spirit" or they are apt to be "drunk with wine."

The churches do not meet the case perfectly; they are excellent for cold storage, but such men do not keep well on ice.

If the converted drunkard does not get to a higher level of spiritual life than the average church member, he is in a dangerous way, and the fact is that the average church member is unsteady on his own feet, and of course has only a reflex or cartoonish value in helping others by pushing.

Certain it is, one cannot draw another higher than he himself is; a beggar can't keep open house.

My friend, the pastor, goes to the theatre, takes his whole family—only the good theatres. I do not accuse him, but I tell him this, that if he takes a converted drunkard of his church with him into patronage of the theatre, he'll get him damned, probably.

My other friend, also a pastor, smokes. I do not scold him, but I tell him now, that if he takes his friend, the converted drunkard into the parsonage study to smoke, he puts him in deadly peril. A pastor ought to be good company for the weakest of his flock. I do not mean to single out pastors, but of course if the pastor smokes, the pews will "smell of tobacco."

But are these men entitled to so much and such tender care? Well, that word "entitled" is a risky word in gospel work.

However, two things ought to be remembered, viz.: That such men are alone in being subjected to temptation by the law of the land, for purposes of revenue. The law recognizes an assault in a mere breath, but licenses a saloon, which to many a poor, enfeebled soul is assault, battery, captivity, duress, death, damnation.

. . . . . .

And then, when a drunkard "quits" he must quit. Other sinners don't seem to think it necessary to carry things to such extremes. At all events, brethren, "Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them."

En route, January 11, 1892.

"THE NEXT THING."

BY MARION BEECH.

Having acknowledged you as the valiant, trustworthy, invincible standard-bearer of the W. C. T. U. ever since you were first flung to the temperance breeze; having loved you, believed in you, and, to a great extent, trusted in you for the successful advancement of the great cause which you represent, you will, I trust, forgive me for expressing thoughts which are in such direct conflict with those embodied in "The Next Thing," in December 24th issue, dear UNION SIGNAL.

Without wishing to detract, in the least, from the merits of your discussion, in regard to the facts of the case, as seen from your standpoint, yet I do not fully understand whether your propositions were not ironically expressed, or whether "much" consideration of the awful horrors involved "had made thee" temporarily, mentally "mad."

"Some one" proves by record that "three thousand women in the United States have been slaughtered by their husbands" during the past year, but "some one" has not kept a record of the women and children that fled, for the time being, and kept hidden from the husbands and fathers that would have slaughtered them. "Some one" has not the record of those locked in police stations and city prisons over night to keep them from killing wives and children. And no one has ever kept record of the women and children in the country that have spent nights of horror in outhouses, granaries, cattle-sheds and high lofts in barns—waiting tremblingly for the dawn; or, of that young mother with babe in her arms, who wrapped it in a quilt and laid it in a fence-corner, fearing her maniac husband would fire the house, and then watched outside the window while he upset the supper-table, stamped the dishes under foot, and piled in one promiscuous heap the furniture and other treasures of her wedding outfit; or, of that father who held his infant's hands over a lamp's blaze, and laughed in maniac glee at seeing the mother's agony for the shrieking child. Or, of another father who threw his ten-years'-old daughter out in the snow, at midnight, and when she had reached the nearest house, two miles away, her feet were so badly frozen that she remained crippled for life. Or, of that other fiend, who beat his sick wife with the dead body of his infant. The list of these well authenticated facts might be continued indefinitely; they are not isolated cases, but such as have their counterpart every day, and are multiplying every year under the domination of the liquor traffic, aided and abetted by our legislators.

Now, suppose that beside each one of these three thousand real wife killers we place twenty of those other insane ones—and twenty will be found an underestimate of the real number—and we have sixty thousand. Now, are not those who have tried to kill just as "morally insane" as those that have killed? and how about the "morally," with the legislators by whose authority the training school for murder flourishes?

Well, the state has the gallows and the penitentiary with which to accommodate the three thousand, and it has the pauper houses for their orphan children. The towns and cities license the sale of liquor, the state gives them the permit, the state bears the criminal expenses resulting therefrom, and the burden of which is drawn, largely, from the agricultural population. With a groan and a growl the farmer draws his purse to pay taxes for the "three thousand," but, my dear UNION SIGNAL, were that army of sixty thousand, or more, of "morally insane" to be cared for and paid for, there would be such a rebellion among the "hayseed" battalions as would cause another "political cyclone."

Rather let the killing continue. The state legalizes the making of drunken, maniac husbands; it should, at the least, allow their wives the privilege of being destroyed in their lives of misery. Let the farmers groan so long as they continue to vote to legalize wife-murder; they should be willing to pay the hanging expenses. Our government legalizes the manufacture of liquors for revenue. The larger the manufacture, the larger the revenue; the greater the amount consumed the greater the amount manufactured. Would you wish to have sixty thousand faithful patrons of our government in a "morally" insane home, thereby impoverishing the revenue, by default of their contributions? How impracticable! Should your scheme prevail, it would dissolve the Congress of the United States.

You are aware that the liquor power owns the Congress of the United States, and that the money god owns the liquor power, and that there must be human sacrifices offered upon his altars to perpetuate his kingdom.

How long since a millionaire presented a barrel of "Scotch whisky" to a President? How long since a vice-President owned a saloon with special accompaniments for the convenience of our statesmen? How long since a sergeant-at-arms and porter were needed to steady several pillars of the United States government from the cloak rooms to their seats, preparatory to taking the final vote of the session? You are at liberty to continue this list of questions at your discretion.

Finally, there is no numerical limit to the crime and misery caused by the sale of intoxicating liquor. There is no knowledge or device by which it can be safely handled or "regulated." There is no power in heaven or earth by which humanity can be protected from its curse so long as men, rulers, the people permit it to be made and sold. Total prohibition of the whole liquor business is the highest need of the civilized world to-day. Prohibition muskets, "sure fire," loaded with ballot-bullets, and pointed at the enemy's head, regardless of party, church, or social ostracism are the "regulars" in this war, and it will be said of them, when their souls are marching through the centuries, "They didn't miss, they didn't lose their votes," for in the thickest of the fight, and "behind the shadow," God kept tally of His own.

Correspondence.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The trip of the International League of Press Clubs across the continent is the event of a lifetime to all who participate in it. The special train which made the trip from New York to San Francisco and back, "without change of cars," is said to be the finest which ever crossed the continent. I cannot imagine how anything could be finer, and all freely tendered to the League by the various roads: the New York Central, Michigan Central, Northwestern, Union Pacific, Denver & Rio Grande, the Rio Grande & Western, the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fé.

The Wagner Palace Car Company furnishes four of the finest sleepers I ever saw, a dining car, a smoking car and a baggage car. In this train we live, eating, sleeping, writing, whenever we can spare time from looking out of the window or chatting with brothers and sisters of the pen.

The service, both in dining-room and sleeper, is absolutely perfect. No matter how early or how late we rise, the breakfast is just as exquisitely cooked as though we were exactly "on time," and this in spite of all the difficulties of high altitude cooking; for two or three days we have scarcely dipped below the 5,000 feet where it takes three hours to steam potatoes, and other things in proportion. I wonder how many people who eat on the dining cars crossing the mountains, think of the difficulties caused by the rarefied air their cooks must overcome.

Princes never traveled more luxuriously; think of a perfectly appointed train, at our absolute control, going when and where we wish to go, and stopping where and as long as we wish to stop, whose conductor comes through, not to collect fare, but to see to our comfort; our trunks placed in the baggage car at Chicago, to be found again in our rooms at the Baldwin hotel, San Francisco. Our handbags and other impedimenta so troublesome when stopping, always left in our berths, and always found safe on returning; daily papers from the nearest city delivered to us free each morning, and if there is any other comfort you can imagine, just add it to the picture.

Yet there is one lack. Mine is the only white ribbon on board, and my heart just aches for the sight of one. Dear women, do show your colors, both for the sermons they preach and for the comfort they bring to your fellows. I have just discovered, in a sweet young girl, one of Mrs. Barnes' helpers in the Boys' Clubs of New York; when I said, "Why don't you wear your white ribbon, then we should have found each other long ago?" she answered, "I always wear it at our meetings, but never thought of wearing it traveling." (Later.—The dear girl put on the white ribbon and was the means of another being worn by a leading gentleman of the party.)

That is just when we should wear it. Only once, so far, have I been offered wine, though I am sorry to say there has been plenty of it, both on the cars and at receptions,—then I simply touched my white ribbon, and the gentleman said, "I beg your pardon. I had not noticed that."

On the first day out a gentleman extended his hand to me saying: "I salute the white ribbon," and this was the introduction to a very pleasant acquaintance with Alfred E. Pearsall of the Commercial Advertiser of New York City.

Our first stop was at Omaha, where for two hours we were the guests of the Board of Trade and Editor Rosewater of the Bee. We were taken in carriages to the Bee, said to be the finest newspaper building in America. On some accounts it probably is, notably so in being built round a court and standing on all sides free from buildings, so that every room, even the press room, is thoroughly lighted; in other respects the Herald building in Chicago is finer. I forgot to mention in the right place, that on every division of the road, one or more railroad officials accompany us, adding greatly to our enjoyment as well as to our safety. The genial representative of the Wagner Palace Car Company, Mr. Yeager and his wife, have been with us all the way.

This train has the right of way all through; only railroad men can appreciate what this means with a train making such irregular stops as ours does. Between Chicago and Omaha our train made the quickest time on record by thirty minutes.

Each evening in the dining-room is an entertainment of some kind, music, recitations, story telling, etc. When you remember that on board there are such artists in these lines as Marshall P. Wilder, Alfred E. Pearsall, Kate Field, Mrs. Frank Leslie and her husband, Will Wilde, Mrs. Z. P. Upham, Arthur Koering and other singers, you may know these entertainments are of no mean order.

Miles out of every city where we were to stop, we have been met by delegations, usually headed by the mayor, and including leading representatives of the city and the press, bearing the city's welcome, chiefly in shape of badges, giving us the "freedom of the city," and illuminated programs of the entertainment in store for us at that place. At Omaha the Board of Trade's welcome took the form of a parchment testimonial with the great red seal of the corporation, and beneath it an enumeration of the city's industries. This made a fair showing, but we noted the omission of figures relating to a favorite industry—the liquor traffic. And thus it was everywhere; saloons were plenty but no city seemed sufficiently proud of them to boast of their perfected products.

Denver impressed us with the magnificence of its private residences and its rushing business. Salt Lake City seems to have been built anew since I visited it in 1888, and is now a beautiful city, as well as beautiful for situation. Its welcome was most cordial, and the entertainment it provided, most delightful. Beside the drive around town that each city gives us, was a trip to Great Salt Lake and another to the new gas wells lately sunk, which, it is hoped, will supply natural gas for manufacturing purposes. On the way out to them are the Hot Springs and baths, where a "Keeley cure" is just being started. It seems needed, for nowhere else do saloons more abound than in Salt Lake City.

I hunted up the W. C. T. U. officers here and found them holding the fort in a temperance restaurant, amid such discouragements as go far to convince them that the W. C. T. U. is not called to the serving of tables. More and more am I impressed with the faith, the courage and the zeal needed to carry on our work in these western communities, and with admiration for the women who uphold our standard there. They deserve the sympathy and prayers of us all, who, working under more favorable conditions, often falter and lose faith. A grand concert of five hundred voices in the Tabernacle, followed by a banquet, filled the evening and sent us to our car at midnight, tired, but delighted with what we had seen and heard at Salt Lake City.

One long, bright day was spent on the uplands of Nevada. "The hills of God, the hills of God," ran through my mind continually, varied with the refrain, "The strength of the hills is His also." Should I live a thousand years, the spiritual uplift of that day amid the solemn grandeur of those mountain solitudes will not be forgotten. Five thousand feet above sea level ran the track along which we glided so smoothly, while on every side mountain ranges towered above us. All were covered with snow, on which the play of colors in the brilliant sunlight was wonderful. But deeper than all play of color, or ever-varying beauty of contour, was the restfulness of God's perfect peace which His mountains brought to the soul. Those silent peaks seemed vocal with the hymn,

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent word."

How can we worry or grieve while God's sentinels stand guard around us? Unseen, as most of our lives, these mountains are, but just as real, just as abiding. How I longed to have all the tired, troubled, grieving hearts with me to drink in the comfort and the inspiration of that day. We went to sleep amid the snows of Nevada and awoke amid the flowers of California. The Citrus Fair, of Northern California, was in progress at Auburn, Placer county, and there we stopped a few hours to see it. Such a welcome there greeted us as cast all others—hearty and warm as they had been—into the shade.

This little town of 1,600 inhabitants, in a county which boasts of only 15,000—had the pluck and courage to get up a Citrus Fair rivaling that of Southern California, in a region where ten years ago it was not supposed oranges would grow. Yet here they were literally by the hundred thousands, and all grown in that and surrounding counties. And not only oranges, but figs, raisins, dates, nuts, olives, peaches and apples, in wonderful variety and profusion. A very striking exhibit was that of olives, made by Mrs. Roberson, and it proves what an intelligent, determined woman can do. She is one of the leading olive growers in the state, manufactures the olive oils, of which she exhibits five varieties, and pickles the olives in as many ways. Here, for the first time, I saw olives fresh, and learned, to my surprise that they are black before they are green, as we see them in bottles.

As soon as we entered the Fair I was surrounded by a bevy of white-ribboners, and never did our badge seem more beautiful, nor a welcome more cordial. They showed me, with commendable pride, the exhibit of Sutter county, a prohibition county in the heart of the wine region; this exhibit was most appropriately an immense horn of plenty, made of oranges, and filled to overflowing with the various products of this favored clime. Placer county is working hard for prohibition, and feels very sanguine of carrying a "dry" election before long. They are now circulating a petition calling an election. One thing I was glad to note as a happy omen—that beautiful exhibit of Northern California's products was not marred by the presence of a single bottle of wine, so far as I could discover.

Time fails to tell of the wonderful breakfast to which we were treated by the good people of Auburn—I wish you could all have seen that dining-room, and feasted your snow-tired eyes on the beauty of its flowers and fruits—or to tell of that day's ride through the Sacramento valley, and our reception at San Francisco, where Nellie Blessing Eyster was the first to greet me on the Oakland boat. Here we are at the Baldwin, entertained like princes, and ready to enter upon the work of the convention early to-morrow morning.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE—THE STRATEGY TO WIN SPEEDY SUCCESS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As an aboriginal friend of the woman's rights movement, I hailed with enthusiasm the first appearance of the agitation on that subject, and rejoiced in every effort to enlarge the sphere of woman's vocations and opportunities. To me it appeared almost self-evident that woman was by nature better qualified than man for the medical profession, and that many of the evils that need reformation in that profession were like the evils in political life, partly or mainly due to the absence of woman. I had no difficulty in procuring the assent of my liberal-minded colleagues in the largest and most influential medical school in Cincinnati, in which I had the control of the policy from 1846 to 1856, to open our doors to female students—an act entirely unprecedented in this country—and to make their unusual position agreeable to their feelings. Since that time I have never taught a medical class which did not contain women, and never known one whose success was not creditable.

These prefatory statements are tendered merely to show my deep interest in the subject, in which the radical ultraism of my views has never found expression.

While the agitation has been in progress, I have entertained certain views which I have not seen expressed by any one, but which seem to me of no small importance, relating, as they do, to the conduct of the movement. But I have been a silent spectator, and should have so continued, had I not been requested to present them by one of the ladies most deeply and wisely interested, to whose request I respond with pleasure.

I do not object to anything that has been done or to the manner of doing it, but I do believe there is a by-path leading to an almost immediate and very important success, which has been overlooked, and that it is not too late now, but is a very auspicious moment for the flank movement I propose, which may insure a rapid progress, and in a shorter time an absolute and entire victory.

The demand for woman suffrage, for equal political rights, involves a tremendous change in social sentiments, as well as in the basic ideas of government. It is too good a movement, too fundamental a change for speedy success. It is one of those movements which have usually been sanctified by the blood of martyrs, and it is the best illustration of our advancing civilization that there has been no absolute martyrdom in the history of the movement. Can any one foresee how long must be the agitation, how tedious, how expensive, how disappointing, and what an earnest and vigorous array of objections or objectors will arise as the crisis of the struggle approaches, for the strength of the opposition has never yet been called out by the apparently remote possibility of universal suffrage.

But is there not another line of advance, upon which this formidable opposition will not be encountered, and which may be adopted at once with a prospect of success? The additional movement which I propose is not so revolutionary, and cannot be met by any formidable objections, or by any insurmountable prejudice. I propose not to diminish the authority of man, by asking him to take an equal partner in suffrage, but to enlarge his authority as a voter by taking away a very absurd and injurious restriction upon popular (masculine) sovereignty. At present men are not permitted the free exercise of suffrage, for they are limited to voting for masculine candidates. Such a restriction is anti-republican and as unwise as it is anti-democratic, for if we believe at all in popular (masculine) sovereignty, we must believe in unrestricted suffrage for men, allowing them to accept or reject whomsoever they please.

Is it not evident that if suffrage were entirely free there are many instances in which women of superior character and intelligence would be preferred to the average politicians—the nominees of the caucus and saloon? Would not this state of things impose greater caution on political parties in their nominations? and would not women of real ability and popularity be eagerly sought as candidates by either party when endeavoring to make a popular nomination? Moreover, would not the election of a few well qualified women to high offices do nearly as much for woman's rights and woman's progress as the voting of the entire mass of women? Is it certain that if all women voted, the number of women in high office would be much greater, or more beneficial, than if women should be elected by men? In the latter case it would be only women of exceptional merit who could be chosen, and if the sex is represented in government, ten superior representatives would be of more real service than a hundred exemplars of mediocracy.

If these views are correct, the emancipation of masculine suffrage from sex restrictions would introduce at once the greater part of the benefits sought by the suffrage movement, and would also serve as a stepping-stone to the final emancipation; for communities once familiarized with the idea of electing women to office, would not feel much aversion to the idea of giving all women suffrage.

I think, therefore, that merely as a stroke of policy to facilitate the final bestowment of suffrage, the freedom of masculine suffrage is the first thing to be sought, for the simple reason that it is much easier to rend a log by introducing the sharp end of the wedge than by battering with the broad end.

If the Woman Suffrage Associations would at once take up this measure and besiege every legislative body with demands for the enlargement of masculine suffrage, I think they would soon be rejoicing over many signal victories. The proposition would be both agreeable and amusing to the "lords of creation," and not a single argument in opposition could be raised without violating the professed creeds of both Democratic and Republican parties. The demand would be not for woman's rights but for man's rights, and it is safe to say, in hoc signo vinces.

If the leaders of the movement, Mrs. Stanton and Miss Anthony, would give this subject their most serious consideration, I do not perceive how they could fail to arrive at similar conclusions to those above expressed, for to my mind no objections of any importance are apparent. Masses may shrink from new ideas but real leaders in progress do not, and although these suggestions as to emancipating the man may strike one at first as giving an amusing aspect to a subject which has been discussed with earnest eloquence and pathos (for it embraces many a serious and tragic aspect of life), it is not probable that the introduction of a little good humor or even merriment would have any other effect than to liberalize the minds of legislators and facilitate just and benevolent legislation.

The few women who have already held offices in this country and abroad have so thoroughly won the public approbation as to demonstrate conclusively the superior effectiveness of the policy here recommended.

JOS. RODES BUCHANAN, M. D.

6 James St., Boston.

[Along with the honor of suggestion from woman's intrepid champion, Dr. Rodes Buchanan, it is a good place to note that ten legislatures hold sessions this year before the presidential election. The clear setting forth, by Francis Minor, in the Arena, of December, 1891, of woman's right to federal suffrage, according to the Constitution of the United States, and confirmed by decisions of the supreme court, has stirred thought in many minds. Women should be alive to petition these legislatures for presidential woman's suffrage. In every city it would be worth while for twenty-five or a hundred women to band together to vote for president. In state elections they may also vote for members to the national house of representatives. If legislatures were made aware that such act of women would have the support of past decisions of the United States supreme court, they might be found readier than women dream, to help them assume the duties of full citizenship.

On January 20th the select committee on woman suffrage in the United States senate reported favorably the proposed measure for an amendment to the Constitution, giving women the right of suffrage. Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton spoke with remarkable power before the committee. The National Suffrage Association, on the same day, elected the following officers: First honorary president, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton: second honorary President, Lucy Stone; active president, Susan B. Anthony; vice-president-at-large, Rev. Anna Shaw; first auditor, Harriet T. Upton.—ED.]

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The writer of this feels that a new day has dawned for the speedy accomplishment of the entire ownership of the Temple by the National society. Instead of one woman bearing the yoke alone of gathering in the money for this great enterprise, she has, through stress of circumstances and by the advice of eminent legal authority, called to her aid and associates with her twelve leaders of the World's and National W. C. T. U. as a board of trustees. The following named notable women with the writer form the board: Miss Frances E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. M. H. Dunham (president W. C. T. U., Iowa); Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap (president Michigan W. C. T U); Mrs. Barker (president S. Dakota W. C. T. U.); Mrs. Clara Hoffman (president Missouri W. C. T. U.); Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden (president W. C. T. U., Mass.); Mrs. W. H. Munnell (president Kentucky W. C. T. U.); Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ohio; Mrs. W. Jennings Demorest, New York; Mrs. Kells, Mississippi, and Miss Helen L. Hood, Chicago. The board held its first meeting yesterday (January 19) at 161 La Salle street, Chicago; nine of the thirteen members were present. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, president; Miss Helen L. Hood, secretary, and Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer. The board were most enthusiastic in regard to the outlook for a speedy ownership of the Temple.

***

Marshall Field's most kind and brotherly offer to sell within thirty days, or less, his entire stock (which gives us control of the building) by the payment of $50,000 down and the balance in payments of $10,000 every three months thereafter until the entire amount is paid, was considered an occasion for great congratulation. We expect to get the first $50,000 from our Temple Trust Bond Fund. The board felt that God's voice was heard with no uncertain sound saying, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." A circular letter is now in course of preparation which is to be signed by every member of the board, to be sent to each state president requesting that a systematic plan be at once adopted in their respective states whereby every union of thirty members will endeavor to raise during the year $100 for the Temple, by the mite-box system. This simple method, with one person in each union appointed to raise a Baby Band, cannot possibly cripple the local work of the unions. In the next issue we will try to show that such action by each state will be bread cast upon the waters.

***

Now is the time for all who desire to make a good investment and at the same time help the Temple to purchase Temple Trust Bonds. No better or safer investment is on the market to-day; remember they pay six per cent. per annum, interest paid January first and July first, of each year; $100,000 of the bonds have already been sold, and other large sales are pending. Send for circular giving all particulars in regard to them to our financial agent, Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle street, Chicago.

***

Mrs. L. A. Williams, Rose Creek, Minn., sends $90. This completes her gift of $100 to the Temple. It is in memory of her husband, A. H. Williams, who passed to his reward April 15, 1888. He was a most earnest Prohibitionist and worked for it to the last moment of his life. It has been through much sacrifice and self-denial that Mrs. Williams has been enabled to send the above amount. Mrs. O. C. Hawley sends $11 from the W. C. T. U. of Manistee, Mich., as a first instaliment for a tablet in honor of their former beloved president, Mrs. Peters. Ten dollars has been received from the twenty-fourth district, Ohio W. C. T. U., for the Charlotte Boyer tablet, $5 for the same tablet from the New Richmond, Ohio, union; $10 from Brown county auxiliary W. C. T. U., and $1 from the Bethel society. All the above amounts for this tablet are from the twenty-fourth district of Ohio. The following unions have sent in one cent a member for the Lucy Webb Hayes tablet: Baraboo, Wis.; Fayette City, Mo,; Magnet, Mo., and $1.40 collected in the thirteenth district, Missouri.

***

Mrs. J. H. Brooks, Dartford, Wis., sends $3.65. She writes, "This is the penny collection of my seventy-third year, having this day closed that year of my life." Another aged veteran, Mrs. E. H. Browne, Paw Paw, Mich., sends $4, collection from her mite-box. She says, "My seventy-sixth birthday is not far away now and I realize that what I do must be done quickly." Mrs. Mary Norton, of Hightstown, N. J., Temple superintendent, writes as follows: "About a year ago I sent a mite-box by request to Mrs. Eliza Teulane, of this place, who is eighty-two years old. She had read of the wonderful Temple and wanted to do something for it. To-day she brought the box back to me to open. I enclose the contents, $3.24. As she is alone in the world and limited in means, I think her contribution very generous." Mrs. E. A. Hill, of Geneseo, Ill., writes: "My mother, Mrs. E. A. Cone, who is now eighty-one years of age, wishes to send $1 for the Temple so as to have her name recorded as one of the helpers in the great work." Mrs. A. Dowding, Laingsburg, Mich., sends $11.35; of this amount $3 is for the purpose of recording in our record book the names of the following veterans: Mrs. J. D. Wyckoff, Sr., Mrs. Ruth Anna Earl and Mrs. M. Cooper Smith. Mrs. L. C. Nash, Jackson, Mich., an invalid eighty-two years old, sends the contents of her mite-box, $2.

If the above aged veterans can do their little part for the Temple, what should be expected of our younger women in the full flush of youth and health?

***

All money sent to the Temple should be in the form of draft, post-office and express orders or in registered letters, and should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, and sent to her at Evanston, Ill. A two cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 149 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, will secure a Temple mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin.

Our Children.

A MEMBER OF THE L. T. L.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

I know a boy so brave and true
I'm sure you'd like to know him too—
A manly boy, whose dearest joy
Is pleasing mother—no alloy
Is mingled with his love for her.
Sweet wishes in his young heart stir,
Strong hopes and good desires,
And ever burn the strengthening fires
Of honor, truth and manliness—
His life, it seems, is but to bless.
Where is the reason? Who can tell?
I wonder if it can be—well,
This boy's an L. T. L.!

Such frank blue eyes! no trace of sin
Lurks darkly those clear wells within.
Such smiling lips! no cigarette
Has ever touched those portals yet.
Such clustering curls of chestnut brown!
Such nimble feet! In all the town
You cannot find a readier pair.
Such sturdy, strong hands, clean and fair!
I'm much in love with him, I own,
For, oh, to see him in his home
And on the street, and in his school
He seems to wear the Golden Rule
Upon his heart and in his face,
And over all there's such a grace!
Now can it be? I cannot tell—
I wish I could—but he is—well,
An L. T. L.!

If every boy were like this one—
Happy, healthy and full of fun,
Rushing, romping, and full of noise,
(Just like a thousand other boys)
But pure as snowflakes from the sky
And sweet in his thoughts as the days pass by,
And steadily growing all the time,
Like the sturdy oak that lifts the vine,
Steady and strong and brave and true,
Doing whatever comes to do
Cheerily, heartily, faithfully, well,
'Twere a happier world in which to dwell
If every boy were an L. T. L.!

Haymaker, Pa.

OLD JOE.

BY ELLEN HALE.

It was a wonder to everybody in the town of Elmwood that old Joe had such a pretty, dainty daughter as Nannie. There surely was no resemblance between the bloated, sin-hardened features of Joe Winter, and the rounded pink and white face of this girl. The mother, bent with toiling over wash-tubs all of her weary married life, likewise seemed almost as far removed from any tie of relationship, but still a close look at her face showed faint signs of former prettiness to which her daughter's might be traced.

But, as in this world, the evil influences seem at times so much more powerful than the good, so in this matter of heredity, the father's nature was stamped upon all the other children; this last child seemed to spring up as a fine flower that sometimes makes its way through tangled weeds and stony soil.

The townspeople took little Nannie under their protection and she might have been adopted into a pleasant home, if the mother's heart could have given her up, or even, strange to say, if the father's debased nature had not shown one remaining trace of manhood in his fondness for Nannie. She was the only member of the family, or indeed the only person in the world who had any influence over him, and many a cruel blow was averted from the mother by the child's little voice or hand. The friends of Nannie, and they were all that knew her, would hold their breath when they saw the little fair head perched upon the perilous height of a coal-wagon, which her father drove when he was sufficiently sober. Many a day, old Joe was so ugly that no one could approach him without being received by a volley of oaths, but even then Nannie's baby prattle could be heard, talking to "da-da."

The future of the child seemed a serious problem as the family grew poorer, for this one good impulse in Joe's life was not strong enough to counteract the downward tendency produced by years of brutalizing drunkenness. But the child continued to develop her finer nature in the midst of these adverse surroundings, and when she was old enough began to desire the advantages enjoyed by the more favored children about her.

"Da-da, I want to go to school," she said one day, when she was perched on his knee.

"Wal, ye c'n go. I guess ye're big enough now," he replied, being in one of his good-natured moods, as little Nannie had divined, with the unchildlike keenness that is often found in the children of the poor.

"But, da-da, if I go, I must have clothes and books," she said anxiously.

"Ma'll git 'em fer ye," with the perfect laziness and selfishness characteristic of the drunkard.

"But she can't, I've asked her."

"Wal, she'll git 'em some way," he said, rising to go out, to avoid any discussion that reminded him of his lack of manliness. But a heart-broken cry from Nannie checked his steps. He picked her up, saying:

"Thar, don't ye cry. I'll git em fer ye."

Before he had time to take back this rash promise, the little one had hugged and kissed him in a rapture of delight, which was only abated as she remembered how very seldom "da-da" had any money in his pocket.

"But," she said, "when will you keep the money for me?"

That was a poser to Joe's weak intellect, knowing, as he did, his inability to keep any money longer than to reach the nearest grogshop; but he had made his promise and meant to keep that.

"I'll tell ye what, chicken," he said, "ye c'n go'n draw out what ye need evr'y Sat'day, fore I git 'round, 'n I'll write it so to the boss right now."

Accordingly Nannie received the following order written on the back of a coal ticket, in very shaky and illegible handwriting: "Pay to the barer, nannie winter wat she wants off my airnin's ev'ry Satturday joseph winter."

"But mind ye, now," he added, "don't ye draw eny more'n ye need, or I won't give ye none."

She promised, and went dancing off to tell her mamma that "she was going to school, and that da-da was going to send her."

This seemed almost incredible, and the mother, with knowledge born of years of suffering, shook her head saying, "'Twon't last, but the poor little thing shall go s'long as she can."

But it did last, and strange to say, old Joe even urged his pet to buy a pretty ribbon for her hair, or new shoes when she needed them, and regularly little Nannie was the first person paid at the coal office where her father worked. The first thing she learned to write was her father's name in full, "Mr. Joseph Winter," and tears came to the teacher's eyes, as she thought of the dignity and affection with which old Joe was invested in the thought of one little person at least. He himself had a momentary feeling of pride and self-respect as he read his name written out with such an effort, and he tucked the paper away in his dirty, empty pocket-book, "to keep the little gal's fust writin'," he said.

But still his life went on in the same old degraded course, except that there was somewhat more regularity about his working, as his pride in "Nannie's larnin'" increased. The delight of both became excessive when Nannie developed a taste for drawing, and their bare, dingy walls were decorated with specimens of her handiwork. Old Joe would wash his hands, an unheard-of proceeding in the past, in order to examine these treasures, which he did almost reverently.

"Now, just look at that hoss," he would say, "'n to think my little gal did it."

Nannie's little sketches had more than intrinsic worth, for the contrast between their whiteness and the smoke-begrimed walls struck even the bleared vision and thick brains of old Joe, and caused him to say one day, rather sheepishly, "Guess I'll hev to whitewash them old walls, the picturs don't show off good on 'em."

Sure enough he did, and that stimulated the discouraged mother to make an extra effort towards cleanliness in general.

These were slight improvements, however, compared with what Nannie longed to achieve in her home, which her maturer eyes began to see in its true hideousness. She did not lose her affection for her father or her old influence over him, but it did not seem to increase, and she began to fear that she should always be a drunkard's child.

"What can I do to save my father?" she would ask herself with bitter tears, sometimes sinking into a despair that was pitiful to behold in one so young. Her artistic talent was her great solace and also her father's increasing pride, as she began to work in colors, and even to sell the little pictures to friends who valued them for the artist's sake, as well as for their own dainty prettiness.

Old Joe had planned to buy a frame for one of these productions as a present for Nannie's fourteenth birthday, having kept this secret and his consequent savings for nearly a month. He felt more like a man than he had for many a year with so much money actually in his pocket, and with an unusually steady gait, he walked down to the stores to make his purchase. On the way he met a friend who called out,

"Come 'long 'n take a drink."

This was an invitation that Joe did not receive very often and he could not refuse. When he was warmed up by the liquor he began offering to stand treat himself. The number of loafers greatly increased as they stopped on their way home from work, and it was not long before the prospective gilt frame had been swallowed by a thirst more insatiable than that of Tantalus.

Joe had drunk only enough himself to reach the ugly stage and instead of feeling remorseful, he swore to himself on the way home that "he'd do what he liked with his own money."

They had waited supper for him, as he had promised Nannie to come home without fail on the eve of her birthday. She ran to meet him, but he turned her off with almost the only cross word he had ever given her. Her blue eyes filled, but she went on getting something for him to eat. His mood was just beginning to soften as he watched her motions when the mother unwisely remarked, "Shame on you to be cross to the child on her birthday."

Probably the remembrance of all the wrong he had done her rushed over him, and filled him with an uncontrollable rage, for with a fearful imprecation he snatched up the teapot just brought in by Nannie, and hurled it at his wife.

The child screamed, "Oh, father!" and caught his arm, in time to avert the scalding contents from her mother, but only to receive them on her own right arm.

Then for many weeks their old relationships were reversed. No longer could Nannie greet her father with smiles and attentions, but, instead, he heard groans and moans that could not be repressed. But, blessed be God's compensations, the sight of those very sufferings, inflicted by his own hand, transformed the former brute into a tender nurse. He would never consent to leave her side, but would lie down at night on the floor by the bed, attentive to the slightest sound or motion. The fatal lapses to which we are all so subject, often caused him to grow restless under the restraints to which he had subjected himself, and he might have finally yielded to the power of his old habits, but for a remark he heard the doctor make to Nannie.

"You will never be able to use your arm very much, my child, the tendons have been so injured."

"What's that, doctor? Ye don't mean to say she can't paint any more?" gasped old Joe, with strained eyes.

"I'm afraid not, my man," said the doctor, and Nannie gave one heart-broken sob, with her face hidden in the pillow.

"Oh, my little gal," groaned the father, drops of sweat on his forehead. "Ye must hate me now, Nannie. I'll go away and never bother ye any more, but I want ye to kiss me good-bye if ye can,"

The child sprang up in bed, putting her well arm around the man's neck and kissing him tenderly. "Not to say good-bye to my father, but only to 'old Joe.' We will say good-bye to him, won't we, father?" An agony of pleading in her eyes made the father sink resistlessly on his knees, and with his hands tenderly clasping her maimed arm, register a vow before God and his child, that never again should his arm be a blight or curse to his family.

Chicago.

THE PRESIDENTS.

Come, young folks all, and learn my rhyme,
Writ like the ones of olden time,
For linked together, name to name,
The whole a surer place will claim:
And firmly in your mind shall stand
The names of those who've ruled our land—
A noble list: George Washington,
John Adams, Thomas Jefferson,
James Madison and James Monroe,
John Quincy Adams—and below
Comes Andrew Jackson in his turn;
Martin Van Buren next we learn,
Then William Henry Harrison,
Whom soon John Tyler followed on,
And after Tyler, James K. Polk;
Then Zachary Taylor ruled the folk,
Till death. Then Millard Fillmore came;
And Franklin Pierce we next must name.
And James Buchanan then appears,
Then Abraham Lincoln through those years
Of war. And when life was lost
'Twas Andrew Johnson filled his post.
Then U. S. Grant and R. B. Hayes,
James A. Garfield, each had place,
Now Arthur came; then Cleveland's time;
With Harrison I end my rhyme.

The Household.

AT CONCERT PITCH.

BY DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

At concert pitch keep thy heart's mood,
In peace and love and brotherhood;
Chime with the right, and not the wrong,
Be this the concord of thy song,
And this its tension—doing good.

In cold give warmth, in hunger food,
Such music is best understood,
And wings its way, sweet-voiced and strong,
At concert pitch.

With tyrant claims of self subdued,
And clamor hushed of hate and feud,
Thou shalt compel the listening throng
To grateful "encore" loud and long;
"Well done!" the chorus will conclude
At concert pitch.

Cazenovia, N. Y.

HIS VOICE ON THE DRY HILLS.

BY CHARLES N. SINNETT.

The few brief snow-storms of the winter had been chased by clear sunshine which slowly, cunningly drew up all their moisture into the sky before a bit of it could sink into the frozen ground. The drops from the half-dozen slight showers of the spring had been muffled and dried in the brown dust of the fields. The four hours' rain-storm in early June was closely followed by a hot wind which shook every grass blade and field of springing wheat as though angry that they dared promise the farmers any crop. It was this state of things which made hearts heavy all over North Dakota. Anxious hearts, however, have very different ways of showing their troubles.

Hugh Driscoll's crop had failed one year. The second season a sudden hail-storm had cut a wide swath through his wheat. While his wife prayed trustfully he watched defiantly the hard signs of the third year. From the time when he first began to work, he toiled on in that way in which a man sometimes treats a person whom he has helped in a wrong spirit and now thinks it high time that he should make return for that service, though no such return was thought of when the aid was rendered.

"The earth owes me a living. I've put lots of time and strength into it. And I'm bound to have my living back now."

That was the way in which Hugh Driscoll expressed his feelings to a neighbor. And Hugh Driscoll's two half-grown boys, knowing that they could not go to school in the fall unless rain came and the wheat grew, began to look surly like their father as the days wore on. They worked early and late, but it was never in the spirit of hopeful, trustful labor. One could see that by the cruel way in which they lashed the horses now and then. And how meanly they teased their little brother Merton, when he wished to follow them to the field! And once when their mother was praying in their chamber, kneeling right by the bed where they slept together, she heard Ben say to Teddy:

"This praying and having faith, which some folks talk so much about, just helps to make the sky dry!"

And then Teddy answered, "That's just so."

The woman knew well how the lads had heard their father say things like that. It cut her to the heart to think how much evil they were learning right there at home. She buried her face in her hands. The tears trickled fast through the fingers which had grown so thin with hard work. But she prayed with firm faith in the Lord. She whispered the words louder than she knew until she had finished her pleadings. Then a little voice at her side began:

"Dear Father, ma and I want rain real bad, and wheat, and some flax, and grass for old Billy and Dan, and the calves, and pa to be—to pray some, too. Amen!"

Little Merton had come softly up stairs, and this was his prayer. The mother's tears trickled faster. But now they were tears of joy. With such a dear boy to pray with her she felt sure that God would hear and help.

At the breakfast table the next morning Hugh Driscoll said to the older boys,

"I'm going to give you and your mother a vacation to-day I'm going to send you off to the hills on a picnic and Merton and I will keep house."

The mother marked with deep pain the strange look which the father bent upon Merton. She knew that the hopeful words about the weather which the child spoke now and then angered him at times. She was afraid that he meant to threaten the little fellow and try to make him talk in the reckless way in which both Ben and Teddy did so often, but she talked on cheerfully about the plan for the day, and gave no sign of her troubled thoughts. When she rode away she did not wave back any warning signal for Merton to be true and faithful. He had looked into her face with such trust that she felt that, though in his innocence he did not guess to what temptations he might be exposed that day, God would keep him safe and pure.

The boy stayed so closely by his father all the forenoon, and seemed so ready to help him, that somehow the latter found it was not easy to say the words which he had been planning to speak. But while they were eating dinner Merton spoke something about the rain soon coming to make the wheat grow.

"It won't rain for a month," Hugh Driscoll broke out, "and I'm not going to have you talking in such a foolish way, and—"

"But, papa, there's a cloud coming up over the hills now."

Rumble! went the thunder. The father started rather nervously.

"It's just God's voice speaking to us," said the boy. "He used to like to talk to His people on the great hills."

The thunder rolled still more heavily, and Hugh Driscoll saw a flash of lightning dart through the black cloud.

"It'll just .soak wife and the boys," he grumbled, in spite of Merton's happy look. "And Teddy has never been so strong as Ben. I don't know how I could ever get along without him if he should get cold and be sick, he's such a help about planning all our work."

"God will take good care of him," answered the lad hopefully.

"He seems to be doing it," said the father sarcastically. "The shower's rolling right down over the hills. Floods of rain are pouring out there where it won't do a bit of good. We shan't get a drop on the wheat and flax."

And away from the needy fields the storm rolled with its vivid lightning and deep peals of thunder. But Merton's face still looked so trustful that the father did not say much more to him. He was, however, planning much to speak to his wife and boys when they came home.

"There they are!" he cried suddenly as he spied a team in the distance. "I thought they'd get soaked and come back early. Poor Ted must be shivering!"

Hugh Driscoll shaded his eyes with his hand and looked away across the prairie.

"What—can—they—be—going—so—slow—for?" he said as he leaned far over in his anxiety. "Teddy always makes old Billy and Dan go so fast. He can't be driving. And if he isn't, he must be hurt!"

And, unheeding little Merton's cheerful singing, he dashed away down the road to meet the team. His fears grew upon him as he saw that his wife was driving the horses. She cheerfully waved her hand to him. But what he saw most clearly were her frequent glances towards the back of the farm wagon. Were both his boys hurt? Were they coming home sick and helpless? These questions made Hugh Driscoll dash down the road as fast as he could. He grew more and more certain that the boys were both in the back of the wagon. But as Ben heard from his mother how his father was running towards them he stood up and waved his hand.

"All right," he called out in his clear, strong voice.

"They're tryin' to deceive me as long as they can," Hugh Driscoll swiftly thought. "I know that the shower on those dry hills did Teddy mischief."

Then the horses stopped, and Teddy rose up and waved his hand. What could it all mean? The man had not long to wait for an answer.

"Don't worry, Hugh," his wife said, as he came panting up to the wagon.

"No, father, for we all have great reason to thank God for the way He spoke to us out of that shower." It was Teddy who said this with a strange, happy light shining on his pale face. "I wandered away from mother and Ben, and slipped down the side of one of those deep gulches over there," he went on. "I fainted away, and I don't believe I would have awakened out of it, if God had not sent that shower. The roar of the thunder and the rain beating in my face, brought me back to life. I called out so that mother and Ben heard me."

"Merton said that God was speaking on those dry hills," answered Hugh Driscoll, out of his full, thankful heart. "Surely He knows where to send His showers."

He looked up to heaven and saw that the west and north were growing black with clouds.

WORK AND WORKERS.

BY MARGARET BOTTOME.

I am indebted to Miss Willard for these suggestions for the workers' interests, so am glad to set them afloat in THE UNION SIGNAL to catch what favoring winds they may.

Much is said (and not too much) about this and that work for the Master. Much is given (and none too much for this and that work), but have you ever thought how much is depending on the worker or workers in all these different kinds of work? and how closely identified with the work these workers are? and how much they need to be looked after? for real workers are not very apt to think of themselves. I know of a woman at the head of a magnificent work in this country, and pleading for the work to which she had given her life, of whom a noble man said: "Miss —— does not look strong. I wonder if she travels in the easiest way? I wonder if she has all the nourishing food she needs, and the delicacies she ought to have?" and on inquiry he found that she was stinting herself to the last degree to give to her work, and he said to his wife: "I will look after her and thus help the work."

I can scarcely write, for the tears always blind my eyes when I think of one who gave her life for a noble work, and cared for her poor lost sisters till she breathed her last; but she never thought of herself, and after she died we said: "Oh, why didn't we do this or that?"

I write this because of a noble woman doing missionary work in this city of New York who has just passed out of my presence. She came to thank me for the interest I had taken in trying to get a poor girl a situation (the girl was no more to her than to me); she could hardly walk, and sank down in a chair. I said: "What is the matter?" and she told me she could only describe the pain in her feet by saying that both feet had a hard toothache. I said: "Are you much on your feet?" She smiled as she said: "Always in the street." I said: "Don't you take the cars when you have to go a distance?" She answered: "Seldom." "Why not?" I asked. She replied: "It costs five cents, and I can't afford it." A moment after, with much delight, she showed me a ten-dollar bill that had been given her for a case of distress. I simply said: "I wish the wealthy lady had given an additional five dollars for you." I picked up a few coppers from the table and slipped them into her bag that she might ride in the cars to-day. Now, I admit that it is thoughtlessness in helping a work, and not being thoughtful for the worker. I could give instance after instance that has come under my own observation, and I have no doubt under yours. As a worker, I have been uncommonly fortunate. My lot has been cast among the thoughtful, and that is why I can speak for others. It might not have given you pleasure, but it did me, when a circle of young Daughters of the King told me they had sent (among other work) a lovely hall lamp to an humble parsonage; but I went back in memory to humble parsonages where the little, thoughtful attentions were so much to me. Oh, do look after the workers as well as the work. They will go some day, and maybe you might keep them a little longer if you would only be more thoughtful.

I am sure I do not know what help those women wanted when St. Paul wrote: "Help those women who labored with me in the gospel." But I know what help many a woman and many a man wants in these days who are working in the field. They need loving sympathy, shown in some practical, loving, delicate way.

The song I rocked my babies to sleep on many and many a time gets deeper and deeper:

"Little deeds of kindness,
Little words of love,
Make our earth an Eden
Like the heaven above."

Take care of the work, but don't forget the workers.

REFLECTIONS AFTER READING REPORT OF M. BLOUET'S CAUSERIE—"WOMAN."

BY EVALINE W. NELSON.

In strong contrast with the lad, who upon hearing the Scripture, "Ye must be born again," wailed, "I dinna want to be born again, I might be born a lassie," is the statement of M. Blouet, better known by his nom de plume Max O'Rell. The French visitor in his comparative analysis of woman on the continent and in America, says that if he were to be born again and could choose nationality and sex, he would ask to be an American woman.

While rendering the women of each great nation due appreciation, he pays the American woman this high compliment, "a man forgets he is talking with a woman and is simply conscious that he is in the presence of an intellectual being who clearly understands all that he says on whatever subject." This lack of self-consciousness he thinks constitutes the charm of her personality.

And what gives woman this charm? We all believe that in soul-dom there is no sex; that as we come nearer the Infinite in spirit, intelligence and heart-force measure more and sensual things less. Is it not true then that the extent to which this charm prevails indicates our uplift from the harem state? Independence of man for support and the development of soul consequent upon the release from a galling position have given this grace. So long as the average woman knows that the degree of comforts with which she may surround herself depends upon her ability to win in marriage, so long will she resort to arts based upon thought of sex to secure high position. Banish that so-called necessity, as witnessed in America the present century, and lo, woman's advancement is marvelous. Go farther; give her political and religious equality, and hand in hand the brother and sister souls will continue their course heavenward.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH,
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
161 La Salle Street. Chicago. Ill.

DEPARTMENT OF BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.
ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

President—MRS MATILDA B. CARSE, 149 Ashland Boulvd. Chicago.
Treasurer—MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Elmhurst, Ill.
Secretary—MARY ALLEN WEST, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill
MISS ESTHER PUGH, Evanston. Ill.
MRS IRA LEWIS, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Stroudwater, Me.
MRS. A. H. CHRISTENSEN, Beaufort, S. C.
MRS. L D CARHART Marion Iowa.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec,—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it.—Psa. 127 1.
Arise and build.—Neh 2 20.

OUR HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.

From the tent at Chautauqua in 1874, where the Crusade movement took a nationally organic form, to the Temple in Chicago, in 1892, where it is to have "a home of its own," has been a long, heroic march.

At eighteen years old a girl attains her majority and our sweet, strong white ribbon lassie, the W. C. T U., will soon put on her beautiful garments to signalize that great event In about three months more, the movement begun by women praying on the street will have its habitation in the most beautiful office building that the world contains. This structure, popularly called the "architectural jewel of Chicago," is but the outward and visible form of an inward and spiritual grace. Known and loved in every land, its history familiar, its purpose understood, we have thought that a resumé of its present outlook would be helpful to us all and might serve as a sort of review lesson to the famous "Temple Column "of its founder, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse We wish also to reply to all imaginable questions naturally asked by friend and foe.

At the recent Boston Convention the standing committee on "Our Affiliated Interests," asked that its duty of passing in review the status of the Temple be delegated to a special committee, that should go to Chicago and study the enterprise so thoroughly as to be prepared to report, on a plain, business basis, to the executive committee. This was done, and in consultation with the ladies who came upon this errand of investigation Mrs. Carse felt that it was wise to associate with herself a board of trustees, consisting of leading white-ribboners, whose advice and help would greatly relieve her of the burden she has carried so long.

The three ladies who comprised the special committee of investigation (Mesdames Dunham, of Iowa, Woodbridge, of Ohio, and Bathrap, of Michigan) were invited by Mrs. Carse to become trustees of the Temple fund, and they consented to do so, with nine others, namely:

Lady Henry Somerset, Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, president W. C. T. U. of Missouri; Mrs. Helen M. Barker, president W. C. T. U. of So. Dakota; Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, president W. C. T. U of Massachusetts; Mrs. W. H. Munnell, president W. C. T. U. of Kentucky; Mrs. Harriet B Kells, Mississippi, one of THE UNION SIGNAL editors; Mrs W Jennings Demorest, of New York City, and Miss Helen L. Hood, Chicago. Mrs. M. B. Carse is president of this Board, Miss Helen L. Hood, secretary, and Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer.

The appointment of this Board of Trustees affords the requisite intermediary, and our House Beautiful will have its members as custodians of its building fund from this time on and when completed they can hold it in trust for the National W. C. T. U. whose control will be practically absolute, since one of the constitutional laws of the new board is that the National W. C. T. U. shall nominate successors to the board whose names have here been given.

Marshall Field, the merchant prince, George M. Pullman, W. E. Hale, Norman B. Ream and other capitalists, who took stock in the Temple, had all agreed to give the National W. C. T. U. an option of twelve years, that we might raise the money to buy their stock, but said option was no longer binding in law because the supreme court of Illinois had lately ruled that such options are invalid. Although we believe that the word of men like those whom we have named is as good as their bond, and while their actions have proved that although they could not be held in law after the above decision, yet they deemed that the moral obligation held them absolutely, it was felt important that something should be done whereby their heirs could be legally bound by the agreement.

This difficulty has now been adjusted in the following manner: Several of the leading stockholders have made over their shares to Mrs. Carse—who is the only one legally qualified to receive them—and have received instead Temple Trust Bonds, while Marshall Field, who owns $251,000 worth of stock, has agreed that upon payment of fifty thousand dollars down and the promise of ten thousand dollars quarterly until all is paid, he will contract to make over his entire stock to Mrs. Carse which will give us control of the fund.

The gifts constantly coming in will, with the sale of bonds and our proportion of the rentals—which begin May 1—enable us to possess ourselves of this stock, which will give us control of the building. The new board of trustees is responsible only for the proper use of the Temple fund, Mrs. Carse still standing as the only white-ribboner legally responsible for the great enterprise, of which she has always been the soul.

The Temple is already finished as to its exterior, and work is going rapidly forward within. About one-half oi ts thirteen floors is already rented, and every lease pledges its completion May 1, 1892.

We should remember that the Temple will be, from that date, not only the headquarters of the National, but of the World's W. C. T. U., for it was voted that where the President's headquarters were, there those of the World's society should be. Hence our House Beautiful is not only the home of the Crusade movement crystallized into organic form, but equally represents that ever-extending evangel whose white wings are now spread in every nation of the earth.

That the enterprise of building such a World's home for temperance is herculean, we have understood from the beginning. Our plans would never have compassed it nor our inspiration reached to such amazing height. But to one of our number, prepared for such adventurous deeds by nature and adapted by especial training, came the call, wholly divine as she believes, "Arise and build." The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a child of Providence. Wondrously have we thus far been led. Women of individual initiative, upheld by the faith and love, the prayer and work of systematized societies, have been, under God, the basis of every victory that we have gained. The Temple is no longer a dream, it has materialized; it is no longer a picture, but solid, coördinated brick, iron and marble; it has come and come to stay.

With no legal responsibility for one stone in its foundation or a single tiling of its roof, we, as white-ribboners, have nevertheless gone too far not to go forward all the way. Let no Lot's wife look over her shoulder, lest she turn into a pillar, salt with the tears of humanity's sorrow, should we fail. Let us look straight on and up; believe, love, pray. Every effort put forth by a local union to help, does but strengthen and dignify that union and help to ally it with the wider movement of which it is a part.

If each local W C. T. U. would resolve to have its name, fragrant with motherly and sisterly deeds, added to the emblazoned roll in Willard Hall by the sending of a hundred dollars, the work done for this definite purpose would strengthen and build up that union, and when we own the Temple in fee simple, a dividend would come back to each state from the rentals which in part would go to aid the local unions which had contributed in the hour of our need. We do not want money that has deprived any animate being of the comforts of life, nor do we believe we have had it. Mrs. Carse, with a beautiful ingenuity, has thought out methods by which all could give according as the Lord had blessed them. It was pathetic to see her at the great Convention in Boston, with this unequalled financial weight upon her shoulders, as she came forward with her radiant smile of hope and asked only that her comrades should each take a mite-box and secure $3.65 per year. Rally, then, true hearts in every land. Send for your mite-box to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 149 Ashland Boulevard, and set to work. We are in for it, let us go forward. That Temple means Peace, Purity, and Prohibition. We can own it and we will.

"To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

RECOLLECTIONS OF NOTED MEN AND WOMEN

Lord Shaftesbury.

"Love; serve," is the heraldic motto of the Earls of Shaftesbury. Their arms have borne this inscription since the days of the Plantagenets. Such legend would mean little on the escutcheons of many an ancient line, but in the case of Anthony Ashley, seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, it was the true description of his life. His figure stands out in the picture gallery of the century, bright against a background of sin and sorrow, noble among the "not many" who are called to heavenly rank; a face well known and deeply loved by the whole English nation, familiar alike to the outcast and homeless, to statesmen and princes.

Two little, ragged, homeless children, wandering down a great London thoroughfare, stood for a moment, hand in hand, before a shop window in which were displayed pictures of great men. Suddenly one pale face, lit with a light born of the blessed love of God, said, pointing with his thin hand, "See, Jim; that's our Earl."

The suffering he sought to lessen had left its imprint on his countenance. He was a "man of sorrows," like the Master whom he served so well. His nature, sensitive and deep, had suffered much from the opposition he met from those who should have been his friends; and yet, all who knew him remember the sweetness of his smile and the playful gentleness which made him so human, living in an atmosphere not

"Too bright or good
For human nature's daily food.'

He retained, even in the winter of life, the freshness and quick sympathy of youth, and I have never known a tale of want or woe poured into his ear but that the tears would start into his kindly eyes, and he would often bury his face in his hands and say: "Oh, God, how can we help the sorrow of the world?"

The earliest influence which turned this great mind heavenward came to him through his nurse. Lord Shaftesbury's mother was a woman of fashion, who had no time to spend on the education of her children, and his father, the sixth Earl of Shaftesbury, was engrossed in the cares of public life. The lonely child had, however, one friend in this simple woman; in her arms he learned the story of the love of Christ, and her hand, as she stroked his boyish head, touched the chord that vibrated in after years in such true harmony with God's love to man. He often said the prayer she taught him, as he nestled on her knee, was on his lips in the midst of the greatest struggles of his public life; and when he stood on the very brink of the dark river, and folded his aged hands, preparing for the last rest after a long life of toil, he still murmured the petition he had learned in childhood. In after life he never hesitated to state, before vast audiences, and in the home circle, that under the gentle influence of that faithful servant, he had, at the age of seven, given his child-heart to the great Father who in blessing him had so blessed others.

His school days were memorable for an incident which turned the tide of his life into the channels of philanthropy. While walking down the street of the little town of Harrow, where the great public school is situated in which he was a pupil, he was startled by hearing the words of a low Bacchanalian song, accompanied by shouting and yelling voices, and the sight that he saw that day was forever engraved on the tablets of his memory—four or five drunken men carrying a coffin containing the mortal remains of one who had no mourners to follow him to his last home. Staggering and reeling in helpless intoxication, the bearers with horrible oaths and imprecations let their ghastly burden fall. The boy stood spell-bound at the sight. "Good heavens!" he exclaimed "can this be permitted simply because this man was poor and friendless?" Then and there, on the sidewalk, he lifted up his young heart, and accepted from God the mission to devote himself to befriending the helpless, and to their service he gave not only his great powers of mind, but his still greater heart. "People talk," he said, "of the divine right of kings. No man has a divine right to anything except his soul's salvation."

At the age of twenty-five, Lord Ashley (as he was styled during the life of his father, Lord Shaftesbury), entered the House of Commons. The first reform measure which brought the young member's name into prominence was his attack upon the existing Lunacy Laws. In the early part of the present century, lunatics were treated as no convict in the prisons of Siberia could be dealt with to-day. They were chained in dark cells, had nothing but straw to lie upon, their keepers visited them, whip in hand,—obedience being enforced by the lash, or by punishments so horrible that it requires all the ingenuity of man to imagine such cruelty. The Society of Friends had worked long and patiently to reform these terrible abuses, but with very little success. Lord Ashley's tender heart was stirred to its depths, and he made his first speech in the House of Commons, seconding the motion of Mr. W. R. Gordon to bring forward a bill for the better regulation of lunatic asylums. In Lord Ashley's diary at this time we find these words recorded: "And so, by God's blessing, my first effort has been made for the advancement of human happiness. May I improve hourly." This was the key to which was tuned every speech he made in the legislative assemblies of his country during his long career. With unfailing diligence he labored from that hour, by voice and pen, and with all the weight of his great influence, until radical reform granted just laws, providing for the proper treatment of those afflicted by insanity.

A wider field, however, shortly opened into which this young David unhesitatingly stepped to meet the great Goliath of the labor problem. The crowning work of his life will always be associated with the "factory acts," which proved so great a boon to his own country, and which have afforded an object lesson to the whole industrial world. Richard Arkwright had at this time produced one of the most remarkable inventions of the century, the machine known as the "Spinning Jenny." The conditions of the cotton manufacturers were from that hour completely changed, for it had made hand-weaving forever a thing of the past, and mill employés were obliged to accept any wage or hours of work dictated by the owners. The labor of adults was at a discount. Water power was employed where strength was required, and child labor was in universal demand. Barge loads of children were sent down to Lancashire from London workhouses, and dispatched in gangs from country places.

A horrible traffic sprang up. "Child jobbers" scoured the country, purchasing children, to sell them again to become the slaves of factory owners. Day and night the whirl of the machinery ground out their young lives; one shift working by day and another by night; whilst in times of pressure the little lives were sacrificed by the remorseless cruelty of their taskmasters, and they worked without intermission through the twenty-four hours. Under the "Apprentice System," young paupers, some as young as five years, were bound to serve until they were twenty-one. In spite, however, of the existing Factory System, a perfect storm of opposition greeted Lord Ashley's endeavors to obtain legislation. Strange to say, Cobden and John Bright were among his most formidable antagonists, and again and again his measures were defeated in the House of Commons. The cause was spoken of as "a delusion he had created for himself," and he was regarded as an Utopian dreamer. In this great crisis, however, when failure seemed so imminent, it was a woman's voice that thrilled the great mother-heart of the nation, and Elizabeth Barrett Browning in her "Cry of the Children," with the infinite pathos of her inspired genius, aroused the conscience which had so long been slumbering in the hearts of the English.

"For all the day the wheels are droning, turning;
Their wind comes in our faces,
Till our hearts turn, our heads with pulses burning,
And the wheels turn in their places;
Turns the sky in the high window blank and reeling,
Turn the long light with drops adown the wall,
Turns the black flies that crawl along the ceiling,
All are turning, all the day, and we with all.
And all the day the iron wheels are droning,
And sometimes we could pray,
'Oh, ye wheels (breaking out in a mad moaning)
'Stop! be silent for to-day.'"

This came as an echo to the first great speech in which Lord Ashley pleaded the cause of justice and humanity for the suffering and helpless before the House of Commons. Charles Dickens, always a warm admirer of Lord Ashley, wrote at this time his famous "Oliver Twist," which also largely contributed to form public opinion, and gave a deathblow to the abuses of the poor laws and their dealings with pauper children.

(Concluded next week.)

IMPORTANT COMMUNICATIONS.

One day last week the following telegram was received at Rest Cottage, Evanston, from a woman whose character and genius are universally admired:

NEWTON HIGHLANDS, MASS., Jan. 20.

FRANCES E. WILLARD:—Cannot you collect by telegraph a petition of several hundred thousand women's names against the Chilian war and send to Washington this week? ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS-WARD.

This, though an unexpected, was a most persuasive call. We have for years had a department for the promotion of peace and arbitration, with Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Maine, as superintendent. At our recent Convention in Boston we ordered a memorial in harmony with our principles, presented to Congress, and a delegation consisting of presidents of states contiguous to the Capital, with the president of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U., was appointed to carry that memorial. Mrs. Bailey is most active in the work and Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, lecturer in the peace department, has for years been speaking in this behalf. But in this emergency, when one day the war cloud hangs heavy and the next almost disappears, it seemed best to put on record the organized protest of the largest society of women in Christendom, whose very white ribbon is the badge of peace. Therefore the following telegram was sent to Mrs. S. D. La Fetra, our chieftain at the capital:

Go with delegation to President; present petition of Boston Convention representing two hundred thousand women, against war with Chili. Report action through Associated Press.

Mrs. May Wright Sewall, of Indianapolis, Ind., president of the Women's National Council, was telegraphed thus:

Join me in telegram to the President against war with Chili. Women must act; you and I represent a million names; Elizabeth Stuart Phelps-Ward urges it.

Mrs. Sewall responded by telegram in these words:

As president of the Women's National Council, I heartily join you in your protest to President Harrison against war with Chili.

As a result of this consensus of opinion among prominent women leaders, the following letter was sent to President Harrison:

JAN. 20, 1892.

To the President:

The National W. C. T. U. with a membership of two hundred thousand, and a direct following in the homes of this land of not fewer than half a million, has always been devoted in its patriotism and loyalty, and believes in "Peace on earth, good will to men."

For years we have through, a National department organized for that purpose, worked actively to inculcate peace principles, and practice, wherever we had power to do so. At our recent Convention in Boston we authorized a memorial to our government asking that "all difficulties within our borders, or with other nations might be settled by arbitration." We also urged that this great nation should not go to war with Chili. This status and action of the National W. C. T. U. is brought to the notice of the President that we may thank him for his patience with the distressed and distressing little Republic whose barbarous treatment of our sailors will, we hope, be made the subject of an arbitration. We beg also, that the arbitrament of arms may be as steadily refused in the future as in the past, and that our great, brave nation may thus set the key-note more and more clearly among the nations of the earth, for universal peace. With the highest esteem I am, on behalf of the white-ribboners,

Yours in the love of God and Humanity,

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
Pres. Nat. W. C. T. U.

Telegrams were sent Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, president of the Women's Congress, and always a famous advocate of peace; Miss Susan B. Anthony who leads the suffrage forces; Dr. Lozier, president of Sorosis, and other representative women. We shall soon hear from our regularly appointed delegation, and every worker in our ranks will rejoice that the home forces have entered prayer, plea and protest against the force of arms.

THE next National W. C. T. U. Convention goes to Denver, Colorado. Preparations have already begun, as shown by the following letter just received:

At an executive meeting of the state W. C. T. U. held in Denver last week, committees were appointed to plan for the entertainment of the National Convention next fall. Mrs. M. A. Cassell, 2357 Clarkson street, Denver, local chairman, to whom all communications may be addressed. We have strong committees, and the work is well begun. Much enthusiasm prevails, not only among our workers but among the citizens of Denver, as already many are sending word that they want to entertain. The churches are open and the best of feeling prevails. The state at large is delighted with the thought, and are ready to aid. Much is being planned to make it a memorable event in our history. Excursions into the mountains are to be arranged. Pueblo is clamoring for a day after the convention is over, to bring it bodily to that enterprising young city a hundred miles away, and hold an evening meeting in Mineral Palace, as the West prides itself in never doing anything by halves. So with open doors and open hearts we are ready to receive this great Convention.

MRS. EVA HIGGINS,
Pres. Col. W. C. T. U.

The Watch-Tower.

The water spider is a curious little creature that comes to the surface, and has such mechanism as enables it to surround itself by a pure, beautiful globule, in which the air is inclosed. It then goes to the bottom and there makes its home. So is it with man; he can rise above the murky atmosphere of this present life, and surrounding himself with celestial things, can bring down to terra firma a little heaven to go to heaven in; and this can be so genuinely true that those who see shall say, "there is something brighter, purer, and more to be desired than anything we find indigenous to the present changeful world."

***

One is treated by the heavenly powers just as he treats them. If one makes God a distant, imperious ruler, he will be that to the soul. If one looks up to Him with the confidence and expectation of a child looking into its mother's face, God will be just that; for even in His omnipotence he cannot force the human will, and He will only be to the human heart what that heart knows and wills. This is what makes different sizes and sorts of Christians.

***

The following query by Louisa Alcott will be appreciated by those who are not "good sailors": "If steamers are named the Asia, the Russia, the Scotia, why not call one the Nausea?"

***

Mrs. Catherine Booth was the forerunner of the Christians of a better kind. Fifteen degraded women gathered weeping around one of their number, in a low lodging house to hear the account of her last hours. "Let others move on," said a tottering old woman, who had stood long looking into the face of dead Mrs. Booth, as they gently asked her to pass, "let others move on, I have a right to stop, she saved my boys." Beside her coffin knelt three rough drinking men and gave their hearts to God. A poor, tattered, drunken man, for whom she had long labored, thus far in vain, cried out through sobs as he stood beside her coffin, "That woman lived for me."

"Kind hearts there are, but yet the tenderest one
Has limits to its mercy—God has none."

But Catherine Booth comes strangely near to our ideal of the universal mother-heart that holds and heals the world.

***

Concerning dress reform, it may be mentioned that one of the greatest obstacles to its progress would be removed if people were convinced that there was to be no imitation of the dress of men. The tailor-made girl, with starched shirt front, cuffs, collars, cravat with sailor knot, round hat, short hair, has been as much of a strain upon the sensibilities of the stronger half the family as they can well bear at present. Let the dress reformers recommend laces, ruffles, soft, fluffy trimmings, and other differentiations from the accepted style in the wardrobe of men, and they will do well for themselves.

***

White-ribboners will be grieved to learn that the mother of Caroline B. Buell, our corresponding secretary, is dangerously ill and shows no sign of improvement. In view of this, the general officers have asked Mrs. Buell, who has never had a vacation voted her since she entered on her office, to remain with her mother until the decisive moment of recovery or release. Our prayers and tender sympathies are with this faithful and loyal worker, who during the last few years has been repeatedly called to her Connecticut home by reason of illness or death in her circle of relatives.

***

"What would you do in time of war if you had the suffrage?" said Horace Greeley to Mrs. Stanton. "Just what you have done, Mr. Greeley," replied the ready lady, "stay at home and urge others to go and fight."

***

This is the age in which, to say the least, we are a people out in search of a religion. Never before was there such a stir, never such a looking up into the sky and down into that deep pool, the human heart. To find God, to translate nature in terms of faith, seems to be the intuition of the most beautiful minds. We are learning our relationship with great spirits that have lived in other ages. Some are being received into the church who were once considered heretics, and we are claiming for the altars of our faith, those who builded better than they knew in far-off days. It has been nobly said of Epictetus and of Marcus Aurelius, "The slave sought and found the secret of inward freedom; the Emperor sought and found the secret of self-rule." But we know that only in God did they find either; and since they had not heard of Him clearly as we have, we may claim them because they lived up to their highest light, as men who would have been disciples of Christ had it but been their happy lot to live in Galilee two thousand years ago.

ON DUTY.

Queen's Gardens.

OUT OF LINE.

BY EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH.

One summer I had a garden which I cultivated myself. It was not a very large garden, but it served to teach me many a lesson.

On one bright, particular morning I went to this garden, hoe in hand, after an absence of two or three days, to weed out the little patch of early potatoes I had been petting for some time. Green and straight were the rows, bright and thrifty were the vines; and as I cut down the weeds between, and heaped the mellow earth about their roots, I fell into sympathy with their innocent reaching up after the sunshine which seemed to be a part of their life. But presently, as I went slowly down the row, I came to the thriftiest vine of all, growing, not in line with the rest, but out in the center between two rows. It was just as bright and green as the rest. It reached up toward the sun with the same eagerness, and wore the same look of thrift and vitality as the others, but it wasn't in the right place. I hesitated a few moments as to what to do. I hated to cut down so healthy a plant, that gave promise of much fruit, but it was out of line.

I went back to the end of the row and took another look. The green rows were all even and straight save that one. Its regularity was broken, its evenness spoiled, by that one straggling plant that grew outside the line. The plant was all right in itself, its aim was high, its work good, but it was not in accord with my plan for the garden. It spoiled the garden's beauty, its regularity, its harmony, so I decided to cut it down.

As I struck the keen-edged hoe into the ground and tore up the fresh earth that covered its roots, then grasped the top and pulling it up flung it away, I thought how many of us have to be just as rudely torn from some quiet place into which we had settled ourselves because we are out of line with God's purpose, out of harmony with his plan.

Sometimes sorrows and afflictions overtake us, the rude blasts of the world bruise and hurt us, and circumstances over which we have no control tear us from our home place and toss us out into the big, hard world to root again, and grow up the best way we can, and all because we are out of the line that God has marked out for us.

How, then, shall we avoid this rooting-up process that is so hard for some of us to bear? Why, by just keeping in line with God's great and loving plan for us. This plan He will reveal to us day by day if we ask Him, and learn to hold our minds open to receive the impressions He would make upon them. Some of us think we have had a call to work in His garden of reform, but we want to work in our own way. We long to help the kingdom of heaven to come on earth, but we forget that that kingdom is God's garden for which He has a great and beautiful plan. This plan cannot be changed and mutilated that one weak child may have his way. No, harmony is necessary to success, and, because God loves humanity, He must keep to His own plan, and we who are out of line, though our work be ever so good in our own eyes, must be torn up and cast aside that the true plan may not be spoiled and its harmony broken.

Dear heart, are you mourning over spoiled plans and the ruthless destruction of sweet hopes? Perhaps you were out of line with God's purpose and that is why such sad changes have come to you. But do not grieve. Learn to wear the smile of faith and by and by you will be able to look up into Gods' face and calmly say, as one great man has said before you, "In the failure of my own plans I see the success of God's greater and wiser plan, and I am content."

But what is it that takes us out of line with God's design for us? It is the temptation of human nature to always walk by sight rather than by faith. We cannot see God's great purpose. We cannot see how this thing or that is coming out. We can only see the present. So we follow our own human judgment and for a time all goes well with us. Our work is successful, we settle into comfortable ways, the world praises us, we are popular and we think that all is right. But presently a great wave of misfortune overtakes us. The hoe has struck down deep into our roots and we are being torn away from the schemes we thought so successful, from the work we held so dear.

"What is the matter? Why has God dealt so hardly with me?" a soul cries out in distress. Ah, dear heart, you were out of line, that was all, and God had to tear you up that He might show you a sweeter and better place in which to grow.

There are churches and societies which are often out of line when they are seemingly most prosperous. They cater to the world, they plan their work with an eye to the practical, they seek the material side of success. They go on beautifully for awhile, but by and by dissension tears them in pieces, misfortune comes upon them, and some great catastrophe startles them from their lethargy to question what it all means. Ah, it is God's hoe rooting them up because they are out of line.

"Be not as the horse," says the Psalmist, "whose mouth is held in by bit and bridle." No, the Christian should have a childlike heart on which God can write His will by a gentle inward impression. And these impressions should be able to keep the faithful one in line though a thousand temptations would draw him aside.

Let us learn a lesson from the homely potato vine, and let the endeavor of our life be to keep in line with God's plan for us, to live in harmony with His will.

News from the Field.

STATE REPORTERS.

Alabama—Mrs. Jennie B. Gerald, Montgomery.
Arizona—Mrs. L. C. Hughes, Tucson.
Arkansas—Mrs. F. L. Sutton, 315½ W. Markham street, Little Rock.
California—Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, Oakland.
California (Southern)—Mrs. Mary E. Garbutt, Temperance Temple, Los Angeles.
Carolina (N.)—Miss Bettie D. Caldwell, Greensboro.
Carolina (S.)—Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Charleston.
Colorado—Mrs. S. L. Teetor, Denver.
Connecticut—Miss M. Belle Smith, Rockfall.
Dakota (North)—Miss Addie M. Kinnear, Fargo.
Dakota (South)—Mrs Irene G. Adams, Lake Helen, Volensia Co., Fla.
Delaware—Miss Annie Sutton, Smyrna.
District of Columbia—Miss Lizzie Kessler, 802 North I street, Washington.
Florida—Mrs. N. B. Irwin, Jacksonville.
Georgia—
Idaho—Mrs. Mary E. McGee, Nampa.
Illinois—Mrs. G. H. Read, 412 E. North street, Bloomington.
Indiana—Miss Sadie B. Whistler. Terre Haute.
Indian Territory—Mrs. Sarah Ford Crosby, Muscogee.
Iowa—Mrs. Clara P. White, Volga.
Kansas—Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, Le Roy.
Kentucky—
Louisiana—Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, Napoleon Ave., New Orleans.
Maine—Miss Mary French, Auburn.
Maryland—Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, Mt. Washington.
Massachusetts—Miss Emma W. Bumstead, 171 Tremont St., Boston.
Michigan—Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint.
Minnesota—Mrs. Amy B. Green, 2208 6½ avenue, Minneapolis.
Mississippi—Mrs. Olivia Fort Fitzhugh, Vicksburg.
Missouri—Mrs. Mary E. Jones, Humansville.
Montana—Mrs. W. W. Wylie, Bozeman.
Nebraska.—Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock, Beatrice.
Nevada—Mrs. Lena M. Westlake, Reno.
New Hampshire—Mrs. F. H. Bailey, Hopkinton.
New Jersey—Mrs. N. L. Caminade, Trenton.
New Mexico—Mrs. Ada Morley Jarrett, Socorro.
New York—Mrs. Frances Graham, Lockport.
Ohio—Miss Hannah A. Foster, Berea.
Oklahoma—Mrs. Sue Brown, Oklahoma City.
Oregon—Mrs. L. A. Nash, Corvallis.
Pennsylvania—Mrs. Bertha Howe, Bradford.
Rhode Island—Miss Miriam Earle, Valley Falls.
Tennessee—Mrs. T. P. Holman, Fayetteville.
Texas—Mrs. Elizabeth Strong Tracy, Houston.
Utah—Miss Mary Howard Nutting, 2324 Madison Ave., Ogden.
Vermont—Mrs. Clinton Smith, Middlebury.
Virginia—Miss Lona A. Kern, Winchester.
Virginia (W.)—Mrs. Mary Cartwright, 1007 Main St., Wheeling.
Washington (East)—Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, Cheney.
Washington (West)—Mrs. J. W. Lee, Tacoma.
Wisconsin—Mrs. Maria F. Hanchette, 322 W. Washington Ave. Madison.
Wyoming—Mrs. Therese A. Jenkins, Cheyenne.

MAINE.

LAW ENFORCEMENT AND OTHER MATTERS.

Some one has said that when all but three of the rooms in Uncle Sam's house are on fire, it is not strange that those three should smell of smoke. That is just our situation here in Maine. We are not on fire, but we sometimes smell a little smoky. Boston liquor dealers are constantly pouring their goods in upon us, usually sending them at their own risk, and the risk is very great. Many queer disguises are used. For instance, kegs of whisky are packed in a barrel of beans, rice or coffee, or, as in the case of the carload recently seized at Lewiston, disguised as cloth for the bleachery. It may, on the whole, be well that our people should thus be reminded of the need of national prohibition, as otherwise we might become indifferent to the temperance movement, satisfied with the thought that we neither make the liquor nor send it to the heathen!

Last autumn a union was organized at Tremont (near Miss Willard's summer home to be) which has had rather an exciting time of late. Four hundred dollars worth of liquor was seized at the express office and in freight-houses, and two sellers arrested. Word went out that the union would attend the trial in a body. The day was very disagreeable, with rain and mud, but the court-room was thronged. Forty-eight women were present. The county attorney, who had been sent for, failed to put in an appearance; the justice, however, did well. How could he do otherwise with so many women watching him? The evidence revealed that considerable liquor had been coming in at the landing at South West Harbor to be distributed over that island and neighboring islands. One of the sellers was fined and sent to jail. At the close of the trial three ringing cheers were given for the W. C. T. U. women, who responded with the Chautauqua salute.

Our friends in other states will be glad to know that on February 1, the Maine W. C. T. U. will come into possession of a building in Portland to be used for state headquarters. It is situated near several of the finest churches in the city, the lot adjoining that on which the Y. M. C. A. is soon to erect a business block. The house contains fourteen large rooms, and has every convenience of lighting, heating and plumbing. In order not to inconvenience the present occupants, the state union will not take formal possession until April.

We have not yet ceased to talk of the Boston Convention. Mrs. Whitman, of Bangor, one of our delegates, expressed the feeling of each of us who was there, when in a letter just received from her she says: "I shall never cease being thankful that I was permitted to be one from Maine in that grand convention. The inspiration there received will never leave me. I never realized before as I do now what a grand woman our chieftain is, what wonderful endurance in her seemingly frail body. When I think of those noble women, and among them our beloved Maine leader, I feel like saying:

> "'There are great hearts in this army,
> Though little hearts we be,
> And to this host, O sisters,
> I belong, I belong.'"

The Bangor union held the first of a series of medal contests on the evening of December 19. The medal was awarded to Miss Lillian Clary, who rendered "Young America's War Cry," by John Lloyd Thomas. Another class is drilling, and the next contest will soon be given. Last year the union at Orono held a very successful series ending with a gold medal contest which aroused great interest in temperance, and it is hoped that the results of this series will be equally good. Fine temperance sermons have lately been preached by leading Bangor clergymen; the union has invited one to repeat his under its auspices. In accordance with a custom which has prevailed for several years, the ladies of Bangor Crusade on Christmas eve provided three beautiful trees well laden with gifts for the poor children of the city. Abundant refreshments were served, and the evening was made delightful to the 150 children present. The union at Windham Center made Christmas a happy day to the inmates of the almshouse. On New Year's day the horse-car conductors and drivers of the line from Portland to Stroudwater were regaled with hot coffee and lunch from the home of our state president, who, in wishing them a happy New Year, expressed the hope that they would never want anything stronger than coffee to drink. The Woman's Alliance, of the Unitarian church, recently invited the W. C. T. U. to meet with them. The subject considered was, of course, temperance, and the occasion a very pleasant one.

This for the encouragement of small unions: Three years ago a little union was organized in Greene. The press superintendent writing of a recent meeting, says: "The meeting was very interesting, the attendance large. Five new members were added, the youngest sixteen, the oldest over seventy. Two clergymen joined as honoraries, and there are more to join at the next meeting. The necessity of a room for headquarters was discussed, and a committee appointed to attend to it, for our W. C. T. U. has come to stay. Once in two weeks we are to have a gospel temperance meeting at the different homes. We began with only four members, we now have thirty-eight."

At Caribou the meetings of the L. T. L. are discontinued during the winter, but the ladies occasionally visit the primary schools, by invitation of the teachers, and give the pupils talks on temperance. A flourishing Y aids in this work. The South Paris Y also is one of the most energetic in the state. Its specialties are the departments of literature, narcotics and influencing the press; the first annual meeting has just been held and a full corps of officers elected.

Since my last letter Mrs. Stevens, accompanied by Mrs. Curtis, president for Penobscot county, has organized promising unions at East Corinth and Charleston. Each of these towns has thrifty, well-to-do homes; one has an academy, the other a classical institute. No liquor sold, no drunkards, no need of almshouses. And there are not a few such villages in our state, thanks to General Dow and our prohibitory law. In both places Mrs. Marshall, the wife of one of the pastors, and a white-ribboner for many years, had made the way easy for our workers, and the leading clergymen and teachers expressed an interest in the union. It may also be worthy of mention that after the evening meeting in Charleston, Mrs. Curtis and our plucky president enjoyed a four hours' drive by moonlight to Dexter, the home of the former.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

MARYLAND.

GOOD TIMES EVERYWHERE.

Recent doings at state headquarters, Baltimore, have been replete with interest, profit and pleasure. On the evening of December 17, a tea and entertainment was given the mothers and fathers of the children of the free kindergarten, and the women, with their husbands, who belong to the mothers' meeting held here every Friday. The hosts were the members of the "Be and Do Circle" of the King's Daughters, with Miss Burnett and Miss Dix, whose services in the free kindergarten are invaluable, as leaders.

The large hall on the first floor had been made as bright and beautiful as possible, with plants and other devices, among them a bank of foliage with a large cross of the order of the King's Daughters in the midst.

The program consisted of vocal and instrumental solos and duets, college glees and recitations, given by the members of the Circle. The tea, simple but abundant, and attractively served, followed—sandwiches, cheese, tea, coffee and delicious home-made cake. The guests evinced hearty enjoyment of everything, doing full justice to each tray as it passed.

A bright and impressive gospel service, also arranged by the Circle, closed the evening. Mr. Herbert Lansdale, a member of the King's Sons, conducted this service, and Mrs. Hammill, an earnest and consecrated worker, made a touching appeal for the Master. All seemed deeply interested and tearful eyes and sobs testified that some hearts had been touched. Three asked for prayers. Verily, "To them that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward."

On the evening of the twenty-third, the Christmas festival was given the children of the free kindergarten. Miss Kate Dix, state superintendent of kindergartens, writes of this: "A beautiful, well-trimmed tree, wreaths of holly and paper chains made by the children, were among the decorations of the handsome kindergarten room, and the large fireplace was crowded with well-filled stockings, a pair for each of the forty children. The children's weaving mats and sewing cards were given a conspicuous place, and many were the exclamations of pleasure and surprise as friends examined the neat and beautiful work which such little hands can do. One end of the long room was reserved for friends, while from the other the parents of the children looked on with the greatest interest and delight. The children sang their pretty carols, and evidenced by their clear answers that they understood what Christmas meant. They played some of the kindergarten games, and after singing a sweet song about 'Giving Gifts,' each little tot gave a bundle to mother, big or little, according to the number of pennies he or she had hoarded during all the year. This distribution of gifts made a touching scene. One of Mrs. Robinson's bright boys took the part of Santa Claus, and distributed to the children the stockings from the chimney, toys, dolls and bags of candy, cake and fruit. The room was a scene of hilarious joy and excitement, for old and young gave expression to their pleasure and enthusiasm. It was a beautiful entertainment and reflected great credit upon our two kindergartners, Mrs. Welsh and Miss Burnett, who were untiring in their efforts for days before to make the festival a success."

The pennies saved by the children during the year are kept for them by the kindergartners, and invested for them according to directions obtained from the mothers "unbeknownst" to the children.

Miss Dix writes also of the Sunday-school festival at headquarters, of which her mother, Mrs. J. Franklin Dix, is superintendent. The Sunday-school gave its Christmas festival on the afternoon of December 26. Although the weather was inclement, about sixty eager children came out in full force. They had a pleasant program of Christmas songs and hymns, accompanying some with appropriate movements. Texts of Scripture were clearly recited in concert, and the beautiful old story of the Child Jesus was told by the superintendent. Oranges, cakes, a box of candy and a pretty card were given each child. A friend had sent as many bright, new pennies as there were children, and these gave great pleasure. Mrs. Baldwin and Mrs. Robinson made short addresses, and spoke of the bright pennies and what they could do, and how even little children can shine and help somebody. The Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition, with an enrollment of about seventy-five boys and girls from three to elevenyears of age. The Memorial union at a late meeting, decided to help this school as part of its work.

The New Year was inaugurated at headquarters by a reception given by the Y. W. C. T. U. of East Baltimore, Miss Daugherty, president, to their friends and acquaintances. The reception and dining-rooms were artistically decorated with evergreens and state banners, and from among these looked the beloved faces of Miss Willard and Mrs. Mary Whitall Thomas. In the reception room the young ladies were glad to initiate their callers into the mysteries of the W. C. T. U., and in the dining-room they were pleased to serve them with coffee, chocolate, salads and other refreshments. A large tree in the hall contained a token for each one, a leaflet tied with white ribbon, "leaves that are for the healing of the nations." Gospel hymns were part of the pleasing program.

A reception was given on this day also, by the Robinson Y. W. C. T. U., which numbers thirty-five members. The use of a vacant dwelling house was accorded the union, and through the sedulous efforts of these young ladies a transformation almost magical was soon wrought in three of the barren rooms. Rugs, plants, silken draperies, bric-a-brac, pretty chairs, a piano, and abundance of light from lamps, chandeliers and candelabra contributed to this. The table was beautifully decorated and furnished with an abundance of good things. The girls were in evening dress, and at night a musical and literary program added much to the pleasure of the occasion. Four hundred invitations were issued, and a large proportion accepted.

The visit of Lady Henry Somerset to Baltimore in November is among the ever-to-be-remembered chronicles of the work. The old First Church was at its best, with just sufficient decorative plants about the chancel for true artistic effect. The audience was large and enthusiastic, and in the presentation to Lady Henry of a globe of roses belted with white ribbon, was fittingly expressed the welcome all so deeply felt. Mrs. Juliet Sewell Baldwin presided, and Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith gave the Bible reading, while fine music added to the success of the evening. Lady Henry's address was mainly on phases of the temperance question and work in England, a subject of peculiar interest in these days of many speech s on the temperance work. The beauty and charm of Lady Henry's voice and diction are well known, but in eloquence, pathos and power, this address surpassed the expectations of even the privileged ones who had heard the speaker before. A dominant impression left by the address, was the intense belief of the speaker in the brotherhood of man, the "solidarity of the race," and a forceful thought that "to one he gave five talents" and "behold there have been gained five talents more."

A characteristic Bible reading on the Divine parentage was given by Mrs. Smith the following day, in the hall of the Memorial Building, to a large audience.

A compend on the Memorial Building, given by Rev. E. A. Lawrence of the Congregational Church, Baltimore, is well worthy of note here:

"It is a history and a prophecy; a memory and a ministry; an oratory and a laboratory; a school of industry; a palace of pleasure and a temple of praise.

"It is dedicated to temperance and beneficence; to reform, prevention and regeneration; to the home, the people and the church; to the glory of God and the blessing of man.

"May the blessing of God abide on it and on all who go in and out of its doors forever!"

The kitchengarden at the Memorial Building opened January 14, with appropriate exercises. Miss A. Louise Baldwin is the leader of this work.

Miss L. J. Newcomb, of Michigan, is conducting classes in physical culture, under the auspices of the Baltimore City union.

The net proceeds of the bazaar for the Memorial Building fund were about seventeen hundred dollars.

M. A. L.

ALABAMA DOTS.

The state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Jennie B. Gerald, has been obliged to give up her office on account of ill health, and Mrs. Annie T. Brooks, of Birmingham, has been appointed to fill the unexpired term. Mrs. Brooks is well and widely known in the state and is familiar with W. C. T. U. work. Her counsel will be invaluable in the executive committee.

Miss Mary E. Gleason, state treasurer, has not given up her office but has given up her name. Congratulations are in order. Her new address is Mrs. Mary E. Moore, Hartsell's, Alabama. Local unions will please note these changes.

New Decatur W. C. T. U. has recently moved its reading room to a more central location, on the first floor, which is given rent free, and freely lighted. A reception was held early in December which was well attended and brought many contributions to the book table. Gospel temperance meetings are held regularly.

The Loyal Temperance Legion of Woodlawn, near Birmingham, gave their first public entertainment December 29, under the direction of Mrs. M. J. Kennedy. The program consisted of songs, recitations, etc. The state president, Mrs. M. L. Spencer, was present and added to the occasion by giving a brief report of the National Convention.

Memphis, a small place in the extreme western part of the state, eighteen miles from a railroad, reports a courageous little union doing good work and faithful, thoroughly up to the times; their president, Mrs. V. A. Woodward, writes of their pleasure in THE UNION SIGNAL and Woman's Column, and in this we see one reason of their usefulness and prosperity.

Birmingham W. C. T. U. held its annual meeting, January 5. Reports for the year show an increase in membership and attendance. The retiring president gave a short address, recommending several new departments. The year promises well.

S.

"WHERE ROLLS THE OREGON."

Oregon has not been idling and there is plenty to tell. It will not do to follow the example of the old pioneer of the backwoods who gets up at the "small hours," breakfasts, and then sits and watches for the daylight. If we sat and watched for daylight to break in on the temperance sky, I am afraid it would never come.

I expressed a wish last time in speaking of Mrs. Ada W. Unruh's work, that we could have another such. Well, we have found her, or rather she has found us. She is a pioneer of another sort, lately come from Kansas, to work rifts of light into our horizon—the first National organizer to reside among us, Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox. Attracted naturally to Newberg, the Friends' settlement, and the home of so many cultivated and enlightened women, she lives there, prepared to make pilgrimages abroad at any moment. We had the pleasure of welcoming her lately, having received a telegraphic summons to speak at a Thanksgiving day service at Monroe, a place eighteen miles from Corvallis, across seas of mud, with many a "chuckhole" as deep as a crevasse, to flounder over. However, it was like a summer day, although November, and she says: "One could afford to forget the mud, almost hub deep, with the lovely blue overhead, the sun beaming gratefully in front, and the lofty mountain peaks seen through an atmosphere, lucid in purity, stretching far on either hand." She was wakened from a reverie on spiritual parallels by a terrible jerk and a shaking, when the singletree broke square off. "There was rope for the drowning," and Mrs. Cox survived to give an able and eloquent address after a bountiful Thanksgiving feast held in the M. E. Church. Shestayed over the Sunday so as to effect a more complete organization after a second address in a neighboring chapel. This she did with a membership of twenty-one voting, and twelve honorary members. They are all active, for as a young lady from Monroe has said to me since: "The gentlemen are all bound to attend the meetings, for without them and their teams their wives could never get there, being in such a scattered community." Our old Corvallis friend, Mrs. Nora Williams, the state Sunday-school superintendent, is their president, as she was ours, and I doubt not that they will do well. The recording secretary is Mrs. H. S. Wallace, the wife of the minister, who worked up the meeting and telegraphed for Mrs. Cox, who adds, "God send us more such ministers." On her return home (by another route) she spoke at Junction to an interested audience. She is to be there again in March for a county convention, when there will be doubtless a good union planted.

Mrs. Ada W. Unruh has been at work in her own county "striking a blow." She says, "At Woods, a fishing village on Nestucca river, within hearing of the Pacific waves, I spoke in the evening to an audience composed almost entirely of men; next morning (Sabbath) to a smaller one, nearly all women (men at work), on 'Woman's Responsibility and Her Work in Uplifting Humanity.' In the afternoon I held a mothers' meeting." Mrs. Unruh has organized four unions in her own county, also in McCoy, Zena, Oak Grove and Airlie, besides two Y's at Cochrane and Monmouth. The latter is a most important field, for there is a very flourishing Normal school. Who can tell the results among our public school children of seed dropped into the hearts of the young people while training for their important work?

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens paid a flying visit to Ashland, down South, on her way back to California. She gained sixty-five new names to the union, and has made it become "popular (as the corresponding secretary says) to belong to the W. C. T. U. We have now all our four ministers with the white ribbon on, and feel very much strengthened and enthused over the work. Pray earnestly that we may soon see the day in which our seven saloons shall be closed." This union gave lately a social by invitation to an hundred and fifty all "connected" with the union by family ties. Mrs. Stevens is yet due in Benton county, and I hope we shall see her.

Mrs. Meade, county president for Multnomah, organized a promising union at Pleasant Home, and Mrs. H. L. Adams has done the same at Fairview and Hood river, securing good audiences in places never before reached by the W. C. T. U. She speaks of an experience in "sand-lapping" on the upper Columbia (the rolling Oregon of old days). Mrs. Adams has been successful in clearing away the overlying sand and re-organizing at Weston, Athena, Pendleton and Baker City; the two latter are of considerable size, and should support large unions. She planted a new organization at North Powder. Mrs. Adams wrote to our little monthly White Ribbon from Wyoming, the "land of equal franchise;" "yet still" she says, "I think the land of moss and web feet is far in the lead."

Our unions are making more and more use of said little White Ribbon sheet. It is monthly becoming a greater source of intercommunication and bond of sympathy.

Last, but not least, in our confidence is our untiring state president, Mrs. A. R. Riggs, as an organizer. Before her journey to Boston she visited this county, and made her way upwards of ten miles over the roughest of rough roads to lecture and organize at King's Valley, a lovely, verdant valley, with its little church spire pointing heavenward, its "school-house on the hill, and no saloon in the valley." It has its needs, however, and maybe its W. C. T. U. may aid some of these needs. Mrs. Riggs then went among our "Alps," toward the eastern portion of the state, into Wasco county, where Miss Maggie Eaton has incited such effectual work as keeping saloons at bay. At the town of Wasco the thin edge of the wedge has been again entering under the guise of a lunch counter. After the circulation of a pledge, which brought out the feeling of the community, the lunch individual was obliged to decamp, with his wares, and the union blesses God and takes courage. Mrs. Riggs lectured and organized at Dufur, called after the maker of the place, a "grand old man" of these parts, who has since been called away. After a twenty miles drive she spoke at Wamic, and again after another similar drive at Wapinitia, names resonant of their Indian origin. The membership of each union is from sixteen to eighteen. Another forty mile drive brought her to the smoother road of the "iron horse." Miss Maggie Eaton, herself a famous "Jehu," took good care of our president on this trip.

There have been several gatherings since my last report. To celebrate Crusade Day, Oregon City called a school of methods, and carried off the banner for increased membership. At the same time, Albany, McMinnville and Wasco did bravely. Our president felt proud, I am sure, to announce at the National Convention that Oregon had enrolled 1,000 new names during the year. The Yam Hill county school of methods went off successfully, with our dear "Friend," Mrs. M. E. K. Edwards, in the chair, and Mrs. Riggs present throughout. The quarterly meeting at Celiwood, in the neighborhood of Portland, was made into an all-day affair, with a dainty lunch at noon, and a stirring address from Rev. A. Lindsay in the evening at its close; twenty-eight persons signed the pledge.

Luther Benson, the reclaimed, has lectured with great effect at many points. He is quite an original in style and manner, angers no one by what he says, causes no expense to the local unions, but for hall and advertising, just taking the collections or a ten cent admittance fee.

On her return from Boston, Mrs. Riggs had a cordial reception given her at the Sunday services at Grace M. Church, Portland, after an address by Francis Murphy, who, with his son has been working with their usual ability in the city. Later in the week another special reception was arranged for her by the ladies of the union, when she gave an animated, descriptive account of that most wonderful of Conventions, the National and World's of Boston, 1891.

L. A. NASH.
State Reporter, Corvallis.

MINNESOTA.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

In a small village up the river, where the people are "too busy" to attend the temperance societies, though there are several saloons in the place, lives one woman in whose heart the temperance fire burns brightly and steadily. Although dependent upon her own exertions for the livelihood of herself and two fatherless girls, she yet finds time to read her UNION SIGNAL and do the little things that lie in her way to further the reform movement. This year she has done without a much prized magazine because the cost of it would send THE UNION SIGNAL to two friends, one of whom has not yet received the "arrest of thought," and the other, an ardent Prohibitionist, but at present in very plain circumstances. She also has made arrangements with the station agent to keep a wall pocket well supplied with fresh literature for the benefit of the waiting travelers.

The Lucy Hayes union of this city, at the suggestion of its press superintendent, recently sent the editor of the Evening Journal a vote of thanks for the decided stand that paper has taken in the crusade against Sunday saloon opening. That their approbation was appreciated is evident from the kindly reply the editor sent. Sisters, let us be more ready to show our approbation of the good things the papers do say. 'Twill make them more disposed to heed our criticisms when needed, and establish a point of sympathy between the W. C. T. U. and the press.

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.

THE Cleveland W. C. T. U. are in comfortable rented headquarters. The large room is nicely furnished, a new piano purchased, books and temperance papers are for sale, a superintendent engaged to be in constant attendance, and the meetings are well attended. At noon, tea and coffee are furnished to working girls at a nominal price, and thus far, this department of work has paid expenses.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE first anniversary of the W. C. T. U. of Economy, Ind., was celebrated by a banquet, December 23.

MRS. AMANDA E. DAY, of Chowen, Minn., an old subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL, passed away on the 8th of January.

WE chronicle another loss in the death of Mrs. Eliza Jane Hammond, of St. Paul, Minn., which occurred on December 15, 1891.

THE tract entitled "Equality in Creation," is published and sold only by the Woman's Journal, No. 3 Park St., Boston, Mass.

A SAD, but hopeful white-ribboner requests the prayers of temperance sisters, that her husband may keep his pledge and give his heart fully to God.

THE midwinter executive meeting of the thirteenth district, Illinois, was held Wednesday, January 27, at the White Ribbon House, Springfield, Ill.

CATTARAUGUS county, N. Y., holds its semi-annual convention February 9 and 10 at Franklinville. Miss Elizabeth U Yates, of Maine, will address the gatherings.

MRS. M. M. SNELL has just closed a successful week of evangelistic meetings in Greenville, Miss., from which point she goes to Washington in the same interest.

MRS. FRANCES W. LEITER addressed the state teachers' association of Kansas at Topeka, during the holidays. Over fifteen hundred educators were in attendance.

"THE Liquor Curse and its Cure" was the theme of Rev. Richard S. Martin, at Grace M. E. Church, Chicago, Sunday evening, December 27. The large audience in attendance was deeply stirred.

THE Sabbath closing of the Columbian Exposition received the indorsement of 435 inhabitants of Hollis, N. H., a town of 1,000 population. Fifty-three of these were persons over seventy years of age.

MRS. D. W. ENGLISH, of Quincy, Ill., is the superintendent of the new National department of work among miners. Her first official communication in last week's UNION SIGNAL has the ring of true service, and we trust our constituency will not delay in taking up this new work.

ON New Year's morning, Mrs. Almira B. Fillebrown, of Newton, Mass., reached the happy close of a long and useful life. She was an earnest believer and active temperance worker whose name is enshrined in the corner-stone of the great Temple, and upon the membership roll of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP wishes it stated that she will probably be obliged to take up her February dates, for reasons to be given later. Mrs. Lathrap had a trip planned through Pennsylvania, Virginia, North and South Carolina and Florida, but is sure she cannot leave home so early as expected on January 27.

MRS. BARNEY has been lecturing at many points in Canada, where her visit has been a real help. Miss Lillian Phelps of Canada, a persuasive speaker, has made a series of addresses in Stansted and adjoining counties. Much interest is manifested in the petitions against the selling of liquor on the grounds at the World's Exposition.

RESOLUTIONS of regret were passed by the ninth ward W. C. T. U. of Rochester, N. Y., upon the death of Mrs. Elisabeth Forbes, a valued and "honorary" member of their union. Mrs. Forbes' interest in the advancement of the temperance work was shown in many ways, and her name will be engraved on the tablets of the Temperance Temple as one of the donors to the enterprise.

A DAY school was opened in the W. C. T. U. building of Muskogee, Indian Territory, January 4. Much good is expected to be derived from it, for the new teacher has declared his belief in the triple pledge and will instruct his pupils in good temperance principles. Intoxicated men and boys are a common sight upon the village streets, and cause much anxiety to the earnest temperance workers.

MRS. M. HELEN CRANE, of Paterson, N. J., died December 7, 1891. This is another irreparable loss to the New Jersey W. C. T. U., for Mrs. Crane was one of the foremost workers in that state, and for five years, president of the Asbury Park union. She was a woman of marked intelligence and consecrated purpose, admirably fitted both by inheritance and education for the work in which she was so deeply interested.

MRS. LEITER has developed practical plans for the department of physical culture, in placing before the unions a most successful teacher, Miss R. Anna Morris, of Des Moines, Iowa, whose work bears directly upon the introduction of physical education in the public schools. Those desiring to engage Miss Morris within the next three months should apply at once to Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, Mansfield, O., for terms, dates and plans in detail.

Official Communications.

RECEIVED FOR FUND FOR BUSTS OF MISS WILLARD AND MRS. CARSE.

Father Scully, Boston, $10; Mrs. Peters, St. Johns, Newfoundland, $5; Natal, South Africa, $5; Ceylon, India, $5; Alaska, $5; Mrs. H. W. Smith, London, Eng., $5; W. C. T. U., Melrose, Mass., $5; Loyal Temperance Legion, Boston, $5; Hawaii, $5; W. C. T. U., Connecticut, $5; W. C. T. U., Newport, Del., $5; Mrs. Howes, West Newton, Mass., $5; Michael J. Fanning, $5; New Jersey, $10; Arizona, $5; W. C. T. U., New Hampshire, $5; W. C. T. U., New York, $5; Miss Greenwood's union, $5; Mrs. Talbot, Malden, Mass., $5; W. C. T. U., Harrisburg, Pa., $5; W. C. T. U., Maine, $5; Pennsylvania Delegation, $5.65; Mrs. Tyng and Mrs. Reynolds, Peoria, Ill., $5, each; W. C. T. U., East Winthrop, Me., $5.

The sums given at the Convention were not given to me personally, and I have credited them according to the memoranda furnished me. There were $10 handed to Mrs. Carse, without any name; will the contributors please communicate with me that I may give proper credit?

ESTHER PUGH.

Evanston, Ill.

LITERATURE.

SUGGESTIONS TO WORKERS.

The blanks sent out as suggestive during the summer of 1891 were returned, and some of the superintendents complied with the requests to add suggestions that might be helpful, which are passed along to assist some other union. Here they are summarized:

1. "Before putting papers into wall-pockets, mark articles of special interest." Even sentences or paragraphs so marked would attract attention more readily, and the seed therein would more surely take root.

2. Members of the union might add to the effective work of this department by delivering to the superintendent of literature such papers as could be spared by them after reading.

3. "Our social purity superintendent has sent leaflets to young men by mail."

4. "We have a circulating library, the loan of which secures a small amount for us to invest in literature."

7. "Do not forget to use literature at county fairs."

8. Send leaflets to stores to be wrapped up with goods.

Dear sisters, can you add others to these helpful hints?

Permit the suggestions that you push the circulation of our national organ, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Y paper, the Oak and Ivy Leaf, and the children's paper, The Young Crusader, not forgetting your own state paper. Very few have tried to put our juvenile paper in the Sunday-schools. This is a very important duty, especially in view of the fact that the temperance lesson is sent as a supplement to this paper.

A literature fund can be created in various ways. A public meeting with collection for the purpose; a dime social; voluntary offerings; an entertainment by the children—any device that is wholesome in its influence on the community, by which money is secured for any purpose can be used for this.

State, district, and county superintendents are earnestly urged to push the interests of the department.

Those desiring further suggestions will be furnished with blanks for reports on application. These blanks will show what can be done.

Yours for earnest work,

FANNY H. RASTALL,
Nat. Supt.

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

MRS. R. A. EMMONS, SEC.

All engagements made by this Bureau are conditional upon the ability of the lecturer to fill them. In case of detention by sickness, accident, or any legitimate and unavoidable cause, another date will be given as soon as possible.

REV. HENRIETTA G. MOORE

will spend February in Iowa; a few dates are open; let applications be made at once.

DR. KATE MITCHELL

is available for New York and Northern Ohio, February 8 to 26, except 15th, when she is due at Syracuse and the 28th at Wellington, O. March 2 to 15 is available for Wisconsin and Minnesota, from March 16, en route to San Francisco, via Northern Pacific R. R.

COL. JOHN SOBIESKI

is available for Illinois, Indiana, and Michigan, March and April.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN

speaks at Monroe, Mich., March 17; the balance of the month is available for that state.

MRS. MARY SPARKES WHEELER

holds evangelistic services at Macomb, Ill., January 24 to 29.

REV. C. H. AND REV. E. F. ST. JOHN are at Princeton, Ill., January 31 to February 12; Hennepin, February 14 to 27.

MISS EVA M. SHONTZ

is at Cutler, Ill., January 27; Marissa, 28th; a few dates are open for Southern Illinois. Miss Willard says of her: "If our local unions knew her merits as I do, they would ask her to come and read for their benefit."

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE

is available for Pennsylvania during April; we trust the unions will appreciate this opportunity to get her, as special terms are made for this trip.

For dates and terms of all the above address,

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Library Table.

MAGAZINES RECEIVED.

The Atlantic Monthly. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The Review of Reviews. 13 Astor Place, New York City.

The Forum. The Forum Publishing Co., New York City.

Current Literature. Current Literature Publishing Co., 30 W. 23d Street, New York City.

Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. Philadelphia, Penn.

Phrenological Journal and Science of Health. Fowler & Wells Co., 775 Broadway, New York City.

Demorest's Family Magazine. W. Jennings Demorest, 15 E. 14th St., New York City.

Lend a Hand. J. Stilman Smith & Co., Boston, Mass.

The Pansy. D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Mass.

Wide Awake, D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Mass.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS for this month is so filled with telling paragraphs of world-wide interest that one is lured on from page to page. Questions of the day in South America, China, Russia, Africa, Australia, Ireland, England, Canada and the home-land, are wisely handled. Of especial interest is the discussion of "The Child Problem in Cities," by John H. Finley, who opens the paper as follows:

"There is no social principle more hopeful on the one hand, more dismal of contemplation on the other, than that which assures to age the character formed in the first years of life; which makes man heir to childhood's influences as well as to natal proclivities; which makes the reformation of a life next to hopeless, where its right formation might have been easy. This principle is the key to the city's problems of poverty and vice. The child problem is, in fact, the whole problem of charities and correction, and in its solution will be solved, for the next generation, all those questions which are to-day the subject of study and discussion by economists and philanthropists."

Closely allied with the foregoing article is one entitled, "Two Champions of the Children," giving to the reader brief but comprehensive sketches of the work led by the Hon. Elbridge T. Gerry, who "stands in the United States, as Mr. Benjamin Waugh in England, the foremost champion of suffering childhood." The sketch closes with these words, the truth underlying which is the inspiration to many an effort for the little ones: "Men do not remember that although the nation is but slightly dependent on the children of to-day, it will be wholly dependent upon them for the prosperity of to-morrow." New York City, Astor Place. $2.50 a year.

The January number of THE FORUM has for its first article "The Louisiana Lottery: Shall its Charter be Renewed?" by Judge Frank McGloin, of the Louisiana Court of Appeals. No one can read this plea, so strong, logical and eloquent, without being stirred. The lottery system is here exposed, and the "cup" and "platter" which its advocates point to as of irreproachable whiteness are shown in reality to be within "full of extortion and excess." A history of the Louisiana Lottery Company by Jno. C. Wickliffe, one of the founders of the Anti-Lottery League, and editor of The New Delta, the organ of the League, gives a concise and clear account of the increase and development of this infamous robbery. These two articles alone make this issue of THE FORUM a desirable possession, for what patriot is there who does not wish to bring at least an intelligent hatred against this evil, in the impending struggle?

The Forum Publishing Company, Union Square, New York. Price $5 per year.

THE ANNALS OF THE AMERICAN ACADEMY OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCE for January, is full of matter deeply interesting to the broad thinker, who holds at heart the highest development of the civilized world. We note especially in this number: "The Demand for the Public Regulation of Industries," by W. D. Dabney, a most thoughtful discussion of the growth of the "specialization of function" and the results arising therefrom. "International Arbitration," by Eleanor L. Lord, is of particular interest just now, when "rumors of war" make startling headlines in our dailies. The writer traces the struggle of peace to hush the clamor of war from the first two centuries of the early Church down to to-day. We quote a leading paragraph: "Whether war will finally vanish from off the face of the earth no man can tell. It seems probable that conflicts will become fewer and more intense; but not until the deep-lying causes of strife are removed will the evil be banished forever. If this comes to pass, it will be when the onward march of civilization and the spread of Christianity shall have adjusted to their proper places the shifting molecules of the great race unit and shall have brought them into a state of perfect equilibrium. In the meantime, what is to be the fate of arbitration?"

Philadelphia: American Academy of Political and Social Science. $6 per year.

The table of contents of THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY for January is in itself suggestive, but we can only take time now to turn the pages with brief pauses here and there. It is good from first to last. "Don Orsino," by F. Marion Crawford, is a Roman story, giving artistic glimpses into that old, historic city. Admirers of Emerson hail with pleasure a paper on Boston from an unpublished manuscript, dated the spring of 1861. "James Russell Lowell," is the title of an interesting sketch of the late poet, by Henry James. Edith M. Thomas entertains and instructs bird-lovers by her thoughtful essay on "Birds and 'Birds.'" Boston; Houghton, Mifflin & Co., $4.

CURRENT LITERATURE comes to our table with its variety of selections grave and humorous,—history, biography, poetry in all its styles, statistics and bits of description. Here is food for the most omnivorous appetite. Current Literature Pub. Co., New York. $3.

LEND A HAND brings with it the tone of helpfulness of which its title is truly indicative. Its able editor must be grateful when there come to his notice again and again stories of the wonderful mission of the tiny Maltese cross, and the repetition and enactment by thousands of hearts of the self-denial mottoes which he has helped to send ringing through the world. LEND A HAND, A RECORD OF PROGRESS, Boston, J. Stilman, Smith & Co. $2.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

Have You Seen It?

There are thousands of Families that will not and do not keep the essence of Jamaica Ginger in the house, owing to the large percentage of alcohol it contains. Hatch's Non-Alcoholic Jamaica Ginger Crystal that is being put on the market is meeting a want heretofore unfilled, as it contains all the medicinal qualities of the Jamaica Ginger, and for a family remedy it is unsurpassed. It is an article that should be in every temperance home, and is indorsed by physicians and temperance people wherever shown. If your dealer does not keep it we will forward a 6 oz. net weight can by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents in stamps or postal note.

DAVIS & HATCH, Manufacturers,
New Bedford, Mass.

ONE OF THE FINEST.

Here is one of the many letters the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railway is constantly receiving in commendation of its superior facilities in the way of brand new coaches and sleeping-car accommodations:

"What you said about the cars on your road was true. They were the finest I saw on my way here, and the most roomy and comfortable. Should I have occasion to travel east, I shall try to use your part of the road, and shall recommend it to others."

It will be remembered this line is the only line in the west running the celebrated vestibuled compartment Pullman sleeping-cars, in which the price for exclusive use of a drawing-room is no more than that of a section in the ordinary sleeping-car. The dining-car service is beyond comparison and its express trains are run on the fastest schedules.

Do you anticipate visiting The World's Fair? Does the matter of board and lodging give you anxiety? Read the advertisement of Wm. Richardson in this week's UNION SIGNAL headed "World's Fair," and write to him. He is reliable. He has something to offer which may interest you.

$500 for One Tomato.

A prize was offered last spring by F. B. Mills, Rose Hill, N. Y., to any person producing a 3 pound tomato of his mammoth prize strain, and it was won by T. R. Harris, Abbott, Nebraska, with one weighing 3 pounds and 3½ ounces. It measured over 8½ inches in diameter, and was the greatest sight of anything in the line of tomatoes. Mr Mills' catalogue for 1892 contains full particulars of mode of culture and how he grew it, with an illustration of the original tomato cut in two showing inside sections; also the plant and Mr. Harris himself.

This information is of interest to every one who has a garden and our readers ought to have his new catalogue.

Mr. Mills offers $500 this year for a tomato weighing 3½ lbs., also many other costly premiums. (Below we publish Mr. Harris' letter.)

Abbott, Hall Co., Neb., Nov. 20, 1891.

F. B. MILLS, ESQ., Rose Hill. N. Y.

DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that I have received your check for ($500) Five Hundred Dollars in payment for the mammoth prize tomato I grew, weighing 3 lbs., 3½ ounces; 3½ ounces more than you advertised for.

Please accept my thanks for same and I will recommend you as the most honorable dealing man I ever done business with, and I will say to others do not be afraid to deal with Mr. Mills, for you will always get all he promises, and when he offers premiums he intends to pay them and not contrive some scheme to fool people.

You will hear from me again, and all others I can induce to try your excellent seeds, for no seedsman has any better. Thanking you again for the prize and wishing you great success in your business, I remain, Very truly yours, T. R. HARRIS.

Burpee's Farm Annual for 1892.

Burpee's Farm Annual for 1892 is the best and most complete Seed Catalogue yet published by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., the well-known Philadelphia Seedsmen. It is a handsome book of 172 pages with hundreds of life-like illustrations and several beautiful colored plates painted from nature; it is conservative in recommending only the best garden, farm and Flower seeds, plants, bulbs, etc., yet is fully abreast of the times,—progressive in every department. It honestly describes, with illustrations true to nature, a number of important new vegetables and beautiful Flowers, which are now being exclusively introduced by W. Atlee Burpee & Co. The most important of these novelties is Burpee's Bush Lima Bean, the first and only true bush form of the well-known large, white Lima. The book is handsomely bound in an elegant lithograph cover, on which is shown a portion of Fordhook Farm, where the firm, beside growing Vegetable seed stocks, conduct the most comprehensive trials of all known varieties. The unusual care given to the growing and testing of all seeds has established for W. Atlee Burpee & Co., an enviable reputation throughout the world, and their Farm Annual for 1892 will be found in every respect a trustworthy guide for the farm and garden. Although an expensive book to publish, it is sent free to all our readers who wish to purchase seeds.

A Red Ear Calendar.

Calendars are more certain to fly at this season than snow itself. The crop is always large, but the individuals generally lack utility. One of the very best we ever see comes from N. W. Ayer & Son, Newspaper Advertising Agents, Philadelphia. It is the red ear of the crop. It looks and talks business. Its size is generous, its figures very plain, while it is printed so handsomely as to make one willing to keep company with it the entire year. Like the other productions of the firm, this bears their famous phrase, "Keeping everlastingly at it brings success"—a text which they both preach and exemplify. The calendar is sent by them, postpaid, for 25 cents, and what is again unusual in such cases, it is so packed as to pass through the mails uninjured.

Northern Grown Seeds.

It is indeed wonderful how rapidly seeds grown in the North have come to the front in the past few seasons.

The catalogue trade of the well-known seed growers, L. L. May & Co., St. Paul, Minnesota, has increased over 500 per cent in the past two years. This is the best proof that can be offered as to the popularity of their seeds. They are a thoroughly reliable firm, and no one should fail to take advantage of their liberal offer made to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Publisher's Dep't.

Well, I sent for THE UNION SIGNAL. I was so afraid I would not secure the first paper which was to be edited by Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, and all the rest, that I did not wait to see how many of my friends wanted to share the enjoyment I knew was in store for us, but sent my $1 by the first mail, and in a very short time the paper came. And such a treat! I must tell you what I got for less than two cents. You see I figure it this way: One dollar pays for fifty-two weeks; that is two cents a week and two weeks for nothing. Well, here is what I received then for less than two cents.

First, a page nearly full of items which show the views observant Christian women have on current events—on the Chili question and of the dignitaries who have recently died in England. Then a beautiful poem we well might take to heart; a true story of home life and its relation to prohibition. Neal Dow told me what the Maine law had done, and Dr. Crothers talked of the laws of heredity. A letter from Paris was followed by one from the World's Fair correspondent; the President's column gave a glimpse of Miss Willard's inmost thoughts; two whole pages were devoted to wholesome home reading, and three more of news of what our women are doing at home and abroad. And added to this, the distinguished editor served us with two full pages of choicest reading. Besides all this, the publisher's column told how we might help others to our way of thinking.

There was enough in that one paper to feed the mind for a whole week! And all for two cents.

I shall tell Mrs. Bain and Mrs. Long and Mrs. Brown. They cannot afford not to take it. And I believe Brother Jones will be glad to subscribe. I'll ask him.

And I shall ask our union to send it to Rev. John Smith; I am sure he would understand the W. C. T. U. better, and help us more, if he should read THE UNION SIGNAL.

By an oversight in the rush of work following the National Convention, the Bible Reading for January failed to bear the name of its author. But surely our women who have used the Readings, lo, now these many years, would recognize in it the voice of Hannah Whitall Smith.

Our Day for February is nearly ready. Send orders for sample copies now. Price 25c. To ministers and students, 20c.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I write for terms to agents on "Childhood; Its Care and Culture." I have already three orders, and it seems to me I could not spend my time better than to place this valuable book in the hands of mothers.

MRS. C. G. CRESSY.

Indeed, You Cannot,

Mrs. Cressy, spend your time better, and we will send terms at once by mail. And we should also like to send terms to you, and YOU, and YOU, dear reader!

SUBS'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Have You Asthma?

Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn., will mail a trial package of Schiffmann's Asthma Cure free to any sufferer. He advertises by giving it away. It gives instant relief in worst cases and cures where others fail. Name this paper and send your address for a free trial package.

Special Offer to Ladies—If you secure a Life Insurance policy in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association before January 1st, you pay no membership fee. Write at once for particulars. Geo. E. Godward, Sec'y, 187 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Do You Want One?

A Book. A book with a purpose. Not for the well and hearty; rather for the sick and weak, "other half" of humanity. The book is practical—it appeals to the common sense of common folks. It is historical—as trustworthy as Lossing or Bancroft.

History repeats itself. So does disease. Self-absorption (and a physician sometimes) leads each person in ill health to think he is traveling an unknown way of suffering. Would such an one but look about him he would find that he was one of a large procession. This fact can be turned to advantage by the wise sufferer, because identical experience is of the highest value in this short life of ours.

How eagerly we listen to the acquaintance whose experience of ill health matches our own. The book referred to contains just this—500 times multiplied. Every sufferer will here find his own symptoms and condition exactly described in the very words of truthful and get-at-able people.

The volume is DRS. STARKEY & PALEN'S Brochure, describing their COMPOUND OXYGEN Treatment. It has often turned the whole life course of a reader. The ground it covers is as wide as human suffering; the facts it sets forth as reliable as those of Lossing or Bancroft.

Will you profit by the experience of others? It may be too late, when you get experience of your own. Send for the book at least. It is to be had for the asking.

Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. 66 Church St., Toronto, Canada.

Arrangements are being made whereby

HARVEY

Will be enabled to accommodate thousands of WORLD'S FAIR visitors.

The Harvey Land Association

Who founded and platted the whole town, are now selling lots at original prices, and at figures that will be advanced very materially March 1st.

The Harvey Land Association

Have choice property

Near the factories.
Near the schools and churches.
Near the hotels and in the business district.
Nine factories in operation, others will soon be running.
Seventy passenger trains daily.
Twenty-five minutes' ride to the World's Fair Site.
Forty-five minutes to Union Depot.

Better chance for investment than any suburban town in the vicinity of Chicago.

In addition to our three large hotels one new hotel, "The Transit House," is just completed on 148th Street near Marshfield Avenue. Plans for another large hotel on the main boulevard near the Illinois Central Depot are reported by a strong company.

Build your own cottage; you can either rent it or sell it at a handsome profit. Send to us for plans. Sent free.

NOW IS THE TIME TO INVEST.

Send at once for our new pamphlet that will tell you what you want to know about the most successful temperance manufacturing town in the world.

Send all communications direct to us and save commissions to agents.

The Harvey Land Association

819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY, CHICAGO, ILL.

BEAR IN MIND!

BURPEE'S SEEDS GROW?

Good seeds in good ground yield good crops; we supply the seed, you gather the crops. If you want abundant crops, choicest Vegetables and the most beautiful Flowers, you should read BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1892, a handsome book of 160 pages, life-like illustrations, honest descriptions, and colored plates painted from nature; it tells all about the Best Seeds, including Burpee's Wonderful Bush Lima and other Valuable Novelties of surpassing merit, which cannot be had elsewhere. It is mailed free to all who intend to purchase seeds.

WRITE TO-DAY.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

MISS WILLARD ADVOCATES

Physical Culture for women in the strongest terms Weak parts quickly get strong and shapely by brief daily use of our apparatus We guarantee this or refund price Experts say our device is the best for home use. Elegant cabinet contains chest, rowing and lifting weights and dumb bells, adjustable for young and old Several can exercise together All prices Circular free.

WHITNEY HOME GYMNASIUM CO, Rochester, New York.

MANAGERS WANTED Everywhere to take charge of our business. Advertise, distribute circulars & employ help to sell goods. WAGES $50 to $125 PER MONTH. Expenses advanced. State experience. Wages expected, also your preference for home work or traveling. SLOAN & Co., Mfrs. 294 George St., Cincinnati, O

WINTER PRICES ON BICYCLES

Don't wait till spring; buy now & save money. Easy payments. All makes new & 2d hd. Cats free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 G St. Peoria, Ill.

World's Fair.

To Families, Syndicates and Individuals. Do you want comfortable accommodations cheap, during your visit to the World's Fair, within five minutes' ride of the grounds? No Saloons. If so, write for particulars. WM. RICHARDSON, 196 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

BUILD A MODEL HOME Our book shows and tells you how. Designs and sample pages of the work Free. GEO. F. BARBER & CO. Architects, Knoxville, Tenn.

McMULLEN'S WOVEN WIRE FENCING. Best Steel Wire, Galvanized. Prices reduced. Sold by dealers. Freight paid. THE McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., Chicago, Ills.

COMPOUND OXYGEN Price reduced. For information address DR. A. H. HIATT, Central Music Hall, Chicago.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

FREE CATALOGUE, SEEDS, PLANTS, BULBS, Etc.

HOME GROWN NORTHERN SEEDS.
Money made by buying my seeds. 35 pkts $1.00. 2c to 5c pkt. Presents with every order. Send postal card with name and address for catalogue.
A. R. AMES, Madison, Wis.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN
CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT
SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

BABY CARRIAGES. We sell direct to customers. Delivered free to any point in U. S. Cat. free. Chas. Raiser, Mfr. 62 Clybourn av, Chicago

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

DO YOU HAVE TROUBLE In trying to keep your Bangs and Curls in position? If so, send 50c. to A. B. AUSTIN, Manufacturer of Toilet Specialties, 627 N. 8th St., Terre Haute, Ind., for a bottle of COLUMBIAN CURLING CREAM, which will turn your trouble into joy.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working, reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

KENSINGTON ART NEEDLE.

FOR RAISED EMBROIDERY.
So simple a novice can use it. Agents Wanted. Send name and get 26 embroidery designs FREE.
C. A. BURTON & CO., 34 W. Washington St. Chicago.

'DELSARTE'
Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.
Agents Wanted. Also
DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

A Complete Line of Dress Reform Goods,
INCLUDING THE
NEWELL BUST SUPPORT,
Equipoise Waist and Jenness-Miller Specialties. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue.
MRS. S. W. PIKE,
75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

FOR SUMMER WEAR

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS are now made in VENTILATING CLOTH, also in FINE SINGLE PLY CLOTH.
Send for circular.
SINGLE PLY for Children, Misses and Ladies.
GOOD SENSE Waists are superior to all others.
—Tape-fastened Buttons. Cord-edge Button Holes—Clamp Buckle at Hip securely holds Hose Supporters. Shape permits full expansion of lungs. Gives satisfaction. Be sure your waist is stamped "GOOD SENSE."
FERRIS BROS., 341 Broadway, N.Y.
Manufacturers and Patentees,
For Sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., CHICAGO, ILL., WHOLESALE WESTERN AGENTS.

FOR MANY LADIES THE

CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

Publisher's Dept.

Wall Pocket Package No. 2.

Package No. 1 has been eagerly called for on all sides, and it is evident that this method of calling attention to special supplies is popular. We have, therefore, selected another list of leaflets which are appropriate for general distribution. The contents are a little more varied in this package for Wall Pockets:

Miscellaneous Leaflets.

1. What Shall be Taught the Children?
2. Alcohol and Health.
3. { Our Bondage. / Mat Women.

Amendment Leaflets.

2. The Joint Resolution.
3. National Prohibition.

National Leaflets.

Unfermented Wine.
The Temperance Kindergarten.
Why I Never Tasted Liquor.
Fair Play.

Assorted.

White Cross Tracts, different numbers.
Agitation Leaflets, " "
Bible Reading Leaflets, by Hannah Whitall Smith.
The Traveler's Psalm.
Statistical Drink Chart.
Mill or Still Picture (colored).
The Young Crusader.

6 each of the leaflets amounts to -	$ .68
The Drink Chart, price - -	.10
Mill or Still - - - - -	.10
12 copies Young Crusader - -	.12
Total - - - - - -	$1.00

We will send them all postpaid to one address for half price, 50c.

The selection comprises over 400 pages of reading matter. Special attention is called to the leaflet, "Why I Never Tasted Liquor," by Mr. Bok, the distinguished editor of the Ladies' Home Journal. The others are all adapted to free distribution. The "Drink Chart" and "Mill or Still" can be hung over the Wall Pockets to attract, and will preach silent but powerful sermons to even casual observers.

Every union has an important mission to fulfill. The judicious scattering of literature is a means of doing much good, as you thereby reach people who would never be reached in any other way. By all means see to it that your union has several "Pockets."

In ordering this call for Wall Pocket Package No. 2. Price 50c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Thumb-nail Sketches.

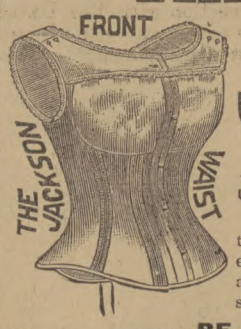
Just a word in explanation. Miss Julia Ames, National superintendent of the department of press, prepared for use at and after the Boston Convention a booklet of sketches of the leaders in the work. In order to assist in paying the printer, Miss Ames requested that the W. T. P. A. offer some for sale. The price fixed did not pay the cost of production, and it was decided after her death to add a memorial sketch and picture of the author, and increase the price. Before the addition could be made, the supply was so nearly exhausted that it was decided not to make any change in the few remaining of the first edition, but to issue another in time for use after that should be gone.

Miss Helen Hood, who has charge of Miss Ames' affairs, has assumed the duty of preparing copy for the revised edition, which will be sold at a slightly advanced price.

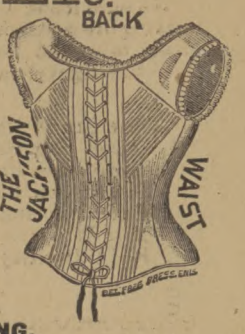
All ordering will please state whether they desire the "Thumb-nail Sketches" prepared by Miss Ames or the new edition prepared by Miss Hood, and containing the memorial sketch of Miss Ames written by Miss Willard. The former can be sent to a limited number as only a few are left.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Send for Color Samples and Price List. Patented February 23, 1887. Examine closely Stamp on inside of Waist.
TAKE NO OTHER.



THE GENUINE JACKSON CORSET WAISTS
ARE MADE ONLY BY THE
JACKSON CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.
The manufacturer's name is printed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of clasp in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. You should have one of them.



BE SURE and GET the RIGHT THING.

"The Crime of Not Insuring"

It may be plead in defense that old line companies charge so much and are so extravagant, and that assessment companies are so insecure, that it is no crime to refuse to trade with them. However that may be, here is a company which is NEITHER EXTRAVAGANT NOR INSECURE.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION . . . . OF AMERICA . . . . . .

Has its plans and rates adjusted to Insure at cost. Having only total abstainers as members, "cost" is reduced at least 30 per cent. under the charges of old line companies. Its expense account is $3.00 per $1,000—and cannot be more—instead of $9.32 per $1,000, the average of old companies. It has a guarantee fund of $64,000 securely invested. It stands almost, if not quite alone in paying one hundred cents on the dollar of every honest claim since its incorporation, July 24th, 1889. It has achieved, in two and one-half years, a success which old companies took about three times as long to reach. The company stands among business enterprises as an object lesson on total abstinence, which every good citizen should recognize.

WM. F SINGLETON, PRESIDENT.
902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

COLD BLAST. Feathers and Feather Pillows
ARE SOLD GUARANTEED
Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS
AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.
ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM.
IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MANUFACTURERS OF FAULTLESS BEDDING
CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE
Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents. F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co., 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. MCCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

GOITRE, or THICK NECK.
I have a Positive, Speedy, Harmless and almost Inexpensive Cure. Come or write to me at 28 Livingstone Street, Cleveland, Ohio.
It is no Iodine Smear. Cure made Permanent.
Dr. J. Caskey.

Good Paper } 3c
Cold Paper } 5c
THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT
PEATS sells the best, the cheapest & does the largest business in
WALL PAPER
If you have any use whatever for Wall Paper, do not fail to send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent Free. Agents sample books, $1. 136-138 W. Madison-st. Chicago.

PILES CURED FREE. New, Painless, Certain. Gives instant relief and lasting cure—never returns. To prove it we will send a trial package FREE, to any address. PYRAMID DRUG COMPANY, Box 35, ALBION, MICHICAN.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prices. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, B'way, New York.

MORE MONEY IS MADE
Every year by agents working for us than for any other Company; why don't you make some of it? our circulars which we send free will tell you how. We pay salary or commission as party prefers, and want you now. OUTFIT FREE. Address at once,
Standard Silver Ware Co., Boston, Mass.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free.
G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send only five cents and receive a Large, Elegant Fashion Catalogue and how to secure 50c. worth of dress patterns, FREE. Add. Young Lady's Bazar 230 La Salle St., Chicago.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY
or commission, to handle the new Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g Co., LaCrosse, Wis. X 213.

LADY Agents $5 a day sure; new rubber undergarment. Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago, Ill.

LADY wanted, on salary, to sell Roses, Shrubs, &c Brown Bros. Nurymn, Rochester, N.Y. & Chicago

A SQUARE PROPOSITION.

We have found the demand for the books offered in connection with THE UNION SIGNAL quite gratifying, and are encouraged to enter into an agreement with our subscribers to extend for a month the time of the "Golden Opportunity" offers. Also the slight change in the net price of each offer.

THE LIST:

THE UNION SIGNAL one year,	$1.00
Life of Gen. Grant, clo. gilt stamp. 734 pp.	2.50
Life of Gen. Sherman, clo. gilt stamp. 608 pp.	1.50
Life of Gen. Sheridan, clo. 224 pp.	1.00
Prof. Drummond's Addresses, heavy paper, 308 pp.	.35
Miss Willard's Annual Address,	.05
Red Letter Day Calendar,	.10

Offer A
for $3.40.
Retail Value $6.50.

Offer A
All of the Above.

Offer B
The Union Signal One Year.
Drummond's Addresses.
Red Letter Day Calendar.
Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer B
for $1.25.
Retail Value $1.50.

Offer C.
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of General Grant.

Offer C.
for $2.00.
Retail Value $3.50.

Offer D
for $1.75.
Retail Value $2.55.

Offer D
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of General Sherman.
Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer E
for $1.40.
Retail Value $2.05.

Offer E
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of General Sheridan.
Miss Willard's Annual address.

Offer F
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of Grant,
Life of Sherman.
Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer F
for $2.50.
Retail Value $5.05.

SPECIAL PROPOSITION.—The Life of Grant or Life of Sherman will be sent for five new subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1.00 each. (Retail Value $2.50.) The $5.00 should be sent at one time with postage for either book: Grant, 21c; Sherman, 15c.

All the books are sent postpaid at prices named. The above privileges are for the benefit of old and new subscribers alike. The offers are good during February and expire March 1st, when they will be withdrawn.

Do not fail to avail yourself of this unequaled opportunity to get good books for almost nothing.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASS'N,
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE
Owen Electric Belt
AND APPLIANCES
For Men and Women

Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.

They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.

CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.

[Trade Mark.]
DR. A. OWEN.

A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in

OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE

containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,
Main Office and only Factory,
191-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.
The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT
OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE.

A Christian woman's narrative of Mission work done "In His Name" in tough places, revealing the "inner life" of the underworld of New York "as seen by a woman." It describes Gospel work in the slums, and gives a famous detective's 30 years experiences. By Mrs. Helen Campbell, Col. Thos. W. Knox, and Inspector Thos. Byrnes (Chief of the N. Y. Detectives). With 250 engravings from flash-light photographs of scenes in Darkest New York by Day and by Night. Pure and good, full of tears and smiles, it is an ally of Temperance, a witness to the power of the Gospel,—a book for every home. Ministers say, "God speed it." Eminent women endorse it. 5,000 Agents Wanted, Men and Women. $200 a month made. Distance is no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to
A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. Women write that "TOKOLOGY is worth its weight in gold." "Should my house take fire it would be the first book saved." "I think it is wicked for women to get along without TOKOLOGY —and suffer so much." "TOKOLOGY is indeed a bible for every woman.—Frances E. Salisbury." "I bought two TOKOLOGYS and gave them to two young ladies as wedding presents, saying to each: 'This book will do for your body what the Bible does for your soul.' They write me that I told the truth.—Mrs. A. D. Morris."

Prepaid $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO. 277 Madison-st. Chicago

A Music Combine.

The time will soon be here when some one in your circle of friends will begin to look around for suitable music to use in early summer gatherings. It is necessary to plan ahead in order to present a nice musical program. It is not an easy task to select temperance songs set to stirring music, and such are not always within reach. The list given herewith is commended to your careful consideration:

For God and Home and Native Land, a W. C. T. U. Anthem. Sheet music. Price, per copy $ .10
Per 12 copies 1.00

She Sails by the Stars. A stirring campaign or rallying song. Mrs. Lide Meriwether. Sheet music. Price, per copy ..... $ .25
10 or more, each ..... .10

W. C. T. U. March-Medley. Instrumental. Introducing National Anthem, Crusade Hymn, "She Sails," etc., and several Marching Songs, 5 pages sheet music, with handsome lithographed cover. C. T. Kimball. Price ..... $ .50

Hearth and Home. Solo (or Duet) and Chorus. A beautiful new song for the home circle, by C. T. Kimball, with lithograph title-page, containing W. C. T. U. emblems. Price ..... $ .40

Fling to the Breeze Our Banner. Dr. I. J. Andrews and Mr. Munger. Lithographed title. Price $ .35

Home Protection Song. Mrs. G. C. Smith.
Price, per copy ..... $ .25
Per 5 copies 1.00

The Better Song. Price ..... $ .25

Advance Pages of the Temperance Hymnal. Anna A. Gordon. Price, per copy ..... $ .05
The Hymnal is under preparation, and will be ready later in the year. These advance songs will in the meantime, prepare the way for the book.

One copy each of the above eight pieces will be $2.95. Until March 15th they will be sent postpaid to one address for 95c; two sets for $1.75; four sets for $3. For your own good we hope you will not neglect to notice this Music Combine.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

COMMENDATIONS for the Young Crusader in its new form are being constantly received. If you have not seen it, send for sample copy.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

WILSON'S 1892 PLANT, TREE AND SEED CATALOGUE. LIVE STOCK ANNUAL.

112 Pages, 200 Fine Engravings, Handsome Colored Plates. Full of useful and instructive information. One of the most reliable catalogues published. Describing all kinds of guaranteed Garden, Flower and Field Seeds, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Small Fruits, Choice Roses, Flowering Plants and Bulbs. Thoroughbred Land and Water Fowls, Registered Pigs, German Hares, &c. Sent free, on application. Address, mentioning this paper,
SAMUEL WILSON, SEED GROWER MECHANICSVILLE, PA

$500 FOR A TOMATO

Last spring I offered $500 to any person producing a 3 lb. Mammoth Prize Tomato; T. R. Harris, Abbott, Neb., won it with one weighing 3 lbs. 3¼ ozs., and I sent him my check for $500. It measured over 8½ in. in diameter. 87 tomatoes grew on one stem over 3 feet from the ground. Largest plant on record 18 ft. 6 in. tall. This mammoth strain creates a sensation wherever it goes, and is the largest ever offered. Thousands of my customers have grown them to weigh over 45 ozs. The quality is excellent; after you once test it you will grow no others. If well cared for they will produce 1 bu. to a plant (see cut) of large, smooth, bright red tomatoes, very solid with only a few seeds in each, and entirely free from rot. If started early, fruit ripens from July 4th until frost. This year I offer $500 Cash to any person producing a 3½ lb. tomato. (It can be done.) Full directions how Mr. Harris grew his with each order. Plant some, you may win the prize. All my seed is saved from large specimens.

SURE HEAD CABBAGE
Is all head and sure to head, very uniform in size, firm and fine in texture, excellent in quality and a good keeper. Single heads have weighed over 64 pounds.

EARLY SNOWBALL TURNIP
Is the earliest in the world, easy grown, good size, excellent quality. Will be far ahead of your neighbors.

My Catalogue, is worth 50 cts. to any one who gets it. $500 offered largest order; $500 for a pansy blossom; $300 for a bean plant with 100 pods, and above tomato prize.

☞I will send a packet each of Prize Tomato, Cabbage and Turnip, with my Catalogue of Bargains for only 25 cents. Greatest bargain catalogue ever sent out.

☞Every person sending silver for above collection will receive Free a packet of INCH'S IMPROVED EXTRA EARLY FREE TOMATO, and a 50c. certificate for seeds, your choice from my bargain catalogue Free.

F. B. MILLS, Rose Hill, Onandaga Co. N. Y.

FREE

Grandest Illustrated Garden-Guide.

SEEDS 1 cent a packet. Up if rare or costly. Cheapest. Best of all. Free by mail, 500 000 packets of extras to Customers. Send at once for Free BOOK. R. H. Shumway, Rockford, Ill.

How to Make a Fortune.

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line, or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 184 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office.

H. G. ROOT, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Founded by Dr. EBEN TOURJÉE.
CARL FAELTEN, Director.

Gives Unequalled Facilities for Thorough and Systematic Instruction in all departments of Music, the Fine Arts, etc., at very reasonable rates. A Safe and Comfortable Home for Lady Pupils. Special Provisions for Self Help offered to prospective pupils who are needy and talented and who can furnish satisfactory references. For full information address, Frank W. Hale, Gen'l Manager, Franklin Sq., Boston.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D. C. H St., between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE. G. H. La Fetra, Prop.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City. 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

"HOME OF THE WHALEBACK."

$100 LOTS Send for our paper on investments, "How to Get Rich."—Joseph L. Henvis & Co., West Superior, Wis.

ASTHMA
WORST CASES CURED TO STAY CURED IF UNCOMPLICATED BY ORGANIC DISEASE. Incurable cases declined.
WE WANT NAME OF EVERY ASTHMATIC. Examination free by mail.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M.D.
BUFFALO, N. Y.

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes. Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved, cheapest, scientific, powerful, durable and effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspensories free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c. stamp for pamphlet.
DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

Established in Chicago, '79. 3 Years in Cincinnati. Ret'd to Chicago, '91.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 State St., Chicago.

RUPTURE CURED!

(PATENT ALLOWED.)

Positively Holds Rupture.
WORN NIGHT AND DAY.
Has an Adjustable Pad which can be made larger or smaller to suit changing condition of rupture.
Illustrated Catalogue sent securely sealed by
G. V. HOUSE MFG. CO.
744 BROADWAY, N. Y. CITY

DRUNKENNESS is A DISEASE, and can be Cured, by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given without the knowledge of the patient, if desired, by placing it in coffee, tea or articles of food. Cures guaranteed. Send for free circulars. GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

F. P. VAN VALKENBURGH, Former Associate Physician and Surgeon to the Old People's Home, 3858 Indiana Avenue, Chicago, also examining Physician for the New York Life Insurance Co. Cures Drunkenness, Morphine, Opium, and destroys the desire for Tobacco. Cures guaranteed. Correspondence solicited. Reference. Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Office, 103 State-st. Chicago

---

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept. G. C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

---

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N. Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

ECZEMA NO CURE! NO PAY! Address DR. ROSS, Grand Rapids, Mich.

TAPE WORM Removed alive, head and all, in three hours at your home. No starving required. Safe, sure and certain. Circulars free. 269 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

BABY CARRIAGES AT FACTORY PRICES ARE DELIVERED FREE to any place in the United States. Also Baby JUMPERS, BICYCLES, SAFETIES and GIRLS' TRICYCLES. One or more at wholesale prices sent C. O. D. direct from L. G. SPENCER'S Factory, 221 W. Madison Street CHICAGO. $3 to $10 saved. Send 2c. stamp for new catalogue. The largest factory in the world. Latest Styles.

PORTABLE BATHS. Best ever known. Wholesale and Retail. Agents Wanted Everywhere. Send for Circulars. E. J. KNOWLTON, Ann Arbor, Mich.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE. Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and indorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your Grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it.
D. S. WILTBERGER, 233 N. Second Street, Phila., Pa.

A MAN TRAVELING BETWEEN Chicago and Denver SHOULD TAKE THE
CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC
FAST VESTIBULED TRAINS, DINING CARS
VAN BUREN STREET DEPOT.
E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager. JNO. SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass'r Agt.

Signal Notes.

A TEMPERANCE society has been established in Harvard College.

SEVENTY women in New York are said to be engaged in the saloon business.

THE value of the food products of our country, for a single year, is about $600,000,000. The cost of alcoholic drinks is about $1,485,000,000.

HON. CARROLL D. WRIGHT, the well-known statistician, is authority for the statement that for every dollar paid in by the saloons for their licenses, about twenty-one dollars is paid out by the people.

WISCONSIN has the credit of organizing the first state Loyal Temperance Legion. It is composed entirely of graduates. To learn of the plan and its successful workings write the state Loyal Temperance Legion superintendent, Mrs. Annie J. Bradbury, 172 Juneau Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

THE miseries of the starving Russians have been eloquently portrayed by Congressman Morse in a recent speech before Congress. He offers an amendment to the bill to send supplies for the relief of these sufferers, to the effect that in their distribution, no discrimination should be made between starving Jew and Gentile.

LORD WOLSELEY has said: "Those who study the map of Europe and the condition of things in Europe, must feel that there is hanging over us a war-cloud greater than any which has hung over Europe before. It means when it bursts (and burst it will, as surely as the sun will rise to-morrow), it means a war of extinction, of devastation, between great armed nations whose populations are all trained to fight."

AT a missionary meeting held in New Guinea a few months ago, one of the speakers picked up a spear and said: "This used to be our constant companion. We dared not go to our gardens without it; we took it in our canoes; we carried it on our journeys; we slept with it on our side, and we took our meals with it close at hand; but," he added, "we can now sleep safely because of this,' holding up the book of the Gospels. "This book has brought us peace and protection, and we no longer require the spear."

AMONG the petitions which have been presented to the Massachusetts legislature now in session are the following:

For further restriction upon the transportation of intoxicating liquor in towns and cities which have not voted to grant liquor licenses of the first five classes.

For legislation to prevent the licensing of an excessive number of places for the sale of intoxicating liquors in towns which are summer resorts.

For legislation to prevent sales of intoxicating liquor to be drunk on the premises, except to persons who have resorted there for food.

THE United States consul in Sierra Leone, in a private letter to a friend in this country, recently wrote:

"I am not a missionary, nor the son of one, but I judge the present by the past. The Christian nations of the earth must set a better example than flooding this country with rum and gin, and landing it on the Sabbath day at the wharf within fifty yards of the church. I stood on the wharf last Sabbath and saw steamers come into the harbor from Germany and England, and they commenced to land rum and gin. There were over one hundred men employed all day and the customs officers had to be on duty. The native kings are petitioning the government to stop the liquor traffic. It is ruining their people. One king says if they continue, it will cause him to leave his country and go where the white man's rum can't reach his people."

IN A review of the progress of the temperance movement in Scotland the Glasgow Reformer finds cause for gratification to every true-hearted friend of the reform. The activities of temperance work have been felt in every direction, and especially in church organizations. There is a rising tide of public opinion against the liquor dealer, due to persistent prohibitory teaching, and a realization of the injury and loss caused by the traffic. The hopes of the great temperance army turn to the new Parliament that is almost certain to be elected during the present year. The efforts that have been made to strengthen the temperance party in Parliament will then tend to a settlement of the question of the Direct Veto at the outset. This is a cheering outlook for the earnest Scottish temperance reformers, and one which sends its reflection clear across the water.

What do you use to clean silver? Chemicals? No? What then? Silver Polish! Ah, that is simply a compound of the strongest chemicals. Do you know what the result will be? In a very short time the beautiful finish of your silver will entirely disappear.

What should you use? Well, if you care to have your silver retain its brightness, clean it simply with hot water and Ivory Soap. Rub with a dry chamois and see how your silver will shine! You can use a soft brush on the chased and ornamental parts. Just try this once!

COPYRIGHT 1891, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

Woman's Baking Co.

HAVE YOU SECURED WHAT STOCK YOU WANT? IT IS SELLING FAST.

Send a deposit, no matter how small, to show us you are in earnest, say how many shares you would like, and we will reserve them until you have time to fully investigate or arrange your money matters. Our illustrated pamphlet gives full information and is sent free.

STOCK SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN.

Absolutely Non-assessable, and there is no liability beyond amount invested. Price $25 per share, payable, if desired, in monthly installments of $2.50 per share.

OUR PLAN is to establish a number of bakeries throughout the United States. Our charter also admits of lunch counters being established where we have bakeries.

If we only make one-half a cent a loaf on bread and 1 cent a pie on pies, with 25 bakeries, averaging 3,000 loaves of bread and 1,000 pies daily, our annual profits will be $183,500, which will pay a dividend of $18.35 on each share of stock.

An ordinary bakery in this city, with a capital of $75,000, paid a dividend last year amounting to $30,000 and its stock has advanced over 700 per cent above par Where practicable

ONLY WOMEN TO BE EMPLOYED.

We own the right to equip as many bakeries as we may desire with the only patented machinery that successfully kneads dough and separates it into loaves of bread.

The actual cost of labor in manufacturing one barrel of flour into bread without this machinery is $2.50, and the actual cost with this machinery is 50 cents. It will thus readily be seen that we have a MONOPOLY wherever we see fit to operate.

EVERY FAMILY MUST HAVE BREAD

And it is woman's work to supply it. Either bake it herself or buy it.

We will supply better—more wholesome—bread, pies, cakes, etc., for less money than the housewife can make at home, and being a woman's concern, owned and operated by women, are we unreasonable in expecting an unlimited demand for our goods? An unlimited demand for our goods means unlimited profits to our stockholders.

Two Dollars and Fifty Cents a Month for Ten Months buys One Share of Stock.

Invest in it now while you can and reap the benefits paid in dividends, perhaps for the balance of your life.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE

To collect information in reference to locations for bakeries, and to aid us in selling stock.

OFFICERS:

Mrs. Louise Rockwood Wardner, President.
Mrs. Lydia Rice Bentley, Vice-President.
Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Vice-President.
Miss Caroline A. Huling, Secretary.
Mrs. R. A. Emmons, Treasurer.
Mrs. Frances E. Owens, Auditor.
Miss Ella S. Bass, Auditor.

Make drafts, checks and money orders payable to

THE WOMAN'S BAKING COMPANY,

161 LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

MORE FACTORIES AT

HARVEY.

THE ADAMS MFG. CO., of Cedar Rapids, Ia., Minneapolis, Minn., and South Bend, Ind., will consolidate its three concerns and move entire plant to Harvey.

This Co. will employ a large force of men, which will add largely to the value of property, and especially to that in Academy Addition where present activity insures greatest profit to those purchasing lots. If there are any readers of THE UNION SIGNAL that have not had plat and price list they should secure them at once. Sent free to any address. WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO., 161 LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

RUBIFOAM

CLEANSES, PRESERVES, BEAUTIFIES THE TEETH.

A PERFECT LIQUID DENTIFRICE.

PRICE 25 CENTS

E. W. HOYT & CO. LOWELL, MASS.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed,

Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

"BEAUTY" ACCOMMODATION WAIST No. 7,

WITH TAMPICO DRESS FORM.

Made of finest Sateen, Soft Sateen bust and pockets for Tampico Dress forms. Removable Steels, Adjustable Shoulder Straps. Lace Back, Button Front, curved to figure at back.

PERFECT FORM, EASE AND SUPPORT.

Sizes 18 to 30 in. in White and Black. Sent free by mail, for $1.50 Little Beauty Waists for children, the best. Catalogue free

E. H. HORWOOD & CO., 51 Mercer St., - New York.

YOU NEED THEM.

Crystal Glass Body. Silver Plate Top

Sample per mail 25 cents each.

PAINE, DIEHL & CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D.W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

HOME DRESSMAKING

A Complete Guide to Household Sewing.

Women who try to save money who love to dress well who have to sew Need It

Prepaid $2.75. The only book on the subject.

Free circulars giving Table of Contents.

Best Terms to Agents.

Address, CHARLES H. SERGEL & CO., Dept. 'A' 350 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.

American Desk & Seating Co.

270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

PARENTS CANNOT AFFORD

To let their children grow up without the amusement and physical training which the World's Parlor and Lawn Game gives. ELASTIC TIP CO., 152 and 154 Lake Street, Chicago.

YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicag.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to C. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

YOUR NAME on 25 LOVELY CARDS, 1 RING, 1 LACE PIN, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 400 Album Verses &c. with the New and Popular Monthly, WAYSIDE GLEANINGS, THREE MONTHS FOR 10c. LAUREL LAKE CO., CLINTONVILLE, CONN.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 5.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 4, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: Household Labor—Recollections of Noted Men and Women—The Character Gauge 8, 9
THE TEMPLE QUESTION BOX; 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem, War With Chili, by Edna Dean Proctor—Temperance Jack, by Frances E. Willard—Service and Shams, by Lilian Whiting—A New Year's Day Long Ago, by Elizabeth J. Thompson—How One Local W. C. T. U. Made Money, by Elizabeth P. Gordon—Railroad Ties, by John G. Woolley 2, 3, 4
CORRESPONDENCE: "Our People Die Well"—Canada Excludes Certain United States Papers as Impure—Our Mother in Israel Makes Mourning—"A Little Better than the W. C. T. U."—A Correction—Temperance Temple Items 4, 5
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN: A Woman for President 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, A Sermon for Boys—Part of a Boy 6
THE HOUSEHOLD: Poem, Our Compensations—A Saloon Incident—After-Christmas Thoughts—The Kingdom of Christ 7
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: Ohio Outlook, Iowa, Texas, New Hampshire, South Dakota—News in a Nutshell—Announcement 10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: Work for Soldiers and Sailors—School Savings Banks—Temperance Temple Receipts 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT: 13
SIGNAL NOTES: 14
OUR BOOK TABLE: 16

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Iowa Democratic senators have determined to support the Schmidt Liquor License Bill.

The bill appropriating $3,000,000 to the Columbian Exposition passed the Senate unanimously January 28th.

Chicago has sold $3,000,000 of its $5,000,000 Exposition bonds, enabling the directors to place a much larger force of men at work upon the grounds.

Chili's apology and offer of amends to the United States government are entirely satisfactory and her overtures have been cordially met by Secretary Blaine in the name of President Harrison.

Miss Clara Barton, president of the American branch of the Red Cross Society, has issued an appeal for $75,000 to pay the expenses of shipping four cargoes of grain to the starving peasants of Russia.

Petitions were presented to Congress last week by the Farmers' Alliance, asking for the investigation of the methods of the great Pinkerton force of thirty thousand men. The petition was denied by the judiciary committee.

Miss Frances E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Anna A. Gordon left Chicago on Thursday evening for St. Paul and Minneapolis to hold meetings in the interest of John G. Woolley's Rest Island home for intemperate men.

The Massachusetts legislature has passed a resolution that its state exhibit at the Columbian Exposition shall be closed on Sunday. Several other states are about to determine this important question in this way. Let the good work go on.

The high license law, now under consideration by the Mississippi legislature, is being stoutly resisted by the liquor trade, which is organizing all over the state to prevent the passage of the bill. The license varies from $700 in small towns to $1,500 in towns of more than 2,000 inhabitants.

A coffee wagon gospel mission has been started in Chicago, having for its circuit the most crowded and destitute parts of the city. Good coffee with cream and sugar is sold at three cents a pint and twenty cents a gallon. Although only a few days old, it is already a formidable rival of the beer shops in the neighborhood.

BE sure to read on page 3, Miss Bessie Gordon's spicy article on "How One Local W. C. T. U. Made Money." "There's millions in it."

W. F. SINGLETON is one of our staunchest Prohibitionists, and a true white ribbon "brother-in-law." His wife, Mrs. Gertrude M. Singleton, daughter of one of Kentucky's former governors, is a leader in our work in Evanston and Chicago. The General is opening a new avocation to temperance men and women of which some account is given in this number under the title, "What the Spectator has to say about the Total Abstinence Life Association of America."

PERHAPS the worst feature of the plan to sell intoxicating liquors at the World's Fair is the probability that under this guise the dreaded and demoralizing barmaid will be introduced into our country as a permanent institution. Petitions should be sent to the Congressional and state commissioners on this subject, also on the general one of intoxicants at the Fair and Sunday closing. The local directorate in Chicago is by no means a finality on any of these questions. Let us remember this and act accordingly.

"SPURGEON is dead," read the great head-lines in Monday morning's dailies, a piece of news which the million friends of the famous preacher and humanitarian could hardly believe. His departure occurred at eleven o'clock Sunday evening, January 31, at Mentone, Italy, after a year of painful disease and heroic struggles for recovery. For forty years a minister in the Baptist denomination and at the head of a score of mission schools, Mr. Spurgeon has a world-wide reputation as an expounder of the Scriptures and benefactor to mankind. This generation will not furnish his equal.

TELEGRAMS from W. C. Wharton, assistant Secretary of State, and a letter from Hon. James G. Blaine, in response to inquiries from THE UNION SIGNAL office, have elicited the information that the gist of the famous Brussels Treaty, as far as prohibition is concerned, is stated thus: "In the districts of this zone where it shall be ascertained that either on account of religious belief or from some other causes, the use of distilled liquors does not exist or has not been developed, the powers shall prohibit their importation. The manufacture of distilled liquors shall be likewise prohibited there. Each power shall determine the limits of the zone of prohibition of alcoholic liquors in its possessions or protectorates, and shall be bound to make known the limits thereof to the other powers within the space of six months. The above prohibition can only be suspended in the case of limited quantities intended for the consumption of the non-native population and imported under the régime and conditions determined by each government."

THE memorial ordered by the Boston Convention was presented to President Harrison January 21, by Mrs. S. D. La Fetra, president W. C. T. U. of District of Columbia, and Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, superintendent of our department to promote peace and arbitration. These officers were introduced by Representative R. E. Doan, of Ohio. The President received them pleasantly, saying, "I am glad that you presented this memorial, though I cannot, of course, discuss it with you." This is its wording:

To the President of the United States:

We have the honor to present officially a memorial from the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, now organized in nearly forty different countries, and the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, organized in all the states and territories of this nation except Utah and Alaska, representing a following of more than half a million of women devoted to the uplifting of humanity, and we do most respectfully ask you to use your great influence in settling the present difficulties with Chili by arbitration, that war may be prevented. We beseech you by the knowledge of the suffering that women and children have endured because of the great evil of war, that in your high representative capacity you do all in your power to prevent the great calamity which must come to our nation and to Chili should there be other than a peaceful settlement of these difficulties.

IMMEDIATELY after the National W. C. T. U. Convention, the present senior editor of this paper held a confidential conference with labor leaders in Boston and prohibition leaders in New York City, urging upon all the solemn duty of a union for political party purposes in the interest of humanity. The campaign of 1892 should witness the massing of reform votes cast for one candidate, and to this end a conference of leaders was called which met in the Sherman House, Chicago, January 27. About fifty were there, representatives of all the reform movements—among them Samuel Dickie, chairman of the Prohibition party, E. J. Wheeler, editor of The Voice, Samuel Hastings, Rev. Dr. Jutkins, H. C. Taylor, T. C. Richmond, Drs. Delano and Gifford, and a dozen of our leading white-ribboners, all representing the Prohibition party; Gen. J. B. Weaver, Ignatius Donnelly, Mrs. Anna Diggs, H. C. Taubeneck, Captain Powers, Rev. Mr. Bliss, George F. Washburn, of the People's party; E. Evans and Professor Miller, of the National Reform party. After several hours of most friendly conference, a representative committee was appointed which prepared the following address:

To the People of the United States:—The undersigned, expressing the consensus of opinion of an informal voluntary gathering of members of the People's party, the Prohibition party, and the National Reform party, held the 27th day of January, 1892, at the Sherman House, Chicago, arrogating to themselves no right to speak authoritatively for any one but themselves, or to dictate the future course or platform of any organization, but perceiving the absolute necessity which exists that the people, rising up in their primal capacity as citizens and voters, should wrest the government of the state and the nation from those who have so long misgoverned both, hereby put forth the following suggestions to the people of the United States, upon which we ourselves are substantially agreed. We are in favor of a consolidation of all political elements in behalf of these issues, to wit:

1. That money should be issued by the general government, without the intervention of any private institutions, in sufficient quantity to carry on the business of the country, and such money should be a full legal tender for all debts, both public and private.

2. That the saloon is the great enemy of reform in the nation, and as the chief fountain of corruption in our politics, we denounce its pernicious influence upon our country and demand its suppression.

3. All means of public transportation and communications should be controlled by the government to obtain for all the people equal and equitable advantages in such services; and if the effort to so control said means of transportation and communication shall prove impracticable, then we favor government ownership of the same.

4. We are opposed to speculation in land, and alien ownership of the same, and we demand a reasonable limitation of the amount of land that can be owned by any corporation or individual.

5. We favor municipal suffrage for women with an educational qualification.

IGNATIUS DONNELLY, E. J. WHEELER,
FRANCES E. WILLARD, G. M. MILLER,
J. B. WEAVER, E. EVANS,
H. C. TAYLOR.

This statement was adopted without a dissenting voice, two members not voting. It was agreed to present the address to the conference of the People's party to be held February 22 in St. Louis, and a committee was appointed for this purpose consisting of Gilbert Delamater, Frances E. Willard, G. M. Miller, J. B. Weaver, Ignatius Donnelly, Samuel Dickie, and E. J. Wheeler. The conference then adjourned with the doxology and benediction, to be convened on call of its chairman at the St. Louis meeting aforesaid. Lady Henry Somerset was present throughout, and spoke on the value of women's municipal ballot in the politics of England.

We hope our people may be present in large numbers at St. Louis; their moral influence will greatly help. White-ribboners, pray much.

"When wealth and power have had their hour Comes for the weak the hour of God."

Contributed.

WAR WITH CHILI.

BY EDNA DEAN PROCTOR.

War with Chili? Just as soon
At the radiant hour of noon
Should the sun vie with the moon!
Should the oak assail the vine
That has dared its trunk to twine!
Bombard Valparaiso? Lo,
Andes' peaks with horror heave;
Sullen all their craters glow,
Sea-winds up the gorges grieve;
And the condor to the sky
Screams this Old-world cruelty!

What! The great Republic deign
Thus the glory to maintain
Of her high, effulgent reign?
Thus, this year of jubilee,
Dim her flag on shore and sea?
She, the light of all the Band
Vowed to Freedom, let her hand
Strike her young, impetuous neighbor
Madly down with war's dread saber,
While the nations hardly smother
Scorn of how we love each other?

No! The God-like way be hers!—
Generous, patient, till she stirs
Even her foes to worshipers,
Seeing clear the soul of good
In our storied sisterhood.
To the winds be vengeance cast!
Let the war-cry be the last!—
Guns be manned nor sails be spread
Till the day of peace has fled.
Glory, right alone confers—
Let the God-like way be hers!

TEMPERANCE JACK.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

One of the earliest trophies of the W. C. T. U. in Chicago was John W. Lyon, better known as Temperance Jack. He was a sailor on the lakes, and came into Clark Street M. E. church when a gospel temperance meeting was in progress. He was under the influence of liquor, and a sober companion had not a little difficulty in steering him up to the pledge table. Jack could not write, but made the sign of the cross and received a copy of the pledge printed on a card and witnessed by Mrs. M. A. Cummings, one of our veteran workers, a woman of most motherly and benignant aspect, her head crowned with the glory of gray hairs. The sailor seems to have retained an impression of her face as she laid her hand upon his shoulder, saying in her kind way, "Remember, I shall pray for you."

A year passed, and I was holding a gospel temperance meeting in lower Farwell Hall, as was my daily custom while president of the W. C. T. U. of Chicago. In the rear of the room, a stout built, square-shouldered young man, with brown hair, bronzed complexion, and clear blue eye, the type of a British sailor, rose and proceeded thus: "Ladies, I came to find that good woman who promised to pray for me when I signed the pledge at the beginning of the Crusade. She gave me a nice clean card that night, with the pledge printed upon it, and signed by her name as a witness." He then put his hand in his breast pocket, brought forth the most unpromising looking scrap of pasteboard that one could see, tattered, blackened, and almost unrecognizable. He then continued: "This is the card. It don't look very nice, but I tell you it is worth more than it was when you gave it to me. I have been kicked, cuffed and spit on because I would not break the pledge, but here I am, and here it is, and neither has been dishonored. I have done just as you hoped I would, and I have done it by God's grace. You see I never had any sort of bringing up. I was a chimney sweep in London, lost my mother before I could remember. My father never treated me anyhow, at least the man who had me in care did not. He was cruel to us boys and cursed us up and down When quite young I ran away from home, and I went on a ship before the mast. I have sailed in every sea and seen the wickedness of the world till I am heartsick of it.

"After I left your meeting and came to myself, and found your pledge card in my pocket, and seemed always to have before me the kind lady's face and in my ears her gentle words, I made up my mind that I would keep the bargain, but it was no easy job. It seems as if men like to drag others down as low as they have got themselves; at least it was so on ship. They didn't give me any rest because I wouldn't drink. I have been very sick; had the fever since I was here; was in a hospital down at New Orleans; thought over a good many things as I lay there alone among so many other fellows wretched like myself. One night something seemed to say to me, 'It is right down contemptible of you to let that nice lady in Chicago do all your praying. You are counting on being saved because she is at it. Why don't you pray for yourself? You are a mean-spirited fellow if you don't.' But I had never heard a prayer in my life. I did not know how they made them. I was scared like of beginning, but after hours and hours lying there in the dark somehow I started in like this: 'O God, if you really want to help a fellow I have just got round to where I want to have you.' And I said it over and over, and I meant what I said. Somehow it seemed light after that, light in my heart and all around in the room. I did not feel sick, and I did not feel bad. I just thought I was strong enough to do anything, and from that time on there has been something different inside my heart. It seems as if I had cast anchor, seems as if the heavenly breeze had got into my sails, seems as if the star was always there to be seen, the north star of faith. So I didn't mind the fellows' talk and kicking and cursing any more. I said to myself, 'I am going back to see the lady;' and here I am, and I have been looking around this meeting for her, and lo, and behold, there she is now " And as he bounded toward my noble associate, she rose, and he was overjoyed to see the one who had been first of all among the human race to speak to him the words of motherly good-will. He came forward and grasped her hand. She was glad indeed to see him, and we had a blessed season of prayer in which she led. Getting up Jack said, "I want you women to know that there ain't any foolin' about this. I mean business. I want the kind of religion that measures twelve inches to the foot and weighs sixteen ounces to the pound. I have no notion of going around this country preaching cream and practicing skimmed milk."

That was in the winter of 1875. I have kept trace of Jack ever since. We wanted him to go into the gospel temperance work in Chicago, but he said, "I can do more good among men of my own sort on shipboard. I am a wayfarer, and I will follow my own trade."

Miss Mary Kelley, one of the most accomplished of Chicago's society ladies, invited Jack to go to her home on Calumet avenue, and taught him to read and write. He took hold with a vim and learned in a few weeks. When the Zulu war came on he embarked on a British ship, and off the coast of Sierra Leone an accident befell him by which his leg was broken. He was urged to take a glass of brandy during th difficult operation of setting the bone, but stoutly refused, saying, "I promised the Chicago temperance women, and I won't break it for anybody, leg or no leg " This he wrote me, but I learned it also from a missionary friend in Yokohama, who heard a shipmate of Jack tell the story in her gospel temperance meeting, mentioning me, and thus causing her to write the incident. Later on, Jack went into the British army, and fought through the Zulu campaign. He used to send me curious flowers that he had gathered and pressed for me in that far-away land. I remember, in one of his letters he said something like this: "The boys always like to hear me sing in the saloons, but you would be glad now-a-days to see us of a Sunday afternoon, when I get out my old accordion and play for them to sing, 'Jesus the water of life will give, freely, freely, freely.'"

Some years after these experiences Jack landed in California, came on to Colorado, and became a miner. Once in a while he writes to me, and on my part I keep him supplied with our temperance literature, which he uses to the best advantage possible. On December 30, 1890, he wrote me as follows:

DEAR FRIEND:—You will think that Jack has forgotten you, as he does not write now but once a year. Just put this thought away from your mind, for all of my old Christian friends are remembered in my prayers to our heavenly Father. Jack has his trials and temptations to resist, which are many in these mountains. No one can conceive what they are without he has lived among prospectors, like I have at present. I have two partners living with me in the same cabin, away up among the hills. Both have been raised by Christian parents, but one is now an infidel. The other is better. He believes in an all-ruling power, but not in a God. I keep my Bible up here in my cabin, and it would surprise you how often religion is our topic for discussion at nights, the two of them trying to convert me to the belief of Ingersoll and Tom Paine, and me a-tryin' to convert them to believe in God Almighty. Fancy three men in a log cabin, away up in the mountains as we are now, away from everybody, two tryin' to convert one, and one tryin' to convert two. My temptations are many, but this has been the hardest of all. If one of them dies he wants no burial service read over him, or prayers either. The other wants his folks invited. I have no one now to claim my body, but my soul will go to that great bar of everlasting justice, and to the God that gave it. Don't forget Jack in your prayers, for he needs all the strength God will give him. We are running a long tunnel to the veins in our mine, but I have won my hard fight against Sunday work. I say if you are a believer in God keep His commandments, and I tell you the Sabbath is a day of rest at the Mediterranean tunnel out here, and don't you forget it. I know you are not idle for God and Home and Native Land. I have written a poem, and call it "The Waif." My life is in it in a nutshell. I am the waif. I will inclose it for you, and if it needs altering, you do so. I wish it might bring peace of mind to her who brought me into this world. I wish you to remember me to all my old Christian friends who are living, and tell them that one seed they dropped in fertile soil, for Jack is still true to his God and to temperance.

Here follows Jack's effusion. I cannot by any stretch of friendship or imagination designate it in the use of the word that he employs, but what it lacks in rhyme and rhythm it certainly makes up in the ring of the true metal, a noble, manly heart, and with this in view I think it will be enjoyed by all white-ribboners. After telling that he was found "in swaddling clothes by an old sea captain, in October of 1852, on Broadway," and taken care of by him till he was six years old when this good man and his wife both died, he records that he "took to the sea like a duck do swim," and as a cabin-boy on a slave ship made his first voyage, at last becoming a prospector for gold and silver mines, and from Colorado, as follows, sends

THE WAIF.

I love these mountains and these vales,
The wondrous works of God;
But, oh! I crave a mother's love
To cherish this poor waif's heart.

I have seen her, pards, in many a dream;
She is aged, her hair is gray;
She suffers still for her past deed
When she left me on Broadway.

I have prayed for her, boys, all my life,
Upon the sea and land
She still watches o'er me, her waif,
And protects me from all harm.

Be she rich or poor I know not;
She is still the same to me,
I always forgive her in my dreams
For making me a waif.

The dearest wish of all my life
I'll tell you, pards, off-hand,
Is to kiss her lips and say "forgiven,"
And fold her in these arms.

If she be poor, no matter, boys,
My cabin is my home,
I'll work these fingers to the bone
A mother's love to own.

Oft in my life have I seen
Many others welcomed home,
A mother's kiss, "God bless my boy!"
A waif is never known.

Now, should this meet the eye of her
Who cast her boy away,
He is now a man and craves your love
Forgives you making him a waif.

Forgive we must. Do all in life
Who seek to enter heaven;
All waifs and outcasts will be there,
They are claimed by God in heaven.

SERVICE AND SHAMS.

BY LILIAN WHITING.

Between the desire to do a good work for the work's sake, for the world's sake, for Christ's sake, which is highest of all, and the desire to do it to awaken the echoes of fame or of some notoriety that masquerades for it—between these two there is a great gulf fixed. Yet, in many instances, it is less the fault or folly of the individual than it is of a mistaken ideal that prevails. For example: quite apart from authorship and the literary life in its integrity, there is a nebulous element which looks upon literature as a vocation whose result is fame, and whose idea of success is that of wide-spread press notice and general publicity. This element does not perceive the deeper truth that authorship is service, and when it is not that it is nothing; that fame in any true sense is to the author incidental, and is not the supreme end at which he aims; that he does not start to hear the echo of his own voice, but to convey the message that he would give to the world.

The truth is, that this wide-spread, silly and selfish greed for personal fame is a pernicious factor in the life of the day, and its root is in the fact that the ideal of service is not yet adequately held as the social standard.

A young woman writing to me this morning announces that she wishes to "go into" literature (as if it were a trade rather than an art) and demands that I sit down and inform her "how to begin;" and "what kind of writing will pay the best?" and wouldn't it be better for her to begin with descriptive writing as "easier for a beginner?" To this—which is a type of a very numerous class—there can be but one reply: "Do not write at all unless you have something to say; if you have, say it, and say it without regard to shekels or to the possible invitations to five o'clock tea, or dinner parties."

While life in its best and highest sense is for ministry, while we should certainly, at whatever cost, do all that is possible for those who seek aid in striving after any genuine aim, it may well be a question as to whether it is not absolutely wrong to pander to silly and selfish vanity. Sometime each and all must learn the lesson that cheap pretension cannot be accepted for earnest endeavor, and the earlier it is learned the better. If it is wrong to encourage pauperism by indiscriminate almsgiving, it is wrong to encourage spiritual pauperism by pandering to cheap vanity.

Writing is an art or it is nothing. If it is in one, let him prove his gift by his works. Literary people can neither give it nor take it away. And it is more than an open question if the entire history of literature will show a single instance where any genuine ability ever forsook its work to hang about people who were famous, and solicit their praise. Howells, in his youth and obscurity, modestly sent out his verses to the world (for his literary career began as a poet) letting them take their chances; but he did not go hanging about the doors of famous people, insisting that he possessed great powers, and must be invited to their dinners!

"Seek first the kingdom of heaven"—which is the kingdom of all noble and unselfish endeavor, of devotion to larger interests than those of personal gratification—and then shall "all these things be added unto you"—loves and friendships, and recognition, and greater power for usefulness. Let one give himself wholly to a great cause, a noble aim, and serve it faithfully, and through losing his life in this way—only through losing it—shall he find it again.

Boston, Mass.

A NEW YEAR'S DAY LONG AGO.

BY ELIZABETH J. THOMPSON.

How slow, and yet how sure, are the developments of God's eternal purposes! So I thought, as I read in the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette an account from "Washington Special" of the hospitality of the national capital on January 1, 1892, with this closing sentence:

"Not so many years gone by the bowl of egg-nog was seldom, if ever, omitted from the list of refreshments in every home upon hospitality bent. Yet to-day one is rarely tempted to indulge. Intoxicants of all kinds have been superseded in both official and private houses by the advent of bouillon and coffee or chocolate, as fancy may dictate or fashion ordain."

Vividly there came before me a scene of the past. In Cincinnati, O., fifty-three years ago, on Fourth street, near the old Longworth Home, whose friendship and flowers yielded a most gracious and inspiring influence to the novelty of our first housekeeping, the time came near for the much honored observance of keeping open-house on New Year's Day. At that date (1839) of the Christian era, the wine cup and egg-nog bowl of liberal proportions formed an essential and most attractive part of the entertainment.

I mused on these things quietly in my own heart, and having decided to be true to my convictions, even at the risk of being "alone in a good cause," I cheerfully set about planning for the then novel entertainment of coffee and chocolate.

First, I invited Mrs. Alexander, a bright, lovable young widow to receive with me. Mrs. A. was a sister of Mrs. Larz Anderson, Sr., and afterwards married Judge Hall, of Cincinnati. She was not a pronounced temperance woman, indeed few were at that date, but she was a sensible, good woman, and as she expressed it "deplored the fashion of requiring of our gentlemen friends the civility of so many drinks the first day of the new year." Hence, my dear little bridesmaid, for such she had been, entered into my plans most cheerfully, much to my delight, and soon our joy was complete to find that there was to be no opposition from the young Kentucky husband, who generously sealed his approval by presenting me with a superb sized silver coffee urn, as a New Year's gift, which, with its pioneer history, is a favorite heirloom in our family.

From the dear old paternal home in the Highlands, sixty miles away, also came loving tokens of approval, and it did really seem, as that New Year's morning dawned brightly upon us, that all things were "working together for good."

Many were the calls recorded on that day of new experiences! and our hearts were greatly cheered as friend after friend, departing, left with us their blessing for the hot coffee, chocolate, etc.

About dusk we were surprised by a call from Cincinnati's distinguished citizen, Judge Burnet, accompanied by a group of young men—about eight in all—and none of them seemed more than twenty-one years of age. These favored youths, it appeared, were the pets of Judge Burnet and entrusted to his care by their mothers, who were his special society friends. When the gallant old judge entered the room, leaving his charge in care of Mrs. Alexander, he approached the table where I was standing near the coffee urn, and taking my hand in both of his he said, "I commend you heartily, my dear young friend, for thus bravely standing by the principles of your noble father," and casting his eye towards the hot coffee and chocolate said, "This is just what I need to get my boys in condition to meet their dear mothers; and who is to blame?" Then, offering his arm, he said, "But let me introduce you to them;" he then graciously presented me to each one in the circle, for Mrs. Alexander, who knew them and their mothers well, had seated them, as she playfully remarked to Judge Burnet, "ready for a Highland county banquet," for my dear mother had sent me country hams, turkeys, butter, and even cream, for the occasion, and delicious cake in beautiful variety, made by "Aunt Patsey," the favorite cook of my childhood, who loved me only less than my mother.

Hot coffee and chocolate had been faithfully served all day, and a fresh supply for the evening visitors was just brought in as our honored guest and his young friends arrived. They enjoyed it, and so did we, and now, after more than half a century, can you wonder that I rejoice in the report from our "Washington correspondent"?

Hillsboro, Ohio.

HOW ONE LOCAL W. C. T. U. MADE MONEY.

BY ELIZABETH P. GORDON.

[The Evanston W. C. T. U. recently held a parlor meeting on a new plan, which if followed by each one of our locals would bring tens of thousands to the Temple fund, which is now at the front in all our calculations. Read Bessie Gordon's account and say, "Let us go and do likewise, and that right speedily." Then announce to the public your "Temple Dollar High Tea."—EDS.]

Yes, it is true, that even the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Evanston had a depleted treasury. What a calamity for a union located in Heavenston, as some people style this highly favored community. How could the W. C. T. U. to which Frances Willard belongs suffer such a disaster? But it did, and the executive committee decided to raise the money in a unique manner. Postal cards were sent to each member, asking her to attend an "experience" meeting to be held at the residence of Mrs. C. J. Whiteley and Miss Kate Jackson, and to bring with her a dollar, which she had either earned or saved.

"You must be sure and tell how you did it," was the request that frightened some of the timid ones more than the thought of securing the dollar.

Quite an excitement ensued in the homes of white-ribboners. Mrs. A. had always kept house for her husband and children, but then, she didn't "earn" any money! Mrs. B. had "saved" all her life in order that her boys and girls might be educated in the splendid co-educational Northwestern University in Evanston. How could she "save" another dollar! So the question was agitated for a week, causing much merriment among the husbands, sons and daughters who helped solve the difficult problem.

At three o'clock, January 22, over fifty women assembled, filling the spacious parlors to overflowing, and still they came, until the hall was also full of eager faces. There was a pleasant air of mystery pervading the meeting when we thought of the "experienced" dollars that were to be forthcoming and also of expectation, for Miss Frances Willard and Lady Henry Somerset were present, and every one was hoping to hear from them.

After the devotional services, the president, Mrs. Franc Finch, widow of the lamented John B. Finch, called for the "experiences."

It was a "good time" and you ought to have been there! Amid much laughter and applause the sisters were made to rise, one after another, and with palpitating heart reveal the secrets of their struggles in obtaining the coveted dollar. Could you have done any better than they did? Listen! "I walked to station to save cab fare, carried a package to save express charges, abstained from coffee, and saved a lunch in Chicago." "I covéted a pudding dish that cost me $1.35; bought one for 35 cents instead, and here's the dollar." "I went without confectionery, ice-cream, cosmetics and soda water." "A penny saved is a penny earned. I gave up a fine concert." "I never tried the millinery business but I've promised to make a hat and think it will bring $1, so I pay it in on faith." "I saved on the trimming of my dress." "I feel a sense of humiliation but I just couldn't earn it, and had to ask my husband for it."

"Mine is an honestly earned dollar, but I shall not tell you how I did it." So they went on in regular "round robin" style.

One lady made and sold neckties; another darned a friend's dress; others dispensed with the services of servants, or of extra help around the house. Another peddled molasses candy from door to door.

A little girl, so identified with the work that she is called "Abbie W. C. T. U.," presented a basket containing ten dimes. She managed to say, "Grandma made some candy, and I sold it," and then burst out crying, but was speedily comforted.

A note was received from Helen Hood containing a donation from herself and "Yolande," "for," she wrote, "I am sure that her bright, happy spirit is with us to-day."

A young lady pretty generally known wherever Miss Willard is, said she related an anecdote one day at table, and had been dared by no less a personage than Lady Henry to tell it at the "experience" meeting, and was promised a dollar if she would. Wouldn't you like to have heard it?

A lady whose father was a governor of Kentucky, presented an old continental dollar, which was over one hundred years old, and which her grandfather had given her for a trifling service when a child.

A Massachusetts white-ribboner being called upon, said that being a stranger she had no opportunity to earn her dollar, and was determined to get it out of other people. She secured five autographs each from Miss Willard and Lady Somerset, and as original quotations from these ladies accompanied the autographs, they were no drug on the market, and five were disposed of at Rest Cottage at ten cents apiece. Looking over her audience she saw an eagerness that made her dare to raise the price, and determined that the five remaining cards were to go to the highest bidders.

"How much will you give me for this," she said, holding up a card containing the autograph, "Isabel Somerset," who had added much to the value of the card by writing over her name one of Miss Willard's well-known sayings, "The fight for a clear brain is a fight for Christianity." "Ten," "thirty," "fifty" were the quick responses, and it was "gone" at fifty cents. The last card containing Lady Henry's autograph and Miss Willard's sentiment, "When Christ is king woman shall be no longer courtier," brought $1.25.

Madame Willard, in all the sweet serenity of her eighty-eight years, was sitting by Miss Willard, and was the next to be called upon. She said her daughter was holding the labor of her hands and they would hear from her in regard to it. Miss Willard arose, and holding aloft an attractive basket filled with doughnuts, hidden in the folds of a snowy napkin, said that Lady Somerset had promised her $1 for a minute speech, and she chose to tell them about the doughnuts. "I thought you wouldn't often get a doughnut made by a lady in her eighty-eighth year, so I told my mother you would buy them at five cents apiece. On the old farm we thought they could not be beat." The nickels flew into the lap of the treasurer, and the supply was so quickly exhausted that a messenger was sent to Rest Cottage for another basketful. The ladies declared them too precious to be eaten, and said they should tie white ribbon through them that they might be preserved as souvenirs of a very happy occasion. Much to Madame Willard's delight, the sale netted over $4.

The Brownie Club, a society of boys of whom the oldest is fourteen and the youngest five, sent a note and fourteen dollars to be divided between the W. C. T. U. and the free kindergarten which is under the auspices of the union.

Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert said facetiously that she had thought of writing a poem on spring for THE UNION SIGNAL but was afraid too many were contesting for honors in that line, and so she would hand over a dollar which she had received for sewing in the sleeves of her husband's breakfast jacket.

The secretary of the union told a pathetic story of the amount of mental anxiety the earning of her dollar had cost her, and how it had finally grown to $2.18.

Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, whom your correspondent is told she must mention because she is th World's vice-president for Spain, was visiting at Rest Cottage, and having another engagement sent the following account of the way her dollar was earned, and mention was made of the great self-sacrifice involved inasmuch as she was trying to raise funds for the Isabella College in Spain:

"Teaching Miss Irene Folkler the Spanish language, ten cents.

"Teaching Mrs. May Wright Sewall, president Woan's Council, how to use the seal thereof, five cents.

"Putting on rubbers of a dear friend, ten cents.

"Nickel begged of a friend, five cents.

"Shoveling snow for Madame Willard, ten cents.

" " " Madame Bragdon, ten cents.

"Carrying my own heavy bag to station, ten cents.

"Sale of autographs in Indianapolis with Spanish verses, forty cents.

"Present of one cent, the symbol of a missionary (one sent!) retained for that cause, one cent."

Lady Henry had been listening with keen appreciation to her white-ribbon sisters, and when all had been heard Miss Willard introduced her, saying, that when they were working together on THE UNION SIGNAL that morning, she had promised Lady Henry a dollar if she would make a one-minute speech. The ladies called for the speech and Lady Henry smilingly complied as follows:

"The clear, crisp air as I walked here reminded me of the time when I used to live on one of our most beautiful rivers, and in the clear spring air, when the winter leaves were still brown upon the ground, and the willows wore the purple bloom of coming buds, I used to watch the swans building their nests. One spring I was especially interested to see one old bird pile with stick and leaves and moss a very fortified mound, standing high above the bank, and thereon she set her nest. I asked one of the boatmen who knew the river and every bend and tide, to tell me what this meant. 'There will be floods this summer,' he wisely said, and he was right, for in June the waters swept in a great torrent, overflowing the banks and sweeping all before them, but the nest was high and dry, and the little ones grew and throve, and finally in the warm July days sailed down the waters with the mother bird. Are we not building up this temperance cause to raise our children from the great flood tides of sin and sorrow—and not only for our own do we thus build, but for all the children of men?"

Miss Willard dutifully handed a dollar to the speaker as she took her seat amidst the applause of the audience, and we white-ribboners wished that all speeches could be paid for at the rate of a dollar a minute! Our hostesses would not let us leave, and to our surprise and delight we found that the temperance meeting had evoluted into a "high tea"! It was just the nicest, easiest way to add $70 to the treasury.

Evanston, Jan. 25.

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

II.

I am glad the doctors are having their inning in the temperance reform, and if reports can be trusted as to some recent remedies for drunkenness, we are entering the golden (bi-chloride) age of medicine.

He is a dull man who does not see that civil service reform, the Indian question, divorce, pauper immigration, poverty and malfeasance in office, are all henceforth matter of mere surgery.

Nay, even the all-absorbing question of the church is answered by a patent medicine with a yellow label—price twenty dollars a quart. How shall we reach the masses? Why, with a syringe, to be sure! The plainest leading of the times is toward Bellamyizing the hypodermic syringe and amending the Australian ballot system by providing that every candidate for office shall file with the notice of his candidacy a certificate of having been successfully injected for a space of three weeks as a condition precedent to eligibility.

There ought to be added to the Cabinet a secretary of hypodermics, and every applicant for the civil service ought, immediately subsequent to passing his examination, to be treated by the skin at government expense; and in each House of Congress ought to be a surgeon instead of a chaplain to inject every member when he takes the oath. In case of a congressional funeral the committee ought to be appointed and then properly embalmed before the funeral journey.

All post traders and soldiers in garrison duty, all Indian agents and inmates of soldiers' homes, ought to be similarly protected. In municipal affairs, too, the thing is invaluable. The skin of the average policeman discovers innumerable openings for the little nozzle, and no fire department ought to be without it.

* * * * * *

Hypodermics is in its infancy; it is not too much to hope for a tri-phosphate of sand for weak-kneed Christians, and a sesqui-chloride of standard oil for poverty, and doubtless there will be discovered some alkaline substitute for manliness, or at least some acid-reaction preventive of the more acrid and pestilential vices.

* * * * * *

Two questions may arise in the reader's mind, one ethical, the other constitutional.

First. Would it be right to destroy the custom of the dramseller and at the same time receive his money for license?

Second. Under our bill of rights could we lawfully catch an immigrant or drunkard and doctor him without his consent? In other words, is it practical? Would injection inject? or must we wait for public sentiment to rise to the syringe?

On the "Soo" Road, near Rockford, Minn.

Correspondence.

"OUR PEOPLE DIE WELL."

[The death of Mrs. Sarah Downs, for many years the leader of our forces in New Jersey, made so deep an impression on the Convention, and the account of it is so remarkable, that I venture here to give a letter from her only daughter, written without any thought of publication, but which can never be forgotten by any one, I am sure, who reads it. Personal though it is, this element makes it all the more an interior view, and one that will be most welcome in our white ribbon homes.—ED.]

MY DEAR SISTER:—I want to thank you and the white-ribboners for the sweet words of sympathy that have come to me, and for those spoken all through the Convention, in this sorrow which so bewilders me. That my life must be lived out to the end, I know; but how? is the question that continually recurs. I came home from mother's empty office at Ocean Grove to-day, feeling that the first chapter of my life was closed and sealed. I am now stepping onward into a life utterly new. Everything is changed for me. The world is not the same world. I am thirty-three years old, and death never came to me before. I cannot tell you how it has been cleared of the terrors with which I had always associated that about which we know so little.

To-day I found in mother's desk several letters you had written her. They were filed away among her treasures. I found, also, a copy of your autobiography, carefully marked by her for our little Frances. I promised her on that last night that I would do my very best that her "white ribbon lassie," as she always called my child, should meet her up yonder. I cannot tell you how she loved this little one, and the sweetest memories of all my life are connected with mother and this child who never breathed until mother took her in her strong arms, and with all her might, breathed into the little mouth, and the next instant the cry of life rang through the room. It is to me a sacred memory that her first breath was my mother's. Talking of a name a little later, my husband and I said: "Mother, we are going to call the baby Sarah Downs." She was delighted, but said, "If you are really going to name her for me, I am grateful, but my name is not a very pretty one; would you be willing that I should name her for some one that I love?" We looked at each other and said instantly, "Yes, it shall be as you will." Then, with her face full of brightness, mother said, "Frances Willard," and the name was settled. How many prayers have gone up for the little girl because of her name and her grandmother's love! How my mother beamed when Julia Thomas, the gifted lecturer on health, lifted up the child in the great audience in the school of methods at Ocean Grove, and took her as her text! As soon as the sweet lips could lisp, mother taught her to say, "Lord bless Frances Willard and the great temperance cause." Every night the little prayer is said. Only a few evenings ago, after I had tucked her in her bed, and we had settled ourselves for the evening, I heard the little feet on the stairs, and she came in saying, "Mother, I forgot Frances Willard and the temperance cause;" so the young woman had to go through her prayer again. You see why I feel, in a sacred sense, she is my mother's.

Mrs. Hoffman has been with me for several days and has been indeed a blessing. I send by her a shell that mother picked up from Ocean Beach herself for that wonderful collection of yours, and I am sure you will be careful of it and give it a prominent spot in the cairn.

I think Mrs. Ellis, corresponding secretary of our state society, wrote you quite fully of mother's last hours; but no human tongue can describe that scene. She was ill but three days and died at midnight, November 10. To the last she was perfectly conscious, and sent many messages to those she loved, to her comrades in the work and to her relatives who were not present. No death was ever more triumphant. Only half an hour before she left us, my brother sang, at her request, "My Ain Countrie," all of us joining in the chorus, and she said, "Room for my bairns in heaven," while she waved her hand in sign of victory. She then called the housemaid to her (a Catholic) and said: "Margaret, do not dance so much; you will wish that you had not when you lie here. Remember, nothing pays but to be good," at which the kind-hearted girl, who loved her much, wept not a little.

Noticing her white fingers, she said: "See, my fingers are stiffening, but I am not afraid of death. I did not think that death was like this; it has no terrors whatever;" and then she repeated the words, "O death, where is thy sting?" To Mrs. Ellis, who was perhaps nearer her than any other worker, she said: "Margaret, work harder than ever, and I will meet you when the working day is over." She said, "Give my best love to the women of New Jersey, and tell them to work as hard as though I were here to spur them on." To you she sent the message, "Give Frances my dearest love; tell her to take care of herself and not to do too much." She said, "Prohibition will win, and blessed are they who will bring it to the nation."

Asking the doctor about her faint pulse, he answered: "That is the last effort of the heart to do its work." "Praise the Lord," she said; "will He come soon, doctor? the hours seem leaden until I depart." Much as she loved us, she was more eager than I can tell to get away. Once, when she closed her eyes, I said: "Mother, do you know us?" and in her firm, determined voice she said, "Of course I know you as well as I ever did in my life." Later, she said: "This makes me think of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' Do you remember how they could not whip Uncle Tom to death? It seems as if this body of mine won't die." After this, she turned to me and said: "Daughter, keep abreast of these wonderful days;" and, turning to the doctor she said: "Have I any pulse?" and he answered: "The pulse has ceased, Mrs. Downs; an ordinary woman would have gone an hour ago;" and then she said, with a smile in which we could not but join: "O doctor, I wish I were not quite so extraordinary!" It seemed as if she were going on some delightful journey, and hastening to depart. Indeed, an atmosphere of positive joy pervaded her room. I have tried to tell the children about it, and little Frances dances about the room saying: "O mamma, when will God come for me?" Ever since mother left us, it seems to me that the supreme moment is death; the thing to be longed for and waited for almost impatiently is death. It is now clear to me that if we often caught such glimpses, we could not work on contented as we do.

Mother urged it upon me that the white ribbon work should be the main subject at her funeral. Votes were made then and there for the great cause. At the various memorial services throughout the state, an appeal has been made to Christian voters, for we knew that mother would have it so. Dr. Graw, our Prohibition leader, says that New Jersey has never been so stirred before. Many ministers were present at mother's funeral. Men who differed from her came to see the dear, strong face once more. She looked like a dead queen, for her short illness had wrought no change. It was just mother smiling on us from the casket where she rested. The services in the church were long, and then we took her, just ourselves, Mrs. Ellis and a few of the best beloved, to a delightful spot in the famous Orange mountains, and, all in the glory of the fading sunset, we laid her away. My husband and I staid and covered the grave with white ribbons and snow-white flowers, tokens of the dear, faithful women's love. The moon came out softly, and the stars shone. There was peace, peace everywhere but in my heart, for I left in that grave all that was mortal of my friend upon whom I had always leaned in every circumstance of my life; the loved companion who had always wept and laughed with me. You who knew her in her work only could have very little idea of what my mother really was in her home. As each day passes the burden of living without her seems to grow heavier. Remember me, I pray you. By God's grace I will live my life, and will make it like my mother's. Lovingly yours,

LOUISE DOWNS QUIGLEY.

East Orange, N. J.

CANADA EXCLUDES CERTAIN UNITED STATES PAPERS AS IMPURE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I send the accompanying letter, which I consider of very great importance, that women may see on what grounds papers of the United States were excluded from Canada, and the results of the ruling of the Canadian authorities. If our women will press Mr. Wanamaker hard enough we may, and ought, to have the same sort of a ruling in the United States. There was no action taken at the National Convention, as I so hoped would be taken.

I have sent two sets of my circulars to the various states, with responses from only Maine, Indiana, Iowa and Ohio. This, with Illinois, makes five. If any state were to move on this line, and it could be done so easily, you can see we would, no doubt, obtain the tremendous results the Canadians had. I have read the Kreutzer Sonata, which Mr. Wanamaker ruled out of the United States mails, and it does not compare in filthiness with the "ads" in our own newspapers, nor is it so corrupting, for the intention, though expressed in the beastly fashion of Europe, is clean. The intention of the "ads" is bad, and is meant to be bad, and bad alone. Cannot something be done to stir up united action among our women? I am aware that I speak to women of the states as an outsider, and am only heard by favor. I sent you, some time since, a lot of "ads," and I have faithfully bombarded the attorney-general and Wanamaker with letters and marked newspapers, but with no results. I feel like the gnat that sat on the horn of an ox, of whom Æsop wrote. The following is the reply received to my letter of inquiry:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, CANADA,
OTTAWA, January 14, 1892.

MADAM:—Referring to your communication of the 6th instant in regard to certain publications which were refused transmission and delivery in Canada, I beg to say that the reason it was decided to exclude these publications from the Canadian mails, was that they were observed to contain advertisements of an immoral or indecent tendency, and also advertisements relating to cheating games. In some cases the reading matter, also, was found to be of a decidedly objectionable character.

The attention of the publishers of some of these publications having been called to the matter, they have undertaken to exclude from the copies addressed to Canada, all advertisements of the character objected to, and on this understanding the objection to their transmission and delivery in Canada has been withdrawn.

This department is not aware that copies of the paper of Chicago which you describe as being specially objectionable are sent to Canada, but should copies of this publication be observed they will be carefully examined, and if found to be of the character indicated, instructions will be issued to exclude such paper from the mails.

I am, madam, your obedient servant,

W. D. L. SCHEVER, Sec.

Printers' Ink says that the papers which contain these "ads" surpass in average circulation the papers of any states. One of these has a half million subscribers.

Yours in the hope of better days,

ADA H. KEPLEY, Att'y,
Supt. Imp. Lit for W. C. T. U

Effingham, Ill.

OUR MOTHER IN ISRAEL MAKES MOURNING.

Protests Against Christians Attending the World's Fair.

The W. C. T. U. "Deborah" makes all who read very sad that her great heart and clear brain are no more to find utterance on the platform for her God-given "Whole Humanity" gospel. Read what "Mother Wallace" wrote Miss Willard on January 10, and weep, for there is no equal standard-bearer:

MY DEAR SISTER:—I am well, but fear my public work is over For the first time my dear children enter a protest against my leaving home alone. I do not think it right to risk putting them again through the ordeal of last fall. I must decline serving on any public committee; shall remain at home and try to do in a quiet way all I can for "God and Home and Humanity."

Is it not outrageous that the Commission has consented to the sale of intoxicants at the World's Fair grounds? It seems that appetite and avarice are the gods of this world. Oh, if Christians had the self-denial and courage to say they would have no part or lot in the Fair if God is to be thus dishonored, and the moral sense of this people so disregarded, perhaps it might avail something.

ZERELDA WALLACE.

"A LITTLE BETTER THAN THE W. C. T. U."

The secretary and treasurer of the International Christian Workers' Association sends the following spirited and brotherly letter to our president:

DEAR MISS WILLARD:—I want among other things to tell you that we have done even a little better, I think, than the W. C. T. U., for we have taken women in on our work and committees in perfect equality in every way with men, and the way in which it is done makes it seem just as natural to have a woman taking all sorts of parts in our work as a man. I feel sure that it would have done you good if you could have witnessed a scene in our late convention. I plan it so that whenever we have some great ministerial personage to speak in the evening that we put some woman on just before him for twenty minutes or half an hour. We did this at Hartford in the same way. The thought was to get the people accustomed to associate women as public speakers side by side with the greatest speakers that men can furnish. Mrs. Barney who was going to speak on one of the evenings went to Boston, so in her place we substituted two young women from Toronto in Bible readings. It was wonderful the way they held the whole convention, because it was one of the strongest and most cultured that could be gotten together in the city of Washington. I remember noticing Dr. Hamlin, the pastor of the President, sitting in the front seat, and it seemed to me that he did not take his eyes off those young women during the entire time they were speaking. We had fraternal greetings from the W. C. T. U. at our Washington convention, but you women did so much talking at Tremont Temple that the delegate we appointed to give you fraternal greeting did not get a chance to have two minutes. Of course we understand all about it and it was all right. I am becoming more and more interested in the W C. T. U. for I find in these conventions that there is no body of associated Christian workers who respond more readily to our invitations in the sending of delegates and taking interest than the W. C. T. U. In our new building in New Haven, which we are trying to get for the headquarters of our Association, I expect to make arrangements so that our W. C. T. U. in New Haven can have permanent rooms there, just as long as they wish to occupy them. Fraternally,

JNO. C. COLLINS.

A CORRECTION.

DEAR SIGNAL:—It is seldom that you make a mistake, and yet your last week's issue did our Queen City a serious wrong, by the announcement that Toronto "decided Sunday street cars to be a necessity by a majority of nearly seven thousand votes." The reverse of this statement is the fact of the case. Toronto vetoed Sunday street cars by seven thousand majority. Our municipal elections were a complete success. Three ladies were elected school trustees; this is the first time that ladies have been eligible to this office. Free school books was carried by a good majority.

The temperance people, and especially the W. C. T. U., are jubilant over the return of a first-class temperance man for mayor of the city. Ex-alderman Fleming, author of the famous by-law which reduced the number of licenses lower than they had ever been before, is now at the head of the council board; we are expecting great things from his administration. He is the working-man's friend and the city benefactor.

LETITIA YOUMANS.

President's Column.

A WOMAN FOR PRESIDENT.

Not long ago an enterprising young newspaper "syndicate" man sent me several questions on the propriety of a woman for President. The following reply was forwarded to him, and is here reproduced for what it may be worth, but especially to point the moral of an interesting note from Lawyer John Hooker, husband of "Queen Isabella" Beecher Hooker, and one of the ablest lawyers in the land:

To an Inquiring Young Syndicater:

You ask me: "Should we have a woman President?" I think so, certainly, because I believe that any government administered wholly by men is, and must be, in the nature of things, only half a government. The ideal would be the joint rule of the best man and woman in the nation. I always liked that place in the rhyme by which I learned the list of the kings of England where it says,

"Then good William and Mary together came on."

A home in which the father is a widower, and brings up the children all by himself, lacks some of the best elements for the development of all that is noblest and most harmonious in those children. The same is true when a woman has the entire care of her little ones. To my mind, this principle does not change when we carry our thought out to the wide circumference of the household called government. I cannot see why any one should ask at this time of day, in the calendar of the centuries, whether or not a woman would have the ability, judicial and executive, to rule the country. It is a matter of record that the only periods in English history that are specially signalized by beautiful names are the Elizabethan age and the Victorian age. No king of England, since the conquest, has ever been called the great, but the great Elizabeth has been celebrated in picture, song and story for hundreds of years, and everybody knows the phrase, "The good Queen Anne whom God defended." It is well nigh universally admitted that queens rule better than kings. Although Dom Pedro was an almost matchless monarch, it was his daughter acting as regent who freed the slaves in Brazil. It is the regent queen of Spain under whom that unhappy peninsula is enjoying more peace and prosperity than it has known for generations. The Queen of Madagascar is famed for her charities and firm yet equitable and just rule. The queen of the Hawaiian Islands is, in character and conduct, a strong antithesis to her predecessor, the corrupt Kalakaua. Examples might be multiplied, but these ought to suffice.

We have had twenty-three men presidents already, and it seems to me eminently fitting that a woman should now be called to the position. As you ask me to suggest a candidate, I take pleasure in naming Mary A. Livermore, of Massachusetts. "There she stands," and I am confident that she would govern this country as well as George Washington ever did, or "any other man." As you are aware, some trifling constitutional difficulties are in the way, but I am speaking from the high plane of that which ought to be, and will close my communication by quoting from a great American author, Harriet Beecher Stowe, I think it was, who said: "Whatever ought to be done, can be done."

Yours for a government in which man and woman shall bear equal sway, and in which all brains shall be clear and all hearts kind.

***

A good book is by that very charming kindergartner, Kate Douglass Wiggin, and is entitled "Timothy's Quest." It is a story that would warm up the heart coldest toward the little ones. The author's ingenuity in making generous Tim and Lady Gay stand out to view along with their little doggie named Rags, is a true stroke of genius. Anybody who is opposed to our department for finding homes for homeless children, and children for childless homes, would be converted by this delightful, funny booklet. If Dickens had written it, there would be a great setting forth of its high merits from the pens of literary critics. Send a dollar to Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston, to pass the book around in the local union.

***

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees, which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES.	RESIDENCES.

Good friends, please cut this out, get signatures and send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, Ohio.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

There is a constant and increasing demand for the Temple Trust Bonds. Many will wish, when too late, that they had invested. We expect by the first of May every bond will be sold. It is a rare opportunity to get a bond which is perfectly safe and at the same time will pay six per cent dividend. Then our friends must remember that every $100 or $500 bond sold gives us that much more stock in the Temple. For full particulars in regard to the Temple Trust Bonds address our financial agent, Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle St., Chicago.

***

The Temple is considered so much one of Chicago's notable sights, that one of our foremost jewelers has had a W. C. T. U. souvenir spoon made with our stately, gothic Temple engraved upon it. This spoon found a very ready sale. Mrs. F. H. Rastall, the wide-awake business manager of the W. T. P. A., did not propose that an outside firm should reap a rich harvest from that which she rightly felt belonged to our W. C. T. U. interest. So a few weeks before Christmas, she added to her already beautiful collection of W. T. P. A souvenir spoons, a Temple spoon, which artistically is far handsomer than the one designed by the jewelry firm. It found such a ready sale at Christmas, that the manufacturer could not supply the demand fast enough. There could hardly be a gift presented to a white-ribboner that would be valued more, than one of these beautiful Temple spoons.

***

We promised last week that in our next issue we would try and show that it was for the interest of each state that every union within its border of thirty members or over should raise $100 for the Temple during the next year. If each state will carry out this proposition we can easily own by May, 1893, every dollar of the $600,000 capital stock. Would any union be harmed by this or its work crippled? We answer, no; but on the contrary it would be strengthened and a great host of people informed in regard to our temperance work who knew next to nothing before in regard to it. How could this be brought about? may be asked. In this way: Thirty mite-boxes are given out to thirty members of a union; we will suppose that these women are not able to give anything hardly, themselves. They place the mite-box on their sitting-room table with some descriptive cards beside it. As neighbors drop in to call in the afternoon and evening, attention is called to the box and the story of the wonderful Temple (the most beautiful building of the kind in America) is told, and the object for which it is built is explained. As the box is passed to the interested and sympathetic neighbor he or she without doubt will gladly drop in a nickel or a dime to help the hostess secure her proportion ($3.65) towards the erection of a building which means so much for the uplift of humanity; and what is more, they go away with increased respect for an organization which is attempting to do such a great work. These same parties when called upon afterwards to help the local work in their own town, will be glad to do so because of the interest already awakened, and by this same increased interest, a large number of women might be secured for membership in the union.

People like to be counted in an undertaking when there is a visible sign of success. The following instances will show "where there is a will there is a way" to fill a mite-box. Mrs. Bella L. Grover, Victoria, Texas, sends $4.25. She writes: "It is not my own penny-a-day contribution but I have asked different friends to contribute to the cause as I am an invalid confined to bed all the time." Mrs. John Drake, Corning, N. Y., sends $6. She writes: "Five dollars of this is from a niece. I gave her a mite-box a year ago. She was anxious to help the Temple, so she put it in her store and got an addition to her penny a day. It is little, but all she can do, and that is all the dear Lord requires of us." O. Vanderhof, Maryville, Mo., sends $10.51, the contents of his mite-box for a year. (We wish we knew how he filled it.) We will have something more to say next week in regard to the advantage the local and state W. C. T. U. will reap from speedily coming to the aid of the National in the erection of the Temple.

***

A greatly increased interest in the erection of our National Headquarters is shown by the increase in $100 pledges we are receiving from unions. The Layman Chapel W. C. T. U., Lincoln, Ill., send another $20 on their $100 pledge. Mrs. J. Beaton, Rockford, Ill., sends $10 on the $100 pledged by the Social Temple of that place. Mrs. M. L. Alden sends $55 from the Lucy Hayes union of Mount Vernon, Ia., towards their pledge. Mrs. Mary Johnson, Osage, Ia., sends $50 from the union. their first payment on a pledge of $100. Mrs. Flora B. Blodgett sends $26.25, the proceeds of a mite-box social to be applied on a $100 pledge made by the Central Union of Tacoma, Washington. Mrs. L. S. Johnson, Cortland, N. Y., sends $15 from the union as a first payment on a pledge of $100. Mrs. C. E. Allen sends $17.50 on a $100 pledge, made by the Harrisonville, Mo., W. C. T. U. Mrs. J. K. Sawyer sends $10 on $100 pledged by the Wichita, Kas., union. Mrs. Mary J. Dygert sends $30 from mite-box sociable, to apply on a $100 which the Ann Arbor, Mich., W. C. T. U. have undertaken to raise for the Temple. Mrs. R. Taylor, Hydesville, Humboldt county, Cal., sends $31 as a first installment on a $100 pledge by the county W. C. T. U. She writes: "We are sorry that this far-away county has not been heard of before; we are much interested in the beautiful Temple, and hope it may soon be completed and paid for." Mrs. Maria Andrus sends $38.80 from Leonard, No. Dakota, W. C. T. U. This completes their pledge of $100.

***

All orders for silver models of the Temple should be sent to Mrs. Carse.

149 Ashland Boulevard

Our Children.

A SERMON FOR BOYS.

BY FLORENCE A. JONES.

You'll never discover new lands, my boys,
If you always follow the beaten track;
You'll never stand firm on the mountain height
If you're always halting and gazing back.
Strike out for yourself, but be sure the path
Is not girt with the noxious weeds of sin,
That no sharp-edged rocks of some deadly vice
Or pitfalls of folly be found therein.

Choose the path of honor and virtue, boys,
And let no one tempt you to swerve aside;
Its guide-boards—temperance, purity, truth—
Who follows their guidance few dangers betide.
There may not be wealth and fame at the end,
But wealth and fame do not constitute bliss;
A pure, perfect manhood and noble life,
There's nothing worth striving for, boys, but this.

Hampton, Ia.

PART OF A BOY.

BY ESTELLE THOMSON.

When Peter opened his eyes that first time from the hospital cot, his glance rested upon the solemn faces of three small boys ranged against the opposite wall. Beside the cot a young woman in a nurse's cap regarded him, also solemnly.

Then suddenly, at a nod from the young woman, "Hullo!" wavered across in a fine whisper from one of the solemn boys to the small object on the bed. And with that whisper Peter gave an almost imperceptible smile and murmured back, "Hullo, Bob!"

. . . . . .

"How did he look, Bob?" urged one ragged urchin of another, perched on a dry-goods box, with feet dangling. "Much cut up?"

"Cut up? I sh'd say so. Nearly cut to pieces. An' what's part of a boy good for when it's more than a whole one can do to make a livin'?" Here Bob thrust a paw down into his pocket, bringing up a scant handful of pennies and a nickel in his hold. "I'd just commenced to sell when that runaway come tearin' along that knocked Peter over; an' goodness knows where the rest of the papers went to. Not much left when I square up to-night, unless I find that bundle. But see here, Jock! we've got to do somethin'."

"That's so," assented Jocko, wriggling his toes by dint of much exertion into a crack. "But what?"

"Spruce up an' rush around an' get into business, to take care of that little un," with a triumphant ring.

"'Who's his folks?' says the man at the door, when they let him in an' me a-followin'. They thought he was dead, he was that white. 'Who's his folks? They ort to be sent for now if ever,' says he. 'Yes, sir; they're me an' Jocko,' says I; 'an' Jocko couldn't come, 'cause he's on another beat an' didn't know he was goin' to be killed; an' so I brought two more of our perfessun,' says I; 'can we come in?' 'Not now,' says he; 'but if we find he's goin' to open his eyes you can come, an' stan' very quiet, an' then he'll see you first an' not be scared.' An' so we stood; an' he did open his eyes an' wa'n't a mite scared. An' then Miss Dill nodded to me to speak to him, an' I says 'Hullo!' An' as quick as a flash he says 'Hullo!' back. An' then we all got out as fast as feet could carry us, before he sh'd know his own feet was off."

"Both of 'em?"

"Both of 'em. An' Pete, the cutest little chap on the beat. Whew! the wind makes my eyes water, settin' in that draught. I'll tell you what, Jocko! I—I ain't a-goin' to—want any supper to-night. I ain't a mite hungry. Don't wait for me."

Jocko stopped, with his lips ready for "Evenin' papers!" to exclaim: "Now, Bob, you ain't a-goin' to save that way! I know why you ain't hungry. I know where your supper pennies are goin'. All right; Jocko ain't hungry, either. Two suppers 'll save some, an' eatin' ain't much 'count when you've got two feet fastened on safe an' sound, without any wooden fixin's. I say, Bob, how much'll it take to—to buy—wooden legs for that little fellow? Nice, tip-top ones, that he can hop 'round on? Wooden legs carries lots o' folks, don't they?"

"Oh, yes; wooden legs is swell—for folks as can 'ford 'em." Bob's assured air bore swift conviction to Jocko's anxious heart that wooden legs were a boon beside which even flesh and blood might lack in glory. "Wooden legs is tough, for one thing, an' they don't puff up with too much runnin' when your beat's a long one, an' they ain't never laid by with rheumatiz when your shoes leak for want o' patches; an' they don't hurt you with crampin' when your bed's uncomfortable, from the dry-goods box bein' too short. An', for that matter, you've only to unbuckle 'em if your bunk's small, an' there you be, twice as easy 's if you was lyin' double. Oh, yes, wooden legs is swell."

Nurse Dill soon began to be surprised at the missives that poured in for the afflicted Peter. They were uniform in size; penciled with evident care but great irregularity on the blank side of flaring "vendue" posters; and were backed in a hand that, although it sorely puzzled the postman upon his first perusal of this extremely unique chirography, never inspired a doubt thereafter as to the destination desired.

"Mister Peter MacDouglis, (No legs), Hospittle, Market Square, City."

Such was the definite inscription they severally bore, while the contents were of an equally original character and ran as follows, with varying dates covering a period of many months.

"DEAR PETER:—Jock an me are goin out to look for legs tomorrer."

"DEAR PETER:—Legs is high an awful skarse. Mebbe weel chairs is better."

"DEAR PETER:—Weel chairs is mosely nice an plenty. One runs itself in smooth places. We found a man who has one with cuchins on it an yellow weels. It is springy an sets esey. Its prize isent bad, an the man will cum down sum. We told him we was in the newspaper perfessun an he ses he will make it sassifactory."

"DEAR PETER:—The man has made the prize sassifactory. Jock an me can pay for it soon, bizziness is mosely so rushin, an then he will send it round to look at till you get strong enuf to set in it. When you can run the weels we will cum up an see you go by."

"DEAR PETER:—The weel chair is all pade an the man has marked it an will send it over. Jock an me got your note sain you wantid to go into bizziness. We are sorry you can't be in our perfessun, but legs is nessary. Weels wudent do. We are seein about it, but Jock an me wanted to sport you. We cud do it esey, now the chair is pade."

"DEAR PETER:—We got your note. I spose we shud feel as you do about bein sported, but Jock an me wantid to do it. You are so small, and Jock an me like to work, an have got four legs, an you nun. Jock an me havent eny fambly ether, sence Jock's mother dide, but we will look a place that will be esey."

"DEAR PETER:—Jock an me got your note an laffed about your weelin so spry. The doctor ses you are a smart little un."

"DEAR PETER:—We got your note an Jock an me went rite off to see about it. A man has an offis chepe an' will rent it to us, an Jock an me will sine a paper to pay for it reggilar till you are able. It is a pretty good offis with sum windows an shelves an a cubbord an a bench, an he will put in other things. We told him you wantid to have it to help the boys, an that you wud make it plesant and clene for them to cum, an you wud put sum green stuff in the windows as sloons have—only this wud not be a sloon, but a nice respectible place for enybody to spend thare evenins. We told him about your legs an your weel chair, an how you sed you cud make a home for boys who dident have eny home or fokes. We told him Jock an me dident have eny, an wantid sum place to go, an we new others did. We told him we was lonesome an cole sumtimes, an looked in at the sloon windows an herd playin an singin and saw lites, till we mose wantid to go in, but we wudent. We new it wasent rite, an we tride hard to do rite, but got discurriged offen, it was so lonesum bein alone. We told him how we had dopted you, an brot you up when you lost your fambly till your legs was gone, an he almost cride and sed you was a brave little fellow. His name is Mister Carpenter. We will weel you up to see the offis tomorrer."

"DEAR PETER:—Mister Carpenter ses he will send his carriage for you, so be reddy. He ses he saw a man go into a sloon last night who dident look like that kind of a man at all, he was so young an clene an spry. An he thot of what you had wantid to do, an waitid for him, an the young man sed he went becos it seemed warm an brite an he had no frens an was homesick. He had a little munny, but when he went into a hotel it was big an strange and no one spoke or cared. An when he went into the sloon they was fiddlin an singin, an sum wun clapt him on the shoulder an sed they was glad to see him an hoped he wud stay, an it cheered him up to here voices spekein kind. He sed he didn't mene at first to go, but his feet was drawed in when he saw the lites. Mister Carpenter ses he has thot about it a good dele, an he wants to see the boy without eny munny or legs who has made a plan that he, with plenty of strength an a pocketbook full, never dreamed of. He ses you shall have the offis, an if the skeme dosent work into a big thing sum day, with readin rooms an parlors an lots of offises an bizziness, his name isent Carpenter."

And now it was Miss Dill who began to be the recipient of Bob's most extravagantly-colored and extraordinarily composed notes.

"DEAR MISS DILL:—You ort to see the offis. It has red on the shelves an up to the cubbord an books on the tables, an lots of little green trees with roots in the windows, an vines in bottles, an a fire an brite lites, an fokes cum an go an it seems jolly. It has a sine in big letters outside. It ses DROP IN. Mister Carpenter ses it is the Drop In Club. The boys drop in reggilarly, an plenty of other fokes drop in too, an it is a grand success. You ort to see Peter. Mr. Carpenter takes him home with him in his carrige every nite, an he etes good an slepes in a bed, an his cheeks are gettin fat an rosy as when Jock an me first dopted him. He does fit into that chair beautiful. You would hardly know he hadent eny legs. An he spekes so brite to everybody that he makes frens."

"DEAR MISS DILL:—Mr. Carpenter ses he heres everywhere about the Drop In Club. Evry nite fokes cum in an laff an talk, an some sing an play. Mr. Carpenter had to put a piano in, it is such a success. I tell you it sounds fine."

"DEAR MISS DILL:—The boys have filled up Peter's little bank so fast that Mr. Carpenter has had to put in a new one. This is bigger. The boys and everybody that want to, pay a few pennies to come in, and then they can hear the piano and the singin and play games. The bank gets full fast. You ort to see Peter's eyes. I gess he has forgotten about his legs."

"DEAR MISS DILL:—Last nite a man came in who was a stranger, and was going out agen. He thot it was a saloon. But Peter sets in his wheel chair by the door, and he holds out his hand to the fokes who come, and spekes in such a way that the man cudent go at once. He lookt surprised, and he herd the piano and fokes talking all around, and he says—This isent a saloon, then? No sir, says Peter, its a club. A club for all who havent any home. Have you a home? The man said no, and then he changed quick and said yes, but it wasent here. And little boys? says Peter. Yes, and little boys, says the man. A little boy just about like you. And has he legs? says Peter. And then he just shode the man how he hadent any legs, and the man drawed up his chair and sat down and patted Peter's head and kept hold of his hand, and they talked and talked most of the evening. And when he went away he dropt a piece of gold into the bank and told Peter it had been the best lesson he had ever learned. He told him he had been spending lots of munny in saloons, just becos he got into a way of going for the company; and there was his fambly away off in another city waiting for him to send for them to come. And all the while he was drinking the munny up. He told Peter he wud come every nite till he sent for his fambly, and then he wud bring his little boy to join the club, and he promised he wud never go into eny saloon agen. He said they was dangirrus places, and if you went wunce you wud go and keep going, and bimeby you cudent stop if you tride."

"You ought to have seen Mr. Carpenter when that man had gone. He almost cried, and he rapped Peter rite up in a blanket and carried him out to the carrige in his own arms."

"DEAR MISS DILL:—Mr. Carpenter had to put in another bank to-day; the old one was too small. A great many ladies bring flowers, and one evening some one makes coffy. Jock and I can hardly wait for the time to go to the club, and all the boys feel the same. I was glad of your letter, and to know that you think I am learning to spell and to write better. I study hard. Peter teaches me as much as he can; Peter is so bright, and he studies, too, and Mr. Carpenter says he will have him go away to school soon and learn to help him in his busziness. He says Peter shall go to collige, and that he can make his mark in the world esey. Peter wants to learn, but he dreds to leave us boys and the club."

"DEAR MISS DILL:—It has been one year since Peter's club was started. You ought to see what it has grown to. It has three rooms now, and is crowded almost every night. Its windows are brighter than ever, and it seems to look warmer and pleasanter every week. We have plenty of flowers and music all the time, and sometimes coffee and chockolet, and pretty often a concert and the band. Not one of the boys who belongs here has ever gone into a saloon since our club started. Isn't that worth working for?

"The man I once wrote you about has brought his family, and he and his boys are real useful. He treats Peter as if he was his brother, and any one can see from the way he watches him how he loves him. He brought his wife once, and told her it was Peter who saved him. She only said, 'God bless you, dear boy!' But her voice sounded like crying.

"When the year was up Mr. Carpenter gave a supper. I can't begin to tell you how jolly it was. Mr. Carpenter made what Jocko calls a ringing speech, and he nearly took everybody off their feet when he praised Peter's idea. For he says it was Peter who thought of the matter, no odds how much others may have helped in other ways. He says his money, and the ladies' music and flowers, and some folk's time, would never have done any good for this club if somebody had not started the club first; and that somebody was Peter. Then how they cheered! And poor Peter would have got out of the room if he could, but he couldn't—for oh, Miss Dill, Peter has got legs! But they were brand new ones, and he didn't dare to hardly stir for fear they would wabble and he should fall. We had to lauf, to see how scared he looked; but that was only the first night, and now he is used to them and walks about quite well. He goes slow yet, and he limps some; but as he doesn't always limp on the same leg Mr. Carpenter says he will come out right in time.

"Mr. Carpenter has decided to send Peter away; he is going to school and then to college. Peter is glad, and sorry too.

"And what do you think, Miss Dill? Peter and Mr. Carpenter and all the boys want me to go into the club and take Peter's place! I know I have learned a good deal the past year, but my 'good deal' is so very little compared with what most boys as old as I know. There is only one reason why I am willing to make the attempt—it is this: if part of a boy can do what Peter has done, what is it not possible for the whole of a boy to do if he tries?"

San Diego, Cal.

The Household.

OUR COMPENSATIONS.

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

For each supremest agony
Thou shalt a joy receive,
So full, so sweet, so masterful
As to all loss retrieve.

For every lonely moment
A round of blessed years,
Filled with that rare companionship
That leaves no room for tears.

For all this bitter mourning,
Such oil of gladness flows
From Christ's deep consolations,
That sweet become our woes.

Blest aught that makes an errand
For us unto our God;
That drives us into proving,
The comforts of His rod.

Sanitarium, Clifton Springs, N. Y.

A SALOON INCIDENT.

BY ALWIN JOVENIL.

There was the sound of the chink, chink of glasses, ribald laughter and cursing, while the atmosphere was thick with the fumes of tobacco and alcohol. The hour was near midnight and the eyes of the men sitting around the little tables drinking and playing cards were heavy and bloodshot. The round, red face of the bar-tender was flushed with beer and exertion; for his patrons were drinking heavy and often. Presently there was a lull in the business and the bar-keeper improved the opportunity by leaning forward and resting both elbows upon the counter in front of him.

For some time a shabbily dressed old man, standing near the door and leaning against the soiled wall of the room, had been watching the dealing out of the liquor with feverish, bloodshot eyes. His face was pale and thin almost to emaciation and his gray hair and beard were long and unkempt. The threadbare, black coat, which clung loosely about his attenuated frame, was buttoned up tightly around his throat and down his breast. As he stood there his long, thin hands would clasp and unclasp themselves nervously, while every now and then a tremor would pass over his frame. When the bar-keeper leaned his fat arms upon the counter the old man gave a quick, nervous glance around the room and walking up to him asked, in a husky voice, for a glass of whisky.

The bar-tender looked at him contemptuously for a moment and then inquired: "Have you got the chink?"

"Certainly, certainly; of course I have. I'm no deadbeat," replied the old man.

The saloon-keeper handed him a glass of the fiery beverage and he drank it down at a swallow.

As he put the empty glass down upon the counter he turned to the man behind the bar and said: "Say, old fellow, I have poured a large fortune, a beautiful home and a loved wife and child into your till and you have poured ruination down my throat; so I guess you can stand this one drink, for I have not got a cent left in the world," and he turned to go.

"Not so fast," cried the enraged saloon-keeper, as he sprang over the bar and seized him by the collar. "You drunken old brute, pay for that glass of whisky or I'll kick your old carcass into the gutter."

The old man's voice trembled as he replied: "Don't, don't, old friend. For you I have lost fortune, home, wife and baby; surely you will not begrudge me a single glass of whisky? I had to have it or I would have died."

"Out upon you, you sniveling old hypocrite," yelled the saloon-keeper with an oath, emphasizing his command with a brutal kick and a violent jerk on the coat collar.

The collar gave way, and the greedy eyes saw a thin gold chain to which was fastened a small gold locket, hanging around the bare, wrinkled neck.

"Ha, ha! you old miser," laughed the brute, as he tore the chain violently from off the old man's neck. "I'll keep this little trinket till you pay for the whisky."

For a moment the old man stood as if dazed, and then, clutching wildly with both hands at his throat, in a vain search for the locket, cried out: "For God's sake give me back my locket. Give me back my locket. Don't open it," he yelled, as the saloon-keeper began to examine the locket. "Give it to me! For the love of heaven give it to me."

"You blubbering old idiot," laughed the saloon-keeper, "who'd have thought you'd have a sweetheart at your time of life. Come, boys, let us see what kind of a looking gal she is."

Then the lookers-on saw a strange sight. The gray-headed old man flung himself on his knees before the brutal saloon-keeper, and while the tears ran down his hollow cheeks, begged and implored him to give him back the locket.

But the saloon-keeper only laughed and said: "Must be a pretty girl to make all that fuss over. I wouldn't miss seeing her picture now to save my soul from purgatory." As he said this he opened the locket; a long curl of beautiful golden hair fell out and catching on his fingers twined itself around them like a thing of life. "Saints and angels!" he yelled, as he hurled the locket, hair and all upon the floor, and began to stamp upon them.

Like a tigress fighting for her young, the old man sprang to the rescue of the golden curl. A short but terrible struggle ensued, and then there was a gleam of glittering steel, a thud, and the gray head fell backward to the floor, while the red blood spurted up into the face of the murderer.

Strong hands seized the saloon-keeper; but the old man was beyond help.

"Oh, my darling, my darling!" he murmured, as his life blood ebbed away, "who would have thought, when you put your soft, white arms around my neck to clasp that locket, kissing me as you did so, and saying in your sweet baby voice, 'Papa, I love 'oo, I love 'oo so. Won't 'oo tiss me 'cause I gives 'oo such a sweet birfday's present?'—who would have thought that I should die a drunkard's death, stabbed in a drunken quarrel over a lock of my dead baby's golden hair? Forgive me! Oh, forgive me! my murdered wife and child!" And then raising himself on one elbow, he almost shrieked, while his face took on a look of more than mortal anguish: "May God curse and blast whisky and all who deal in it, as whisky has cursed and blasted me and mine!"—and he fell back a corpse.

AFTER-CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS.

BY MARY E. MC DOWELL,
Superintendent of National Kindergarten Department.

The normal mind acts logically, and your child's mind, if undisturbed, works regularly, making its own connections and looking for cause and effect everywhere. We older children, through bad education and loose manner of thinking, often lose this logical habit of the mind, and then conclude that children are jumping the track of reason as often as we.

But this is not so, for the questioning child is ever seeking for the cause and connection of things, while often we are surprised by the inquiries that come from his deepest nature, those soul questionings that must have soul answers.

How shall we meet these holy interrogations? We can not always give a reason in words for the hopes of our own souls—then how shall we help these children? I hardly dare answer—for I can only give experimental suggestions that each must adapt to the child, after a careful examination of his special needs. One's ability to meet these questions will depend much upon the manner in which the child's lighter moods have been responded to.

Friedrich Froebel tells of one of his earliest recollections, that the first day at school he heard recited in a quiet, earnest manner, and thus repeated every day, "Seek first the kingdom of God;" he adds, "this was to me a time when the germs of my life unfolded, in which the heart-crisis occurred; it was the first awakening of my inner life." He also tells of hearing at another time the hymn, "It costeth much to be a Christ," and it so stirred his heart that throughout his life it was a motive power to unselfish action. Can it be that these playful little beings about us are having their heart-crises, and we, having neglected to interpret the inner life of the child, have failed to keep up a sympathetic confidence between us, and thus these prophetic moments are beyond our grasp?

The child-mind has been impressed lately with the birthday of Jesus Christ; it, if presented simply, seemed a marvelous story, and to every healthy-minded child, this baby sent from heaven was a perfect child; he was loved at once, as they gazed on the picture with the light from the baby face reflected in the faces of all who looked on; "Look at his dear little hands, he wants to clap them," said one child; and another exclaimed, "See the shepherd bringing the lamb." Presentiment of the service due this heavenly child.

Now what shall we do—leave the Christ as baby and when Easter comes, three months after, have the child mind try to recall the Christmas story and then make his connections?

Why not lead the children to know the Christ as baby, the Christ as child, and the Christ as man—the Saviour? If Christmas has made a right impression on the child's mind he will ask for more of the story of this wonderful baby's life—"who were His father and mother—where did He live—did He grow like our baby—did He cry and coo, etc.?"

Now is the time gradually, by means of pictures, the best we can get, to appeal to the eye first, till the imagination carries to the heart an inspired impression which will give to childhood an ideal child—Jesus; for if He becomes their ideal child He will grow into their ideal man—and at last to their ideal example, the Saviour of the world.

Children believe with the heart, therefore, "theirs is the kingdom of heaven," and if we undertake to thrust them to the reasoning plane in religious teachings, we are rudely taking them from that highest place where Christ Himself placed them.

By means of the photographs of the best pictures, and the reverent use of the best hymns, such as, "In another land and clime," and "Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,"—two hymns from a collection of songs for children that every mother should have—wisely tell the story of Christ's child life, making constant connections between His life and your child's; always remembering "He was tempted in all points, yet without sin." Draw or the New Testament legends of the early church, and on your own imagination, as the clergy do constantly or many helpful lessons would never be given.

Next week, if possible, I shall endeavor to give a list of unmounted photographs, songs and stories that will help in this effort to bring the Saviour to the childish capacity, and place, historically, the life of Christ in the mind of the child.

(To be Continued.)

THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth.—Ps. 72. 8.

The Standard of Chicago respecting the January 3, School-school lesson, sowed on the winds the following discriminating, hopeful and fervent suggestions:

"The lion shall eat straw like the ox. A question of diet, is it? Very well. That is the reason the lamb and the kid shall be safe; it is the reason why 'a little child shall feed them.' The lion is not eating lambs, nor children; he is eating straw. You say that will take a miracle, natural appetites are not easily changed. No, the carnal and carnivorous mind is at enmity with all that is good, it is not easily changed. But God can change it, and it is to God we are looking here. A miracle, and nothing short of a miracle will suffice us. This kind goeth not out save by prayer and fasting. There are those that say to the reformer, 'Why, this is a matter of men's appetites and propensities. You cannot alter their diets.' Well, you see, you are talking about one sort of a lion and we about another. Ours, in the blessed scheme of redemption, is a lion that shall eat straw like an ox, not a 'man-eater.'

"They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain. It is the high aim that the noble company of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union set before them, and that they have this year in Boston given larger, grander expression to than ever. God bless them for their faith; God gird them for their endeavor! A world at peace, a tender earth that shall not hurt the child or any weak one that rests his helplessness upon it—it is a gracious outlook. I want the joy of such a vision myself. I want more and more to hate evil, and love mercy, to cry down war and cry up peace. Our Quaker friend is right about it. Lord Wolseley in his manual of war suggests that to identify a spy or scout a leaf be torn out of his pocket Testament. Says this peace-loving brother of ours, 'Suppose you tear out the Sermon on the Mount, or the First Epistle of John, that speaks of love rather than revenge.'

"'The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord.' Now let me have done with it, that narrow, dismal, pessimistic spirit that has despaired of any good here on earth, and that has said, all goes wrong. Not so, it is a libel upon God's providence. All is not going wrong, all is reaching toward ultimate glory. And this old earth shall be made to praise Him who created it. It shall be one day as full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. Lord, keep us all in the hoping spirit. May the church never despair! While Christ sits 'henceforth expecting,' may His servants 'hope all things.' A discouraged church accomplishes little; a hopeful church much. Pentecostal helping comes to Pentecostal hoping.

"His rest shall be glorious. 'Alabama, here is rest,' said the red man, thrusting his worn weapon into the earth. But the shores of the Mississippi were again filled with alien war cries, and he was driven on. His rest was empty and vain. Here is rest, we say, and we betake ourselves to some retired nook, but pain and anxiety are soon lodging with us. We fly to the busy city. Here is rest, we say, and we immerse ourselves in business or society. Alas, there is no respite here. Our rest is wretchedness. Oh, to find a rest that shall satisfy, a rest that shall be glorious, that shall itself be glory! Yes, and here is the secret of our unrest, we have been seeking it in something short of glory, God's blessedness. Augustine was right: 'We are meant for Thee, and our souls are restless till they rest in Thee.'"

UNION SIGNAL
WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH,
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

DEPARTMENT OF BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.
ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

President—MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, 149 Ashland Boulvd., Chicago.
Treasurer—MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Elmhurst, Ill.
Secretary—MARY ALLEN WEST, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MISS ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
MRS IRA LEWIS, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Stroudwater, Me.
MRS. A. H. CHRISTENSEN, Beaufort, S. C.
MRS. L. D. CARHART, Marion, Iowa.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec,—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.

For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.—Gal. 6: 2.

HOUSEHOLD LABOR.

There is no human affair more closely interwoven with the work of the white ribbon army than the labor of women, especially the household labor of women, yet there is scarcely a subject touching home interests with which women have occupied themselves to so little effect. Thus, while home-makers justly lament the dearth of skilled household labor, it is precisely our intelligent and influential women who have for years past systematically diminished the supply of such labor, both by what they have done and by what they have left undone.

First, as to the sins of omission. There seems to be, for example, in all Chicago not one school or class in which a woman can obtain systematic training in skilled household labor. Sewing is only beginning to be taught in the public schools. Cooking has not yet been introduced into them, and the day is far distant when we may look for classes in the rational care of little children. The kitchengarden work, which is excellent as far as it goes, is unavailing for the mass of incompetence already grown, and is limited at best to a "vanishing minority" of the proletarian children of the great cities. And Chicago differs in degree only from the Eastern cities. In kind its sins of omission are the same.

Next, as to our sins of commission. While bemoaning the chaos which reigns in the domain of household labor, how efficiently have we been supplying young girls for the office, store and factory! In every great city we maintain evening classes for women and girls in stenography, type-writing, bookkeeping, photography, industrial drawing, and any other branch desired, provided only that it cannot be utilized in the home. We go farther and seek situations for the young girls whom we have fitted for these occupations, maintain for them homes for self-supporting women, vacation colonies, a monthly journal, and social clubs. Thus do we announce to the world in the most unmistakable manner that the only self-supporting women with whom we desire to have nothing to do, are those upon whom we are dependent for the whole comfort of our homes. These we relegate to the tender mercies of the intelligence office—ludicrous misnomer!

The omission from the public schools of all training in applied household science, inculcates inferentially, the belief that no such science exists, and that household labor is drudgery fit only for the illiterate. Then we confirm this conclusion in the mind of the youth and maidens of every great city by means of the experience which we prepare for them, so that the yawning chasm which separates household work from labor of every other kind in the mind of the working class, making them despise home work and prefer everything else to it, has been widened and deepened by the philanthropic intervention of the women of the employing class within the present generation.

Nor is this all. Business men have long since been compelled by the conditions of our system of production to recognize certain standards of hours and conform to them. But home work knows no standard of hours as it knows no standard of skill. There are no contracts binding upon either side, and the fundamental characteristic of all parties concerned is irresponsibility.

An attempt is now being made to introduce the element of responsibility at one point, in the establishment of a Bureau for Women's Labor for household, office, factory and store, at Hull House in Chicago. The bureau is conducted by a college-bred woman and aims to accomplish the following objects, viz: To organize self-supporting women, to bring household labor into line with other kinds of labor by making it skilled, and by teaching women who engage in it to stand by each other in prosperity and in adversity.

For want of space we can here deal only with household labor. There are two ways of obtaining a supply of skilled household labor. One of these, the method of establishing suitable classes for imparting technical instruction, has never been adequately tested. Of the large proportion of failures among the scattering experiments on record, some are due to the blunder of separating such instruction from all other technical training, so strengthening the conviction that household labor is separate from and inferior to labor of all other kinds. Another cause of failure has been the tactless insistence upon holding housework classes during the day, so excluding self-supporting women and girls.

The other way of obtaining a supply of skilled labor is the long-tried, ill-starred method, "every housekeeper her own trainer!" The Hull House Bureau undertakes to help by every means in its power, to obtain a supply of skilled household labor by the first named method, to utilize its diet kitchen and crêche for teaching purposes, and to promote and encourage similar undertakings. Meanwhile, the more or less competent workers already in the field will be registered, graded and recommended strictly according to their qualifications.

A systematic effort is made to obtain a permanent register of homes, graded like the workers, according to known qualifications. Into a certain number of these homes raw recruits can be sent for training, accepting trifling wages at first and pledging themselves to stay a length of time sufficient to indemnify the home-maker for her labor and for the annoyance endured in the process of training. This plan opens up a vast field of missionary labor for home-makers who have skill and slender means. For by consenting to take into their homes young girls to train, they lend a hand towards increasing the ranks of the efficient, self-dependent women and young girls, secured by their self-respecting consciousness of skill from life's sorest temptations. It is such cooperation as this that the Hull House Bureau asks help in diverting young girls from the drudgery of the cash girls' bench and the mill, to the life of the home.

By sending to one rural neighborhood a group of young girls previously acquainted and in the habit of attending one church, it is thought that the loneliness of country life may be softened, while membership in a union and a reading club will be encouraged and may have the same effect. The moral influence of the bureau will be thrown in the direction of inducing the employé to stay in her place, terms fair to both sides having been agreed upon at the start.

It is difficult to understand why women of practical sense and administrative talent have not long since entered upon such work as that projected by the bureau. Possibly the magnitude of the task may have appalled even the brave! Yet the obstacles to be overcome are in no respect comparable to those which the W. C. T. U. so unweariedly confronts.

Clearly stated, the problem is to induce employer and employed to agree upon a standard of hours, to make it possible to acquire skill in the performance of household work, to inculcate esprit de corps, as well as self-respect, and to make terms for the workers at the start as no irresponsible person can do. To get the desired results will, of course, require time and much faithful work in the bureau, with the coöperation of thousands of women in all conditions of life. Yet with patience and character such a bureau of women's labor may be made in every great city and in many small ones, a center of causation in solidarity and altruism, in temperance and purity, and finally, in that simple justice between woman and woman which is impossible in the chaos that now reigns.

At this point women can take hold of the all-embracing labor question in a manner beneficent for all concerned. For, however much the improvident in our technical arrangements may simplify household work, there will always be little children needing care, food requiring skillful preparation, and homes to be kept clean. If the women of the nation determine that this shall all be done in the best possible way, they must first set about transforming the demoralized and despised ranks of household labor into a skilled, self-respecting, and therefore, respected division of the great sisterhood of women. Is not this directly in line with our work for temperance, social purity, education, and that general leveling up of humanity, to which one and all, we are consecrated?

RECOLLECTIONS OF NOTED MEN AND WOMEN.

Lord Shaftesbury.

(Concluded.)

Among other legislative reforms Lord Shaftesbury's championship of the children known as "climbing boys" was one of his noblest efforts. No class had suffered more than the boys of six and seven, and even children of four years who were employed by chimney sweeps.

The bill which Lord Shaftesbury introduced in 1853 for their protection was rejected, and was spoken of in the House of Commons as "the pitiful cant of pseudo philanthropy." After years of ceaseless exertion, in 1872 Lord Shaftesbury records in his diary the fact that, "Yesterday I stirred once more for my poor climbing boys—one suffocated in a flue in Staffordshire. Years have rolled on, and now another death gives me the power of one more appeal to the public." A single death was, however, insufficient to stir public indignation, and not until three more children had been sacrificed did the press take up the question vigorously, and in 1875 he again writes: "By God's blessing the Chimney-sweeps Bill is passed," and the horrible cruelty of the system was finally broken up.

It is difficult to conceive, in the clear light of the latter end of this century, the ignorance which could have made it possible for educated and enlightened men, not only to tolerate, but to uphold a system of child labor which was nothing short of a wholesale slaughter of the innocents.

Lord Shaftesbury's fight for their rights must be ever memorable in the annals of reform; for as we trace the wonderful progress men have made in the true understanding of the brotherhood of man and the solidarity of labor, we as temperance workers realize that the day will come when all who oppose the great measures for which we are fighting will appear as invincibly ignorant as those liberal leaders who withstood the movements which we now consider the A B C of social and national obligation.

During this long struggle Lord Shaftesbury was upheld and sustained by his firm belief that his mission was God-given. He looked not "on the things seen"—the apparent failure, the almost superhuman difficulties, but "on the things which are not seen, and are eternal."

Soon after his death I held in my hand the worn Bible which had been his constant companion, and as I turned over the pages, yellow with age and thin with use, and saw the marks that his hand had traced, I noticed constantly recurring some line, some note or allusion to his various speeches in the House of Commons—some word of praise or of supplication—showing from whence he gained the strength to plead for suffering humanity in the teeth of opposition and ridicule. Our daily prayer will be fulfilled, that His will shall be done on earth, when our statesmen go from their knees to the Senate House, and draw their inspiration from the Lawgiver of the universe.

It was not, however, by legislation only, and the consecration of his position and influence that Lord Shaftesbury served humanity. He gave more royally: he bestowed himself. Often, in the dusk, after the long day's work, he would leave his home and family circle, and go across the great metropolis to the East end, and there turning down a dark side street, he would enter the house of one whom he ever counted as his dearest friend, Mr. George Holland, who for so many years carried on a noble work among the outcast and friendless. Lord Shaftesbury took a special interest in this home for ragged boys. I have heard that friend of years relate how often he had seen him, when age was telling on his strength, and his mind was overtaxed with public duties, sit with a little urchin on either knee, and two or three more clustered around him, as he patted their pale cheeks, and in his quiet, solemn voice, bade them grow up good citizens and true Christians, while a look of wonderful tenderness lit up the lined and often care-worn face.

His ragged schools, shoeblacks' brigade, flower-girls' mission, the reformatory ships for homeless boys, are yet as many voices by which he, "being dead, yet speaketh." And to each and all his philanthropic efforts he gave his personal labor and individual attention.

For woman's cause, Lord Shaftesbury had a truly chivalric spirit, and a deep sense of the injustice of man's attitude toward her. Speaking, one day, of the intuitive perception which is so noticeable a quality in women, he said with his bright smile: "God has given it to them for their protection, and He knows how they have needed it." One of the last acts of his life was his effort on behalf of the oppressed seamstresses, and by his warm advocacy, women were released also from the degrading labor to which they had been subjected in the colliery districts.

On the temperance question his utterances have been widely quoted. "It is impossible to grapple with the poverty all around, until we can drive back the curse of drunkenness," he said at a great meeting in Exeter Hall, when the temperance cause was still in its infancy.

His knowledge of the people was not theoretic, he had an intimate acquaintance with every class. On one occasion he gave a supper to the thieves of London, and as a proof of their gratitude and esteem, one of the party made a speech, in which he told his benefactor how his possessions would be forever safe; ending with the words, "Remember, my Lord, to tell your friends bells on the shutters and little dogs is the two things we burglars dread."

The history of his public career was the outcome of his private life. Away from the cares of legislation, in his country home on the broad moor-lands of Dorsetshire, he was as a father among his people. Every Sunday evening saw the great hall filled with the village folk, joining in prayer and praise and song, led by the deep-toned voice so often raised in impassioned pleading for the working classes he loved so well. He ever gave me the impression of one who, Enoch-like, walked with God. After a yachting cruise, a gentleman told me that he occupied the next cabin to Lord Shaftesbury, and that late into the night he heard him talking to the unseen Presence as friend with friend.

The shadows of evening stole very gradually over that golden life. It had long been his prayer that he might "die in harness." At the age of eighty-four, he was still in his place in the House of Lords, and the very last year of his life was given to a measure for the protection of young girls. His heart was so moved by the necessity for such legislation, that when increasing weakness and failing health prevented him from attending the meetings on their behalf, he said: "When I feel age creeping on me, and know I must soon die, I hope it is not wrong to say it, but I hate to leave the world with all the misery in it." The time had come, however, when the Bright Angel crossed the threshold, and bade him lay down that life work, and go into the presence chamber of the King. Death was not death to him, merely the lifting of a latch, and just a step into the open air. In the calm of a summer evening, with his face turned to the westering sun, that great spirit left this world the better, the happier for his life, with the words upon his lips, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Few sights have so deeply stirred the hearts of the English people as the funeral of Lord Shaftesbury. He had expressed a wish to be buried in the village churchyard of his own home, but the nation demanded some opportunity of showing their gratitude and love, and it was decided that his body should be taken to Westminster Abbey, where a funeral service would be celebrated. No similar procession ever passed through London, but earthly pomp was not needed to do him honor. The streets were lined with thousands, groups of artisans everywhere, seamstresses, flower girls, women with shawls drawn over their heads, and tears in their eyes—the ragged, the outcast, even the very poorest had procured some little fragment of black; the children, with grief-stricken faces, held in their hands poor little bunches of flowers, faded, often, and drooping, but gathered with patient care from the refuse heaps in the early market,—bought, not with money, but with loving toil, to lay upon the coffin of one who had befriended them throughout his long life. Never had such an assembly been seen within the Abbey walls,—princes and paupers vying to honor the great dead, and as the coffin was borne away, a laboring man, with a tattered piece of crape upon his arm, looked up, and in a choking voice, said: "Our Earl's gone; God A'mighty knows he loved us, and we loved him. We sha'n't see his likes again."

"My Lords," said the Duke of Argyle in a memorable speech before the Upper House, "the social reforms of the last century have not been due to the Liberal party. They have been due to the influence, character and perseverance of one man, Lord Shaftesbury."

The power of such an influence touches every land; and as "our common sorrow like a mighty wave" washes every shore and our common suffering cements the solidarity of humanity, the great work of one who labored through so many years to better the world's ills is not a national, but a universal possession.

THE CHARACTER GAUGE.

What is government? We get a notion of it as a vast, mysterious machine, but it is only an aggregation of men. This is the first question then in every case: "Is this officer honest?" Yes, true as steel. The next question is: "How did he come to be so?" That is business-like, surely. That is a common-sense inquiry, worthy even of Chicago enterprise. For such an officer is the sort of man the city needs most of all; an honest man who will not "light out" between midnight and dawn, who will not make for himself a comfortable inclined plane by putting his property into his wife's, or brother's, or clerk's hands and then sliding down into bankruptcy. He is the rare, priceless man, the tower of strength in times of collapse and striking out for Canada, and amid all the dreary doings of which "day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." Very well, but what made the man honest? Apply the scientific method to this choice specimen of the genus homo, tracing his antecedents, studying his environments, analyzing his education. Somewhere along his path there will be found a church. Digging down to the roots of his training the investigator will come across a Bible, and near by, the record of evening hymns and childhood prayers. And back of all will be a portrait gallery with a saintly mother in it, or a noble Christian father. For the second and third generations of those who have scoffed at God, sneered at the Bible, and trampled on the Sabbath day, will not be found in places of usefulness and trust, unless some strongly marked law of inheritance from Christian ancestors comes in to offset the deterioration. Of course there will be exceptions to this broad and well-defined rule. There will be whited sepulchers—there was one among the twelve. There will be found in prisons men and women of Christian parentage, but the more careful the investigation, the stronger will be its tendency to prove that one of the parents was not Christian in ancestry, or else in life, or that one or both were unfaithful in enforcing by precept and illustrating by example those qualities of which Christ was the pattern and expounder. His religion can well afford to throw down the gauntlet to the world upon the evidences of Christianity that the character gauge affords. It is far more practicable, as it is vastly more reverent than the "prayer gauge" of which so much was heard a few years since. Alcohol causes the greatest aberrations. Take that out and the calculation would be as plain as A B C. Now it is a good investment of time and money which gives results so surely to be counted on as these. Men on 'change, bankers and financiers of all sorts, should give studious attention to them, from the point of view most congenial to their habit of thought—that of commercial values.

The Temple Question Box.

PRACTICAL QUERIES AND REPLIES.

Naturally and very properly, a constituency so intelligent as ours proposes to know whereof it affirms and to base its work on rendered reasons. Hence, questions come to us from all parts of the world about the Temple, and we have grouped below some of the salient ones, answered to the best of our ability, after consultation with leaders, lawyers and other "lights":

QUESTION.—Is it not a disadvantage to have our building on leased ground?

ANSWER.—There are no shrewder, keener business men in Chicago than those who build on a long lease, and ours is for one hundred and ninety-eight years.

Q.—Does it not injure us to be known as aspiring to own a building so costly?

A.—Not if our purpose is rightly understood, viz., to secure funds with which to carry on our work. Men make for themselves fortunes in Chicago by erecting office buildings—why should not we make money for the greatest of reforms by which humanity is blessed?

Q.—Will not our rooms be more elegant than comports with Christian living?

A.—By no means. We expect to have modest but comfortable offices on the twelfth floor. The more elegant and costly portions of the building will be rented out to make money for the temperance cause.

Q.—Do we not pay rent for our rooms?

A.—Certainly, just like the other tenants, until we own the Temple, and even then we should credit the building with our rent.

Q.—If we never own the Temple what becomes of the money we are putting in?

A.—The new board of trustees and their successors must decide. Probably they would, if convinced that we could never own the building, cease to apply the interest on our investment to the purchasing fund and use it in the temperance work, dividing with the states according to what each state had given. In any event, the money raised is ours, and will go for the objects set forth in the principles and plans of the National W. C. T. U. To have raised it is a clear gain to those who got it together and to the cause of temperance and purity.

Q.—Ought not the association that put up the building to have been composed of women?

A.—It could not be. Mrs. Carse had to enlist capitalists who would put in money, expecting to get it back again at a good rate of interest, but good men and true who were willing to resign their stock to us whenever we could buy it. These men would not have been willing to let women manage their property for them. They are without superiors in knowledge of how to conduct the erection of large buildings, and no one could expect them to give up the management of their capital. The very fact that they were willing to go into this enterprise stamps it as business-like and practicable. They showed their breadth of view in making Mrs. Carse president and Miss Hood secretary, and have just voted these ladies into office once more. No country but America, and no men but these big, brainy westerners, would be likely to show a spirit so generous.

Q.—Where are we to get the money to buy out Marshall Field?

A.—From the sale of Temple Trust Bonds and the gifts of temperance men and women. To this end we must be up and doing, one and all.

Q.—How much stock is issued? How much sold? What relation have the first set of mortgage bonds to the enterprise? What relation have the second set?

A.—The corporation building the Temple has a capital stock of $600,000 which was issued and sold. Subsequently that corporation issued bonds to the amount of $600,000, payable in ten years, or may run twenty years, drawing five per cent, which are secured by a trust deed on the leasehold and building. This is all the incumbrance on the property. In order to purchase the stock for the use of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Carse individually issued Temple Trust Bonds to the amount of $300,000, which run ten years and pay six per cent interest per annum. These are secured by the stock purchased by Mrs. Carse as trustee, an equivalent of stock being placed in the hands of the American Trust and Savings Bank, as trustee, to secure the bonds as they are issued, dollar for dollar. There is no other security and the building is not incumbered by them. There is no such liability as a second mortgage. The Temple Trust Bonds are secured simply by stock as collateral, and it is expected that the dividends on the shares of stock deposited as such security for the bonds as issued will redeem the bonds as they fall due.

Q.—What will be the rent of Willard Hall, and who will pay it?

A.—The rent is fixed at $3,500 and the Chicago Central W. C. T. U. expect to hire it at those figures, sub-letting it for much more than enough to meet that expense, and charging nothing to the National W. C. T. U. for its use at any time.

Q.—Will the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association be in the Temple?

A.—Printing presses cannot be allowed as they would depreciate rents; composing rooms cannot as the combustibles used would increase the insurance. These will be located near by, but the editorial rooms, office counting room, salesroom, etc., will be in the Temple.

Q.—If we never own the building, shall we still have our parlors, offices and Willard Hall with its daily gospel meetings in the Temple?

A.—Certainly, and the moral effect of this will be most helpful every way. We expect to announce ourselves as "at home" in the Temple, on and after May 1, to the end of the chapter.

Q.—What is the total amount actually paid in up to date from the gifts of white-ribboners?

A.—In round numbers sixty thousand dollars, but two hundred thousand dollars are "in sight" by reason of pledges made, and each year the total receipts increase.

Q.—Why could we not have got this two hundred thousand directly for our work?

A.—Because people will do more for a tangible object; they like definite and visible results; they are moved by personality and visibility; they see large results coming, a home for reform work that is worthy of it, a great enterprise that enlists women the world over, and in a thousand ways contributes to show what she can do, thus incalculably helping on the whole cause of woman's elevation and the protection of home, and the momentum of the enterprise carries them forward.

Q.—Will not other "sky scraper" buildings be put up, darkening this and depreciating its value?

A.—No, for underwriters have agreed not to insure any more buildings over twelve stories high. The Temple is hardly above the average height of the new Chicago; it is the most attractive and best lighted building of its kind anywhere to be found—for into its plan entered not only the genius of that great architect, John W. Root, but the equally remarkable taste, skill and love of beauty, fitness and convenience of Matilda B. Carse. She has been too modest to say this, but it ought to be said, for the money value of the building has been thus incalculably enhanced by her devotion. Mr. Root freely advised with her, and she continually told him this building must show forth what Goethe called the "ever womanly" in architecture; moreover he knew while he worked on the plans that Mrs. Carse was praying that his pencil might be divinely quickened.

N. B.—We shall have other "Temple Question Boxes" and hereby ask our constituency to send on its best thought and latest queries.

News from the Field.

OHIO OUTLOOK.

From Columous, our centrally located capital city, the outlook is inspiring. In all directions may be seen W. C. T. U. fields in every stage of development, from the seed-sowing to the harvest—all worked by white ribbon women who never clamor for an "eight hour day," nor go "on a strike."

"For gentle hands are willing And loving hearts are true."

Organization is being pushed. A score of new locals are reported. Mrs. L. O. F. Austin has just organized two L. T. L.'s—one in Van Wert and one in Scott, with sixty members. Mrs. F. J. Sumner is at work in Lucas county. A new union at Auburndale, and another added to the list of Toledo's flourishing locals—the Henrietta L. Monroe, in honor of our state president. Warren county has two new organizations, Miss H. G. Moore and Mrs. Grim the moving spirits. Mrs. S. M. Perkins has been in Darke county—four new organizations; and Miss C. S. Burnett, of West Farmington Institute, has organized two unions and three L. T. L's. Miss Burnett spent her holiday vacation resting (?) with the Friends in Columbiana county where she lectured seven times, visited and addressed three schools, helped with her presence and counsel four unions in as many towns. Is it any wonder that our cause is gaining ground? "Opposition is dying out," writes a clear-visioned sister, but adds, "Oh, how our state needs workers! So much remains to be done." Two counties have effected organizations—Shelby, with Mrs. Mary Deweese, president, Mrs. James Anderson, secretary, and Mrs. Fannie Goodall, treasurer; Union county, Mrs. M. G. Waters, president, and Mrs. Kate Woods, secretary. The North Side Y's of Columbus have taken up several new departments, and are at work among the children and the young colored people. The Y unions of the twenty-fifth district have perfected a district organization. Miss Susie B. Stockwell, East End, Cleveland, president; Miss Lettie M. Smith, Bedford, secretary, and Miss Maud Le Fevre, Akron, treasurer. This Y district organization contains some of the brightest and best Y workers in Ohio. Fredericksburg and Wooster, Wayne county, have each a new Y union. But I must not particularize—wish I might!

Mrs. A. E. Bennett superintends a wide-awake L. T. L. at Olmstead Falls, which was just five years old on Miss Willard's birthday. The occasion was celebrated by a fine entertainment consisting of music, recitations, dialogues, Sense versus License, and selections from Miss Willard's utterances clipped from THE UNION SIGNAL. At the close, one of the boys, in a neat speech, presented the superintendent with a nice copy of "Glimpses of Fifty Years," from the school. Fruit and cake were served to all. Door fees paid all expenses and left something for the treasury.

Mrs. Esther Silver is serving her fifth term as president of Cleveland East End union, which is making itself felt in that part of the city. This union has headquarters all paid for, and dedicated its lecture room to gospel temperance work, December 13. The room was filled to its utmost capacity. The dedicatory services were conducted by Mr. Walter Malone, and Mrs. Judge Lamson, superintendent of evangelistic work. A sewing school for colored children has been started, in charge of Mrs. Gage. Mothers' meetings will follow, and can but result in good with Mrs. Caleb Davis, a wise mother, as leader. A "dime social" December 1, for the benefit of the reading room was a success, socially and financially.

Mid-year meeting of Delaware county was held at West Berlin, Mrs. M. A. Mitchell presiding in place of Mrs. Trego, detained by illness in her family. Loyal Temperance Legion, scientific temperance instruction and fair work were discussed. The treasurer, Miss Libbie Osborn, reported thirty-five dollars in the treasury.

Licking county semi-annual convention was recently held at Alexandria. The following papers were presented: "Duty of a Christian," Mrs. Chapin; "A Woman's Whim," Mrs. Dr. Winter, and "Woman Suffrage," Mrs. Dora Turner; Mrs. Romick spoke on "Systematic Giving," and Mrs. Winter on "Physical Culture." Rev. Geo. Mason, of Foo Chow, China, spoke of the work there—drew vivid pictures of drink and opium dens and palaces. The missionaries in foreign lands all honor the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Five ministers were present. The theme of Mrs. Romick's evening address was "Social Purity." Johnstown Y's furnished the music, which was fine. Balance in county treasury, $25.76.

Seventeen years ago the first W. C. T. U. convention in all the world was held in the Presbyterian Church on Superior street, Cleveland. In this charming city, Cuyahoga county quarterly convention was held in a Congregational Church not very far from the "old Presbyterian." Mrs. H. L. Monroe was present and gave the address of the evening. The discussion of evangelistic work brought out some facts worth knowing. Two-thirds of the number of inmates of the county jail are there because of strong drink. There are one hundred and twenty-five Sabbath-schools in Cuyahoga county; many of those riminals have been Sabbath-school scholars! Is it well to leave temperance teaching out of our Sabbath-schools, or at best crowd it into the smallest, most obscure corner? Mrs. Judge Lamson's Bible reading was first on the afternoon program. "Ours," she said, "is a heavenly calling, bringing into action all our endowments. God always gives us capacities for the work to which He calls us. He knows just the avenues in which to lead us. No matter how weak and unworthy the vessels, if they are only emptied, God will fill and use them. Unless we abide in Christ we cannot bring forth fruit. We want to bring forth much fruit to carry home sheaves. To accomplish this we need the Holy Spirit in every branch of W. C. T. U. work."

Mrs. Wall, of Quincy street union, welcomed the convention, and Miss Dema Bennett, of Bedford, responded. Her excellent paper closed with a noble plea for franchise. The report of National Convention was unique and full of interest. Each woman present who attended it, gave in few words what most impressed her. Mrs. H. E. Hammond: The magnitude of the Convention; ten or eleven thousand more members in the organization this year than ever before. Mrs. Oviatt: The small number of men present at first, and the way the number increased day by day. She thought the Convention worth $1,000,000 to Boston. The welcome given by the loyal women of America, with tea, coffee and cake. Mrs. Perkins was impressed by the contrasts—the beginnings of W. C. T. U. work and that represented by this latest and greatest Convention; peace meetings, equality, franchise, woman suffrage reception, these were more to her than the banquet. Mrs. Stevens thought the days should have been forty-eight hours long; referred to the vast numbers of Sabbath-school teachers, ministers' wives and daughters present; was proud of the honor paid to our own Mothers Thompson and Stewart. Mrs. Chace was glad to see so many young men present. Mrs. Dr. Buxton spoke of the great petition. Mrs. Monroe called attention to the purse of $148 presented to Mother Thompson by Mrs. S. M. Perkins; the many pretty girls present, who possibly might not have escaped the notice of those same "young men"; the meeting of prayer and consecration, memorial services; compared some of the earlier W. C. T. U. conventions held in Cleveland, Indianapolis, and other places where white-ribboners met with open contempt, to those of to-day. "What hath God wrought?" Men of Boston said, "We are amazed!" "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" was sung.

We were told how Indiana W. C. T. U. elects and sends her delegates to the National Convention, and were "moved" to borrow the idea. Perhaps if the Indiana SIGNAL reporter will give their methods in her next letter other states may want to borrow it, too. Mrs. D. M. Gage read a stirring paper on "Franchise." "If our reform is to make progress, we must have arguments. We tell an opponent of equal suffrage, we know it is right. He knows it isn't. We reply we know it is. He asks, 'How do you know equal suffrage is right?' 'Because we do, we—we—guess we know what we know.' Such logic (?) will never convince any one in the wide, wide world. . . . Uncle Sam is an utter failure in government housekeeping, and always will be so long as he keeps 'bachelor's hall.' Now we propose to turn matchmaker and induce him to take a wife. His better nature favors the plan, yet he selfishly holds back. He is so afraid his wife will get her share of the government loaf."

The Madison Ave. L. T. L., 125 strong, with Mr. H. J. Luff, superintendent, and Mrs. Emerson, musical director, made a fine showing during the children's hour. Singing, recitations and very instructive blackboard exercises, together with the excellent deportment of the children, were creditable, both to them and to those having them in charge. Ohio women are working hard for school suffrage, which, with the enrollment and petition work for Sabbath observance at the Columbian Exposition, will keep us busy. But we are determined to push the battle to the gates.

BUCKEYE BITS.

Delaware has an L. T. L. with 163 members.

Mrs. Anna E. Albert Bridgeport was elected state organizer at last state convention.

Ohio gave $895 more in donations to the National union than any other state.

The Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger has a new dress. It is now published in Cleveland, and edited by Mrs. H. E. Hammond. May it receive the liberal support it merits.

The president of Van Wert colored union mourns the loss, by death, of a married daughter. Our sympathies are with this dear sister in her sore bereavement.

A New Republic, the suffragist state organ, also published in Cleveland, Mrs. S. M. Perkins, editor, is an exceedingly bright monthly which ought to be read by every intelligent woman in Ohio. Brains, energy and devotion to the suffrage movement characterize its pages.

HANNAH A. FOSTER,
State Reporter, Berea.

IOWA.

NOTES OF PROGRESS

Although Iowa has not been heard from for some time our women have been moving steadily forward. More departments of work have been taken up than ever before.

The exercises in physical culture, given at our state convention, gave an impetus to this department which nothing else could have done. Miss Anna Morris, our state superintendent, under whose supervision the drill was given, attended the Boston Convention seeking new ideas and fresh inspiration for her delightful work, an almost needless quest it may seem to those who know her best.

Band of Mercy work is causing an unusual arrest of thought. Teachers are reading "Black Beauty" in many of our public schools.

Demorest medal contests are popular all over the state. Our workers find nothing that interests and instructs the people like these gatherings. Men who would not read a word against license, nor listen to a prohibition speech, readily swallow strong, solid, anti-license doses and prohibition powders, dispensed by lads and lassies at these contests.

Mighty efforts are being made for the repeal of our prohibitory law, by the General Assembly now in session. It will be remembered that our law is merely statutory. May God help our good men to stand firmly for the right in this hour of temptation.

A memorial, asking that the use of the United States mails be forbidden to dealers in debasing pamphlets, papers, books, pictures, gambling devices, and other immoral things, has been signed by presidents and secretaries of unions and sent to President Harrison, and to the heads of the legal and postal departments of this government.

A petition praying that the trade-mark of Block Brothers, West Virginia, "Mail Pouch Tobacco," be revoked, and that all signs and advertisements containing said mark shall be painted out, or otherwise removed from view, is also being sent to the President, attorney-general and commissioner of patents of the United States.

At this writing our state president, Mrs. Dunham, is visiting Chicago, in the interests of the Temple, of which she has been appointed an associate trustee.

Interest in our Temple is rising in Iowa. Osage union in the fourth district has voted to raise one hundred dollars for the Temple. One hundred dollars were pledged to the Temple and one hundred to the Temperance Hospital by delegates at our state convention. This was done by suggestion of Mrs. L. D. Carhart, our treasurer, who offered a scarf of exquisite beauty, made of spiders' webs on the Manilla islands, near China, on condition that the convention raise two hundred dollars and the scarf be presented to our beloved Miss Willard. This offer was accepted with enthusiasm and the amount speedily pledged. The presentation of the scarf to Miss Willard the next morning by Mrs. Carhart, in behalf of the convention, and the sweet and gracious words of these ladies, made a bright break in the routine of the meeting. The scarf is to be preserved in the archives of the Temple.

Des Moines county convention was held at Danville, with a good attendance and encouraging reports. Miss Belle A. Mix read a fine paper on Band of Mercy work, and Mrs. Dunham gave inspiring notes on the Boston Convention to a packed audience. A Demorest medal contest finished the feast of good things provided for the occasion.

CLARA P. WHITE,
State Reporter, Volga.

TEXAS.

CHEERING BREEZES.

Siftings from all along the line of temperance endeavor in our grand old state bring to view much that is encouraging.

"Once to every man and nation,
Comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood,
For the good or evil side.

"Some great cause, God's new Messiah
Offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand
And the sheep upon the right.
And the choice goes by forever
'Twixt that darkness and that light."

James Russell Lowell's beautiful lines represent so truthfully and expressively what I wish to say regarding the moral awakening of our people that I gratefully appropriate them. Temperance may well be called a "great cause," and I do not consider it sacrilegious to call it "God's new Messiah." "The moment to decide" has come to this people and to this nation, and from reports of the various superintendents of W. C. T. U. work, the choice has been made by thousands of our people in favor of the "light." From Hayes county comes the cheering news that the saloons are closed in every town in the county except one, the result of local option, and not to be outdone, several adjoining counties have ordered local option elections. History repeats itself even in small things. Kildare county has had a prohibition election, and one has also been held at Whitewright resulting in large majorities. Other counties have been struck by the contagion and I hear of prohibition clubs having been formed in various parts of Texas, and that our people are hungry for the truth, asking for knowledge about the various methods we have adopted for furthering the "great cause." John P. St John is now making a tour of the state, speaking upon prohibition and kindred subjects. We anticipate a "feast of reason" when he speaks in this city of Houston on the twenty-fifth of this month.

Churches of every denomination are denouncing progressive euchre playing for prizes. As the Rev. Beckwith of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in Houston, said to his congregation not long ago, "I fail to see the difference between playing in a parlor for a prize which represents a certain amount of money, or playing in a room down town for that amount of money." The only difference is, the surroundings may be of a more refining nature in the parlor. Another hopeful sign is the agitation of the subject of using unfermented wine at the supper of our blessed Lord. I have received a most interesting letter from Mrs. Fannie Reese Pugh, state superintendent of unfermented wine, who is also manager of the Central Texas Teachers' Association. She is pushing this work of her department with all the vigor and energy necessary to success: sending appropriate literature over the state. I received from her by express 500 copies of Dr. W. A. Morris' article on the "Responsibility of the Medical Profession in the use of Alcoholic Stimulants," and have distributed the greater part according to directions.

Mrs. E. A. Montgomery, state superintendent of Sabbath observance, is circulating petitions for closing the Columbian Fair on the Lord's day, and other literature in her line. I will not fill up this report with my individual belief, but ask every reader to turn her attention to the suppression of the Monday newspaper, the work on which is done entirely on the Lord's Day, while that of the Sabbath morning paper is done entirely on Saturday. I have been solicited to do this by editors, proof-readers, compositors, and others connected with our local press. Fill up the Sunday newspaper with religious, temperance, and all classes of moral literature; as a large class in this state read a Sunday paper who have no time to read during the week, and if the Monday paper was abolished, they would have still more time to devote to the Sunday paper and to church.

Mrs. L. Calhoun, Fort Worth, says: "A reception at St. Paul's M. E. Church was tendered our beloved state president, Mrs. H. M. Stoddard, by her Fort Worth friends, on the evening of December 10. The most enjoyable part of the program was the "Glimpses of the World's and National Convention," given in her own beautiful style, which both entertained and enthused her hearers."

The Central union is preparing for evangelistic work under the leadership of Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, of Columbus, Miss., who has consented to give some weeks of her labor to Texas. The medal contest of which mention was made in my last report as being in preparation, was held, and was a most interesting occasion. The winner of the medal was a bright little girl of thirteen years, named Carrie Wemyss. Judge Barty made a fine presentation speech. The Rev. Mr. Timmins, pastor of the Christian Church, asked in his prayer that the ballot be given to woman. Fort Worth now owns two medals. We are much encouraged by the action of the higher court, which pronounces unconstitutional the law placing the liquor business under jurisdiction. Judge Beckham's charge to the grand jury, where it touches upon the saloon question, was all we could ask. The pastor of the First Methodist Church called on his congregation to sing the doxology in thankfulness for the above-mentioned decision. Mrs. Dixon, editor White Ribbon, gives us a clean, bright paper; from it I gather much of the news in my reports. She speaks most lovingly of "Miss Julia Ames, the bright star of Rest Cottage." Forty-one subscriptions for the state paper were received from the inmates of Rusk Penitentiary. The editor says: "This is by far the largest list I have yet received. How grateful I am that this privilege is given me to give pleasure and entertainment, however small, to these men, who must be lonely, shut out from the bright world and from home and social pleasures."

Mrs. M. A. Dorsey, of Dallas, local superintendent of Sabbath observance and literature, is, judging by her report, a most energetic and conscientious worker, and an able supporter of the state officers. Houston W. C. T. U. secured Col. George W. Bain for a lecture, January 13. His subject was, "Our Country, Our Homes and Our Duty," during his tour of the state. The W. C. T. U. is not easily discouraged, but sometimes can be very nearly so. The worst blizzard in years struck our town last Monday, and we had Col. Bain booked for a lecture Wednesday night, with no means of heating the hall in which he was to speak; the Galveston Kermiss, a large, social entertainment came up as a counter attraction, and our hopes fell to zero, but fortunately, the weather did not, or there would scarcely have remained one to tell the tale. If there is one thing worse than another a Texan dislikes, it is the cold, and this, I think, is the reason so much fluid of a warming nature is poured down just now. Colonel Bain's lecture was all the most sanguine could have expected. The Mayor kindly gave the city hall for the purpose, and the Electric Light Company furnished the light gratis. Colonel Bain held the close attention of his small, but appreciative audience. Although, in some respects, the Colonel met with a "cold reception," in others he was warmly received, for there were several old friends in the hall to greet him, which must, we feel sure, make a warm spot in his heart for the Houston union. The Young Men's Christian Association quartette gave two beautiful temperance selections, adding much to the pleasure of the occasion.

Mrs. Hain, who was formerly president of our union, has organized a Y; will give particulars in my next report. In other lines of work Houston W. C. T. U. is progressing. I am sure you will agree with me that there is ample encouragement for temperance workers to come in and possess the land.

MRS. ELIZABETH STRONG TRACY,
State Reporter, Houston.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

GLOWING GRAINS FROM THE GRANITE STATE.

The work is steadily going on inside our fold; earnest women are entering and men are not backward in speaking the good word and pushing the good cause.

A juror in Concord court came upon the jury bench in an intoxicated state last week. The case was tried with eleven jurors instead of the accustomed number, twelve. Later the man was brought in, tried for contempt of court, and given a short stay in jail.

Mrs. Josephine Austin has been appointed state superintendent of Demorest contest work in New Hampshire, and will furnish medals, recitation books, and answer all correspondence. Address Mrs. Josephine Austin, Littleton, N. H.

Master Charles A. Robinson, of Keene, has been invited to represent New Hampshire in the New England grand gold medal contest at the Chautauqua Assembly in Massachusetts next July, and has, of course, accepted. Mr. Demorest has promised to attend and present the medal if our state can plan a grand gold medal contest for June 10, 1892, this being Mr. Demorest's seventieth birthday. We already have three gold medals in Grafton county. We wish it were possible for the required number to be reached before that time. It would, indeed, be quite an honor for our young people and for the child who would receive the gift and blessing from this aged benefactor. Whose child shall it be?

Mrs. W. A. Loyne has been appointed state superintendent of work among lumbermen in place of Mrs. F. P. Brown. All communications concerning this work should be addressed to her at Colebrook. She is greatly aided by her husband, who is much interested in the work in Coos county.

Mrs. Fred H. Bailey, Hopkinton, has been appointed superintendent of press work for the state, thus inaugurating a most important department.

The officers elected at the last Sullivan county convention held in East Washington, were: President, Mrs. Albee, of Claremont; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Henry McCoy, of East Washington; recording secretary, Mrs. Showls, East Washington; treasurer, Mrs. Curtis, East Washington.

The quarterly meeting of the Rockingham county was held in Exeter in December. The interests of the Mercy Home were presented by Miss McIntire, and an appeal was made for as many dollars as members from each union, to help pay the $3.500 for the land just purchased, which adjoins the Mercy Home at Manchester. Mrs. T. Pike reported the state convention at Nashua in an interesting manner. Bible readings were given by Mrs. H. H. Perry.

Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason was present and read a thrilling paper on the evil results of tobacco as manifested in diseases of the eye, one of a series which will describe the terrible effect of narcotics on the human body. This was also the subject of Mrs. Gleason's lecture in the evening which was well attended.

The small union in Hopkinton has undertaken to have a course of lectures in their village this winter. As there were no funds in their treasury and not enough enthusiasm in the place to have a season ticket course, it was decided to have open doors and trust to the collections to meet the outgo. The first lecture was given the 12th by one of the pastors on "Luray Cave," a favorite resort in Virginia. It was very instructive, but the audience and collection were small. Mrs. N. H. Knox, our state president, comes next in the course on "children's rights." This is to be followed by a lecture on astronomy, and one upon Africa by the two pastors, and a Demorest medal contest and a reading. Surely if this union can succeed, no one need fear to undertake a lecture course. They hope to make a little money to aid in paying for the new land at the Mercy Home. We would like to hear from other states where educational lecture courses are being carried on and with what success.

Belknap county W. C. T. U. has held four conventions; the first at Belmont was well attended and of much interest. Mrs. Knox, our beloved state president, was present and helped much by her encouraging words. Papers were read by Mrs. Knox, on "Tobacco"; by Mrs. Boynton, of Tilton, on "Boys," and by Mrs. Mary A. Davis, Belmont, on "The National Council of Women," which she had recently attended as a representative of the Free Baptist Woman's Missionary Society. A lecture by Mrs. Knox was omitted in the evening on account of revival meetings then in progress; the clergymen in turn gave up the afternoon service and assisted in the convention. At Alton, Mrs. Gleason of Massachusetts was present, reading a paper on "Narcotics" in the afternoon, and lecturing in the evening. Papers on "Cider" and on "Boys" were read by ladies from Tilton. Ten dollars was appropriated to the work of fairs and grove meetings in the county. At Meredith the annual meeting was held at which the old officers were unanimously chosen. Mrs. Knox, and Mrs. Jennie Hatch, matron of Mercy Home, were present and gave incidents of the work in that place. The county voted to raise for the Mercy Home, as many dollars as there are members in the county. Other donations of clothing, bedding, etc., have also been sent from the different unions. At Lakeport, in December, the members who were at the National Convention gave incidents of that gathering, each from a different standpoint. A committee of three were appointed on Demorest medal contests. Our president has been at all our conventions, and we think she has attended every convention since the county was organized in 1888; before her election she was our trusty friend and adviser. The clergy of every place have given their aid and encouragement. Two unions have been organized at New Hampton and Gilmanton Iron Works. Flower Mission Day was observed by the ladies of Laconia union; mass-meetings have been held there and at other places; a reading room is carried on by the Meredith unions, and the routine work of the various departments is quietly going on in the local unions.

The Y. W. C. T. U., of Dover, has begun its second year with a membership of sixty. A superintendent of juvenile work was recently appointed, who, with the help of other Y's, will organize a Loyal Temperance Legion. In October, an afternoon sale of work, done by the little girls' sewing school, was held, and later in the month a course of entertainments began, which, unfortunately, did not receive so large a patronage as it merited. Two recent socials have added to the membership and a little to the treasury. Every Sabbath afternoon a prayer-meeting is held in the room and these meetings have been well supported. On one of these occasions an address was made by Mrs. Gleason, of Massachusetts.

Since the state convention, Miss Wendall, the state corresponding secretary, has planned two lecture trips in the state for Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, of Massachusetts, extending over several weeks' time; last year five of these were arranged for her. In addition to her public addresses, she has held many women's meetings which were helpful and encouraging. She also attended six county conventions, giving talks on different departments of work and conducting parliamentary drills. Mrs. Gleason's active labors have given a new impetus to the temperance work, reviving and strengthening the unions all along her routes.

At a recent meeting of the state executive committee, it was voted to indorse a memorial favoring the ratification of the Brussels treaty by our government and present it to the United States Senators from New Hampshire, with the earnest request that they use their influence in its favor. The corresponding secretary was also authorized to send copies of the memorial to the local unions, requesting them to secure the indorsement of their churches and Sunday-schools. The executive committee also confirmed the recommendation of the state superintendent to invite Mrs. Ella Greene, of Hyde Park, Mass., to the state in the interest of scientific temperance instruction, and to present it before county conventions. The receipts from the laundry work at the W. C. T. U. Mercy Home, at Manchester, were $101 for the month of December; this is very encouraging. New Hampshire is very fortunate in having Miss C. R. Wendall, of Dover, for its corresponding secretary, one of the most systematic, methodical and level-headed women of the state. From her clear and concise report at the last state convention, I quote the following: "There are ninety-five unions in the state, with a membership of 2,500 persons, and 200 honorary members. The amount of money raised by the unions for local work, about $3,500. Nearly 500 copies of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken in the state. The Demorest contest work shows progress; at least fifty silver medals, and three gold medals have been taken during the last two years."

MRS. FRED H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

NEWS FROM A PROHIBITION STATE.

Day county has a corps of department superintendents who are endeavoring to superintend their departments, but scattered about as they are, over the vast prairie, and at the infrequent towns, they have but little opportunity for conference. Each, however, has put herself in communication with the state superintendent, subscribed for THE UNION SIGNAL and White Ribbon Journal, the state W. C. T. U. organ, and thus equipped, is doing what she can. The evangelistic superintendent has organized a Loyal Temperance Legion six miles from a village, and writes me that she "hopes thereby to reach many children with temperance and gospel teachings, who never go to church or Sunday-school."

The president of Pierpont union sends me an epitome of her plans, and gives an idea of what they have been doing in that wide-awake, little, local union. It is a sample of what every state reporter ought to receive from every local in the state, if complete reports of the state work are to be expected. This worker says, "We are studying scientific temperance, as taught in schools, in short, easy lessons in our meetings. How I wish we had a manikin to help us, and I've been wondering if it would not be a good thing for our county W. C. T. U. to buy one to loan our locals. I find that many of the members never studied physiology, and like women in every community, intelligent in other respects, are sadly ignorant in this regard; and especially so, concerning the effect of alcohol upon the human system."

The county W. C. T. U. has a small fund to be drawn upon by the superintendents for literature, postage, etc., which is an essential to good work in any organization.

At the suggestion of the county president, one vice-president for the county was chosen by each local union. From these the superintendents were appointed, each local president giving an idea of the special fitness of the vice-president they had elected for any certain department, and thus greatly aided the county president in making the appointments.

During the great Convention in Boston, Mrs. Vegas, of California, distributed tiny slips of paper, upon which were printed in very black letters, a text, Jer. 5:30-31. A verification of this text has been several times enacted at the courts of South Dakota during the efforts of the people to enforce the prohibitory law. A druggist was indicted for selling intoxicants, and brought to trial. No verdict was gained, for the jury disagreed, when the evidence was, as the judge stated, "Strong enough to convict a man of murder."

Two other men were proved guilty of violating the prohibitory law with equally conclusive testimony, and the jury on each case disagreed. This so disgusted the judge that he refused to try another "blind pig" at that term of court, though there were several other men under indictment for violating our liquor law.

The citizens sought to secure another judge and another jury, but as no judge was unoccupied at that time, it has not yet been done. The criminals are still working their hellish tricks, while people to whom the above text refers, "love to have it so," saying that prohibitory laws do not prohibit, and advocating high license. Why do not these laws prohibit? It is not the fault of the law itself, but because of the weakness and guilt of the men who should administer justice. South Dakota has a very large foreign element, trained in the school of the old world, to drink and smoke and indulge the flesh. This is a young commonwealth, and these hard-working foreigners have helped to subdue the wilds, and have built their homes here. They are good citizens in general, but many of them feel that to take away the saloon is to curtail a man's privileges and will not convict the offenders against our liquor law.

Other men who "love to have it so," are the business men, the merchants, the agricultural implement men who want the patronage of this vast army of farmers, and will not sacrifice their business interests even to save their own sons from the Keeley Institute.

At Redfield, Aberdeen, Huron, and some of the larger towns of the state, whisky criminals have been brought to punishment. The few staunch and true temperance men, and the many true temperance women will keep the path of the home-breakers and heart-achers as thorny as constant effort and vigilance can make it.

Oh, if the mothers could enforce the law, if the juries were mother juries, if the mothers' votes were counted as well as the Indian votes and foreign born votes, there would not be a drop of liquor sold, illegally, in the state in less than a year's time. We are glad to note that the State Suffrage Association, at its annual meeting, elected as its president our W. C. T. U. vice-president at large. Women who study the liquor problem can no longer dispute that it has become a political issue, that it is a controlling factor in politics, and to grapple with it effectually women must be politicians; not "Tammanies," nor "boodlers," nor office-seekers, but true scholars of political science; informing themselves upon the facts of politics and parties, as conscientiously as upon any other phase of the liquor traffic.

It is most consistent that the temperance women should associate political equality with all temperance work, as the most effectual method to bring about their reform. The day is past for women to ignore this fact; they must bury their prejudices of the dead past, and accept the new demands upon them, if they would be true reformers.

IRENE G. ADAMS.
State Reporter (Lake Helen, Florida).

POLO, Ill., has been stirred recently by an inspiring address, based on the four words, "Woman, Christian, Temperance, Union," delivered by Rev. N. W. Deveneau.

NOTHING in Minnesota has attracted so much attention this winter as the series of theater services conducted by the W. C. T. U. in Duluth. People attend who never go to church, and listen eagerly to the earnest words of the speaker, attracted also by the excellent music and the stereopticon lectures or sermons which are given. As a practical work for the W. C. T. U., this is voted a great success.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MRS. LUCY B. ARMSTRONG, the standby of the Kansas City W. C. T. U., "went to sleep" on New Year's morning.

MRS. MARY H. HUNT will shortly proceed to Kentucky, in the interest of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

MUCH joy is expressed at the recovery of Mrs. Emma Bourne, a prominent member and officer of the New Jersey W. C. T. U., who has been critically ill.

MRS. W. H. MUNNELL, president Kentucky W. C. T. U., is again in her accustomed health, having recovered from a severe attack of the prevailing epidemic.

IN Galva, Ill., a considerable sum of money has been raised to place a portrait bust of Susan B. Anthony in the gallery of eminent women at the Columbian Exposition.

ERRATUM. For the expression physical love in the article entitled "The New Education," by Mrs. Franees Leiter, in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 21, read physcal lore.

MRS. MOLLIE MCGEE SNELL has been holding evangelistic meetings in Greenville, Miss., and goes now to Washington, D. C., in response to the invitation of Mrs. S. D. La Fetra.

THE W. C. T. U., in Janesville, Wis., keeps the flag flying. The pastors of the several churches have recently united with the W. C. T. U. and held a union temperance service.

A VENERABLE Methodist pastor and honorary member of the W. C. T. U., Rev. Chester Morrison, passed away last month. His was a well-spent life, ripe and ready for the gleaner.

MISS ELIZABETH TOBEY has just concluded a series of evangelistic meetings in Lynn, Mass., under the auspices of the local union. She is kept constantly employed in this work.

ON Monday, January 18, Mrs. Ellen Larkin Hartnett of New Hampshire reached the close of a busy, blameless life. She was seventy years of age, and her loss is deeply felt by a large circle of friends.

THE Reformed Presbyterian Church of Mahonington, Pa., is deprived by death of its pastor, Rev. Nathan M. Johnston, an earnest divine, and a warm friend of the temperance reform and the W. C. T. U.

MRS. ANNIE LARSON, an old and respected resident of Nevada, died January 5, at Brown's Station. She was an active member of the W. C. T. U., and one who was ready for every good word and work. "Let her own works praise her in the gates."

IN a warm and glowing letter, Rev. J. R. Stubbert, pastor Park Street Baptist church, South Framingham, Mass., extends his sympathy to the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL on the death of our deeply mourned associate, Julia A. Ames.

MRS. M. W. RICHARDSON, beloved among the white ribbon sisters of Amherst, N. H., was greeted by a poem on her seventieth birthday last fall, and presented with the national colors in the shape of a little silk satchel containing seventy dollars in gold.

MISS NETTIE HOUGHTON, one of our capable white-ribboners, is now going out into the country surrounding Chicago to solicit help for a most worthy institution, the Anchorage Home for friendless women. She is warmly indorsed by Miss Willard and others.

A REPRESENTATIVE body of California educators in the recent convention of the State Teachers' Association at Riverside, indorsed most heartily the temperance teaching of the W. C. T. U., and considered a resolution presented in the interests of social purity.

MRS. EDITH DAVIS, president of W. C. T. U., Milwaukee, Wis., is one of our speakers on social purity, whose words meet the delighted approval of her audiences. She is thoughtful and earnest, and her pleas for the salvation of young men are most stirring and impressing.

REV. C. H. ST. JOHN organized a White Cross League of fourteen young men in Salem, N. H., last month. The series of evangelistic meetings conducted by him and Rev. Eugenia F. St. John have been wonderfully blessed; the W. C. T. U. has been strengthened and hundreds enrolled in the White Cross army.

MRS. E. A. HILL, of Orange City, Fla., vice-president-at-large, is an able and active temperance worker, who has assumed the duties of state president pro tem, necessitated by the removal of Florida's president, Mrs. Cadwallader, to another state. The state convention will be held at Winter Park in February.

AS A result of Miss Burnett's active work in Utah territory, the W. C. T. U. membership there has grown from thirty to two hundred and thirty-one in the last fifteen months; 760 children are enrolled in the Loyal Temperance Legions. Miss Burnett has given twenty-eight lectures and addressed fifteen meetings, besides having charge of press and prison work.

THE South Side W. C. T. U., Atlanta, Ga., of which Mrs. McLendon is president, has three Loyal Temperance Legions numbering one hundred and seventy children, under its fostering care. This is in part the outcome of Anna Gordon's active work just previous to the annual Convention of 1890, a work which the earnest local officers have successfully continued.

THE Ohio W. C. T. U. mourn the loss of another of the original crusaders, Mrs. Rebecca Van Deman, of Fayette county, who was an unostentatious and earnest worker, true to her convictions of right, firm in her denunciations of wrong, imparting her strength and zeal to all who came in contact with her. Fitting resolutions of respect and esteem were passed by the county W. C. T. U.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The state convention of the W. C. T. U. of South Carolina meets in Columbia, February 18 to 21. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap will address the convention at the opera house on Friday night, February 19, and preach the annual sermon on Sunday afternoon, the 21st. Miss Mary L. Yeargin, superintendent of Y work for the state, will have charge of an entertainment by the young people on Saturday evening, consisting of recitations, speeches and music. Mrs. Dr. Gause will give a series of Bible readings and explanations of the different departments of work during convention.

VIRGINIA D. YOUNG,
State Cor. Sec.,

Official Communications.

WORK FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In the department for soldiers and sailors much activity is manifested by state superintendents.

Referring to the summarized report, circulated to delegates at the Boston Convention, it will be seen that the most important recommendations are:

1. For the veterans to continue the methods found so helpful in the past; observing especially the national holidays and emphasizing Memorial Day exercises, including floral offerings, social and literary entertainments—with distribution of suitable literature,

2. For Soldiers and Sailors of United States Army and Navy. Greater resistance to the canteen system, knowing as we do that training in beer-drinking never graduates total abstainers, and encouraged in our efforts by the testimonies of many prominent men in the army and navy, as well as members of Congress (see Congressional reports of fifty-first session), In General Howard's annual report, he protests against any soldier being "placed behind the bar to deal out drinks to his comrades." I have, too, the testimony of navy officers against the open sale of beer in such places, for instance, as the Brooklyn navy yard, and I confidently expect the Hon. Secretary General Tracy to prohibit this nuisance.

3. Soldiers' National and State Homes continue to petition state legislatures for removal of saloons one or more miles from such institutions.

4. Petition or Memorialize Congress for the passage of an act that will withdraw the pension money from the soldier who is a drunkard, and give it instead to the wife or some other responsible person, for the use of his family.

5. Cultivate alliance with the Woman's Relief Corps.

6. For Sailors of the Commercial Marine. It is only within the last year that your National superintendent has made a special study of this line of work. During eight years of service, efforts have been directed to organization of my forces in states and territories; overcoming inertia by patient and persistent agitation; the preparation of suitable literature and its circulation. Three years of educational influences through petitions, notably that one presented to the U. S. Congress in the winter of 1889, embracing eleven thousand names of influential Grand Army men, and prominent women of the W. C. T. U. During the same winter the discussion in Congress on my amendment to the Appropriation Bill, which resulted in closing liquor saloons for the soldiers in the prohibition states; the adoption of a law by the national government, prohibiting the sale of intoxicants within one mile of the National Soldiers' Home in the District of Columbia; the adoption of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in military and naval institutions supported by government; introduction of the coffee cart, the ice barrel and the flower mission as adjuncts of the parade, the procession, and the encampment; the flag on the school-house; these tangible results have brought encouragement to the seed-sowers of the department, while proving to the public, that God has placed His seal of approval upon our efforts.

Allow me now to state to the many readers of THE UNION SIGNAL that, relying upon your constant and steadfast interest I look for your support in a new enterprise on behalf of seamen on our sailing vessels. Visiting some of the ships that come into the harbor of New York (there were nearly 20,000 last year) I find a system generally prevailing which indicates the need of this work. Upon arriving in port, the crew deserts the ship, deluded by the specious promises of higher wages on some other vessel, given by the boarding house and saloon proprietors. These landsharks immediately begin to devour poor Jack! He, poor fellow, is a social, convivial being—goes in shoals, loving comradeship—and delighted to get on shore after a three months' voyage, he does not care for money, so his enemies, the avaricious landlords, fleece him. They get his advance wages for two or three months, and the poor victim gets nothing as an equivalent but destruction of body and soul, and loss of earthly possessions. Is not our duty clear to care for him when he comes ashore? I ask you, therefore, to establish coffee houses in our seaports. I propose to begin in New York, and have the promised aid of our newly appointed National superintendent of coffee houses. Address me, for further information, at the headquarters of the department for soldiers and sailors, No. 22 State street, New York. SARAH A. MCCLEES,
January, 1892. Nat. Supt.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

The general interest manifested in the establishment of school savings banks is very encouraging. The response from W. C. T. U. educators, in different states, has not been full; in fact, I doubt if all our women in the front ranks notice what a direct bearing the economy of habit, enlarged industry and self-dependence, which comes through the popular and practical school savings bank, has on the morals and sobriety of the people.

It is recommended by boards of charity and reform as a relief measure for pauperism and crime; and has cordial indorsement of school authorities and bankers.

During our holiday educational conventions in Philadelphia (the National Conference of University Extension, the American Naturalists, and Biblical Exegesis societies), I had a conversation with Hon. W. T. Harris, U. S. Commissioner of Education. He recognizes in the school savings bank a great moral factor, and is favoring its interest as a government measure in his Bureau reports.

The statistical table, published yearly, by the kindness of Mr. Thiry, giving the progress and condition of each school savings bank in the United States, is in course of preparation. It shows marked advance in the work, as I will summarize in THE UNION SIGNAL later.

Resolutions have been passed by different teachers' institutes in Pennsylvania, and one or two in Maine, indorsing school savings banks methods. In Chester county, Pa., the School Directors' Association has taken the matter of introduction in charge. A committee of three directors was appointed to forward the work. They have prepared a little circular calling attention to the action of the Association and the merits of school savings banks, asking careful perusal of "How to Institute School Savings Banks," by your National superintendent, which leaflet they have mailed with their circular to the secretary of each local school board in the county. I mention this as one instance. It is something any man or woman might do in any district, in any state. Please do not wait for the commission of an organization. The work for humanity is the work of humanity. Whoever develops fitness in certain lines is worthy of commission; but we are all commissioned by the Great Director to do at all times and everywhere whatever uplifts or helps our fellows.

Our W. C. T. U. superintendents are Mrs. M. E. Sickels, of Unionville, Mo., and Mrs. C. A. Ricker, of Cherryfield, Me. Miss Elizabeth U. Yates and Miss Puella Dornblazer speak good words for the movement.

The literature of this department appears to meet its needs; and if the needs would meet the literature, be generally introduced as Miss Willard proposed in her late address, mutual acquaintance would be interesting and productive of broader results. I will list the literature I will gladly mail to order: "A Plea for Economic Teaching," forty cents per hundred; "School Savings Banks," thirty cents per hundred; "How to Institute School Savings Banks," sixty cents per hundred; "Lithographed School Savings Banks Fact Cards," numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, seventy-five cents per hundred.

SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER.
Nat. Supt. School Savings Banks.
Norristown, Pa.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

Arkansas—Little Rock: W. C. T. U., $11.

California—Pacific Grove: Annie Ryan, $3.65; Stockton: Mrs. M. L. Holbrook, $5; Salinas: W. C. T. U., $3.

Colorado—Denver: Mrs. U. D. Herrick, $3.65.

Connecticut—Wethersfield: Mrs. Emily Griswold, $100; Hartford: Unknown, $1; W. O. Higley, $1; Essex: Carrie Bellows, $2; Mrs. Edwin Terry Pratt, 50 cents; Middletown: Annie M. Brainerd, $4; Guilford: Mrs. C. E. Hall, $3.65.

Dakota, South—Buffalo: W. C. T. U., $3; Mitchell: W. C. T. U., $4.10; Harley: W. C. T. U., $2: Britton: Mrs. W. and family, 50 cents.

Delaware—Wilmington: Ida Hewitt, $3.

Florida—Tampa: Mrs. Ida Irwin, $1; Lake Kerr: Mary Powell, 5 cents.

Illinois—Kinmundy: W. C. T. U., $10.45; South Elgin: W. C. T. U., 38 cts; Batavia: W. C. T. U., $7.34; Normal: Unknown, $1; Fenton: Mr. and Mrs. Levi Stumk, $10; Naperville: District No. 9, $4.42; Latham: per S. E. Kretzinger, $2.10; Clifton: W. C. T. U., $2; Aurora: W. C. T. U., $5.30; Chicago: Mrs. Latimer, $2.50; Miss Fishbalk's Sunday-school class, $5.40; Mrs. Emma Greenlee, $100; Dundee: W. C. T. U., $4.12; Evanston: Mrs. Key, $6: Mason City: Mrs. C. H. Merritt, $6.50; Dixon: Mrs. G. D. Smith, $4; Morrison: Comrade, $2.75; Bushnell: E. C. and L. A. Morris, $10; Alhambra: W. C. T. U., $5; Grand Ridge: W. C. T. U., $16.50; Minonk: W. C. T. U., $8.78; Layman Chapel: W. C. T. U., $10; Rockford: Mrs. C. M. Whipple, $4; Mrs. S. E. Whipple, $5; Social Temple: $10; Grand Crossing: Y. W. C. T. U., $51.35; Rockford; a friend, $1.

Indiana—Lyons: L. T. L., $1.58; Marion: Mrs. M. D. Ludlum, $1; Indianapolis: Carrie Duth, $4; Plymouth: W. C. T. U., $5; Thorntown: W. C. T. U., $18.

Iowa—Ossian: Anna E. Halvoron, $3; Shoo Fly: Jane M. Steel, $4; Mt. Vernon; W. C. T. U., $55.67; Springdale: M. E. Fogg, $1; Oskaloosa: Per M. S. Dickson, $2.

Kansas—Kingman: E. B. Ogborn, $3.65; Wichita: W. C. T. U., $10; Columbus: Mrs. T. L. Strong, $3.65; Webber: A. W. Vale, $100; Solomon City: W. C. T. U., $2; Wareland: Orlin Vawter, $1.71; Clarence Vawter, $3.29; Pittsburg: Mrs. Carlton and Mrs. Knox, 50 cts.; Sterling: M. A. Maxwell, $1.44; Winfield: Mrs. H. A. Hales, $1.50.

Kentucky—Carrolton: L. T. L., $33.55.

Maine—Eustis: Mabel Porter, $3; Rumford Center: Ella Mabry, $1; South Bridgeton: Mrs. M. P. Fitch, $1.

Massachusetts—Cohasset: W. C. T. U., $2; Mrs. R. Smith, $2; Harwich: Mrs. Underwood, $2; Gardner: W. C. T. U., $10; Mansfield: L. T. L., $5; Raynham: W. C. T. U., $10; Winchester: Per Mary A. Ward, $4; Boston: Miss A. B. Westgate, $5; North Adams: Mrs. M. J. Kingsley, $3.65; Taunton: Mrs. T. N. Taylor and Miss Sarah Davis, $7.30.

Michigan—Fenton: Mrs. Philo Street, $10; Ann Arbor: W. C. T. U., $30; Oakley: Mrs. Sarah Barrett, $3.60; twelfth district, $36.35; Grand Blanc: Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Gundry, Dr. and Mrs. Case, $1 each; Mrs. E. C. W. Thompson, $4.65; Detroit: Jas. W. Fales, $100; Hubbardston: W. C. T. U., $5; Dutton: H. Higema, $1; Caledonia: Mrs. A. S. Lane, $1.

Minnesota—Merrian Park: Mary Gregg, $3.65; Lu Verne: Mrs. Ella Older, $1; Mrs. L. B. Kniss, $2: Brainerd: W. C. T. U., $25; Richland: L. T. L., $2; Minneapolis: Amy Anderson and sister, $5; Waterville: Cherub Band, $2.75; Minneota: Sarah Josephson, $3.75; Tracy: Mrs. E. J. Thomas, $17; Blue Earth City: Baby Band, etc., $6.75; Minneapolis: L. G. Burton, $1; Como Avenue W. C. T. U., $3; Rose Creek: Mrs. L. A. Williams, $90; Fillmore: W. C. T. U., $5; Brownsdale: $2.81; Mallory: League, $5; Wabasha: W. C. T. U., $11.37; Lois Ames, 62 cts.; Marion: W. C. T. U., $2.09.

Missouri—Maryville: Mrs. E. A. Rowley, $5; Mrs. C. H. L. Bradley, $3; O. Van-derhof, $10.51; Magnet: W. C. T. U., 12 cts., per Mrs. M. E. Barber. $1.40; Edina: Julia Hamilton, 62 cts.; Bedison: L. T. L., 65 cts.; Mrs. C. Woodbury, $5.03; St. Joseph: Central W. C. T. U., $10; Thayer: Mrs. Rawlings, $1.25; Bertie Jolly, 40 cents: Harrisonville: W. C. T. U., $17.50; St. Louis: Miss L. A. Wilson, $5.50.

Mississippi—Pass Christian: L. F. Ware, $5; Rodney: W. C. T. U., 6.

Montana—Townsend: Mrs. W. B. Morgan, 5.

Nebraska—Hastings: Mrs. Alta Carson, 20cts; Holdredge: Mrs. M. E. Carson, $5; Eddyville: A. W. Walter, $5; Adator: per Mabel Roberts, $3.65; Fremont: L. T. L., $1.25.

New Hampshire—Milford: L. T. L., $5; State W. C. T. U., $15.70; Pittsfield: Nellie Foster, $1.50; Henniker, W. C. T. U., $12.

New Jersey—Newark: Mrs. L. Bless, $5; Mrs. S. W. Alston, $4; Plainfield: H. N. Sugar, $5; East Orange: Mrs. K. G. Hoyt, $3.65: Bound Brook: W. C. T. U., $10; Vineland; Mrs. Wm. Mac Geage, Sen., $1; Burlington: Baby Band, $7.50; Morristown: Louisa G. Owen, $10.

New York—Henderson: W. C. T. U., $4; Alfred: Mrs. H. W. Green, $3.65; Cortland: W. C. T. U., $15; Canisteo: W. C. T. U., $5; Miss Mary Witteo, Mrs. W. T. Miner, Mrs. L. A. Belden, $1 each; Greene: Bernice and Breta Page, $1; Pavilion: Helen C. Ewell, $3; Pleasantville: Mrs. S. E. Taylor, $4; Friendship: Mrs. Jennie Renwick, $5; Potsdam: W. C. T. U., $5; Wynantsville: Mary Frazee, $1; W. New Brighton: H. A. Mandigo, $3.65; Batavia: Mary P. Rumsey, $5; Cortland: Lydia A. Strowbridge, $5; Brooklyn: Mrs. E. E. Whipple, $2.25; M. J. Gifford, $4: Bergen: W. C. T. U., $6; Copake: Mrs. F. A. Van De Bogart, $3.75; Burke: L. T. L., $1.80; Evans Mills: Lydia M. Gardner, $5.30; Binghampton: Lena Woodruff, $1.

Ohio—Lockland: W. C. T. U., $10; Marietta: Mrs. Harris' Blue Ribbon Society, $3; Mogadore: L. T. L. and W. C. T. U., $3.76; Newark: Mrs. J. M. Graham, $25; Randolph: Mr. and Mrs. O. Hutson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. York, $1 each; Dayton: Mrs. L. Turner, $2.35; Van Wert county: W. C. T. U., $20; Utica: W. C. T. U., $5; New Richmond: W. C. T. U., $5; Twenty-fourth district: $10; Perry township: W. C. T. U., $10; Cambridge: W. C. T. U., $15; Findlay: Mrs. Anna Shaeffer, $3.65; L. T. L., $3.65; Bay Shore: W. C. T. U., $4; Lyons: Mrs. D. Wilson, $1; Youngstown: W. C. T. U., $3.16; Delaware; Baby Band, Ethel Stout, $10; Venedocia: per Iama P. Jones, $7.25; Bethel: W. C. T. U., $1; Cable: A friend. $1; Oberlin: J. L. Burrell, $100; Mt. Oreb: W. C. T. U., $10; Plymouth: Mrs. L. E. Johnson, $100; Westerville: Miss Nancy Ramsay, $1.

Oregon—Waldport; B. of H. $1.25; La Grande: Mrs. Sade E. Clark, $1; W. C. T. U., $1.55.

Pennsylvania—Parker Ford: Sarah Pennypacker, $2.25; Mill Village: Mrs. P. L. Manross. $3.65; Darby: Mrs. Wm. C. Taylor, $3.65: Emsworth; Mrs. W. H. Phillis, $5; Johnsville: L. T. L., $3: Philadelphia: Miss M. Forsyth, $4; H. D. Allen, $5; Crawford county: W. C. T. U., $90; McEwensville: W. C. T. U., $5; Waterford: Y. W. C. T. U., $3; Altoona: Mary J. Elder, $2.93: West Alexandria: W. C. T. U., $3; Moscow: Baby Band, $2.20; North Coventry: Brethren Sunday-school, $5; Kenilworth: per Mrs. K. M. Wells, $7; Gulf Mills, Mrs. J. B. Clark, $3.65.

Texas—Victoria: per Miss Bella Grover, $4; Dallas: L. T. L., $15.50; Ryan: per Mrs. Wm. Woods, $6.

Vermont—Caledonia county: W. C. T. U., $50; Poultney: W. C. T. U., $10; Sharon: Baby Band, $1; Westfield: Mrs. A. C. Hitchcock, $2.

Washington—Tacoma: Central W. C. T. U., $26.05; Dayton: Mrs. Jane M. Range, $4.

Wisconsin—Eureka: W. C. T. U., $5; Stoughton: Baby Mildred Johnson, $3.65; Cumberland: Mrs. S. Phoenix, $5; Mazo Manie: per Mrs. R. F. Skiff, $4.60; Princeton: W. C. T. U., $4; Plainfield: W. C. T. U., $3.90; Winneconne: Mrs. E. A. Webster, $3.65; Oak Grove: W. C. T. U., $3.30; Waupaca: C. D. Symmes, $1; Patch Grove: Emily Garside, $1.91: Waukesha: W. C. T. U., $25; Lima Center: Mrs. H. R. Osborn, $3.65; Fox River: W. C. T. U., $2.

From Mrs. Drysdale, Liverpool, England, $7.39.

Seven dollars and fifty cents credited to the First Baptist Church, Chicago, belonged to another fund. Cora W. Charlton, Ft. Scott, Kansas, was credited with $3, it should have been Alice B. Chase, Ironton, Mo., $1.50 and Arlene B. Chase, Piedmont, Mo., $1.50. One hundred dollars credited to Arabella Merrill, Indianapolis, Ind., should have been, Arabella Merrill, Bilaspue, Ind.

ESTHER PUGH.
Custodian Gift Fund.

Kernels.

"SUPPOSE coal were to give out, what should we use in its place?" asked Hicks. "Poems," returned his editorial friend.

CHARLIE (who has been blowing the cornet for an hour):—Ned, do you think there is any music in me? Ned:—I don't know—there ought to be. I didn't hear any come out. —Tid-bits.

YET this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid,
By some great law unseen, and still Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
Not as I will. —Helen Hunt.

A LITTLE Bath girl who attended church Sunday fell asleep while the minister was preaching, and awoke just after the pastor had introduced a colored speaker who was making a few remarks. Not comprehending the change of personage, the little one whispered to her mother in an awestruck stage tone, "Mamma, what made that man turn black so quick?"

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

ONE OF THE FINEST.

Here is one of the many letters the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railway is constantly receiving in commendation of its superior facilities in the way of brand new coaches and sleeping-car accommodations:

"What you said about the cars on your road was true. They were the finest I saw on my way here, and the most roomy and comfortable. Should I have occasion to travel east, I shall try to use your part of the road, and shall recommend it to others."

It will be remembered this line is the only line in the west running the celebrated vestibuled compartment Pullman sleeping-cars, in which the price for exclusive use of a drawing-room is no more than that of a section in the ordinary sleeping-car. The dining-car service is beyond comparison and its express trains are run on the fastest schedules.

"What I Eat, That I Am."

What we put into the stomach becomes "us" in brain, muscle and blood. "Simple foods are the best." The "soul of wheat" contains the all-essentials of life, stripped of all injurious chaff and covering. "GRANULA," the perfect health food of the famous Dansville (N. Y.) Sanitarium, the product of Dr. James C. Jackson's fertile genius, is the "soul of wheat," and is the food of foods for nursing-mothers, invalids, children, the aged and the robust. It is thoroughly selected, properly cooked, and "fit for kings' banquets." "One can live on it forever and never miss meat." Trial box, 36c, by mail, postpaid. Address GRANULA Co., Dansville, N. Y.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Special Offer to Ladies—If you secure a Life Insurance policy in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association before January 1st, you pay no membership fee Write at once for particulars. Geo. E. Godward, Sec'y, 187 Broadway, N Y. City

Van Houten's Cocoa—Send for a can. See advts.

What "The Spectator" has to say About The Total Abstinence Life Association of America.

While the question of forming a company to insure impaired lives is being discussed, it might be well to consider what possible results can be obtained from a more careful selection of insurable lives.

The medical examination and family history record blanks now in use by American companies are probably as complete as necessary, though the matter of inserting in the medical examination of a certain company the question as to whether applicant was or was not baldheaded was argued not long since, the physician advising the insertion, saying that never during his practice had he known of a baldheaded man dying of consumption. But, to the improvement in the medical blanks, this article has no concern.

The matter of personal habits is the thought that prompts these lines. The manner of living determines in a great measure the length of time one will have to live. To make out the schedule of an applicant's daily diet for even a week would be as impractical as to diagram the plumbing of his place of residence in order to ascertain the sanitary risk he would be running. Neither would it be possible to get an exact account of his domestic jars in order to learn what mental and nervous troubles he might be apt to have during his expectancy. But there is one question that in itself alone makes a classification of insurable lives, i. e., "Are you a total abstainer from malt and vinous liquors?" Total abstinence from liquors is, as experience has shown, a great factor in prolonging life; but, besides this, the fact that a person is a total abstainer is an indication that he is temperate in all his habits. The objections to operating a life insurance company on a total abstinence plan are obvious, but it is being successfully done, and for the class of people who are eligible, it surely has advantages. Other things being equal, those who abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors, and are clean and careful in their habits of life (as total abstainers are apt to be) experience a lower death rate than the average.

There is to-day in Chicago an insurance association based upon this principle, which has made a rapid growth and an enviable reputation. The Total Abstinence Life Association of America, which although comparatively young, being now in its third year, shows remarkably low rate. It has over ten millions of insurance in force, and has accumulated a surplus of $64,000. Its mortality has been remarkably low, averaging less than forty per cent of the tables. The policy contract of this association not only requires total abstinence in the applicant as a prerequisite, but it remains a condition as long as the policy is in force. If a member at any time so much as drinks a glass of wine as a beverage, except it be under a physician's prescription as medicine, he forfeits all rights under the contract, and whatever premiums he may have paid into the association. This may seem harsh, but total abstinence is the only place where the line can be drawn. Temperance and moderation are very indefinite terms, but as to the meaning of total abstinence there can be no question. It is definite and certain. Many concerns have started out upon a temperance basis, but that word is so broad in its meaning that they have not achieved the success which might have been expected. With the increase of the temperance sentiment and practice, this association has a constantly widening field and its future points to a pronounced success.

CALIFORNIA.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 621 Rialto Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

THE Owen Electric Belt

AND APPLIANCES

For Men and Women

Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.

They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.

CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.

[Trade Mark.] DR. A. OWEN.

A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in

OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE

containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,

Main Office and only Factory,

191-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.

The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

Send to 319 W. 45th St., N.Y., for Samples of GARFIELD TEA Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

World's Fair.

To Families, Syndicates and Individuals Do you want comfortable accommodations cheap, during your visit to the World's Fair, within five minutes ride of the grounds? No Saloons. If so, write for particulars. WM. RICHARDSON, 196 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

BEST STEEL WIRE FENCING Woven Wire.

WIRE ROPE SELVAGE the BEST.

PRICES REDUCED. Sold by dealers. FREIGHT PAID. McMULLEN'S POULTRY NETTING. Newthing. No sagging! No bagging! Extra Heavy Selvage. The McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago, Ill.

GENUINE STANDARD SINGER Sewing Machines. Latest improved. Best made. Noiseless. Warranted 5yrs.

SAVE MONEY now while you can get a Complete set of attachments FREE. Adapted for light or heavy work. Light running. Nicely finished. Send for catalogue.

$35.00 Machine for	$9.50
$45.00 "	"	$14.00
$55.00 "	"	$18.50

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 353-366 Dearborn St. E. 149 Chicago.

Save Money By Buying BICYCLES WINTER PRICES.

To reduce '91 stock we offer	FORMERLY	NOW
Ormonde Safety 1¼ cushion tires	$140	$90
'90 Juno, (91 make) lady or man, all ball....	75	42
Mercury Diamond Safety, all steel "	100	57
40 in. Victor Jr. ball brgs. tangent [also other sizes]	37	17

50 other styles, & 200 2d hd wheels, greatly reduced. Cata. free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 G St. Peoria, Ill.

EPILEPSY OR FALLING FITS.

A member of my family haven been cured in a wonderful manner of this terrible disease, I will, for the benefit of humanity, gladly make known the remedy, FREE OF CHARGE, to any one addressing MRS. H. JONES, Box 606, Philadelphia, Pa.

COE & CONVERSE, Fort Atkinson, Wis.

Offer a large stock of best Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Vines and Plants adapted to the cold Northwest. Also choice Seed Potatoes. Send for descriptive priced Catalogue Established 1879.

PATTI A limited number of free scholarships in the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, Mass. Write for particulars to JAMES D. BALL, 36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass

DRUNKENNESS cured by using BOSTON DRUG. Absolute secrecy guaranteed or money refunded. Price $1. All druggists, or by mail, W. R. BROWN & CO. 105 Chauncey St., Boston.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory Agents Wanted. Also DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

BAKER'S COCOA Is ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used

Good Sense CORSET WAISTS Fit all ages. Infants to Adults. Are made of the best material and workmanship

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

"WHAT I EAT, THAT I AM."
GRANULA
AN INCOMPARABLE FOOD
Discovered by JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D., Founder of the Famous
DANSVILLE SANATORIUM,
Being the life-giving principle of WHEAT. Easily digested; readily assimilated by all. "A universal favorite wherever known."
Trial Package 36 cents, by mail postpaid. Send for our Pamphlet (free).
GRANULA MFG. CO.
DANSVILLE, N. Y.

BUY NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS
FOR
12 cts.
In order to introduce my splendid NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS everywhere, I offer postpaid
1 Pkg. Melon, 1 Pkg. Radish, 1 Pkg. Lettuce, 1 Pkg. Tomato, 5 Pkgs. Elegant Flower Seed, } Catalog Price 50 cts. Special Price 12 cts.
9 Pkgs. listed in no Catalog in America under 50c. 5,000 Acres used. Plants and Roses by the 100,000. Send 5c. for finest Plant and Seed Catalog published. Many Colored Plates.
Catalog and above 9 Pkgs., 17c.
JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.
JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.

SOMETHING NEW!
Price, ONE DOLLAR.
By Express, Prepaid, $1.25
Novelty Stretcher
To prevent Shrinking, while Drying, of Woolen Under-Vests and Drawers.
F. CADMUS, AGT.
700 Central Av., Camden, N. J.
(Send for Circular.)

PURE GUM RUBBER GOODS
Of Every Description; also,
Mackintosh Clothing;
also, Japanese Tissue,
For Mending Without Needle or Thread,
ELASTIC TIP CO.,
Headquarters 152-154 Lake St., Chicago.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.
Take a Course in the Sprague Correspondence School of Law (Incorporated.)
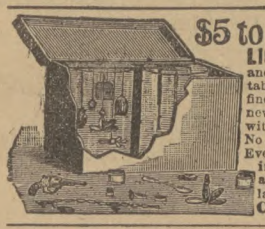
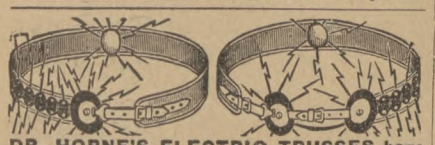
Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y,
DETROIT, MICH.
525 Whitney Block.



$5 to $15 per day, at home, selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating jewelry, watches tableware, &c. Plates the finest of jewelry good as new, on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. No capital. Every house has goods needing plating. Wholesale to agents $5. Write for circulars. H. E. DELNO & Co., Columbus, O.



DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

COITRE, or THICK NECK.
I have a Positive, Speedy, Harmless and almost Inexpensive Cure. Come or write to me at 28 Livingstone Street, Cleveland, Ohio.
It is no Iodine Smear. Cure made Permanent.
Dr. J. Caskey.

PILES CURED FREE. New, Painless. Certain. Gives instant relief and lasting cure—never returns. To prove it we will send a trial package FREE, to any address. PYRAMID DRUG COMPANY, Box 35, ALBION, MICHIGAN.

WORST CASES CURED TO STAY CURED IF UNCOMPLICATED BY ORGANIC DISEASE. Incurable cases declined.
ASTHMA
WE WANT NAME OF EVERY ASTHMATIC. Examination free by mail.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M.D.
BUFFALO, N. Y.

Publisher's Dep't.

Our Day.

Our Day for February should interest the thoughtful attention of our readers. It discusses "University Extension in the United States," to which theme Prof. E. J. James devotes several pages. "Robert Browning's Theology," as understood by the London Spectator, is fully set forth, and William Lloyd Garrison and Henry W. Putnam tell of "College Students as Rum-sellers." The Rights and Wrongs of the Red Men as outlined in the platform of the Ninth Annual Lake Mohonk Conference are given. Joseph Cook's Monday Lecture is on "Fruitful Faith Identical in all Ages." It is profound, and deserves general attention. In "Vital Points of Expert Opinion" living issues are discussed, as, for example, "President Harrison on Election Frauds," "The Approaching Unity of Nations," etc. Questions to Specialists are in this number answered by Henry B. Blackwell, and cover the question of suffrage.

Is this not enough to attract the attention of our readers? Send for sample copy. Price 25c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

That Spoon.

Miss Willard was a very generous patron of the W. T. P. A. during the holiday season, and numerous spoons were purchased by her for gifts. A peep into one of the letters received in acknowledgment tempts us to share it with our readers, as it so beautifully describes this souvenir:

"It is surely a most suggestive, historic and prophetic spoon, pointing back as it does to W. C. T. U. beginnings in the old Crusade church, and reaching forward to the silver globe encircled with the white ribbon.

"If there have been any thorns in the pathway of the W. C. T. U. and W. T. P. A., they are well concealed in the garlands of flowers which cover this emblem of their career from end to end.

"And what is more fitting than that the face of the beloved leader should be stamped upon the handle at the fulcrum of power, rightly indicating her true position in guiding the energies of the white ribbon army? It is certainly a remarkable likeness, for when I showed it to my little Theodora, she immediately recognized it as 'Miss Willard.'

"I shall always prize the gift for its artistic and symbolic value, for its intrinsic worth, but preëminently on account of the beloved giver, 'whom I love in truth.'

"MARIA H. GORDON."

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Glimpses of Fifty Years.

The following is taken from a private letter written by an Ohio minister:

"I bought 'Glimpses of Fifty Years,' and have just completed reading it, having read the larger portion twice. I cannot tell you how much it has broadened me out. There is nothing like reading the account of this vast (W. C. T. U.) work, written by one who has been connected with it from the beginning. I stand amazed. I want to know more about this great cause."

These are strong words, full of meaning. This letter shows the great power hidden in the book, and it is safe to say that placing it in the hands of every clergyman would turn the minds of many who are not now friendly to our cause.

"Glimpses" is now for sale by us, and we appoint our own agents everywhere in the land. Nearly 50,000 have been sold; 50,000 more should be sold. The demand continues. Good territory is still to be had. We want an agent in every local W. C. T. U. and in every town where there is no union. Thousands of dollars have been paid to those who have sold "Glimpses" the last two years; the commission we offer you now is sufficient to net you several dollars per day. In selling the book you would have a twofold object: Scatter temperance principles and earn some extra money.

Outfit consisting of Prospectus and full particulars how to become successful, sent for $1. For terms and territory apply to SUBS'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
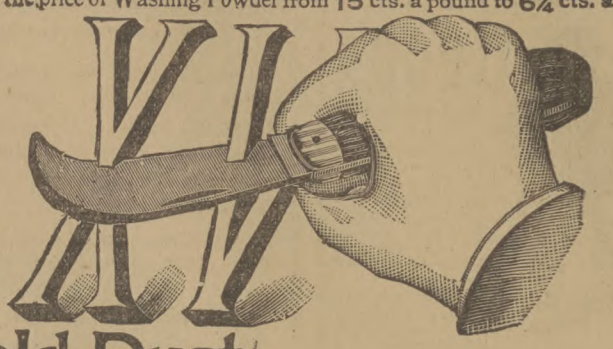
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

We Cut Down
the price of Washing Powder from 15 cts. a pound to 6¼ cts. a pound.


Gold Dust
Washing Powder
Has Done It. The daily cleaning and weekly washing can be BETTER done by Gold Dust Washing Powder than with ANY Soap or other Washing Powder, and at less than One Half the Cost.
Your grocer will sell you a package—4 pounds—for 25 cents.
N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

Arrangements are being made whereby
HARVEY
Will be enabled to accommodate thousands of WORLD'S FAIR visitors.
The Harvey Land Association
Who founded and platted the whole town, are now selling lots at original prices, and at figures that will be advanced very materially March 1st.
The Harvey Land Association
Have choice property
Near the factories.
Near the schools and churches.
Near the hotels and in the business district.
Nine factories in operation, others will soon be running.
Seventy passenger trains daily.
Twenty-five minutes' ride to the World's Fair Site.
Forty-five minutes to Union Depot.
Better chance for investment than any suburban town in the vicinity of Chicago.
In addition to our three large hotels one new hotel, "The Transit House," is just completed on 148th Street near Marshfield Avenue. Plans for another large hotel on the main boulevard near the Illinois Central Depot are reported by a strong company.
Build your own cottage; you can either rent it or sell it at a handsome profit. Send to us for plans. Sent free.
NOW IS THE TIME TO INVEST.
Send at once for our new pamphlet that will tell you what you want to know about the most successful temperance manufacturing town in the world.
Send all communications direct to us and save commissions to agents.
The Harvey Land Association
819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY, CHICAGO, ILL.

TORREY RAZORS
Are sold under a GUARANTEE to shave the hardest beard with ease.
TORREY STROPS
Are recognized as THE BEST for sharpening Razors the world over. If the dealer will not supply you, DON'T take any other, but send for Catalogue—tells how to select, sharpen, and keep a Razor in order.
J. R. TORREY RAZOR CO., P. O. Box 753 Z WORCESTER, MASS.

THE SECRET OF HER POWER
Is easily seen in her pure, sweet face. This is the FAVORITE SCOTCH AUTHORESS, ANNIE SWAN,
Whose books are having great sale on both sides of the ocean. True as truth, chaste, bright, and elevated, yet entrancingly interesting. Try "Maitland," "Gates of Eden," "Briar and Palm," "Who Shall Serve."
Or any other of her great stories. Either of the above one dollar, postpaid.
CRANSTON & STOWE, American Publishers,
CHICAGO, CINCINNATI, ST. LOUIS.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR
Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish.
FREE
St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

ASTHMA—DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE CURED never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial BOTTLE FREE
THE DR. TAFT BROS. M. CO., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble, Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

For the Ladies
35 varieties Sweet Peas, 50 of Asters, 50 of Pansies, 25 of Phlox Drum, 30 of Poppies, 25 Nasturtions 25 of Dianthus and Carnations Sample packet of 8 sorts 50c. For quality & price it may save you money. Catalogue mailed free when paper is named.
C. E. ALLEN.
Brattleboro Vt.

"HOME OF THE WHALEBACK."
$100 LOTS. Send for our paper on investments, "How to Get Rich."—Joseph L. Henvis & Co., West Superior, Wis.

RHEUMATISM IF YOU CANNOT FIND A CURE Add. DR. W. H. ROSS, Grand Rapids, Mich.

WANTED! A Christian lady in every township to do writing at home. Pleasant, remunerative work, requiring only a portion of each day's time. Address The Yale Hygiene Co. Agency Department, New Haven, Conn.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

Best & Goes Farthest.

"Samivel, my boy, They've a quarrelled. Yer mother-in-Law says there is Nothin' like Van Houten's Cocoa, An' the shepherd Sticks to his rum And water. "There's no need To drop him in the Water—butt after All, Samivel."

WELLER, SENIOR.

The Standard Cocoa of the World.
A Substitute for Tea & Coffee.
Better for the Nerves & Stomach.

Perfectly Pure.

The most eminent European Analysts and Doctors, certify that

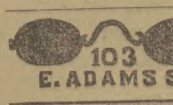
VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS

(a secret of the firm) highly develops the digestibility, strength and natural flavor and aroma of the cocoa bean.

Sold in 1-8, 1-4, 1-2 and 1 lb. Cans. If not obtainable, enclose 25 cts. to either Van Houten & Zoon, 106 Reade Street, New York, or 45 Wabash Ave., Chicago, and a can, containing enough for 35 to 40 cups, will be mailed. Mention this publication. Prepared only by Van Houten & Zoon, Weesp, Holland. al.



103 E. ADAMS ST.

BORSCH-OPTICIAN
CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT
SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms. St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

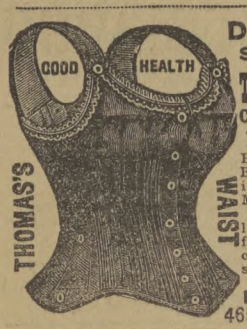
DO YOU HAVE TROUBLE in trying to keep your Bangs and Curls in position? If so send 50c. to A. B. AUSTIN Manufacturer of Toilet Specialties. 627 N. 8th St., Terre Haute, Ind., for a bottle of COLUMBIAN CURLING CREAM, which will turn your trouble into joy.

THE NEW IDEAL
EMBROIDERY MACHINE.
Perfectly Simple. Requires no Skill. Far Superior to any other.

3 sized needles with each machine.
We offer agents liberal terms. Send your address and get catalogue with new designs free. NEW IDEAL EMBROIDERY MACHINE CO., 44 S. Clinton-st., Chicago.

Normandie Plushes

Direct from the Mills.
For HAT and DRESS TRIMMINGS.
SPECIAL MERIT for Painting, Embroidery, and all kinds of Fancy Work. Send 10c. for 30 good sized samples (no two colors same shade) and price list of remnant packages. Price of samples deducted from first order amounting to $1.00. Agents Wanted. Pleasant and profitable work.
CONTREXEVILLE MFG. CO., 312, Grant Ave. Manville, R. I.



DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.
Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL.
Ladies $1.50
Misses 1.25
Children, 60
Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best.
Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory.
Agents wanted everywhere.
H. A. Thomas & Co., Mant's 465 W. Van Buren St. Chicago.

MISS BEACH'S
Curling Fluid
Keeps the hair in curl for days. No Odor or Sediment. Harmless. Gives vigor and beauty to hair, increases its growth. A toilet necessity. At druggists or sent prepaid 50c. LADY AGENTS wanted. DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago.

ESPEY'S FRAGRANT CREAM.

Cures Chapped Hands, Face, Lips, or any irritation of the skin. Is a scientific food and tonic for the skin and complexion. Prevents tendency to wrinkles or ageing of the skin. Keeps the face and hands soft, smooth and plump. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM warranted to hold the Hair in Curl, Bangs and Frizzes. Is absolutely harmless. Both preparations for sale by dealers everywhere. Inclose 2-cent stamp for free Card Case to P. B. KEYS, 405 State St., Chicago, Ill.

FOR MANY LADIES THE
KABO
ELEGANT SHAPES OF THEM AND MANY NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN CLOTHES BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP ALL GUARANTEED BY CHICAGO CORSET CO.
CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

Publisher's Dept.

The Young Crusader.

Have you seen the new form of The Young Crusader and noted the great improvement in it? If so, you must be pleased, for words of commendation are pouring in on every side. Read what others think:

I think the change in form and reduction in price a level-headed movement.
MRS. C. H. FITZGERALD.

Now I've Got It!

Inclosed find fifteen cents for one year's subscription to The Young Crusader. I always wanted the paper, but the price exceeded my pocket-book. GEO. H. W.

It is generally believed that the reduction in price will bring it within reach of all Loyal Temperance Legions, and its usefulness will thus be greatly increased.

The following testimony is from one of Chicago's ministers:

I have had the privilege of reading the "Quarterly Temperance Lesson" for Sunday, December 27, 1891, prepared by Helen G. Rice, and am so delighted with it that I think I owe it to the W. T. P. A. to say so. Such a lesson will not only be a help to the teacher and scholar in understanding the lesson text, but will be a lesson in Biblical hermeneutics. I may say I have a temperance sermon on this passage—the strongest passage in the Bible in favor of total abstinence and prohibition—which I intend to improve by attaching this exposition, so that I shall not miss it on future occasions. Every Sunday-school in the land ought to have The Young Crusader.

If all our W. C. T. U. women believed this, what an influence for good it would exert. Will you do what you can to secure this result?

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Delighted.

Mrs. J. C. Fernald, of Plainfield, New Jersey, who prepared the readings for 1891, called "The Home Protection Reading Course," writes as follows of our new outline for 1892:

I am delighted with the readings for 1892. You have a rich treat in store for the many readers and unions taking the entire course of this blessed year 1892.

Do not hesitate to call on me if I can in any way help in extending the course East or West. The prospectus is beautifully gotten up, and now the little circles of readers ought to be formed from every union.

Ever sincerely yours,
NETTIE B. FERNALD.

Good.

Here is the advice of one of our state superintendents of literature:

I am sure, dear sisters, if we all work together, as we can work, this year, in spite of all the unlooked-for hindrances that may come, will be the best, the most blessed, the most helpful in educating and making public sentiment of all the years.

Now, at the beginning of the year 1892, let us bend every energy to securing subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL, our state paper, Oak and Ivy Leaf and The Young Crusader, thus putting in the homes reading suitable for old and young, and bringing our work to many, as we cannot in any other way. Do not stop with asking just our members to subscribe, but go into every home and tell of our work and our publications. The wise distribution of literature should never be neglected. Use our new state reports in this work as well as papers and leaflets.

. . . . .

Let us study carefully and well the needs of this department of work, and do with our might what our hands find to do. In my report, given at state convention, you will find many suggestions, given to you as they come to me from various unions, and I hope they may be helpful to many.

Now, my sisters, let me hear from hundreds of our unions, and we will plan and work as never before. God bless you, one and all! Yours for work.

THE Willard Calendar for 1891 is a beauty. Send for one. Price 15c.
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Send for Color Samples and Price List. Patented February 23, 1886. Examine closely Stamp on inside of Waist.

TAKE NO OTHER.

THE GENUINE JACKSON CORSET WAISTS

ARE MADE ONLY BY THE
JACKSON CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.

The manufacturer's name is printed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of clasp in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. You should have one of them.

BE SURE AND GET THE RIGHT THING. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, SEND $1.25 FOR SAMPLE.

"The Crime of Not Insuring"

It may be plead in defense that old line companies charge so much and are so extravagant, and that assessment companies are so insecure, that it is no crime to refuse to trade with them. However that may be, here is a company which is NEITHER EXTRAVAGANT NOR INSECURE.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION . . . . OF AMERICA . . . . . .

Has its plans and rates adjusted to Insure at cost. Having only total abstainers as members, "cost" is reduced at least 30 per cent. under the charges of old line companies. Its expense account is $3.00 per $1,000—and cannot be more—instead of $9.32 per $1,000, the average of old companies. It has a guarantee fund of $64,000 securely invested. It stands almost, if not quite alone in paying one hundred cents on the dollar of every honest claim since its incorporation, July 24th, 1889. It has achieved, in two and one-half years, a success which old companies took about three times as long to reach. The company stands among business enterprises as an object lesson on total abstinence, which every good citizen should recognize.

WM. F SINGLETON, PRESIDENT.
902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Metal Tipped. EVER READY DRESS STAY Will Not Cut Through.

See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.

Acknowledged the BEST DRESS STAY On the Market

Made with Gutta Percha on both sides of steel and warranted water-proof. All other stays are made differently and will rust. Beware of Imitations. Take none but the "Ever Ready."

Manufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

SPECIAL DEPOTS. { MODEL DRESS STEEL CO., 74 Grand St., New York. BROWN & METZNER, 535 Market Street, San Francisco.

COLD BLAST.

NO ODOR Cold Blast & Co. CHICAGO

Feathers and Feather Pillows
ARE SOLD GUARANTEED
Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS
AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.
ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM.
IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MANUFACTURERS OF PAULTLESS BEDDING
CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

"BEAUTY" ACCOMMODATION WAIST No. 7,
WITH TAMPICO DRESS FORM

Made of finest Sateen, Soft Sateen bust and pockets for Tampico Dress forms. Removable Steels. Adjustable Shoulder Straps. Lace Back. Button Front, curved to figure at back.

PERFECT FORM, EASE AND SUPPORT.

Sizes 18 to 30 in in White and Black. Sent free by mail, for $1.50. Little Beauty Waists for children, the best. Catalogue free
E. H. HORWOOD & CO.,
51 Mercer St., - New York.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address, CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

WALL PAPER Attractive styles. Extremely low price. 100 samples sent for 8 cts. Prices 5c. to 30c. a roll. A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St. Phila. Pa.

Good Paper 3c
Gold Paper 15c
PEATS THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT sells the best, the cheapest & does the largest business in
WALL PAPER
If you have any use whatever for Wall Paper, do not fail to send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent Free. Agents sample books, $1. 136-138 W. Madison-st. Chicago.

Our Book Table.

OUR DAY, for February, is a specially valuable number. Its opening article on University Extension in the United States, by Professor James of the University of Pennsylvania, is a strong presentation of the need of educational agencies to help the mass of the people who have had simply the elementary instruction of the common schools. The report from the Minneapolis Union Ministers' Meeting is a résumé of the relations between Catholics and Protestants in connection with the public schools of two cities in Minnesota. It brings "no charge of bad faith against the Roman Catholics or any school board of the state," but insists that church and state must be entirely separate, and presents as an ultimatum, a resolution in which all true American citizens will concur: "We recognize the importance of the professed aim of the movement, and insist that there is a common Christianity and body of ethical truth upon which both Catholics and Protestants can and should unite for the moral education of the youth of our country."

"College Students as Rumsellers," is a review of the recent letters of William Lloyd Garrison, to the president and faculty of Harvard University. Though subsequent events give promise of complete reform, the topic is a timely one, touching as it does the evil of secret societies in colleges. The subject of the Boston Monday Lectures is "Fruitful Faith Identical in All Ages." It presents in a strong, terse way so familiar to those acquainted with these lectures, a series of propositions leading to the grand conclusion of "the Three in One, God blessed forever." The topic for specialists this month is "Woman Suffrage," and the stock arguments against it are ably answered by H. B. Blackwell, editor of the Woman's Journal, who is thoroughly competent to answer the objections in the case, and does so convincingly.

OUR DAY, Joseph Cook, editor. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, Chicago. $2.50 per year.

SAMSON AND SHYLOCK; A PREACHER'S PLEA FOR THE WORKINGMEN, HIMSELF A DAY LABORER, is the somewhat lengthy designation of a book of sermons by Rev. John Merritte Driver. The dedicatory sentences take the reader's breath away by their length and breadth, as they occupy a whole page. Simplicity of dress and modesty of self-assertion characterize the choicest books to-day, and the mode is one that may well obtain. However, when one has reached the subject matter of SAMSON AND SHYLOCK there are found many strong utterances for him who is the bone and sinew of our American civilization—the laboring man. Sermons like these cannot fail to "lend a hand" toward lifting the burden of oppression from the shoulders of those whose toil makes our earth a habitable dwelling-place. Published by the author, Ft. Wayne, Ind.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEMPERANCE CATECHISM, by Julia Colman, contains in a concise arrangement of questions and answers, outlines of the subject of temperance as referred to in the Bible. Busy teachers will find this pamphlet suggestive in their preparation of temperance instruction for the little ones. The National Temperance Society and Publishing House, 58 Reade Street, New York City.

FRIENDSHIP: Essays by Cicero, Bacon and Emerson. A beautifully bound volume, fair in its cover of white and gold, clearly printed on heavy paper, with the generous margins that book-lovers crave. Here we have the thoughts of three wise men upon that blessing without which this world would be but a dreary place. "He who, therefore, shall have shown himself . . . . as regards friendship, worthy, consistent and steadfast, such a one we ought to esteem of a class of persons extremely rare, nay, almost Godlike."—Cicero. "Men have their time and die many times in desire of some things which they principally take to heart—the bestowing of a child, the finishing of a work, or the like. If a man have a true friend, he may rest almost secure that the care of those things will continue after him. So that a man hath, as it were, two lives in his desires."—Bacon. "The essence of friendship is entireness, a total magnanimity and trust."—Emerson. Three fine portraits of the authors make the work complete. Albert, Scott & Co., Chicago.

HELL'S ARMORY, OR THE CURSE OF MALVERN, is the somewhat sensational and altogether misleading title of a story written in the interests of temperance. The book shows the evil wrought by the establishment of a saloon in a town hitherto free from that dread institution. Since in the book world there is a great deal "in a name," it is to be regretted that any writer should strive to attract attention to his work by those startling titles that have long ago been appropriated for the sensational, mischief-working books of fiction which are fit only for the flames. If startling pen-pictures of "the curse" must be made, may they not be titled in such a manner as shall give them nothing in common with those things, the spirit of which they must condemn? W. G. Hubbard & Co., Columbus, Ohio.

WEE WILLIE WINKIE, for 1891, edited by Lady Marjorie Gordon, is an odd little volume that has found its way to our Library Table from its home in London over the seas. Somewhat strange it looks in its English dress, so different from our American publications. WEE WILLIE is a tiny monthly paper for children, breezy and bright, with its puzzles and riddles, its Scripture Union Readings for each month, its prize competitions for short stories, suggestions for home drawings, and its interesting pictures. We are sure the English lads and lassies have enjoyed "WILLIE'S" monthly visits.

GILEAD GUARDS, by Mrs. O. W. Scott, is a wholesome story true to life, and dating back to war-times. It relates but little, and that incidentally, of the horrors of carnage, and holds none of the bitterness of politics. Mrs. Scott was born and "brought up" on a Vermont farm, and was, therefore, a genuine Green Mountain girl. The interest of the narrative centers about a New England village from whence the brave fathers and sons went out in answer to the nation's call. Its story is of the homes and dear ones left behind, of the days of waiting so full of suppressed anxiety, and of the home-comings when the "cruel war" was ended. The heroes and heroines are such as "stay by" when the book is closed; the picturing of New England life in its quaint restfulness is inimitable, and the helpfulness of the book throughout is genuine. Hunt & Eaton, New York City.

The theme of intemperance has been so thoroughly canvassed by writers of fiction, that a new arrangement of the familiar passages is hailed with pleasure. The author of THE JUNIOR PARTNERS has stepped aside from the usual course, presenting to the readers the mental and moral ruin wrought by the alcohol demon, treating inebriety as a disease rather than a fault, against which, for its overthrow, all the strength of eloquent reasoning must be brought to bear. The presentation of the hereditary sufferings consequent upon a wine-bibbing ancestry is thrillingly strong. The scene is laid in Chicago, and to those who know something of the drink-horror of that city, it is most realistic. There is a question in many minds whether the day for using fiction as a weapon in this great battle has not gone by, and the time rather to be given to doing than writing. There are other controversies as to the ways and means of going forth to conquer; but who will not welcome the physician who can prescribe for and cure the disease, who will not applaud the eloquence that can turn one erring heart to better ways, or bid God-speed to the ready writer of story or treatise whose wise words shall arrest the thought of one man or woman in the interest of the world-wide cause of temperance?

THE JUNIOR PARTNERS, by A. M. Rawson; published by J. Stuart & Company, San Francisco.

WON AND NOT ONE, by Emily Lucas Blackall, is a well-written story for young people, dedicated especially to the Y. P. S. C. E. and the Epworth League. The text on the title-page is suggestive of the plot, "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Those who read this unique sketch will do well to profit by the warning which it sounds. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago; 75 cents.

GREAT THOUGHTS OF THE BIBLE. By Rev. John Reid. Wilbur B. Ketcham, publisher to Cooper Union, New York, price $1.50. This is a book in which every thoughtful Christian must delight, and by which he will be benefited. Part I gives great thoughts of the Bible centering about the individuality of our Saviour; His reserve power; the pathetic element in His character; the surprises of His lowly birth, of His boyish appearance in the temple, of His baptism, His miracles, that He did not show himself to His mother after His resurrection; that He left no writings; the solitude of Jesus; His perfection; the suggestive power of His personality and His working through the imagination.

Part II deals with certain characteristics of salvation; groups of thoughts being taken from both the Old and the New Testament, and Part III treats of great thoughts in connection with certain characteristics of the saved. They are blessed with a vision of God who is to them a delightful presence, and with sinless character which enables them to see Him; with great power, and capabilities of endless progress, with the company of noble beings, and with pure joy, joy flowing from the absence of pain, from ongoing life, harmony, from trains of fine thoughts continually suggested, and from the worship of the divine God.

From the same publishers comes a quaint book, whose title looks like a section from a tea chest. It is the LOG OF A JAPANESE JOURNEY, by Tsurayuk. Translated from the Japanese by Flora Best Harris. Twelve original photogravure illustrations by the Japanese artist, Toshio Aoki. The present widespread interest in Japan has induced The Chautauqua-Century Press to put upon the market a unique volume which contains a bit of classic Japanese literature (tenth century), illustrated by a native artist, and printed and bound in close imitation of the books issued in Yokohama. The translation has been very cleverly made by Mrs. Harris, for years a resident in Japan. Price, 50 cents.

The introduction of temperance teaching into schools has aroused great interest in the study of physiology and anatomy; this has resulted in the publication, not only of many books upon the subject, but also of various anatomical charts to aid in the study. The latest which has come to our notice, and in some respects the most ingenious, is that of the Fowler & Wells Company, New York. It is accompanied by a COMPENDIUM OF ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY, compiled by M. C. Tiers, from authoritative sources. The work seems to have been faithfully done, and both chart and manual are accurate. The manikin is in compact, portable form, and gives a much better idea of human anatomy than could be gained without it.

BOYS OF THE BIBLE, by Thomas W. Handford. Published by F. C. Smedley & Co., Chicago.

It is dedicated "to the boys of America to whom the twentieth century looks for upright, patriotic men." Its opening chapter is attractive, the Bible characters are well chosen and graphically depicted, and its many illustrations of an unusually high order. An attractive feature is the introduction of standard sacred poems like N. P. Willis' "Lament for Absalom," and others.

GOD AND HOME AND NATIVE LAND, is the title of a beautifully bound gift book published by the Eastern Publishing Company, Boston, Massachusetts.

It is compiled by Rev. P. C. Headley, so well known by his biographies of Mary, Queen of Scots, Napoleon, Josephine, La Fayette, Grant, Sherman, and many others. Its introduction is by Miss Willard, which fact is sufficient to assure us of the excellency of the book, even were its compiler less favorably known.

The hand of a master is shown in making the selections; they are such as you would expect a man, whose long life has been spent in close and loving contact with the best literature, to make. They are taken from the classics in English literature and from the best living writers. Indeed we know of no book which contains so many favorite passages, new and old, so many quotable things, and so many which a mother would love to have her child learn as are contained in this book on "God and Home and Native Land." Its three divisions well illustrate our loved motto, and, as is fitting, a percentage of the profits of its sales go to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

THE CHINESE; THEIR PRESENT AND FUTURE. The author of this book, Robert Coltman, Jr., M. D., being deeply interested in the Chinese as seen in America, was desirous of becoming more intimately acquainted with them. He made application for, and was granted a commission as medical missionary physician, by the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. The above named book is an outgrowth of his subsequent travel and work in China. While not a volume that can be laid upon a library table for general reading, since it is written from the physician's standpoint and deals with the question of social evils in plain language, still to those who are working for the salvation of these brethren across the sea, there is much valuable information. The manners and customs of the people are described, also their dissipations and diseases, the work of missionaries among them, their business opportunities, and the outlook for the future. Excellent photo engravings illustrate the chapters.

F. A. Davis, publisher, 1231 Filbert Street, Philadelphia, Penn. $1.75.

SHORTHAND AND TYPEWRITING, by Dugald McKillop, is a book that ought to be in the hands of every amateur stenographer, and of every young man or woman who is contemplating the study of this profession; indeed, "experts" will find the book full of most practical suggestions. The writer has canvassed the whole field of experience through which an amanuensis must pass from the hour in which he says doubtfully, "I wonder if I would better take up stenography?" to that triumphant time when he can compass from one to two hundred letters a day in a manner entirely satisfactory to a critical dictator. The contents of this little book from preface to conclusion are evidently the result of careful thought and observation by one who knows whereof he writes. For sale by Fowler & Wells Co., 775 Broadway, New York. Price 40 cents.

METHODISM; A POEM. It is not often that church history is set to music. Perhaps it would be better if the phenomenon were more frequent. Discords might thus be subdued and harmonies magnified—a consummation devoutly to be wished. Charles Wesley Pearsons, A. M., professor of English literature in Northwestern University, has given us such a tuneful contribution to the literature of harmony in the great, warm-hearted, liberal-spirited church that grew so largely from the inspiration of Susannah Wesley, was systematized by her son John, and set to music by her son Charles. Professor Pearsons is well equipped for his task. A native of England, having in his inmost spirit a love for that great land and its beautiful Wesleyanism, of which he was from the first a son transplanted to the broader nation and reinforced thereby, sharing, through most of his mature life, the rich opportunities of university study, teaching and culture, he is an all-round Methodist, and worthy to strike the rich, melodious lyre of that friendliest church home. He has given us the history of the church, in a form attractive to the group he must have had in mind around the evening lamp in ten thousand homes of the kindly Methodists. Whoever reads his book will know all the salient features in history, biography, method and spirit of his beloved mother church. Professor Pearsons is not an historian only, but something of a prophet, and the outlook that he gives toward the far and widening future of our church is most helpful, heartening and touched with a true inspiration.

Happy is the boy or girl whom WIDE AWAKE visits each month; nearly as happy are those who have the bound volume for 1891 for a perpetual comfort "between whiles" through 1892. Here are the "Margaret Patty Letters," lovely stories by Elizabeth Cummings, Mary E. Wilkins, Susan Coolidge, Mrs. Butts, Emilie Poulsson, Maud Rittenhouse and ever so many more, and best of all "Five Little Peppers Grown Up;" then John D. Long gives charming bits of our nation's history, and so does Henry M. Brooks. Amanda Harris, William Churchill, Margaret Lake and others give natural history in pleasant doses, and poems and pictures, the cutest ever were seen, make up a delightful book. It is bound in a bright red cover and altogether appears most inviting. D. Lothrop Company, Boston, publish it, and McClurg, Chicago, sells it. $2.

OUR LITTLE MEN AND WOMEN, bound volume for 1891, by the same publishers, is just as charming and altogether lovely for the youngest readers, those who delight to have stories read to them.

MADONNA HALL, by Emily Clemens Pearson. Published by James H. Earle, 178 Washington street, Boston.

This is one of the many books finding their mainspring in the fear of Roman domination. It is a story well written in many particulars, yet containing some improbable incidents. MADONNA HALL is a nunnery near a large American city, presided over by a beautiful young lady, whose fortune largely endows it, "Mother Superior Clarissima." Here young women were coaxed, enticed, flattered, or threatened into becoming nuns, and though in the main well treated, were sometimes subjected to torture and to death by starvation in dungeon cells. Lady Clarissima was by accident once incarcerated in one of these dungeons and rescued from death at the critical moment by Hosea, the wonderful serving man, whose like the sun seldom shines on. Later on four of the holy fathers were caught in the same trap and came even nearer death thereby than the Mother Superior had done. These and other things wrought a wondrous change in the convictions of the leaders, and the story winds up with the marriage of Bishop Berlin, and Madame Clarissima, and the transformation of Madonna Hall into a ladies' seminary and a Christian home.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

—WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION— FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 6.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 11, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Table of Contents on Page 8.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Distinct earthquake shocks were felt in various parts of the Northwest last week.

Sir Morell Mackenzie, the distinguished English physician, died in London, February 3.

Nearly one hundred lives were lost in the burning of the Hotel Royal of New York City on February 7.

"Stormy" Jordan, Iowa's most notorious saloon-keeper, was arrested last week and placed in jail for violating the state prohibitory law.

Governor Thayer, of Nebraska, formally turned over the governorship of the state to Governor-elect Boyd, whose right to the office has been questioned on the point of citizenship.

The president of the Louisiana Lottery Company declares in a long letter of explanation that no other charter is wanted and that the present company will be dissolved at the discontinuance of its charter, in 1894.

Services were held over the remains of Rev. Charles Spurgeon at Mentone, on Thursday, after which they were conveyed to London for interment. Memorial services were held in numerous churches of the latter city on Sunday.

Arrangements have been made to convey 3,000 members of the London Polytechnic to the World's Fair in Chicago next year. It is estimated that the entire trip will cost but $115 for each, and this is to be paid in installments.

James G. Blaine positively declines the candidacy for the nomination as President of the United States, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Republican committee, refusing to permit his name to come before the Republican National Convention in June next.

The good people of Chicago, prominent among whom are the members of the Central and West Side W. C. T. U., have succeeded in influencing the city fathers to close the "carrousels" or merry-go-rounds, which have been endangering the morals of the young patronizers.

SPEAKER CRISP, of Georgia, is said to be a Southern Methodist, a total abstainer and in favor of prohibition.

MRS. HANNAH TORRANS, the mother of our Mary T. Lathrap, has been seriously ill with La Grippe. The ninety-five years of this aged saint at one time left little hope for a rebound from such a malady. Mrs. Lathrap canceled all engagements until the latter part of this month.

MRS. MARY T. BURT and Mrs. Mary H. Jones, presidents of the W. C. T. U's of New York and Pennsylvania, have been made trustees of the Temperance Temple, being thus associated with Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Carse and the other ladies whose names were given in a recent issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE memorial of the World's and National W. C. T. U., in favor of settling national disputes by arbitration, was presented in the Senate by Senator Dixon, of Rhode Island, and in the House of Representatives by Hon. Elijah A. Morse, who said: "Tell the ladies of the W. C. T. U. that it gives me much pleasure to be able to do anything for them." It is a notable fact that when the memorial was presented January 26, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, an effort was made to have it printed in the record; but a single objection would prevent this, and such an objection was made by Mr Butler, a member of the House of Representatives from the prohibition state of Iowa. It is well to note the record this gentleman has made for himself by objecting to a measure that looked to arbitration and peace.

HON. NEAL DOW has had La Grippe, but is recovering marvelously well for a man who will be eighty-eight in April.

"THE cruel war is over," and white-ribboners come in for their usual share of abuse and misrepresentation because they cried out for peace. Go on, brethren of the quill, it pleases you and doesn't in any wise hurt us.

THAT was a gracious deed of George M. Brackett, one of the leading men in Minneapolis, who, on the fourth anniversary of her husband's reformation, sent to Mrs. John G. Woolley a check for five thousand dollars. We would there were more wealthy men with wealthy hearts.

WE wish to correct a statement made inadvertently, in a recent issue, to the effect that the Baptist and Methodist publication societies do not issue temperance lessons this year. The statement was quoted to us as authoritative, but we are glad to make the correction, and add that the lessons published are both reliable and elaborate.

THE latest rallying cry of our temperancers is, "No more post-offices in saloons." It seems that there are at least eight in the beery metropolis of Milwaukee, Wis., and plenty elsewhere in the Badger state and in the South. Crusaders, "let no guilty man escape." It is too late in the day to tolerate liquor and letters in the same shop. Will not our Brother Wanamaker move in the matter? We believe he will and that right speedily.

THIS communication from C. F. Silliman, of Baltimore, Md., explains itself, and is one of the many congratulatory messages to the National President, concerning the new reform movement:

"DEAR PIONEER OF THE 'NEW':—All hail the bold and fearless resolutions! ! The general recognition and discussion of these things by people in all walks of life is the only thing to save this republic from self-destruction. A million 'great hearts' say 'amen,' and we 'second the motion.' Ten millions more 'call for the question.'"

CHARLES CURTIS, founder of the famous Ladies' Home Journal, of Philadelphia, and Edward W. Bok, its editor, called at our office last week. Mr. Bok incidentally mentioned that orders had been given to the artists who so handsomely illustrate this great magazine, that no picture dressed décolleté, and none without a "breathable waist" could be presented to their 700,000 readers. This one fact should make many friends for the magazine among women of sense. Would that every editor of an illustrated magazine would prove himself to be equally scientific and brother-hearted.

OFFICES for the president of the World's W. C. T. U., the corresponding secretary and treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., the Woman's Lecture Bureau, and also for the Illinois state and the Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago, have already been selected in the Temple on the eleventh floor, where the air is clear and the outlook desirable. The business committee of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association has voted to secure rooms for its editors, business manager, sales clerk, etc., in the Temple, but the immense presses and composing rooms of the Association will be in another building.

THE January number of the English edition of the Review of Reviews has sketches and pictures of the president of the World's and National W. C. T. U. and of the president of the British Women's Temperance Association, setting forth the work of the society in such a way as to be most helpful to us in our world circuit. We thank Mr. Stead and assure him that the white-ribboners are among his most loyal friends, doing what they can to spread the knowledge of this marvelous paper, which, although but in its second year, has reached a circulation of over 200,000. It is the Eiffel tower of journalism, giving the widest outlook of any single paper in the world upon the moving pageant of humanity, and always with the telescope of reform well in hand.

WHITE ribbon women should not be slow to see the significance, to our preventive work, of the announcement that Chicago's first college settlement has been established by the Northwestern University, Evanston. Graduates of this institution will reside in this settlement and conduct courses of study and classes, superintend reading-rooms, boys' clubs, girls' clubs, young men's debating societies, etc. This is the first serious attempt of a university to reach out its helpful hands to the uncared for and untaught in the Electric City. Men and women of high talent and position are associated in this enterprise. In 1858 we first knew the University as a high-class Methodist institution teetotally closed to women; about ten years later its doors were opened wide, and women timidly went in; twenty years passed, and Mahomet proceeds to go to the mountain. The great school puts many of its best advantages at the beck of the poorest, and under the magic of "University Extension," domiciles itself, by means of this new student settlement, in the midst of mental and moral darkness, that it may help to scatter light. Is there not a God in Israel? Does not the gospel win its widening way?

THE Sunset Club of Chicago is an American institution with twelve hundred members from among the most forceful classes, including business and professional men who are especially interested in the great questions of the day. Unfortunately for themselves, they do not admit women as members, but we hope this oversight will ere long be remedied. On the evening of February 4 they had their first "ladies' night," at the Grand Pacific Hotel, where six hundred ladies and gentlemen sat down. One of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL was invited to preside, and Lady Henry Somerset discussed "How would you uplift the masses?" A most valuable paper was read by Mrs. J. M. Flower, the only lady member of the Chicago school board; a stirring speech was made by Rabbi Hirsch, and there were other papers by G. A. Schilling and Miss Jane Addams. The last named lady is known for her philanthropic "Settlement" at Hull House. Impromptu speeches were made by Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, Professor Orchardson, Lawyer Brown, L. H. Ayme, and "Tommy" Morgan, a noted socialist. Henry D. Lloyd had a fable on "Capital vs. Labor," that we shall publish soon. There was any amount of snap in all these settings forth of the greatest among live questions, and the outcome seemed to be that the masses are going to rise anyhow and need no extraneous help, if only the capitalists will leave them alone, ceasing to place artificial burdens upon them in the form of National Banks, unrighteous land laws, grinding monopolies, and the like of that. Lady Henry Somerset spoke out strongly against the drink traffic as among the heaviest burdens borne by the wage-worker. One of the speakers quoted the answer given by a bright colored boy to General Fisk when he spoke before a group of freedmen in the South, just after the war and asked the question, "What shall I say to our people at the North about you all?" The little fellow looked out from under the torn brim of his shockingly bad hat, and said, "Gineral, tell 'em we is risin'." This was declared by one of the white ribbon speakers to be about the position of the masses to-day, and the question would soon be, "How are 'the classes' going to keep their heads above water, for the deluge is a mile high, and not a mile away." The program of the evening was planned by Mr. Joseph W. Errant, secretary and factotum of the Club, a wide-awake young lawyer who is married to a woman physician, and whom the ladies have to thank for this pleasant "ladies' night." Surely he deserves to be dubbed Knight Errant from this time on.

Contributed.

IN BONDS.

BY MARCIA KUNNEDEY.

It is so hard to wait, and hear
  The wheels of life whir on and on;
To wait in idleness and tears
  With folded hands, their cunning gone;
To hear the tramp of workers to and fro
In busy toil that I no more may know.
O soul! Bow down unto the Father's will,—
To some He saith "work!" To others, "be still!"

It is so hard to wait, and see
  The grain wave in the harvest field;
The sickle lying by that we no more,
  No more may blithely, deftly wield;
Perchance, beloved ones pining for the store
Which these frail hands can bring to them no more.
Heart, take comfort! In fields thou canst not see,
The Lord prepares a harvest rich for thee.

It is so hard to wait, and see
  Life's castles falling one by one;
The brightest dreams that e'er could be
  Like snow wreaths melting in a summer's sun;
To know the earthly good I tried to grasp,
Has swiftly, surely, slipped my eager clasp.
O soul! In vain thou'st dreamed thy visions fair;
Heaven's still unchanged, turn thy affections there.

RECOLLECTIONS OF NOTED MEN AND WOMEN.

II.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

The Home of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

I was recently told by one who had just seen the Teton range for the first time, that there at last was his ideal mountain. Switzerland had not satisfied him, nor even the marvelous line of white-tipped ultra-marine that stands sentinel over the plains of Lombardy. As a child he only knew mountains from the first page of the atlas, where all the highest of the world stood in a row like old-fashioned sugar loaves. In the bristling, serried peaks of the Teton he found that rare delight—the realization of his childhood's fancy. To most of us, I think, the standards of early years survive to some extent in our hearts; the things that childhood knows stand as the architype its name will afterwards recall. It is this consciousness in our experience that makes us curious as to the early surroundings of famous men and women, and this interest leads me to describe that sweet corner of Herefordshire, where the childhood days were spent of her whose name will live until the end of days, as a great woman-voice crying in the wilderness of this century's darkness It is a corner of the world inexpressibly dear to me, for it is always pleasant to sing the praises of home, and to have had so near a countrywoman as Elizabeth Barrett Browning is a prized honor.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

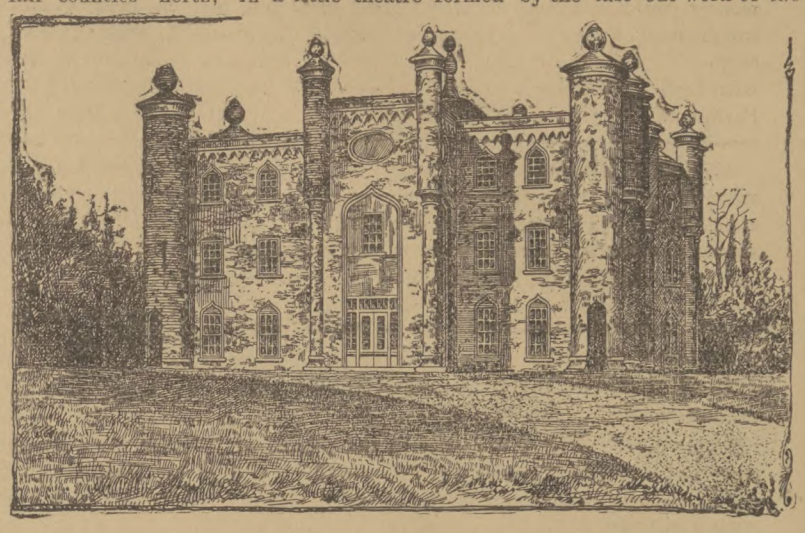
"The beautiful, beautiful hills" that gave their name to the growing town of Malvern rise on the eastern side in the center to their highest, and are crowned by an old camp that the Britons are said to have built as a refuge in a land of enemies. North and south of this runs the range—exquisite in outline and in all the delicate tints that the sun can show of light and shadow or on golden gorse and sheep-grazed grass. Here was the old Malvern Chase, where the deer were wild and where beech and oak trees grew, and the much prized Spanish chestnut that went to build the town hall in neighboring Ledbury. The last of the primeval trees now linger round my home in Eastnor Park that starts half way down the western slope; higher than this the trees hardly venture, a few only stand here and there, bent and stunted by the wind. The stags are no longer wild, the savage laws that kept them so are long since dead. Perhaps the tameness of the deer is an emblem of our gentler days.

From the ridge one sees "seven fair counties" north, south and east; in the distant west the horizon is broken by the deep blue mountains of South Wales. For a few miles on the side of Eastnor the land is still troubled and tumbled in wave-like undulation as if the mountains were slow to die away into the plain—a country of rolling fields and little valleys that hide the singing streams; of modest slopes upon which the rambling hedges climb between the orchards. Sheltered and overshaded by the oak branches of many a gnarled and aged tree, stood Hope End, the fantastic house built by the father, with its mimic domes and minarets,—an eastern palace in the homely fields of England, where Elizabeth Barrett Browning spent her early years. Let her own words paint the picture of this scene:



HOME OF ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

"Green the land is where my daily
  Steps in jocund childhood played,
Dimpled close with hill and valley
  Dappled very close with shade—
Summer snow of apple blossom—
  Running up from glade to glade."

Ledbury itself, like the most of English country towns, clusters round its one wide street. It is true that from this branch off little side lanes leading into courts and yards, and alleys narrower than themselves, where the women talk across through the windows on either side; and half way up the street there crosses the Eastnor road, flanked by good houses until it strikes the larger highway; but the main street is the core of Ledbury—almost Ledbury itself. It is a straggling thoroughfare at best, and the houses have followed it out into the country as if loth to part with so valued a friend. Sometimes it narrows up to the ordinary proportions of an English country road, but it is, as a rule, wastefully wide, till in the center one would think the village green of older days had been macadamized. Here, like an island in the market place, stands the old town hall perched high on its sixteen great legs, built three hundred years ago or more, of broad black beams, with panels of white plaster in between, and roofed with thin, flat stones of a dark color much overgrown with yellow lichen. The pillars on which it stands are but roughly dressed trunks of chestnut trees, with low stone pedestals on which the old folks sit on market days. An open staircase leads from below with a half curl through the floor into the room above, where the little light that struggles through the latticed windows hardly shows the quiet beauty of the raftered ceiling.

In this sweet solitude of country life Elizabeth Barrett Browning spent her early years. We have always believed that a peculiar poetry and an intense love of nature is inherent in the people of the hill districts. At fifteen years of age her delicate and sensitive nature seemed to have drunk deeply of the exquisite poetry of the scenes in which she lived. At fifteen years of age she had written verse upon which already was the true stamp of genius. Her father, to whom she referred as "my public" and "my critic," shared the enthusiasm that burned in her young soul, and hand in hand through the shady gardens and under the white shower of falling apple blossoms, when the spring tints are softest and the birds sing sweetest, they would often wander while Elizabeth recited those thoughts which had come to her childish imagination, and that were the heralds of the winged inspiration which would afterwards take such a hold upon the imagination of the world. Her physique was always delicate, and her organization highly sensitive and nervous. Slight and fragile in figure, she has often been described by those who saw her as one whose face it would have been difficult to forget, with its large, tender eyes and shower of dark curls, its expression of quiet, gentle sadness lit by a smile rare and beautiful. Her early studies were directed by Mr. Barrett. She devoured the works of Shakespeare, and as a Greek scholar she was soon proficient, and was familiar with all the Attic writers in tragedy and comedy.

The solitude of her life, and the monotony enforced by delicate health and the quiet country surroundings, insured her a long period of uninterrupted study. In 1837 her life was endangered by an illness following on the effects of the shock caused by her brother's death. During the period of seclusion which followed she assiduously cultivated the gift which was afterwards to render her immortal.

In the little town of Ledbury Elizabeth Barrett first saw those scenes of wretched degradation and despair that set her child's mind wondering at the mysteries of life and poverty and pain. The parish church, nestling in a little theatre formed by the last out-work of the Malvern Hills, might sound the note of peace and goodwill to men from its time-worn bell in the solitary tower, but to her young heart the cruel facts of childhood's untended misery, the woe of the unfriended poor, must have rung with a louder note in protest against the emptiness of that ineffectual message.

Sixty years ago the world was mostly deaf to that message of brotherhood. It hears it slowly still, but, thank God, to listening ears the sound is clearer. The new commandment that "ye love one another" is ever new, though perhaps there seem to be more listeners now than when Elizabeth Barrett was a child. When this century was young the band of those who did the work of love was small. They had been called into being by the movement that the clarion blast of John Wesley's voice had inspired. Wesley woke the English world from its lethargy, or rather death, for the knowledge of God was dead in all the land in those days. He taught England to measure her doings by the standard of Christ's teaching, and the birth of philanthropy was the result. To this England owes the anti-slavery work of Wilberforce and the agitation that remedied the infamous action of the poor law. Yet small as was the band of earnest reformers, Mr. Barrett was one of them. In Ledbury he used to hold meetings, speak and pray with the unshepherded people of that place at a time when, for a man of wealth to concern himself in such things, was unusual and unknown. And by his side, the old people of the place still say, the large, wondering childish eyes used to gaze, with upturned, reverent love, drinking in the inspiration which afterwards was tuned to such holy theme, for Elizabeth was his constant companion. To quote Shelley's words, he was "the friend of the unfriended poor." There are still those alive in the town who heard him, and gained a sight and hope of something better from his words. His monument in the parish church, in a corner alongside a glorious decorated tomb of the fourteenth century, is a reminder to us of this day of the work of one who strove to revive the simple faith in God that of old-time held Christendom. It was impossible that the daughter of such a father should not have early imbibed a similar sympathy with the lot of the downtrodden, and just as the memory of Herefordshire scenes remained too strong upon her for all the splendid beauty of Italy to dim, so, too, the lessons learned in Ledbury street stayed with her as the undertone of her genius.

Ledbury was not only Elizabeth Barrett's birthplace, but, so to speak, the place of her baptism into the cause of human brotherhood. It is now eager to repair the long-marked omission, and to erect a memorial to her who shed such luster on her native town. At Eastnor Castle she often spent long, sunny days walking the terraces that lead down to the still water, or lying idly in the boat as the ripples of the lake lapped against the reeds and rushes that grow along the bank. No treasure is more prized there now than her poems given to a member of the family with her own handwriting inscribing a dear friend's name and her own autograph.

Her youth was saddened by ill-health; suffering herself, she learned to pity the suffering around her, and to the romantic tenderness that is so often the mark of those whose birth has been among the mountains, there came this deepening of the shadows of life. This kinship with the woebegone her writings everywhere proclaim, and looking back to those who, in the immediate past have been the inspiration of whatever is best in the present age, Elizabeth Barrett Browning will stand out as a central figure. She was the first woman who told through poetry, the pathos of struggling human life, and she understood, as Hood understood, that the lover's song and even the whispers of Nature are less pathetic than the grinding toil under which suffered the uncomforted poor; and to her was given, probably more than to any other, to arouse our country, and indeed the modern world, to a sense of all the great child suffering which should appeal to every woman's heart. Her poem on the "Cry of the Children," was almost simultaneous with Lord Shaftesbury's great speech on child labor in Parliament; that poetry and prose roused England, their echo has not grown fainter with the years.

The works of Elizabeth Barrett Browning will ever stand foremost in the ranks of the English poets, not alone as works of art, but as an instance of consecrated genius. The character she gave then she has expressed in these lines: "We want the touch of Christ's hands upon our literature as it touched other dead things; we want the sense of the saturation of Christ's blood upon the soul of our poets, that it may cry through them in answer to the ceaseless wail of the sphinx of our humanity, expounding agony in renovation. Something of this has been preserved in art when its glory was at its fullest; something of this may be seen among the Greek Christian poets—something which would have been much with a stronger faculty." The sacredness of her art was, perhaps, the secret of her success. She saw in the human heart a fount of inspiration, because she read clearly in all its struggles, in all its difficulties, in all its blindness, its intimate relations with God. There is through her poetry a tenderness and pathos not only womanly, but born of the great gift to suffer for the sufferings of others. She grasped, at a time when such ideas were rare as they are precious, the true position of woman.

In her thirty-seventh year she married Mr. Browning, and her life from that time spent under the sunny skies of Italy, was cloudlessly happy, save for the shadow of sickness and ill health which rested upon it. She has left a legacy to this age of beautiful truth clothed in beautiful language, but above all, perhaps the truest and highest that she has said, is embodied in that which seemed to be the very credo of her writing, and which we take as one of the sweetest lessons taught by one of the greatest poets of our day—great because it is the echo of the teaching of one who was holiest among the mighty, and mightiest among the holy.

"Rise, woman, rise
To thy peculiar and best altitudes
Of doing good and of enduring ill,
Of comforting for ill, and teaching good,
And reconciling all that ill and good
Unto the patience of a constant hope:
Thy love
Shall chant itself its own beatitudes
After its own life-working. A child's kiss
Set on thy sighing lips shall make thee glad;
A poor man served by thee shall make thee rich;
A sick man helped by thee shall make thee strong;
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest."

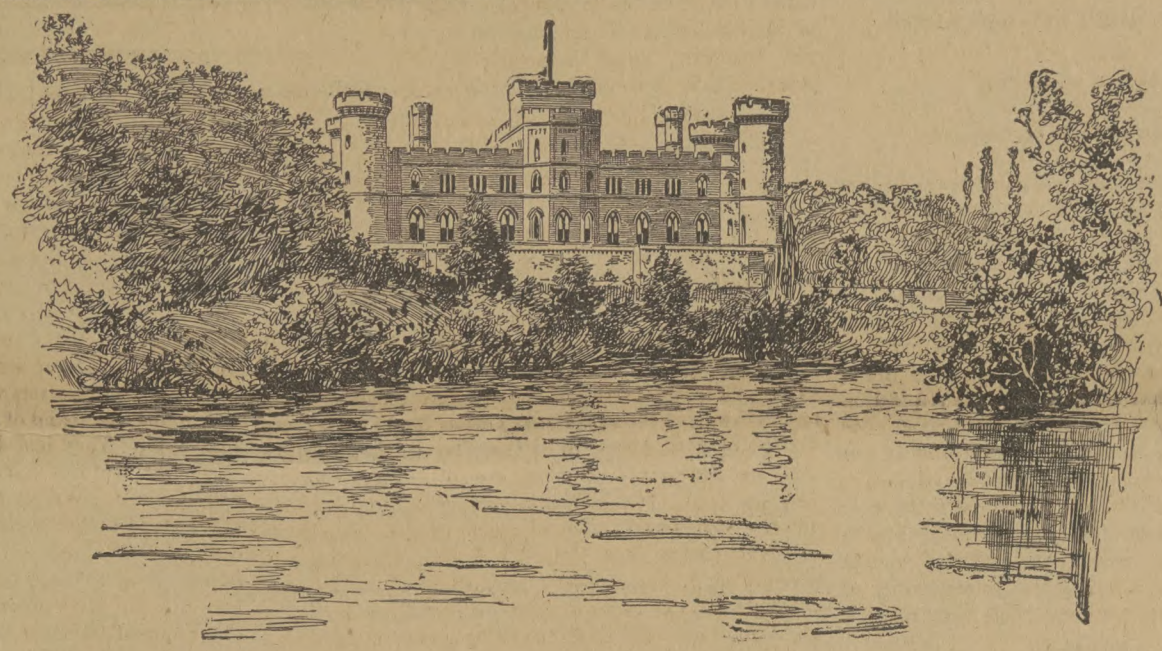
THE GREAT MASS-MEETING AT MINNEAPOLIS.

BY LOUISE MERRIAM TIMOLAT.

As one sits thinking over these past few days of temperance festival here in Minneapolis, the events come rushing in upon her so overwhelmingly, that trying to tell of it will result in beginning in the middle and coming out at both ends. Minneapolis has had such a stirring as must keep the waters moving for a long time. The Christians are strengthened with fresh inspiration, many sluggish thinkers enlivened, and many more who were sleeping sweetly upon all subjects pertaining to anything so remote and uncertain as a hereafter, are waking and stretching and coming out of their slumbers, in an uncomfortable realization that they must think and decide. Is it not blessed that God gives to His people such leaders as these beautiful women, Frances Willard and Lady Somerset, and such a man as John G. Woolley? Wealth, power, brain, talent, hearts, life and all are His! Are we not blessed that they came to us and pleaded for Rest Island?

The name of Lady Somerset was already revered and loved among us, because of her life of loving service, the life in which relinquishment is infinite gain. On the evening of her welcome to us, at the Swedish Tabernacle, if any came attracted by rank and title, they listened to words of such sweet-voiced pleading, simplicity and consecration that they lost sight of all else, and in their reverence and honor could have kissed the hand of "a servant of Jesus Christ, Lady Henry Somerset." She told us of the liquor traffic abroad, its great power, the degradation resulting, and pleaded with America to free herself from its bondage, ere her women, like England's wives and daughters, were swept into the onrushing flood. In her gentleness, her sweetness, she convinced while she won hearts.

Miss Willard and Mr. Woolley had a slight altercation, which in their usual frank and honest style they carried on and settled "before folks"—Mr. Woolley holding that Miss Willard was also to make an address, Miss Willard as firmly holding that she only came with Lady Somerset. Every one else was so loyally on Mr. Woolley's side, that a compromise was effected, and in a brief address, "brave, beautiful, gracious, noble, royal Frances E. Willard told why she places Rest Island at the head of all recent methods of rescuing drunken men."



EASTNOR CASTLE.

Sitting in that audience, looking upon those women, listening to their tenderly-voiced, noble words, I thrilled with the consciousness that I was a "crank." It is a very beautiful thing to be such a crank that you can breathe an amen to their thonghts, and praise God that they live, and that the inspiration of their lives can touch yours.

The Minneapolis Tribune said that "John Woolley was on the platform, but he was forgotten." I am sure that most of us were remembering him all the while—we who knew him in the old life, and who love him in this new life which he lives for Christ, and gives for the help of struggling men.

After this great gathering of Friday evening of the 29th we knew there would be a grand meeting on Sunday afternoon, January 31, the fourth anniversary of the day on which he who was blind, saw and was made whole and so came to be "a servant of Jesus Christ, John G. Woolley." It was a well-planned meeting; every detail systematically arranged. The people were to be quietly, politely received by the ushers, and given sittings. We who are addicted to temperance meetings and Christian gatherings, and therefore enjoy seats toward the front, went early, and enjoyed for an hour a season of standing with the crowd that spilled over the sidewalk into the street. When at last the doors were opened there was no ushering to be done—not one of them had a chance to be graceful once; they were simply swept down the aisles with the rushing crowd, the great church filling till aisles, galleries, platform, steps, organ loft, side rooms, vestibules were packed with eager crowds, and the streets without blockaded with disappointed folk.

There was nothing to be done but open another church; there was no time to interview the elders or consult prudential committees, and have a vote on it; after all it only needed a key, and the great Westminster Church across the corner was thrown wide for the overflow. But it could not hold the balance of them, and five hundred people could not see or hear at all. The generous, gracious speakers formed an itinerancy, and both audiences heard all three of them. They pleaded again for Rest Island, they pleaded again for all Christian work, for the temperance cause, and for those who need our love and help.

Never was such a meeting in Minneapolis; never before hearts opened so wide in love and helpfulness; never such an ovation of joy and praise to God for the salvation of him who in tenderness and pathos told again the story of that birthday morning on which he dedicated himself anew to the service of his Saviour for all his life. Women were not ashamed of their tears for men wept with them.

There were greetings by letter and telegrams from coworkers and loyal friends received and read. The rich voices of a male quartette delighted us, and the vast assembly in worship sang, "Rock of Ages" and "Stand up, stand up for Jesus." It was a great day for the temperance cause, a great day for the Rest Island mission. It was a blessed day to many, and it ended at the Salvation Army Hall where Mr. Woolley spoke with power and Lady Somerset and Miss Willard never entreated more winningly than in their tender words of sympathy with the Army workers. I am told, too, there was a morning service that was blessed, when they spoke to the employés of the Coffee House; there are enough of them to make quite an inspiring congregation.

And now, they are all gone, these three dear people, and the rest of us are "sort o' " dazed and numb at the memory of it all. We can only tell a little about it, but the greatness of it has entered into our lives, and like those who have come and gone, we lift our faces and ask, while we wait for His voice in answer, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Minneapolis, Minn.

LOYALTY AND GUIDANCE.

"Loyalty is, perhaps, the word that has in it the best definition of what a Christian should feel toward Christ. In the old war I remember seeing a man coming across a turbid river, where it seemed to me foolhardy for him to dare to put his horse into the stream. I watched them with the utmost intentness and interest. Sometimes they were invisible. Sometimes the man was off the horse and clinging to his mane, but even though they partly floated down the stream always they were making the point of the shore where I was standing. I went down to the water's edge, I waded in as this strong man approached on his faithful steed. I grasped his bridle as, almost breathless, he made the shore, and spoke to him; but he simply waved his hand, and as the horse toiled up the bank the rider cried out to me, "I have a message for the General. Good-bye!" He had no thought of himself, or of the splendid heroism he had manifested, but the energies of his whole being were concentrated upon that one trust imposed in him. He had a message for the General, and he was carrying it at his best speed. But our case is different in one particular. We have a message from the General, and we are to go forth as to war, carrying that message to all who will listen, and remembering, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.'"

"There is a reason for the popularity of such hymns as 'Guide me, O thou Great Jehovah,' and 'A Shelter in the Time of Storm.' We pray and ask God's grace for the crisis hours of life. But if we would be so joined to Him in each day's small temptation, each minute decision, each momentary annoyance, vexation, grief and greed, He would so transform, exalt and build us up with heavenly bone, muscle and tissue, that when the crisis came we should find it no crisis at all. The ship built in the quiet harbor, each plank tested, each timber sound, each iron without flaw, is the ship that will find itself at home on the crest of the wave or in the trough of the sea, for it was put together with all that in view, and it will take the crisis as a swimmer takes the wave. Let us then build our characters for eternity and then its dawn will be fully welcome, and all the way so safe, so sacredly serene."

Correspondence.

FROM OUR ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARIES.

My Dear Lady Henry:—We are just finishing our work in Port Elizabeth, and our hearts have been deeply stirred at the need of woman's temperance efforts here. We have had a most blessed visit to this place; formed a W. C. T. U. among the Kaffir women at the native Wesleyan Church, numbering nearly fifty. They were most touching in their expressions of interest in their work, of gratitude that God had sent us to them. We have asked Mrs. McIntosh, well known and beloved here for her Christian activities, to take the presidency, though it seems cruel to press the leadership upon one so busy.

I have just had my first experience in talking through an interpreter, the native pastor. Have written a letter of full instruction to aid him in guiding the infant society, for he is deeply interested, and of course will have to help much. Dr. Bushnell joins me in most faithful and earnest love for you. We are both very well and happy in the work. May the Holy Spirit abide with and in you forevermore. Yours faithfully, Elizabeth W. Andrew.

Port Elizabeth, So. Africa.

Dear Union Signal:—When we were to sail for South Africa we wrote to the women of the W. C. T. U. that we were coming, and immediately followed our letter, not knowing how they would receive us, but trusting that all would be well, and so it was. The instant our ship came up to the dock at Cape Town, a long procession of gentlemen and ladies, headed by the United States Consul, came aboard and bade us welcome.

Receptions and meetings followed in quick succession, and we traveled through Cape Colony, the African Republic, Transvaal, as it is often called, Orange Free State and Natal. Visiting the leading towns and cities we were everywhere well received, and had large meetings.

Their counties are much larger than they appear on the map, and the journeying exhausting. The few railroads are rough. We were obliged to proceed mainly by wheel-carts and coaches almost as crude as a home lumber wagon. We traveled two hundred miles at one stretch, to reach Jonestown, the headquarters of the gold regions in the Transvaal. It is a wicked, gambling, mining community, the people hospitable and kind, and one saloon to every thirty-four inhabitants. The drink bill of the town at one time was $40,000 a week, for about 15,000 inhabitants, over two dollars apiece for every man, woman and child.

Things are in an entirely crude state in South Africa, and I imagine there is more wickedness and less enterprise than anywhere else on the globe. Europeans have been as long in that country as in America, yet the contrast is very great as to enterprise. With every facility for making a great, wealthy country, minerals abound of every sort in the ground and a climate for every variety of fruit, and a chance for two or three crops in a year, and an ocean swarming with fish, yet the people are content to live in a most wretched manner. Wild beasts torment them, and with coal under their feet in the ground, they are content to pay about two dollars a bushel for it sent from England.

The fruit falls from the trees and decays on the grass, while they pay sixty cents a can for canned goods from America. With the natives all about who can be hired for a few cents a day to work, the white man grows lazy and willing to suffer any amount of discomfort rather than exert himself. Those who are interested in money-making inside the gold and diamond mines are often interested in debauching the natives with bad brandy and whisky. In some places men, women, children, and even babies will be seen lying along the road drunk, and some of the whites talk unblushingly of the day when they will all be killed off by rum and they can have the land. The Hottentots and Bushmen are utterly debased now by the white men. The Zulus, who are by nature much superior to our negroes in appearance, intelligence and character, are beginning to fall victims to the white men. Oh, it makes my heart bleed to see the condition here.

But there are fortunately many most earnest and excellent people who are doing what they can. The conduct and influence of the Dutch Boers here have much to do with the wretched conditions.

The natural scenery in South Africa is for the most part unattractive; Natal is extremely pretty. In every part of Cape Colony there are vast wastes and few trees; cacti abound, soil red, very rocky, and sandy in places, bearing a coarse sort of brown buffalo grass, with a bush resembling the sage of our western plains. There are many wild animals; I have seen deer, baboons, and a few elephants and tigers. Snakes of deadly sort in many varieties, centipedes, scorpions and tarantula make one feel miserable, especially as the hotels are crude huts with tin roofs, and often mud floors, dirty and uncomfortable in every way. I am only just well of an ugly sore on my heel, the result of a bite from some unknown creature. Ostrich raising is a great industry, and the long-legged birds often race with the train.

We saw very many of the people crawl over the country under the broiling sun with a sleepy bullock wagon—clumsy affairs, and a full team means sixteen oxen.

These oxen get little care, and no feeding but the sparse grass. They die in such numbers on the road and are left unskinned and unburied where they fall, so that one is seldom out of sight of a loathsome carcass, or ever out of scent of it. The prevalence of fever in the country, I believe, is mainly due to such things. Vultures flourish. We also visited the diamond mines at Kimberly.

. . . . . .

It is sad to see humanity under so many degrading circumstances. Those who are not heathen but godless are teaching the heathen more vicious things than they ever knew before; and backboneless Christians who come only for the object of making money, who allow their own religion to slip away under the depressing influences surrounding them, degrade the Cross instead of uplifting it. The good cannot mingle with the wicked for any purpose but to do them good without becoming vitiated.

Being south of the equator the seasons in South Africa are the reverse of those at home, so we spent the winter there and now we are on our way to India.

Faithfully, Kate C. Bushnell, M. D.

S. S. Clan Macalister, Indian Ocean.

A RARELY INTERESTING LETTER RESPECTING INDIA.

My Dear Sister:—You ask me to tell you something of myself and my plans. I am with you as well as for you. Have been vice-president and secretary of the W. C. T. U. in Cawnpoor and Lucknow, and entertained at my house your corresponding secretary, Mrs. Leavitt, on her round-the-world mission. My husband, Dr. Mansell, translated for her the constitution of the Order, so as to organize among those not acquainted with the English language. He also translated petitions to government against the cultivation of opium, and the distillation of spirits. I have signed a petition to the Queen of the same purport as the above, and also to the Emperor of China asking him to refuse landing to opium, thrust into his dominions by another nation. So you see I am "with and for you."

My plan is to leave America next September, and to land in India about Christmas time. I expect to do medical work more or less, as long as I live in India. There is no escape, as wherever I go the natives follow and will be doctored. They declare that I have a "lucky hand," and that I look right straight into their "jiggers" (livers).

I am at present translating "Black Beauty" and shall continue to translate religious literature, also temperance and purity literature, and shall try to introduce into the primary schools the same. I shall have, of course, from six to a dozen "City Girls' Schools" to superintend, and shall, as usual, attend to "pastoral" work with my husband. Also, I shall endeavor to keep myself well abreast of the times. So you see I will have no time to be idle. My only trouble will be to keep well.

There is a mighty work going on at present against the social and domestic customs of the millions of India. Children are taught to worship the most disgusting idols and to talk about marriage and to prepare for it as soon as they can talk at all, and little girls are very early given over to their husbands.

There is a large and growing community of Eurasians (half-castes) surrounded by heathen influences and the degrading customs of the country, that is far below the average in Christian countries, in regard to moral and social purity. To meet all this, to lift these millions into a higher civilization, we have only a few missionaries and the Christian churches they have gathered about them, together with a few Christians in the civil and military service from England (who are the rulers of the land). But the war goes bravely on. With God on our side, the victory is assured. So that by faith we see India a Christian nation within a few decades.

Our co-workers are not much like yours—those magnificent women whom I saw looking up into your face at Tremont Temple. They are principally the British soldiers and the Eurasian. The former are, as a class, uneducated. A large percentage can neither read nor write. The Eurasians we have trained and educated—they are those whom we have saved from degradation, and often from gross immorality. Very rarely a civilian helps us. Teetotalism is exceedingly unpopular in India, and to fight for it is all up-hill work. All, except a few missionaries, have wines on their tables. The drinking custom is universal.

You can understand about our co-workers by the following instances: The Worthy Chief Templar remarked, "Durin' the last quarter, we 'ave 'ad hopen meetin's hevery month, which 'ave been addended by a great company of people, comparatively male and female." Another officer remarked, "I 'ave not been so 'appy for a great while in the future." A native worker while reading the history of Moses, burst out crying, saying, "Poor Moses is dead (boo-hoo) and they can't fine out where his grave is." Another, addressing a large crowd in the bazaar said, "But a little while ago the English people who rule over India were barbarians, and lived in the jungle, and painted their limbs, and were totally ignorant, but the American missionaries went over there and taught them about the Lord Jesus, and they became civilized and educated and powerful, and you heathen may become the same, if you will only listen to those devoted American missionaries, and worship their God, and throw away your foolish idols."

You ask for criticisms of the late W. C. T. U. Convention. I saw nothing to criticise. I was so delighted that in a burst of enthusiasm I wrote my husband, who was West lecturing at the time: "These women are ten times as clever as the whole of the Ecumenical convention rolled together—more orderly, more parliamentary, more sweet-spirited, broader, more devoted, more unselfish, more 'gentlemanly,' more loving, less self-seeking, less wrangling, less hair-splitting. Altogether its influence is more elevating, more edifying, more holy, than any assembly I have ever attended." He and I had both attended the Ecumenical at Washington and were not altogether pleased with what we saw and heard.

I have much pleasure in enclosing two memorials and hope they may be useful to you. This petition was the bulwark, the backbone of the Indian government, when passing the enactment through the legislative council.

N. Monelle Mansell.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

"BLESSED WORDS FROM OUR SICK-BED SAINT."

Sick-Bed, Jan. 23.

My Dear Co-workers:—I am afraid I have almost slipped out of your memories and your hearts in all these long weeks and months in which I have been so silent toward you. I have greatly desired to come to you that I might tell you why I have seemed so indifferent to my beloved work and workers, but I have been really good-for-nothing ever since they brought me back from Rest Cottage in October. I broke down there, as some of you know, with nervous prostration and was held in its grasp until the first of December when the prevailing "grippe" took me and dealt severely with me. Those of you who have been in the grip's fangs know the utter prostration which follows, the wearisome days and nights—and how the whole system succumbs to helpless weakness. But I am creeping up a little and am back at work again losing only about every other day now.

. . . . . .

I began this letter last week and had written thus far when some pressing call compelled me to lay it aside to await the more convenient season. The next mail brought me a letter from Miss Willard, written by her own precious hand, and telling the glorious news of a World's Flower Mission, and I know now of my appointment as superintendent. Somehow I did not, or could not, take it in that I was chosen to guide it; it seemed enough that God should have "lengthened the cords and strengthened the stakes" of the work and the very thought of reaching the ends of the world through the ministry of flowers thrilled me through and through.

Imagine, then, what it meant to read in The Union Signal a few days later, that I, your feeble little invalid, who had been deeply impressed for weeks with a sense of her unworthiness and physical unfitness for the National department, had been elected World's superintendent. I had been earnestly pleading for some revealing of God's will as to whether I ought to resign, and ask our peerless queen to put the flower mission into stronger hands. Thus He answers my prayer, and so I dare not refuse the election; I want not to do so for I am honored indeed, to be called and permitted to serve in this broad field. I am resting, now, assured that the strength will come in His own time, because with God's call ever comes the power. This time it is the word of the King saying unto me, "Go ye into all the world and preach" the gospel of My love among all nations. Think of it, dear missioners, "into all the world," and He who is the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley, will go with us, and some time, some day, "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody."

Entirely depending upon Him, who makes His calling and election sure, with earnest, prayerful spirit, I accept gratefully and humbly the trust conferred on me by Miss

Willard and Lady Somerset, and, God helping me, I promise to give my best self to make the department what He and they wish to see it. It was quite significant to me when I picked up my "Bits of Pasture" to read the morning lesson, to find these words for that day—"Be content to pour your rich life into other wasted, weary lives and see them blessed and made more beautiful and then hide away and let Christ have the honor."

In view of these larger responsibilities, this greater need for spiritual strength, I beseech that you will not cease to pray for me that I "may be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that I may be strengthened according to His glorious power into all patience and long-suffering, with joyfulness." I have been kept so busy all this week, doing the next thing, that I have scarcely been able to catch up with each day's needs and so I have not yet formulated our plans. I am sure of your counsel and coöperation, indeed I would not think of undertaking it without you, for it is to you I turn for help, and it is because of your blessed faithfulness and Christian tact that God has chosen to give our department a broader field for ministry.

If those of you who have telling incidents of your work would write them in a concise form which I could have published in leaflets we could do much good with them, and by showing their practical results we could sooner organize in other lands. After awhile we could gather them into the book dear Mrs. Newman has been wanting us to prepare.

I would like to suggest to the state superintendents to keep the flower mission cards, etc., in stock; you could buy them in such quantities as you need for your state work and let your local superintendents purchase from you. This would save time and postage, both of which mean a great deal in the big, grand work we are doing now, and it would be far easier on the department secretary. Oftentimes an order comes for a small number of cards to go a long distance, and they are needed immediately. If they could be bought from the state in which the superintendent lives, they would reach the missionary earlier. I think it would facilitate the work in many ways if you would adopt the suggestion. Please send directly to Miss Ferguson, 3208 Rudd Ave., for all supplies, as a letter addressed to me has to be remailed to her, and this causes delay.

I have ever and ever so much more I want to say to you, but I will keep the rest for another letter. I cannot close, though, without tendering my heartfelt sympathy to all of our W. C. T. U., for we are all bereaved in the death of her who was a blessing and an insyiration to all of us; blessed, thrice blessed saint to have so early won thy crown!

"Thou hast passed like a bird from the minstrel throng, Thou art gone to the land where the lovely belong."

"But oh, 'tis good to think of thee
When we are troubled sore;
Thanks be to God that thou hast been,
Though thou art here no more:
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walks with us no more."

Let us take home to our soul-growth all the blessings and uses of our common sorrow, and when the Voice says to us, "The Master is come and calleth for thee," may we be as ready as she to rise up quickly and go to meet Him.

In warm and tender handclasp, your invalid sister,

Jennie Casseday.

"WHAT STANDS BETWEEN YOU AND CHRIST?"

Dear Union Signal:—It stirred my soul to hear a boy in my Sunday-school class a few days ago answer my question: "What stands between you and Christ?"—"It is only tobacco; do you think any one can be a Christian and use tobacco?" That night he was at the altar, and his mother is almost broken-hearted, because at sixteen her boy is a physical wreck—perhaps a moral one—from cigarette smoking.

Will not some of the godly men, who know what the power of the tobacco habit is, answer that question for this struggling boy, in whom is this terrible obstruction to the light of God's spirit in his soul?

You, Christian men, who go to the communion table reeking with odors of tobacco, ought to answer the question for this chained soul, trying to flee Christ-ward, for no woman with untainted blood and breath is qualified to tell him whether Christ withholds Himself from that man who keeps back tobacco as part of the price, when he hears the command, "My son, give me thine heart."

Answer it, brethren, for a soul hangs in the balance.

Yours, for purity and the boys,

(Mrs.) Margaret B. Platt.

Washington, D. C.

President's Column.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET TO HER CONSTITUENCY.

(From a New Year Letter sent to the British Women's Temperance Association.)

It has come to me as I look across the great ocean to my own land, that we are nearer the solution of some of our great problems than even here in this outreaching nation. The women's vote will be cast in the ballot box by the daughters of the old country before American women's voices shall speak; and as the days go on I read more of the history of the infinite promise that shall come to us through this channel than through any other. We are working to-day to mould, and educate, and fit our women for their responsibility; we are working to guide that mighty engine, that when the motive power shall set it moving, it shall rapidly, silently, unerringly accomplish that over which we have, some of us, been toiling for many years. To this great educational end let us gather all our forces together; let us work this coming year with an intentness of purpose and unflagging energy, for the goal towards which we press is not set in the kingdom of this world, but the end of our work is hidden in the golden glories of eternity. We are seeking with feeble hands to uplift the standard on which the world shall gaze, and which, by its intrinsic merit, "shall draw all men," for that standard is Christ. Professor Drummond has beautifully said, "Only Christ can influence the world; but all that the world sees of Christ is what it sees of you and me." Let us to-day ask God that as the light of the new year shines on our faces turned toward heaven, a new light may shine in the darkness, though the darkness as yet comprehendeth it not.

Let us this year be "immovably centered" as Emerson has it, for the rock on which we build is the "Rock of Ages."

***

How spirit runs ahead of matter. I have been trying hard to weed out my vocabulary, but it seems as if some words are tangled in the muscles of the mouth and say themselves. An ideal Christian would never use a word that indicated anxiety or distress of mind. I have found help to replace all such by the good old Bible word, "perplexed." Suppose we try not to go lower on the octave of our vocabulary than that—"perplexed but not cast down." II Cor. 4: 8.

***

There has been some difference of opinion about the authorship of the phrase "The Expulsive Power of a New Affection." It has often been credited to Dr. Horace Bushnell, but really belongs to Dr. Chalmers, and is to be found as the title of a discourse in the edition of his sermons published by Carter and Brothers, New York, page 272, vol. 2; text, 1 John 2: 15.

***

Sam Jones asked his auditors in a great meeting how many wanted to go to heaven. All stood up but one. He then called out in his staccato fashion, "How many want to go to hell?" Whereupon a lean, lank fellow on the back seat slowly unclasped himself after the manner of a Yankee jacknife, and pensively called out, "I hate to get up, but it don't seem fair to leave the parson there standing all alone." This is one of the few times when the celebrated Samuel has met his match.

***

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and optates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES.	RESIDENCES.

Good friends, please cut this out, get signatures and send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, Ohio.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Marshall Field has signed and delivered to us a contract whereby we purchase his entire amount of stock in the Temple; the first installment of $50,000 on this purchase we have just paid. We pay him 5 per cent interest on the balance of the unpaid stock. As soon as the entire building is rented and occupied it is expected that the stock will pay a dividend of at least 18 per cent. When we consider the large amount of stock we have purchased from Mr. Field, and all he receives from it is 5 per cent, while we expect to reap from it 18 per cent, we have somewhat of a conception of the magnanimous spirit of the man who has entered into a contract so very advantageous to us. We are sure in the future when our white-ribboners speak of Marshall Field, they will think of him as the great benefactor of the W. C. T. U., as well as the prince of merchants.

***

Now that we have a solid hold on $411,000 of the capital stock of the Temple, so that the most timid can no longer fear that rich capitalists will get the building from us, we beg that all carping and lack of faith in this magnificent enterprise will cease, and that all will go to work with a will to raise money as rapidly as possible, so that the building may speedily become our very own. There should not be a woman, boy or girl in our great organization who will not send some little gift to it so they can say, "I helped to build the Temple." Think of it. If our 200,000 women would each collect and send $2 each to the building fund, we would have $400,000, and if our Loyal Temperance Legion children, 300,000 strong would each collect and send 50 cents, this would add $150,000 more, making in all $550,000. With what we have this would be more than enough to pay up our entire capital stock.

There is nothing but lack of interest to hinder the accomplishment of this. While some might not be able to raise more than a dollar, others could easily raise five dollars. Marshall Field's generous contract cannot be carried out unless all go to work with a will and faithfully do their part.

***

The children of the Loyal Temperance Legions throughout the country might become a marvelous power in raising large sums for the Temple if their superintendents would only interest them in the work, We will gladly send a large photogravure of the Temple free to all Legions who desire to take up the work, also mite-boxes for the price of postage. Some of the L. T. L.'s are now at work and doing bravely, as can be seen by the following gifts received from them lately: Marshall county division, Minn., L. T. L., have sent $4, making in all $13.90 they have given. The Davisville, Pa., L. T. L., has sent $3. Mrs. Mary Hethington, of Dallas, Texas, sends $15.50 which is the third payment on a pledge of $100, made by the Dallas division of the L. T. L. Mrs. Hethington's little son sends $5 which he saved in his mite-box; he writes a cute little letter which will appear in The Young Crusader. The Kinderhook, Mich., L. T. L., send $3. Maud K. Welbon sends $11.93 from the L. T. L. of far away Fairhaven, Washington. Helen M. Edmonds, Taylor, Ill,, sends $10 on a pledge of $100 from the Nashua and Taylor Band of Hope. Mrs. J. D. Fagundus, Hillsboro, N. Dak., sends $15 from her L. T. L.; she writes: "We are all interested in the grand building and everything with a ring of temperance in it." One dollar comes from the L. T. L., of New Auburn, Minn.; $2.25 from the Belleville, Ill,, L. T. L. Mrs. Sawyer, Carpentersville, Ill., sends $5 for the L. T. L. She writes: "Our little ones are greatly interested in the Temple; if they start to do anything, we are sure to gain our point every time, always greeted with a full house. Hope to send more money soon. The L. T. L. of Watsontown, Pa., send $1. The L. T. L., of Lainsgburg, Mich., send $5. The Middletown, Iowa, Band of Hope send $5.30. The Band of Hope of Union, N. H., send $5. Mrs. L. K. Peabody, Herkimer, N. H., sends $12—one dollar is her own gift and one comes from Mrs. M. D. Conner—$10 is the gift of the children's band. The Van Orin, Ill., L. T. L., sends $5. Bristol Division, Co. H., L. T. L., of Mansfield, Mass., send $5.

***

Mrs. W. T. Wilson of Little Rock, Ark., sends $11 for the Y. W. C. T. U. The Y's of Grand Crossing, Ill., send $51.35 on their $100 pledge. After this the Y gifts will be published in the Oak and Ivy Leaf, the Y's own paper. Miss Alice D. White, of Brainerd, Minn., sends $25 as first payment on a $100 pledge. Mrs. A. E. McIntire sends $15.70 on a pledge of $100 for the Exeter, N. H., W. C. T. U. Anna Jones sends $16.50 from the union at Grand Ridge, Ill. She writes, "We, as a union, did not pledge ourselves to give $100, but we are trying to raise that amount." The W. C. T. U. of Providence, R. I., send $20 on $100 they are trying to raise. In reading between the lines I find that one faithful woman, Mrs. A. J. Winship, collected all this money herself for the Temple, and is at work raising the balance. Mrs. Mattie McNeal, Ormond, Fla., sends $26. She says $21.45 was sent by the union and $4.55 by the Christian Endeavor Society. Mrs. S. L. Russell, Tibbets, Wis., sends $12.40 from the mite-boxes of Sugar Creek union; $14.35 comes from the mite-boxes of Scenery Hill, Pa., union. Mrs. C. F. Kingsbury, Springfield, Mass., sends $15 from the Central union. Mrs. Austin, of Van Wert, Ohio, sends $20 from Van Wert county union. Mrs. Amanda La Tourrette, Winchester, Ill., sends $12 from the union. I read between the lines and find that Mrs. La Tourrette sends of this amount $5.34 as a gift from herself. Mrs. S. P. Burt sends $15 from the Cambridge, Ohio, W. C. T. U. Mrs. G. W. Haworth sends $18 from the Thorntown, Ind., W. C. T. U. It is hoped that all these last named unions will add to their gifts and determine to each raise $100, and have a tablet in the Temple.

All orders for silver models of the Temple should be sent to Mrs. Carse.

149 Ashland Boulevard.

Our Children.

TILL I'M A MAN.

It is such a dreadful time to wait,
There's so much I want to know;
Oh, I wish it did not take so long
For us boys and girls to grow!

Please tell me now why I can't see God
When He can see me all day;
And what do the angels in heaven do?
Just talk and sing and pray?

Why mayn't I know before I grow up
Why sister is deaf and blind?
God made us, you say, and I am sure
He is always good and kind.

And then this puzzles me quite as much,
But no one will tell me true,—
(I know it is naughty to "tease" so much,
But what is a boy to do?)

What makes it wrong for mamma to smoke?
She's just as good as can be;
If papa can drink his beer and wine,
How could it hurt mamma and me?

Please tell me now.—I can understand,
Because I can think just as quick!
If you'd say it in plain boy-talk
It wouldn't be much of a trick!

STELLA.

THE LITTLE WHITE-RIBBONER.

BY LIZZIE YOUNG BUTLER.

"Come in, darling. Carl is here. You haven't seen him since you came home."

Little Daisy Belknap opened the door a wee bit further, and entered the room bearing her box of china dishes with her.

"How do you do, Miss Daisy? Did you have a pleasant time up country? Let me see; whom did you visit?"

"My Aunt 'Liza, and I had a nice time, I thank you," replied bright Daisy, offering her small hand to her auntie's gentleman caller.

"And what have you here?" queried Mr. Carl, noting the little wooden box which Daisy was opening. "Dishes! Are you going to give a party?"

"No, Mr. Carl, I'm a fine catewer, and I want you and auntie to have some of my choc'late and cake," said the bright little girl, turning into the tiny china cup a pretended draught of the healthy beverage.

"Oh, if you please, Mistress Caterer, I would prefer wine or champagne with my cake."

Daisy looked from her sweet, innocent eyes the surprise which she felt, and her answer, "I hasn't any wine to offer folks," brought a slight flush to the young man's face.

"Very well, I'm not particular; a cup of nice, sweet cider will do as well."

Daisy packed the dishes back into their box with the least perceptible show of disappointment, and turned to Mr. Carl with a quiver about her sweet lips.

"Don't you know, Mr. Carl, that cider is what they make d'unkards out of?" and she took her little china dishes and left the room, her little brown-covered head drooping sadly.

The flush deepened on the young man's face as he remarked to Daisy's auntie, with an uneasy laugh: "Quite a fanatic, isn't she? What has changed the child so?"

"I knew you would notice the change, Carl, but I did not think it would be so soon. It is as well. In her quiet, yet decided, loyalty to the temperance cause, Daisy has converted the entire family. Father resented her 'interference,' as he called it, at first, but when I told him the whole story, he gave his order for nothing stronger than coffee to ever appear on our table again. So we are all fanatics, you see."

"But what has that to do with Daisy's fanaticism?" impatiently asked the listener.

"Near Aunt Eliza's, where we have been visiting, Daisy and I, lives a very nice family of father, mother and three sweet-mannered children. The little girls and boy were Daisy's companions and playmates all the time while we were there. One morning Daisy put on her cloak and hat as usual, and started off to the Dean's with permission to remain to dinner. This was not an unusual occurrence, so I kissed her good-by and watched her over the hill, thinking what a sweet little five-year-old she was.

"Aunt Eliza and I were busy with our needles, when, glancing from the window I saw Daisy come running as fast as she could, and crying as though her heart would break. She rushed into the room, and to my arms. As soon as the worst of her weeping was checked I endeavored to ascertain what was the trouble, but she could tell me nothing coherent. I could distinguish 'cider' and 'd'unkard,' but the rest was unintelligible to me. Finding that she was willing to remain with Aunt Eliza, I hurriedly threw on my wraps, and went up the hill with all possible haste.

"I found Mrs. Dean's eyes very red, and, as I began to question her, she burst into tears, saying, 'Come in here.' All I saw on entering the bedroom was the youngest child, a winsome little girl about Daisy's age, lying on the bed sleeping heavily. I looked at Mrs. Dean and she answered the question in my eyes by a smothered whisper, 'She's drunk!' and then she burst into tears again.

"A chill of unbelieving horror stole over me as I led the sobbing woman from the room. As soon as she was sufficiently calm she related to me her morning's experience: 'Mr. Dean had that morning brought his cider from the mill. The children had all drank what they wished, as was usual at such times, and the barrel was left on its side in the orchard until he should wish to remove it to the cellar. He afterwards told me that Daisy found Reba there when she came, and ran to him saying: "Weba's hurt out in the orchard. She must be hurted bad 'cause she didn't answer when I called and shook her." I hurried out to find my child lying in a heap near the cider barrel, and my attempts to rouse her were vain. No hint of the cause of her state had entered my mind until I noticed that the faucet in the barrel was only partially turned, and then the awful truth burst upon me. I must have frightened dear little Daisy with my talk, for I screamed for Mr. Dean, and as he came running to me, I pointed to Reba, and told him what I thought. I presume she caught the words "cider" and "drunk," and knew it must be something dreadful from the way we acted. That is all; only, Miss Belknap, no child of mine shall ever taste another drop of cider if I can prevent it! Our dear, innocent, little girl drunk, and we are to blame!'"

Carl had been pacing the length of the long room with restless strides, and now stopped in front of the narrator, saying: "I should think so! I never heard of such a thing!"

"That is not all," continued Miss Belknap. "Coming home, as the train rumbled into a small station, a number of women came into our car and took the seats in front of us. I soon learned from their conversation, and from the white ribbon on their jackets, that they were W. C. T. U. delegates on their way to the state convention in Augusta. Daisy's eyes spied the ribbon bow, and she questioned me closely about it, so, as well as I was able, being an outsider, I explained its significance. The result was that Daisy said, with a decided ring in her childish voice:

"'Well, I want a white ribbon so I can show to everybody that I'm temp'rance. I'll never, never taste cider nor wine nor nothing that they make d'unkards out of.'

"The lady sitting just in front of us turned and smilingly said:

"'I heard you, my dear, and may God help you. I have a ribbon with me, and I shall be happy and proud to pin it on your cloak, and you shall be our little white-ribboner.'

"That's all, Carl, but it's a great deal. I'm a W. C. T. U.-er now, see?" and she pointed to her white ribbon.

"Thank you," said Carl soberly, "if you will excuse me, I'll be going now. I want to think," and pressing Miss Belknap's hand Carl Russell took his hat and closed the door behind him. Madge Belknap sighed. She had so hoped that the simple narrative would impress Carl; and again she sighed.

That night at the Club the boys were astonished when Carl Russell, the "boy of the boys," refused his glass of wine.

"What's up, Russell? ain't sick, are you?" queried Ray Powers.

Then Carl repeated the story that Madge had told him in the morning, adding this:

"Boys, I've adopted Daisy's motto, 'I'll never, never taste cider nor wine nor nothing that they make d'unkards out of.' I've been inquiring around and I find that men can be honorary members of the W. C. T. U. by paying a yearly fee of one dollar, and I have decided to join; how many of you go with me? Remember, no more cards as well as no more drinks!"

The nine young fellows rose as one man. "Then we'll wear a white ribbon bow with a daisy center for our badge, that all who see us may know that we are 'temp'rance.' Here's to Daisy Belknap and the W. C. T. U., God bless them!" and the ten glasses of water were drunk with a rousing cheer.

Rockland, Me.

LITTLE GIRL: "Your papa has only got one leg, hasn't he?" Veteran's Little Girl: "Yes." Little Girl: "Where's his other one?" Veteran's Little Girl: "Hush, dear; it's in heaven."

What Shall We Call It?

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—"Once upon a time" (as the fairy tales begin) the children of the Bands of Hope and Loyal Temperance Legions in the great UNION SIGNAL family used to gather "Around the Camp-fire" each week. There they had their own special corner on "Our Children's" page, and there they used to chat and think, solve puzzles and listen to the bright, stirring talks of Captain Deborah. They wrote letters to her, too, in those days, and you may believe that the answers were eagerly looked for, and that Captain Deborah's orders were always faithfully obeyed.

The blaze of the "Camp-fire" died out, however, for dear Captain Deborah went away, and there was no one to throw on logs and brush, to keep up the warm flame of the bright, pleasant circle, and so you children of these later days have known nothing of its pleasure and profit. Yes, you have known something, for "Captain Mary" has written you just such bright, happy, interesting letters as you would most enjoy during the past year, and until she went to California.

But it is nice to have a corner "all our own," and in thinking of this fact the thought came into the mind of your editor to invite a real Auntie (and a young one, too) to take charge of this corner, so hereafter look first to AUNT JANE'S letters and puzzles each week, for she has a drawer full of nice things for you. By the firelight, under the lamplight, at all your distant homes our bright central light in THE UNION SIGNAL will extend out and bring you all together in a great big "ring-round-a-rosy" (the biggest kind of a one!) What good times we could have, and how many good things we could plan to do for this great temperance company. Wouldn't you like to be "in it"?

We can have just such a circle if you will all join hands and make it yours. You will? How many hands do we see? When shall we begin? Pretty soon? Yes, that can be done if all are agreed.

What shall we call it? What shall be the name of this cozy corner of ours? Suppose you tell! It would seem so much more your own, if you would name it yourselves, so please put on your thinking-caps, and when you think of a name, just take your "pen in hand" and write it in a letter or postal card. Then send this to the editor UNION SIGNAL, 161 La Salle street, Chicago. This means each one of you. Don't wait for somebody else to take the lead. Let us have a name from you!

SOFT SHELLED NUTS.

1.

ENIGMA.

The answer composed of sixteen letters is something the poet Longfellow named for the children.

My 8, 16, 3, 11, 4, 13, is to make very wet
My 12, 2, 15, 1, is not open.
My 14, 6, 7, will not mix with water.
My 5, 10, 9, is a personal pronoun.

2.

ANAGRAM.

Choolla.

So bright and clear
It seems to view,
You'd never guess
Unless you knew,
The poison dire
It doth contain
To spoil our joy
And cause us pain.

3.

A RIDDLE

(For very little folks.)

I'm something you see every day,
And say that you can't do without,
All over the world you may travel
And always you'll see me about.

I'm high, way up high, in the air;
And buried deep down in the ground,
Spread out on the top of the earth
In wide stretches I'm sure to be found.

And now can't you guess what I am,
Your guessing gets nearer and "hotter"
When you say that in all the wide world
There's no better drink than cold ——!

Answers to these puzzles given in two weeks. Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNION SIGNAL, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A LITTLE three-year-old who had been summering up in the country, fell into an old well, where the water was only six inches deep, and remained there some time before he was discovered. When he was finally rescued, his pent-up indignation knew no bounds. "You fink I kin tay in a well wizout nuffin to eat, like a fwog? Fy wasn't no better fadder 'n' mudder'n you, I'd go wifout children."

The Household.

MOTHERHOOD.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

The bells rang clearly through the summer air,
The breeze moved idly, and the chirping bird
But languidly bestirred his drooping wing.
I lay in pain and weakness on my couch,
Thinking confusedly of all the past,
The present with its agony of pain,
The future doubtful, known to none save God.

"It seems too bad," thought I in half a dream,
"That little child I knew long years ago
Should but have lived to see the fair, white years
All sullied o'er and spoiled in passing by—
Save here and there a golden bar of light
To mark the presence of some joyful hour
Or day made holy by the thoughts of God.
She had such visions bright, that dreaming child,
As life lay all untried before her soul.
She would be noble, help men on toward God,
She would stretch loving hands in His grand cause,
Bravely she'd stand for right and truth and love;
Sweet songs she'd sing, great deeds she'd do for Christ.
Alas! her visions naught but visions were.
The unceasing hours passed by her idle hands;
The child to woman grown, grave-eyed and sad,
Has but regrets for all the past; and now
Only a dreary waiting till the End ends all."

Ah, me! my dreams are sad this afternoon,—
I think you waked me there, for your dear hand
With loving tenderness was laid on mine.
You must have read my thoughts, beloved one,
For, taking up their minor key, with rapid touch
You changed the gloomy chords to brighter strain;
You showed me many a well-writ page in that Poor past I was regretting so, and bade
Me see how God had made the dreaming child
A woman waiting for His tender will,
Submissive through long sorrow to His love.
E'en as you spoke, your face all bright with faith,
Seemed borne away in drifting, awful clouds,—
I was alone again with pain and dread.

"The end has come," I cried, "I go to Christ
With naught but sin and failure in my hands.—"

What is it, dear? You say that I must live?
O God, is this great joy for me? For me?
They laid a little form upon my breast,
A tiny head touched mine; the wandering hand,
So frail I scarce dared clasp it, met my lips;
The warm, sweet life-breath strayed across my brow
Yes, you may leave me now, I'll rest awhile,
I have no dread of any fearful dreams;
The past is all forgotten—God has sent
An angel straight from heaven to lead me on—
A little blue-eyed angel, human-formed,
For me to keep and guard and teach for Him.
Think you I am afraid of what may come?
Ah, no! these baby hands by mine must be
Unsullied kept, and made strong hands to fight
God's battles in this world of good and ill.
Thus training them, my own shall grow more fit
To touch my Lord's.—Come, sweet, we'll sleep awhile.

THREE GENERATIONS.

BY HELEN A. STEINHAUER.

"Charlie! Char*lie!* Oh, Charlie-boy! mamma wants her little man."

This fond, motherly call was wafted into my room through open door and windows, near the close of a bright June afternoon, as I sat at my desk poring over an array of papers which resembled chaos, but represented "daily bread."

Presently there came a light tap, and as I raised my head I saw framed in the doorway the graceful figure of young Mrs. Preston, our good doctor's wife, with its shapely, well-poised head, her sweet face harmonizing with the voice whose musical tones still rang in my ears.

"Miss Helen," she asked, "have you seen my little lad, my Charlie? I can't think where he can be! I left him to amuse baby Paul while I laid down to rest. I had been up with the dear little fellow most of the night before, and was so weary. I did not mean to lose myself, but it seems I fell asleep; and when I awoke after a long, long nap, I found baby sleeping sweetly, but Charlie gone. It is so strange," she added, after a slight pause, "for although such a little boy he is so trustworthy; he never before has left his brother when I have put him in his charge."

Together we hunted through yard and garden, down the long, green lane which led to the broad, macadamized road, that in its turn led to the great city near which we lived, but all to no purpose. Then turning back we searched carefully both of our roomy, rambling houses, though with faint hope of finding the object of our quest.

Just as we were about to give up, being at our wits' ends, happening to push against the open door of his father's now empty office, I felt some obstacle which prevented its swinging entirely back. Mechanically looking behind it to see what was the hindrance, I saw the dimpled darling lying in a little heap.

"Here he is, safe and sound; fast asleep in Morpheus' arms!" I exclaimed joyfully.

But with a look of horror his mother waved me aside, and quickly stooping, picked up an empty medicine-bottle, evidently from his father's saddle-bags, which were lying at his side where he had dragged them,—and at the same instant lifted the child's limp form from the floor, with the anguished cry: "Oh, my God, has it come at last!"

I remained silent, as by this time I, too, recognized the fact that blue-eyed, golden-haired Charlie, only three years old, was dead drunk!

Ah! happy mothers, whose innocent little prattlers are playing safely at your knees, you can hardly credit this as an actual occurrence, can you?

Shall I tell you the whole sad story as it fell from the blanched lips of my friend, confirmed by the neighbors' testimony and what I myself had seen and heard?

It appears that long years before, the grandsire of this child, then in the mother country, had been a hard drinker. But God in His mercy found and saved him, body and soul, and subsequently he became, not merely a teetotaler, but an earnest minister of the gospel. I myself have often heard him preach, and sat spell-bound beneath his impassioned eloquence.

The old man never broke his pledge of total abstinence, but deeply rooted in the nature of his only child, a son, although born after his reform, was an inherited love of spirituous liquor. Possessed of a brilliant intellect, and many graces of mind and person, he passed through school and college, and ultimately graduated with high honors from a medical university, soon became prominent as a practitioner, as well as a church member, in the community in which he lived.

From his inmost soul he abhorred the vice of intemperance, yet at intervals, sometimes of months, and even of years, he would be seized with a craving for intoxicating drink which he seemed utterly powerless to resist.

Loathing, yet longing for it, he would struggle along, fighting the ground inch by inch as he yielded it, unable to overcome, yet unwilling to give up—at length stealthily swallowing his medical tinctures for the alcohol they contained and finally succumbing helplessly to the inherited appetite, and drinking like a sot for three or four days. Then, as he gradually sobered, his remorse would be pitiful. Again and again I have seen the strong man weep like a child in the private meetings of the church, accusing himself, confessing his fault, and beseeching his fellow-Christians to pray for him and give him one more trial before casting him off.

This was repeatedly granted, for he was universally beloved for his generosity, kindness, and genuine goodness of heart, yet, sooner or later, he would again be overcome and fall before temptation.

In the third generation the tendency developed in wee Charlie, who, when still in arms, quivered with eager longing when the faintest whiff of spirits reached him: and as he began to toddle about he had to be constantly watched lest he might get hold of his father's tinctures for the alcohol they contained. But never, until the day which ended so sadly, did the little fellow actually succeed. Fortunately for him the medicine was otherwise harmless, for he drained the vial to the dregs.

The ensuing August, the precious babe who had come with the early birds of spring fell seriously ill, and after a long, hard struggle, breathed its last on my lap, just as the sun rose over the hilltops, and a new day dawned after that weary night of anxious watching.

With white, drawn face the mother saw me press gently shut the brown-fringed eyelids.

"He is at rest, now," I said tenderly, "and never will know pain again."

"I am glad, glad he is dead!" she cried, passionately; and then snatching him to her breast, raised her hot, dry eyes to heaven, and said, solemnly:

"O God, I thank Thee that one child, at least, is safe!"

And the poor father back in the shadows bowed his head and sobbed convulsively.

I had intended adding a few lines to point the moral of this tale, but words fail me, and I can only quote from the inspired writers who assure us that the sins of the fathers will be visited "upon the children, unto the third and to the fourth generation;" and who bid us, "Look not upon the wine when it is red," for "at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

AFTER-CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS DEMONSTRATED.

BY MARY MC DOWELL.

Superintendent of National Kindergarten Department.

Müller's "Holy Night" we choose as the first in the series of Christ-child pictures, because it illustrates the birth and suggests by the radiating light from the infant's face, that this Jesus is to be the light of the world. Following this would naturally come "The Flight into Egypt," by Bouguereau; this is not as satisfactory as the others, yet it will be suggestive to the children and make clear that event in the story.

A "Holy Family," by Fürst, a modern German artist, gives a beautiful picture of the first prayer. The child seems to be about four years of age, and gives to childhood an ideal of loving reverence in prayer, while Joseph, the carpenter, and Mary, the mother, look on with tender devotion.

Zindel's "Christ-child," with his little finger pointing to the Commandments, symbol of obedience to the law of God, and the beautiful Christ-child by Ittenbach, also the group by Murillo, of little John, the lamb, and Christ, where Christ is giving a shell full of water to John, these three seem to represent Christ during that period when he "grew and waxed strong, filled with wisdom and the grace of God was upon him." And now we come to the picture of Him at twelve years where he disputes with the doctors in the Temple, and surely nothing could suit our purpose better than Hoffman's "Christ Disputing with the Doctors."

These photographs are unmounted, but by pasting them on heavy cardboard and placing them between a glass a little larger than the picture, with pasteboard at the back, then tying all together with narrow ribbon or gold braid, you have an inexpensive, artistic picture for your child's room or his special corner of your room, for of course you have given him at least a corner of his own for his own possessions.

I would suggest that the evening prayer time, so sacred to mother and child, or the quiet Sabbath evening, is the perfect time to talk of this sacred story.

Create a devotional mood by singing the sweet hymns "In another land and time," and "Gentle Jesus, meek and mild," then, as a joyful surprise, bring out the picture.

Show it again and again as long as the child asks for it and before introducing another, hang it in his room on a line just above his eye; when all the series have been placed in order your child will have not only a collection of the reproductions of the best pictures, which means the development of his art instinct, but he has better still, an inspiration always before him, an ideal by which to measure his own doings.

He will always indicate in some manner his desire to know more or see more, then introduce another picture. Never bore him, and above all never preach; feel deeply use few words and the child will respond.

Perhaps one picture a week will be all he needs, but do not fail to always connect the last with the one previously given, and each time begin your story with the pictures at the beginning.

This will tire you sooner than your little one; be watchful of his desire and follow his lead.

(The Songs for Little Children, by Eleanor Smith, contains the hymns mentioned, also Songs for Seasons, Trade and Weather Songs. Paper cover, 90 cts. Order from Thomas Charles, 211 Wabash Ave. The photographs can be had from O'Brien's Art Gallery, 208 Wabash Ave. When ordering mention name, size and price: there are two sizes, 5x4 inches, 15 cts., while twice that size 30 cts.)

My desire for you as for myself is that we may develop, or strengthen, a deep-seated, practical love for Christ Jesus, God manifest in the flesh, teaching the children that as Christ manifested God's love, we are here to manifest Christ's love.

A TIRED WOMAN FINDS REST.

It is one thing to write about courtesy and kindness, but often quite another thing to show these traits. But an incident occurred in a Fourth avenue surface car the other day which showed that at least one man, who is but an example of many more, whose pen enjoins kindness to and consideration of our fellow beings, can act out in the homely things of daily life the lessons he endeavors to instill into others.

The car was crowded with business men returning from their offices down town. At Twenty-seventh street a shabbily dressed woman entered. She carried an infant on her left arm and bore on her right arm a heavy market basket to which an older child clung while his mother dragged both him and the basket along. Of course all the men were busy with their papers and none looked up as the poor, tired woman took her stand in the aisle.

But up in the forward corner was a well dressed young man who did glance up from his book. He saw the shabby woman, rose instantly, and, with a bow as courteous as he would have bestowed upon a Fifth avenue belle, proffered her his seat.

With a grateful look the woman tried to get into the seat. But with infant and basket and the older child crowding upon her she found some difficulty in doing so.

"Let me take your basket," said the young man.

And he held the heavy basket, restraining the older child by a kind word and a quiet pat on the cheek, until the tired mother had settled herself as comfortably as possible.

It was true kindness, for the woman looked as though she had had no other rest all day long. It is doubtful if any man in the car save one recognized the author of the graceful act. But one did. The young man was Edward W. Bok, the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, of Philadelphia, and he was carrying out in a practical way the gospel of helpfulness that he is continually preaching.—Mail and Express.

UNION SIGNAL

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

DEPARTMENT OF BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.
ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

President—MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, 149 Ashland Boulvd., Chicago.
Treasurer—MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Elmhurst, Ill.
Secretary—MARY ALLEN WEST, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MISS ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
MRS IRA LEWIS, Kansas City, Mo.
MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Stroudwater, Me.
MRS. A. H. CHRISTENSEN, Beaufort, S. C.
MRS. L. D. CARHART, Marion, Iowa.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec,—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.
For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

Entered at the Post-office Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: The Faith of Reformers Rewarded—White Ribbon Education for Spanish Girls—The World's Christian Temperance Congress—Our New Calendar—Practical Work for Russia 8, 9
WATCH-TOWER 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem. In Bonds, by Marcia Kunnedey—Recollections of Noted Men and Women, by Lady Henry Somerset—The Great Mass-meeting at Minneapolis, by Louise Merriam Timolat—Loyalty and Guidance 2, 3
CORRESPONDENCE: From Our Round-the-World Missionaries—A Rarely Interesting Letter Respecting India—Blessed Words From Our "Sick-Bed" Saint—"What Stands Between You and Christ?"—Temperance Temple Items 4, 5
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN: Lady Henry Somerset to Her Constituency 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, Till I'm a Man—The Little White-Ribboner 6
WHAT SHALL WE CALL IT? 6
THE HOUSEHOLD: Poem, Motherhood—Three Generations—After-Christmas Thoughts Demonstrated—A Tired Woman Finds Rest 7
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: Rhode Island, Missouri, New York, Eastern Washington, Indiana Jottings—News in a Nutshell 10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: A Glance Ahead for Juvenile Workers 12
OUR BOOK TABLE 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 13
SIGNAL NOTES 14

Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the Saviour of his knowledge by us in every place.—II Cor 2: 14.

If the pledge had been offered me when I was a boy in Sunday-school I should have been spared those seven dreadful years.—John B. Gough.

THE FAITH OF REFORMERS REWARDED.

And ever the right comes uppermost and ever is justice done. The faith of reformers in the outcome of righteous efforts for the uplifting of humanity must be strengthened by the good news that comes to us February 3 from the Louisiana state lottery. That noble Methodist leader, Rev. Dr. Carradine, whose pulpit rumbled with the thunders of the impending conflict five years ago, must read with devout thanks to God that John A. Morris, the principal owner and director of the company, announces that he will wind up its business and retire from the field when the charter expires in 1894, although it is believed that he has already expended from three to five millions in the fight.

When Dr. Carradine began this warfare it was at great personal loss of popularity and prestige. A thorough Southerner, he did not mince matters, but in impetuous and ardent language poured forth his denunciations, backing them up by facts and figures, sending out his discourses by tens of thousands among the people, thus carrying the war into Carthage. The vigorous action of this young pastor formed a nucleus around which other good men and true have rallied.

Governor Nichols, by his splendid loyalty to the people of the state, drove the question to the front in politics and law. The United States took action against sending out tickets or money through the mails, and the decision of last week by the United States Supreme Court that this law was constitutional, tightened the last coil around the octopus which has so long fattened on the life-blood of the people of Louisiana and elsewhere. The Congress which passed this anti-lottery law, the supreme court that stood by it, and the President of the United States, whose messages have been pronounced against the treason of the lottery, should all have the thanks and praise of every patriot and Christian. We are glad that from the first the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, local, state and national, has joined the crusade against the lottery abomination. And we especially congratulate Mrs. Judge Merrick, of New Orleans, president of the state W. C. T. U., and her associates on the splendid result now chronicled. When we visited that gem of a public library in New Orleans,—than which a more beautiful and costly cannot be found anywhere,—the white-ribboners who heard our words of admiration, said, "This beautiful building is nothing but a bribe; it was presented by leaders in the lottery and they are trying by every ingenious means within their power to beautify the city, relieve it of burdens and thus rouse the cupidity of our people."

All would not do. The lottery will soon be gone with its bat-like wings that brooded over Louisiana in ignorance, misery and sin. One by one the floods are drying up, and the ark of humanity shall some day rest upon the Ararat of its redemption.

WHITE RIBBON EDUCATION FOR SPANISH GIRLS.

Our vice-president for Spain, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, who has invested twenty years of her life in that historic land, believes that through education the greatest good can come to the girls under her care. From her they learn temperance and white ribbon ideas as well as Christianity. Mrs. Gulick is in this country trying to enlist good people to help enlarge the institution which she and her husband, Rev. William H. Gulick, have founded, and which is becoming a great success. The accompanying article gives a most interesting outline of the situation, and we are sure it must be read with pleasure by white-ribboners in all countries. There has rarely been a sisterhood so capable and devoted as that formed by Alice Gordon Gulick, Anna and Elizabeth Gordon. Anything for which they care is sure to be warmly welcome to the thought and interest of our temperance constituency:

"The word Spain brings before our minds a land of romance, of architecture, and of art. No country has been peopled by more distinct nations. Its history carries us into the remote past. Standing beside the Cyclopean rocks which underlie the wall of Tarragona, we may look upon the graves of the Scipios below upon the plain. Roman roads and Roman bridges, a Roman amphitheater, and a recently discovered Roman necropolis, transport us in imagination to the brilliant days of the Cæsars.

"From the myriad columned mosque of Cordova, once illumed with the light from innumerable silver lamps, we learn the force and the wealth of the Moor. Not less instructive is the fact that the vega of Granada, over which the conquering Christian army rode to take possession of the city, is still watered by the irrigating system established by that remarkable people. The same bell rings from the Torre-de-la-vela on the heights of the Alhambra for the Castilian paisano that centuries ago told the Moor that it was time for him to turn the water into the garden of his neighbor.

"The American architect seeks in Spain the classic forms of Romanesque and Gothic art which are to-day beautifying our great cities. We may merely make mention of Velasquez, and of Murillo and his soulful pictures; of Cervantes and his inimitable play upon words; of Calderon de la Barca and Lope de Vega in the world of letters.

"Spain, at the time of the discovery of America, was the greatest nation of the world. But, this is Spain of the past. To come down to modern times. Well was it for Theophile Gautier to write his journey into Spain comfortably ensconced in his easy chair on the other side of the Pyrenees.

"Taine says: 'Africa begins at the Pyrenees.' Perhaps because he saw as I have seen, a woman and a cow harnessed together drawing the plow. To seek for the causes of the condition of Spain to-day, we must study its history and especially from the time of that misguided monarch, Philip II., whose name will go down to all time unblessed.

"Isabella, wise beyond her time, had encouraged learning. Through her influence women occupied chairs in the universities of Salamanca and Alcalá. Philip II., jealous of foreign influence, and with a policy of repression, discouraged education and prohibited intercourse with foreign institutions of learning, and the fires of the inquisition reached and consumed many of those devoted to letters. For three hundred years the pall of ignorance has lain over the land. But within twenty-five years Spain has shaken off the heavy weight and we begin to see the sterling character of her thoughtful people. Liberty of conscience and liberty of the press have come, never to be withdrawn again while God's sun shines.

"On the old fifteenth-century houses of Salamanca, the famous university city, where formerly were as many students as there are now inhabitants in the city, are to be seen the Edison incandescent burners—fit types of the light that the more favored people of America should shed in that land so long shrouded in the dense darkness of ignorance and superstition.

"Spain has provided for the education of girls only in a limited way. The children in the public schools are taught to read and write and to repeat prayers. The girls add to these prayers sewing, and very little else.

"There are many convent schools scattered through the land; but, as is well known, the instruction in them is limited, and they are chiefly for the wealthy. There are no free high schools for either girls or boys. The taxes for examinations and prices of text-books which are the professors' monopolies, make such a course of studies practically prohibitory for the working classes (with average wages of twenty cents a day) so the sixty-five per cent of illiteracy reported in national statistics need not surprise us.

"A few normal schools which are good have been founded for girls, but they are in the capitals, so that girls must leave their homes to attend them, and they are thus exposed to the temptations of large cities. These schools are also under the complete control of the church, and it is difficult for Protestant girls to obtain admission to them.

"After all, in Spain, a girl or woman is not expected to know much. She is a plaything, a housekeeper, or a tool of the church. A girl must dress well and flirt her fan in a fascinating manner. A knowledge of history or geography is not essential to the latter accomplishment. She may not know the capital cities of Europe or which way to go to reach America; but she must know how to walk gracefully.

"In view of these facts a boarding school for girls of the middle and lower classes for their higher Christian education, was opened some ten years ago by the missionaries of the American Board. At first, the standard of study was low; it was necessarily so on account of the lack of previous training. But year by year it has been raised until at the present time there is a thoroughly organized school, the most advanced class being nearly ready to take the degree of B. A. from the state.

"Last September this class of four went before the state institute for boys of the Province of Guipuzcoa, located at San Sebastian, and were examined in the studies required for entrance, and those of the first year. Two of these girls received in every examination the mark of sobre saliente, or the highest mark given by the institution. This was the first time in the history of Spain that girls prepared in a women's school had passed successfully the examinations for boys.

"It was a nine days' wonder in the city. The Director of the Institute said: 'Que clase de ninas nos envia Vd!'—'What kind of girls you send us!'—as though they were a special, unknown variety.

"Several hundred boys and girls have been connected with the school in its different departments, primary, preparatory, high school and evening classes. Twenty-four have graduated; twenty-two of these are to-day most usefully employed as teachers, or are occupying the perhaps more responsible positions of ministers' wives. With one voice the Spanish girls plead for the permanency of the school. The hired building now used is inadequate, and may be sold at any time. There is no other building in the city which can be hired which would be suitable for the housing of such an institution."

In the golden days of Spain, Queen Isabella helped forward the enterprise which has given to us our wonderful country. The Queen Isabella Association plan to remember the part a woman took in making the vision of Columbus a reality, by erecting a statue of her in some American city. Columbus should also be remembered in a permanent structure which would keep forever before the mind that perseverance, that faith, that earnestness of character which shed the brightest glory upon his name. How fitting it would be that one of the lasting results of such a commemorative year as 1892 should be a permanent, a model school, an offering of love and gratitude from America to Spain.

THE WORLD'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

The World's Congress Auxiliary of the World's Columbian Exposition (Judge Charles C. Bonney, president) has just issued in elegant form, the announcement of the temperance department of which Right Bishop John Ireland is chairman of the men's and Miss Frances E. Willard of the women's branch. THE UNION SIGNAL has already published the address sent out by the Woman's Committee and the list of its advisory counsel. The chief work to be done by this committee will doubtless be the holding of the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in June, of 1893, definite dates to be given later on. The following questions have been addressed to the leading temperance women of the world and we republish them, asking that answers be sent to this paper:

1. What persons do you specially recommend for participation in the addresses, debates, speeches, singing, or other features of the World's Christian Temperance Congress?

2. What topics do you suggest for consideration by the Congress, and to whom would you assign the same for preparation and presentation?

3. What mottoes or devices do you suggest?

4. What is your opinion concerning the participation of children in this Christian Temperance Convention? Would you give representation to their societies, and if so, upon what basis?

Also, although the Congress as such will have nothing to do with any literary exhibit, we take the liberty to add the following questions, as a matter of convenience, and shall be glad to receive answers:

1. What literature should be on sale? We wish to get the very best from all countries and in all languages.

2. What are the best temperance drinks of which you are cognizant?

3. What original suggestions can you make to help on the teaching power of this great enterprise?

An interesting suggestion is made by Mrs. Edith Archibald, one of our leaders in the Dominion: "There is one suggestion I wish to offer to the temperance exhibit of the World's Fair. Could there not be a collection of life-size models sent from each country where the World's W. C. T. U. has gone, representing the women of each nationality in their native costume, and wearing the white ribbons? Don't you think that would be a form of object lesson as to the extent of the organization, and that it would supplement the testimony of the World's Petition festooned above the walls of the pavilion? Suppose for instance we have a model of a Norwegian mother bending over her baby's cradle; a Japanese bride, etc., each and all with a white ribbon; each country to provide its own model, which would cost much less there than here. Please report the suggestions to Mrs. Josephine Nichols, white ribbon commissioner of the World's Fair."

OUR NEW CALENDAR.

The W. T. P. A. has recently issued an attractive little Red Letter Day Calendar for the World's and National W. C. T. U., the first of a series ordered at the recent Boston Convention. We print it for the use of the constituency in all parts of the world, calling very especial attention to the Self-Denial Week, which begins April 17 (Easter Sunday), and lasts until April 23 inclusive. Each member is asked during this week to deny herself something not necessary, that its cost may go to the local, state, National or World's W. C. T. U. treasury, as her conscience may decide. Let our local unions signalize this week of self-denial by a meeting on Sunday, April 17, and by a vote as to the use to which they will put the money thus saved. We should be glad to have letters reporting such action, and informing us of the methods that have been adopted by our ingenious members. The calendar is as follows:

1. Noontide hour of prayer. Observed in all lands, it belts the world with holy aspirations in the love of God, and of humanity.

2. Anniversary day. The birthday of each local union, to be observed by a praise service at which a retrospect and forecast of the local union's history might well be given.

3. (For the United States), Washington's birthday, February 22d; observed in the interests of true patriotism.

> A good, great name! It is the goal
> Of all this splendid world can give;
> Its conquests well may nerve the soul
> For man to die, for God to live.

4. Sabbath observance day, April 3d, observed by public services in the interest of the American Sabbath.

5. Self-denial week. (Already referred to.) The motto for this week is by Lady Henry Somerset and is as follows: "No cause was ever yet victorious for which men and women have not lived and suffered and died."

6. Flower Mission day, June 9th. The birthday of Miss Jennie Casseday, national superintendent of flower mission work. This is observed by sending flowers with text cards to prisons, jails, hospitals and almshouses, and to the poor and sick everywhere.

7. Our Nation's birthday, July 4th. (This is also the birthday of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, national superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, and might well be celebrated in the interest of this department.)

8. A National picnic August 24, the birthday of Mrs. Eliza J. Thompson, leader of the Crusade, who contributes this sentiment: "When your faith is put into the crucible, you may know the 'Great Refiner' thinks there is good metal in it."

9. World's W. C. T. U. day, September 22. The birthday of Mary Clement Leavitt, our first round-the-world missionary, to be observed as World's W. C. T. U. Thank Offering Day.

10. Membership Crusade Day, and Children's Harvest Home, September 28, for World's and National W. C. T. U. (By vote of the World's and National W. C. T. U., this has been made general, as it is the birthday of Frances E. Willard, President World's and National W. C. T. U.)

11. Day of Prayer, October 31, for the white ribbon work and workers, and for unity of spirit in the great autumn conventions, National, dominion and state.

12. Peace day, December 18, to be observed in the interests of peace and national and individual arbitration.

13. Crusade Day, December 23, the anniversary of the going forth of the Crusade Band at Hillsboro, Ohio, in 1873.

PRACTICAL WORK FOR RUSSIA.

At last the prospect brightens for practical work to be done for the Russian sufferers by famine. A relief committee has been decided upon by Miss Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross Association. The headquarters are at Washington, and there need be no further delay in sending the funds to this responsible representative who is regarded by our people in a light analogous to that which puts a halo around the head of Florence Nightingale. Miss Barton has associated with her Ex-Governor John W. Hoyt, of Wyoming, because of his presence in Washington, his high character, his large experience as editor, railroad commissioner, university president and governor, also because of his ability as a writer and speaker, his personal knowledge of peasant life in Russia, and his zeal in the cause. Either of these names can be addressed with perfect confidence. They will endeavor to stimulate contributions through the agency of the press, by means of public meetings and official correspondence. Women owe a debt of gratitude to ex-Governor Hoyt for his valiant championship of the cause of woman's rights. The $200 collected in Boston at our great convention has been already sent to Countess Tolstoi, but all other contributions, (and we hope there will be many) from the W. C. T. U., should go directly to Clara Barton, Washington, D. C.

C. H. SPURGEON and T. DeWitt Talmage are the two preachers of the old and new world who have attracted the largest audiences. On the 31st of January Dr. Talmage stood in his accustomed place and spoke to the vast crowd before him on the text, "And there was silence in heaven." In glowing words he described the glories of the eternal home. On the same day Charles H. Spurgeon was called to cross the golden threshold and to pass from theory to realization. Professor Drummond says, "Men are the only means that God's spirit has of accomplishing his purpose." No man has lived in our time with a more single-eyed desire to labor for that end than the great preacher who has just passed from our midst. In season and out of season for forty years he has written, preached, organized and exhorted with untiring energy, and a zeal born of a strong belief that he had received his calling directly from God. His words have swayed and influenced the great masses of the English middle class; his sermons have been read week by week by the whole English-speaking world, and throngs have gathered whenever the well-known voice was uplifted pouring forth those words in vigorous Saxon English which have left so strong a mark upon the thought of thousands in this generation.

To many a discouraged worker the history of Mr. Spurgeon's conversion may come as an inspiration. The weekly prayer-meeting in a little village church was often so poorly attended that the minister, one snowy winter night, thought it hardly worth while to open the church and gather together the ones and twos that would be likely to be present, but as he paused for guidance on the question, there seemed to come to him afresh the promise of that Presence to whom multitudes were no attraction, but who was pledged to be in the midst of the little bands who gather in His name, speaking of new peace and new hope. The minister went to his church, where he found, as he had expected, two faithful souls of his own flock and a young boy, a stranger, whose face he did not know. At the close of the meeting the lad came to him and told him how during the meeting he had given his heart to God. That boy was none other than Charles Spurgeon, and the net cast out that night, in faith, drew one who was to be a mighty fisher, and who has won, perhaps, more souls for God than any other in this age. His sunny, genial disposition, and his ready wit endeared him to all those who knew him in the home circle, while his determined stand for all that he believed to be God's sacred truth, has caused even those who differed from him in many ways to say that the world has lost one of its greatest men, and Christianity one of its brightest lights.

The Watch-Tower.

Miss Jennie Casseday, who has not left her room for well nigh a quarter of a century, but whose strong soul is a true cosmopolitan, has been made World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of the flower mission by action of the General Officers.

***

Mrs. M. A. Cummings, one of the veteran white-ribboners of Chicago, died January 22, and was buried from Plymouth Congregational Church of which she had long been a member. It was with Mrs. Cummings that "Temperance Jack," of whom our readers have heard much, signed the pledge in 1874.

***

Mrs. Dr. Lozier, president of Sorosis, New York City, writes: "I think we are all of one mind about the desirability of averting war; and I have full confidence and hope in the sober sense of our administration and of the American people to believe that every honorable means will be used to settle all difficulties by arbitration."

***

"It is surprising how practical duty enriches the fancy and the heart, and action clears and deepens the affections. Indeed, no one can have a true idea of right, until he does it; any genuine reverence for it, till he has done it often and with cost; any peace ineffable in it, till he does it always and with alacrity. Does any one complain, that the best affections are transient visitors with him, and the heavenly spirit a stranger to his heart? Oh, let him not go forth, on any strained wing of thought, in distant quest of them; but rather stay at home, and set his house in the true order of conscience, and of their own accord the divinest guests will enter."

***

Sidney Smith said: "Life would be tolerable were it not for its pleasures." The dreariness of setting out to be amused is doubtless the crowning dreariness of human experience.

***

Fanny Crosby, or Frances Jane as she was christened, is now sixty-one years old, a bright, cheery woman, who never complains of her blindness, but thinks of it as a blessing, shutting her bodily eyes to external things that her spiritual sight may be the keener. She has written more Sunday-school hymns than any ten other writers and is especially happy in composing songs and recitations for special days, Christmas, Easter, Children's day and the like. "Safe in the arms of Jesus," is the hymn by which she is most widely known and which she considers her best piece. She has the curious habit, when composing, of holding closely over her sightless eyes the open copy of a favorite book, "Golden Hymns" being the one usually chosen. Sitting thus she thinks out the verses and when they are complete to her satisfaction, she dictates them to some one who writes them out. She composed some of her most famous pieces for William B. Bradbury to set to music.

***

Women have already secured a footing in 4,467 branches of industry, which includes all gainful occupations excepting those that demand great outdoor exposure and muscular effort. From 1785 to 1885 the growth of women as wage-earners is sixty-four per cent, according to the census bureau. In Massachusetts, 932,884 men are in gainful occupations, and over a million women.

***

God's spirit often whispers a truth, the depth of which those who utter it scarcely know, for the soul is an Æolian harp, and when it is placed in such an attitude that the breath of God's spirit can sweep the strings, it gives His messages to a waiting world, and never in any other way

***

Mrs. Schuman, of Evanston, should have special mention for her work in pasting and sewing the World's Petition. It increased in dimensions so greatly as fairly to crowd her and her family out of the house. It swarmed in its great folds like the locusts of Egypt. Its convolutions combined with its evolutions now promise to be such that no average house will contain them all. Evanston has never sent forth, and probably never will again, a document so voluminous or so significant. Pasted on white cloth half a yard wide, bound on one side with red and on the other with blue braid, (the three colors, red, white and blue,) included nearly all the flags of all nations, and inscribed with autographs from every language where writing is known, the great Petition will be a most interesting curiosity in the archives of the World's W. C. T. U. Miss Helen L. Hood, our custodian, has had the petition placed in a fire proof vault, the use of which is freely furnished for the purpose by T. C. Hoag & Company, the leading bankers of Evanston.

ON DUTY.

News from the Field.

RHODE ISLAND.

EVERY UNION AT WORK.

How true it is that "a noble aim reacts." The National and World's Conventions were so near to us this year that many of our women from all over the state were privileged to attend. Such a meeting, focusing as it did the highest motives and truest philanthropy of the world, shows what a great work the women are doing for humanity; but as we looked over that vast assembly of earnest, intelligent faces, came another thought—what a grand work the W. C. T. U. is doing for women. How it brings out all that is best and truest in womanhood, and by its noble ideals transforms the humblest worker into a power for good!

As our white-ribboners returned to their posts of duty, and the state officers and delegates have gone about from place to place telling what wonderful things the Lord has done through these women, all have felt the uplift, and have shown it in a stronger purpose and more earnest efforts. This is evidenced by the fruitful reports from many unions.

Westerly, always active, still presses forward in the good work. Meetings are held each week; the Juvenile society coming together each Sunday afternoon, has an enrollment of one hundred and twenty members, an average attendance of forty-eight, and five teachers. Visits have been made, literature distributed, over forty garments given away, coal bought and other assistance rendered to the poor. A course of lectures has been sustained with gratifying results. The union feels encouraged by the additions received during the past year and hopes for a continued increase in membership.

Cumberland union has had a temperance rally, with a fine address and special music by a quartette. Their regular lines are carried on systematically, and they feel that the foundations for future work are being deeply laid.

The Exeter union, organized one year ago with five members, now numbers eleven active and two honorary. The meetings are well attended, with an increasing interest.

Central Falls held a pleasant parlor meeting, with recitations and songs, followed by an address from our state president.

Pawtucket has had good success in the monthly social meetings held at different houses. Instructive addresses have made the meetings interesting, and those who were not members of the union, being invited, have become interested in the work.

Providence union has opened a department of work for the Temple. One member has solicited twenty dollars and has also distributed forty mite-boxes.

The Newport Y's have been doing such earnest work that I am glad to insert a brief report sent by one of their number:

"The boat shop over which is located the Mission of the Newport Y was opened at eleven a. m., on Thanksgiving Day, and during the remainder of the day some of the ladies were present to serve hot coffee and speak words of cheer and help to all who came in. In the evening a gospel service was held, at which the room was well filled; it was a very profitable service. On Christmas day the room was again opened, hot coffee served, and a very blessed service was held in the evening. The day preceding, cards, on which were printed a notice of the service and a Scripture text, were carried to every house and store on the wharf. Several were present in response to these invitations, and prayers went up that if others did not attend they might be impressed by the texts. A service was held on Christmas afternoon with the prisoners at the jail in which they were interested, and we trust profited. The day before, one who has a God-given power to sing very touchingly, visited a little invalid boy, shut in from everything bright and sunny, and sang to him. Useful and acceptable gifts were distributed to nine families, bringing to the little ones comfort and happiness.

"Our receipts for the quarter ending December 1st were ninety dollars, sixty of which were given us by a local circle of King's Daughters to be used for coffee in connection with our mission work and a large part of the remainder consisted of contributions for mission work. From September 1st to January 1st seventy visits were made to homes, five to the hospital, besides those of singers on Sunday; seventeen regular mission services held and one service at the jail.

"About four thousand papers and leaflets were distributed at the beach, jail, Providence and New York boats, barber-shop, street-railway waiting room, Fort Adams and Training Station. THE UNION SIGNAL has been placed in the People's Library, and comfort bags placed on three outgoing vessels. Seventeen articles have been printed in local papers, three sent to the Outlook and one to THE UNION SIGNAL.

"We desire to thank the gentleman, who having seen in THE UNION SIGNAL an account of this mission work on Long Wharf, visited the room on the evening of November 9th and left so generous a contribution for the work. Will he accept the gratitude of the union? and may the Lord reward him."

A number of the unions subscribe for some temperance paper to supply each family in a village.

The L. T. L. of East Providence saved enough from their Christmas spending money to buy a ton of coal for an aged couple who were in need.

Our new superintendent of juvenile work, Mrs. J. H. Ray, is actively organizing her helpers, and giving them needed assistance. The good work she has done in her own Legion augurs well for her success. New Legions are being formed, and the outlook is encouraging.

Mrs. Alfred W. Chase has sent definite instructions to local superintendents of scientific temperance instruction, which, if carried out, will awaken the interest of teachers and pupils in temperance physiology. Her knowledge of the work, and careful preparation, show her fitness for the responsible position.

We have been favored with visits from several of our sisters from other states. Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason has given seven lectures full of instruction, which have tended to increase the interest in W. C. T. U. work. Her lectures on Narcotics were especially educational, and all who heard her have been encouraged to discountenance the use of, and traffic in these poisonous drugs. She built public sentiment in favor of the law that is before the state legislature, prohibiting the sale or gift of tobacco to minors. Her addresses on the work of the W. C. T. U. helped those who heard her to see more clearly how we are educating the people toward prohibition, and to use their influence more aggressively to abolish the rum traffic. In every place where she spoke, the unions would like to have her again, and express appreciation of her words and work.

Miss Jennie Smith was in Providence just after the Convention and addressed several meetings that were planned for her. She visited the homes of the fire engines and talked with the men on gospel temperance.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, under the auspices of the Providence Y's, gave her lecture on the "Perils of the Republic." Mrs. L. A. Chace has given fine addresses in some parts of the state, but her recent illness has prevented a general list of engagements.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt presented her department in a forceful way to the teachers of Providence, emphasizing the importance of educating the children in these branches that will make them strong to resist temptation. Miss E. U. Yates has been with us again, giving several earnest addresses.

LICENSE CLIPPINGS.

For those who are interested in the progress of the license system, I will insert the following clippings from various papers in the state:

"Towns are beginning to reap the fruits of the license system and the eyes of some of our citizens are open enough to see the fallacy of it.

"At a recent Board meeting it was moved to increase the police force of that place three members. Another objected, saying he would rather see half of the rum shops closed than to see the police force increased, for if people behaved themselves there would be no need of such a large force as at present.

"Last month was the largest for police work in the history of the town.

"The grand jury for Providence county returned September 23, 1891, the largest docket in the criminal history of the county, ninety-six indictments being found. In the crimes of murder and assault the rum fiend, and the repeal of the prohibitory amendment, are largely responsible.

"Providence is beginning to be a drunkards' paradise, and the city is sparing no pains to make things comfortable for them. Our state is burdened with the support of criminals. We see the accuracy of the predictions of those who foretold that the state would do a losing business by granting licenses.

"There is a law on our statute books that no rum shall be sold on the Sabbath. At some of the rum shops five, seven, ten men at a time have been seen going in the back door of these wicked places, and the noise and rioting, as well as the condition of the men on their return to the street, showed too plainly that they had been drinking. One approached a policeman and asked if there was not a law against the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday. 'Yes,' he said, 'there is; and there is more rum selling on this street on Sunday than you would believe, but I can't stop it, can you?' "

They have taken from us our law, which, if enforced, would have made such a condition of affairs impossible, and the solving of the problem seems farther from us than we hoped, yet we would answer as did the lady to whom the question was put: "It can be stopped, and it shall be some day," so help us God.

MIRIAM EARLE.
State Reporter, Valley Falls.

MISSOURI.

HOW THE GOOD WORK PROGRESSES.

The old year has taken its flight, and with the year 1892 come new resolutions from many loyal hearts, and from none have come to my ears a better resolution than from one noble invalid worker, "That I will do all I can, in the best way I know how, with the dear Lord my helper."

We have had our beloved leader with us for a few weeks' work, which has done much good. It is always a pleasure to us, and our secretary, Miss Morris, to have the counsel of one so capable as our Mrs. Hoffman.

Recently the seventh annual convention of the St. Louis district W. C. T. U. was held in St. Louis The roll-call showed ninety-three delegates all told and one hundred visitors present. The convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls. The "Crusade Psalm" was read, and a love feast was conducted by Mrs. Clara Hoffman. Then came the reports from the different unions represented, which showed how bravely these women had gone into the byways and slums of the city doing good. The many lines of work were brought forward and discussed—Sunday-school work, scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, narcotics, work among foreigners, prison and jail work, evangelistic, juvenile, medal contest, Sabbath observance, work among colored people, Y. W. C. T. U., unfermented wine and press work; all received due consideration.

Miss Helen Peabody gave two recitations before the convention. A liberal amount of Home Guard stock was taken.

The district president in her annual address recommended the establishment of headquarters in the city. She pleaded for more work among the children, and for more workers to visit the jails and workhouses, to establish more drinking fountains about the city and carry on kitchen schools for children. She declared in favor of woman's ballot, and was confident they would then close the dramshops.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman gave an able address, and cautioned parents to be honest in their dealings with children. She also spoke of the disgraceful pictures which accompany cigarette packages, and rejoiced that in a manner the evil had been suppressed. The treasurer's report showed that $953.38 had been received during the year.

Mrs. Alice Williams gave two addresses while in the city, one before the convention, and one at Jefferson Barracks to the soldiers. Both addresses were received with enthusiasm and all were delighted with the pleasant manner in which she presented her address.

The young people's meetings were largely attended. A special attraction was the oratorical contest for a W. C. T. U. spoon. Every officer was reëlected without one dissenting voice. This shows that a good state of harmony prevails. After appropriate resolutions were adopted, "Blest be the tie that binds," was sung, and thus closed the most interesting and largest convention ever held by the St. Louis district W. C. T. U.

On New Year's day between the hours of three and six p. m., a brilliant reception was given by the Y. W. C. T. U. of St. Louis, at the home of Mrs. F. H. Ingalls. The house was beautifully decorated in pink with smilax and ferns. A large number of gentlemen called, and the afternoon was spent in a most delightful manner.

A Demorest medal contest is being arranged for by the students of the University at Stephens' College chapel. Many unions are arranging for open meetings this month, as has been our custom to hold these meetings and give collection as a "free-will offering" for state work.

Bonne Terre W. C. T. U. hold regular meetings with a good average attendance. Last month 603 pages of literature were distributed. Mrs. Alice Williams gave two very interesting lectures to large audiences, one on the work of the W. C. T. U. and the other on Prohibition vs. High License.

Miss Evelyn Jump, district superintendent of Y work in the sixth district gave a creditable elocutionary entertainment at Humansville recently.

Neosho, the home of Colonel Sobieski, has a band of loyal workers. Mothers' meetings are held frequently. Monthly open sessions at the churches are kept up, and are participated in by the ministers and citizens. A prosperous Loyal Temperance Legion finds a place in the hearts of these noble workers.

Seneca has a union that is doing all it can to present the truths taught by the W. C. T. U.

The Missouri Home Guard is fast becoming a fixture in the hearts and homes of the women of Missouri, and at the small price of twenty-five cents per year should be read by every W. C. T. U. woman in the state. One of the items of progress is the fact that so many of our local county papers are willing, and even anxious, in many instances, to publish items furnished them by the W. C. T. U. reporters. Your reporter filled, chiefly by request, columns and items in seven papers—with reports of the great Boston Convention. And requests came for more.

Thus the educational work goes on. Copies of "Black Beauty" were furnished the teachers of the schools in the various departments at Humansville, by the county W. C. T. U. to be used as supplementary reading.

Bolivar and Buffalo hold open monthly meetings in which the ministers take part. If these gospel temperance meetings did no other good than to break down the walls of prejudice enough so that a brother from the Baptist Church could feel at home in a church of any other denomination, and vice versa, the work would be a grand one. But they do this and much more.

MRS. MARY E. JONES.
State Reporter, Humansville.

NEW YORK.

COUNTIES AND LOCALS "UP AND AT IT."

Splendid work has been done in our state, by Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California. During the month of December she added nearly four hundred new members to the white ribbon hosts—working in New York City, Brooklyn and suburbs. Since then she has organized three new unions in Sullivan county, and has helped and strengthened old unions wherever she has been.

Two hundred and forty new members have been added in Sullivan county, and the good work still goes on. There seems to be a "stirring" all along the line, and a prospect of more and better work this year than ever before. The "New Year letter" sent out by our president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, has found a response in the hearts of our loyal women, and they will "gird on the armor and go marching along." Petitions are being actively circulated, and by the time this letter appears will have been sent to our legislature, asking for the Sunday closing of the Exposition, and for a law prohibiting the employment of women and girls as barmaids in saloons and restaurants where liquor is sold.

A good work among the poor has lately been begun in Brooklyn, called "The Sunday Breakfast Association." Breakfast is served to any who may choose to come from 7:30 to 9 a. m., then gospel services are held till noon. The W. C. T. U. donates its hall and assists in the work.

Shortly after sending my last letter I received a report of Richmond county convention, held at Mariners' Harbor. It was an earnest and enthusiastic gathering, and a success in every way. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, our state vice-president, is now president of this county.

The advance of the work as gleaned from reports of local unions and superintendents is most encouraging, and while there are but four local unions, yet these are in a healthy and vigorous condition, and the prospect of organizing more is favorable. The county is said to be a lager beer stronghold but the little white ribbon band is beginning to be recognized as a power not to be despised. The churches and press are largely friendly to the W. C. T. U. This county received one of the prize banners for the greatest increase in membership last year and they mean to keep it, by obeying the scriptural injunction to "increase and multiply."

I have also a good account of a meeting held at Port Richmond at which Miss Elizabeth U. Yates delivered a most forcible and telling address. Mrs. Boole was also present at this meeting. Handsome decorations, good music, and hearty coöperation of all the ladies helped to make the meeting attractive. Mrs. Harry Heal sang as a solo, "Jesus, lover of my soul," in a very effective manner. The union at Port Richmond is doing good work.

Erie county met at Collins, December 16 and 17, and held a most fruitful convention. A feature of the meeting was a paper on "Hygiene and Physical Culture," by the superintendent, after which the meeting was resolved into a class, and motion exercises gone through with which were restful as well as instructive. A gold medal contest occupied the evening, this being the second one held in the county; the first one was held last June, and was not reported. They feel justly proud of the elocutionary ability of their young people. A resolution of sympathy was passed on the death of Miss Ames, and indeed all our hearts have been saddened by the call which has taken her to her rest and reward.

A parliamentary drill was conducted by Mrs. Williamson, and the report of the National Convention given by Mrs. Shaw, of Eden, who was delegate from Erie county. Both exercises delighted and instructed the hearers.

Tonawanda Y's feel greatly encouraged over the success of a series of meetings which they are conducting, with P. A. Burdick as temperance evangelist. Mr. Burdick is a power, and is sure to accomplish great good in Tonawanda.

Onondaga county held its last convention at Tully, and although the report comes late, yet it is not too late to mention some of the good things. "On to victory" is the keynote of their marching song. In the evening after devotional exercises and greeting from the clergy, a gold medal contest was held, conducted by Mrs. Mary D. Ferguson, of Syracuse. The house was crowded, and great interest was manifested throughout. The next morning ten minutes was given each superintendent to report her work, and five minutes to any delegate desiring to speak. Fair work will receive its proper share of attention, and while they will do all possible to aid in our work at the state fair, which is permanently located in Syracuse, they will also enter the open door for work at the county fair. Mrs. Van Benschoten, of Newark, gave the address on the second evening, which was an earnest plea for all that is good and pure in our government and our homes.

In addition to the regular report, Mrs. Ferguson, the county corresponding secretary, sends notes of the splendid work done in the county through the efforts of Miss Vandelia Varnum, of Franklinville. She has almost, if not quite, doubled the membership. Mrs. Ferguson says, "Never, since our county was organized, have we had so many additions in the same length of time." She has organized new unions and strengthened old ones, and leaves rejoicing and satisfaction in every place. The county desires to recommend Miss Varnum to other counties and states, not only as an original and entertaining speaker, but as a real helper in all lines of our work. I can heartily indorse all that may be said of Miss Varnum. On three or four different occasions, it has been my privilege to be with her during a series of meetings, and the interest and enthusiasm which she awakens does not soon die out.

Kings county is marching steadily onward under the leadership of Mrs. Louise Vanderhoef. At their annual meeting, held in St. Luke's M. E. Church, Brooklyn, the reports of officers and superintendents showed excellent results from the year's labor, fourteen W's and two Y's having been at work, with a paying membership of 541. They have thirteen Loyal Temperance Legions with a membership of more than 1,000, and still growing.

During the year the various unions have raised nearly $3,000. During the months of August and September, eighty fountains in Brooklyn were supplied with ice through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. with Mrs. Reeves as superintendent. The president recommended having reading rooms and temperance restaurants, and that members refrain as far as possible from trading with grocers who sell alcoholic stimulants.

The devotions and Bible readings were especially uplifting, the latter being conducted by Miss Greenwood and Mrs Braman.

The Willing Worker, official organ of Ulster county W. C. T. U., comes to me full of good things. It contains a splendid account of the National Convention, and general notes, beside bulletins from nearly all of the local unions. The paper is just entering upon its third year. The subscription list is constantly increasing. Most of the work is done by one who has children and home to care for beside church and missionary work to do, yet she finds time—or makes it—to be "ye editor" of this paper without other pay than the reward which a good deed brings. God bless the busy, consecrated white-ribboners who never shrink from a known duty, and who make it possible for us to hold up our standard without faltering or wavering.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM.
State Reporter, Lockport.

EASTERN WASHINGTON.

LIVE WORKERS IN THE FAR WEST.

"What shall I do to be forever known?
Thy duty ever.
This did full many who yet have slept unknown,
O never, never
Think'st that they remain unknown
Whom thou knowest not.
By angel-trumps in heaven their place is blown,
Divine their lot."

If only our local workers could realize the importance of their efforts and influence in this peaceful war I am sure state reporters' work would be much different. Our local work would then command the attention of the secular press everywhere.

Since last report Asotin county has met in convention. All the leading workers of the county were present. The hall was tastefully decorated with flowers and banners. Mrs. Jennie Wann, the former president, was presented with Miss Willard's picture by Mrs. T. G. Bean, one of the veterans in our state, in behalf of the local unions of the county. The officers elected were, president, Mrs. L. K Brown, Anatone; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary Scott, Asotin; recording secretary, Miss Cora Meadow, Asotin; treasurer, Miss Carrie Ausman, Asotin.

The officers of the unions in Spokane are endeavoring to organize additional unions before the state convention shall meet there in May. The Congregational Church of that city (First church) recently appointed a committee for earnest temperance work. It was suggested by this committee that a W. C. T. U. be formed which should meet at the Congregational Tabernacle.

At Walla Walla the union has held gospel temperance meetings in the court house every Sunday afternoon at two o'clock for several months. Many have signed the pledge; the union is increasing in numbers and the ministers of the city have nearly all given addresses at these meetings. Rosalia has secured a column in the Rosalia Rustler, Mrs. Anskie L. Tolton, editor.

Wilbur has been given a column in the Wilbur Register, Mrs. Zada Gardiner, editor; Mrs. Clara Kurtz Bowers, of Goldendale, state press superintendent, reports ten papers in East Washington supplied with W. C. T. U. columns. Two or three of these Mrs. Bowers fills herself.

Since Mrs. Bowers' report I have heard from Mrs. Pryor, Waterville's president, that the Big Bend Empire, and the other Waterville paper have given the local press superintendent the use of a column in each paper. This union is operating a free reading room, and has seventy-five dollars in the treasury. Mrs. Pryor writes that Mrs. Stevens' work there has had a good effect upon the public sentiment; that the business men subscribe liberally for the W. C. T. U., and that the organization is having an influence over the politicians of the place. Waverly contributed five dollars to state work recently.

Colfax donated ten dollars and will make up the one hundred voted last spring, several contributions having been paid to the state treasurer, already. North Yakima paid fifteen dollars donation to state and secured about forty signatures to the World's Petition.

Garfield reports through Mrs. S. E. Potter, veteran, that the W. C. T. U. held meetings in the M. E. Church morning and evening of November 29—a morning sermon and miscellaneous exercises in the evening. This union also secured temperance services on Thanksgiving Day. In this town the temperance men work systematically through committees on election day and have made some converts. Saloon men were there from Colfax in their own interests. Mrs. Potter states that the city ordinance requires a thousand dollar license and has several restrictions. Garfield has been dry one year and it has been a year of unprecedented prosperity. At the last election two tickets were in the field, the citizens' ticket and anti-saloon. The latter elected the mayor and one councilman, S. T. Laird and Geo. F. Stivers, and the former two councilmen. As the two "hold-over" members are anti saloon, the council now stands: Mayor and three councilmen for prohibition to two councilmen against. Under the state law the best such communities can do is to make the license too high for profit in small towns of good sentiment.

Creston reports having started a temperance singing class for alternate Saturday afternoons.

Reports come from Roslyn's president and corresponding secretary. Both report "life" in the union; one mass-meeting has been held in which many participated and a collection of nine dollars was taken up. This union gave an entertainment and cleared twenty-five dollars. A reading room is planned for the miners and a desire expressed to organize new unions in that region. They have a juvenile society. Many newly organized unions report life and interest and ask for instructions.

Dr. Wallace W. Potter, of Spokane, has opened an office for special treatment of inebriates and slaves to the drug habit in that city. The city council of Spokane recently adopted the following: "Resolved, That the police commissioners be directed to instruct the chief of police to cause to be seized and destroyed as public nuisances, all obscene, indecent, and immoral pictures, papers, prints or publications which shall be found in the possession of any person, firm or corporation, and which shall be exhibited, or sold, or offered for sale within the limits of the city."

Tyler union has from time to time held ten Demorest contests. In these the workers in the Loyal Temperance Legion have ably assisted. Mrs. Ada Moore, both president and superintendent, has recently started the contests at Lance Hills schoolhouse, two having been held and a class organized for a third.

The Columbia River conference embracing East Washington, northern Idaho and eastern Oregon, adopted some ringing resolutions at its session in Spokane last fall. First comes a long and truthful arraignment of the saloons, then reference is made to the nation's complicity with the liquor traffic, and the following close the list:

"'Christian citizens' is a term which implies two things: That we are devoted to God and opposed to the devil! And this means that we are not only to be religious, but that we are to be patriotic also; that we are not only to pray for the right, but that we must vote against the wrong.

"We, therefore, do here and now take this solemn vow, that henceforth we will not, by voice or vote, support any political party or candidate, who will not unequivocally declare for the absolute prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating beverages!

"We do further declare it to be our purpose to vote for prohibition at every state or national election, even though such course may necessitate separation from the political parties with which we have heretofore affiliated!

"We recognize in the W. C. T. U., a providential and mighty force for the suppression of the saloon, and we most heartily bid those women God-speed in their heroic work.

"And we further declare our appreciation of every other organization or agency which has for its object the overthrow of the iniquitous liquor power."

Mrs. Lucy R. Berry, Walla Walla, state treasurer, called upon the local membership in a letter to the presidents to aid in the liquidation of the state debt through a self-denial fund during Christmas week. Those who did not receive the notice, may, if they choose, so assist the treasury now.

Mrs. L. Maria Carley, Colfax, superintendent UNION SIGNAL work, will also take charge of the literature department the balance of the year, Mrs. Wright having gone to California for her health. Unions that fail to receive the circular of instructions will please apply to Mrs. Carley.

Switzer union, Conlee City, is prospering under the leadership of Mrs. A. P. Crystal, formerly state treasurer. This union is working on the state quilt and the World's Petition.

Whitman county union has printed the report of the last convention, and the local directory in a neat circular.

This county has twelve local unions. The officers are: President, Mrs. M. E. Beech, Palouse; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. Maria Carley, Colfax; recording secretary, Mrs. B. J. Wiseman, Colfax; treasurer, Mrs. Sargent, Garfield.

LUCY A. SWITZER.
State Reporter, Cheney.

INDIANA JOTTINGS.

HAPPENINGS IN THE HOOSIER STATE.

"One by one thy duties wait thee
Let thy whole strength go to each.
Let no future dreams elate thee,
Learn thou first what those can teach.
Every hour that fleets so slowly
Has its tasks to do and bear;
Luminous the crown and holy
If thou set each gem with care."

The above stanza describes Miss Willard's exhortation upon our politics. Standing in our places, giving our best to each duty, and deserving what may come to us, makes "luminous the crown and holy," because we "set each gem with care."

Our Mary Balch, a living example of the above, has been near death's door since the National Convention, but in answer to prayer and through the mercy of the Father, she is spared to us still. Brave, faithful, gentle Mary Balch, we do love her, and may the Father teach us how to properly appreciate the life He has spared unto us.

Mrs. Nichols gave her lectures upon "Paris and the Universal Exposition of 1889," January 14 and 15, with a matinee for children on the afternoon of the 16th, in the hall of the Terre Haute Total Abstinence Society, and under the auspices of the Frances Willard union. Too much cannot be said in praise and commendation of these lectures.

A banquet was given the evening of the 15th by the Frances Willard union, at which were present representatives from each local union in Vigo county. Tables spread with inviting delicacies, pleasant greeting and interchange of thought, made this a most delightful occasion. Mrs. Mary Miller, of the city, presided as toast mistress with much ease and grace. Mrs. R. L. Russel, first county president, responded to the toast, "Pioneer county work." Mrs. Fannie Reed, president of the West Side union, read a carefully prepared paper in response to the toast, "Unity of spirit necessary to success." "Why white-ribbon women are Prohibitionists," was the subject of the toast responded to by Mrs. J. P. Harrah, president of the Frances Willard union.

"Y Work in Colleges" was the subject of the toast spoken to by Miss Laura Frazee, president of the state Normal Y.

"The Blessedness of Doing" was the subject responded to by Miss Alice R. Palmer, state organizer. Miss Whistler responded to the toast "The Indiana Coal Miner." Mrs. Nichols spoke to "The Relation of President to her Constituency." It is needless to say this was the speech of the evening. The closing prayer was made by Mrs. Lammers, state superintendent of foreign work. Mrs. S. Tremaine, who had so skillfully planned and carried out with the faithfulness of her helpers, this delightful entertainment for us all, must have felt herself amply rewarded by complete success in every detail.

Miss Palmer has just closed her convention reports in Vigo county. She spoke before the Central Union, the Frances Willard Union, the West Side and Riley unions; then went from Terre Haute for a week's work in Ripley county.

Mrs. K. T. A. Straw, our efficient superintendent of L. T. L. work, has been reporting the roll of the Indiana Legions, a summary of which is as follows: Enlisted membership, 7,564; pledged membership, 4,215; honorary membership, 165; teachers, 300; divisions, 56; companies, 126; county juvenile superintendents, 33; local juvenile superintendents, 142; amount of money received, $520.98; amount of money expended, $463.15. Vanderburg county has custody of state prize banner. Wayne county has the largest number of companies. Howard county has the largest membership. Boone county has the largest honorary membership. Co. F., Kokomo, has the largest enlisted membership. Co. A., Columbus, has largest pledged membership. Westfield L. T. L. has the first graduates: Leoto Fordery, Johnnie Doan, Willie Mills and Fred Carter.

Miss Edna Farley, state Loyal Temperance Legion organizer and lecturer, after an attack of La Grippe which kept her indoors for a number of days, has been spending the month in Madison, Grant and Howard counties. The Loyal Temperance Legion of the West Side union, Terre Haute, gave an entertainment last week at which they cleared $9.45 for their work. The boys predominate in this Legion. Miss Whistler organized Loyal Temperance Legions at Staunton and Newburg, Clay county. The band of fifty-six children under Mrs. Lawrey, of the Frances Willard union, will soon give an entertainment. The children are making their column in The Organizer interesting by their nice little letters to Mrs. Straw.

Miss Margaret Dickson, state superintendent of Y. W. C. T. U., made her maiden speech a few weeks ago at Franklin. Miss Dickson will give her time to the work of Y organization, which we have no doubt insures successful progress in young woman's work.

Our promoted sisters and friends this month are as follows: Mrs. Annie Pike, of the Wabash union; the mother of Mrs. J. B. Bristol, of the Winchester union; Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, of the Xenia union; the little daughter of Mrs. Howard, of the Shelbyville union; Mrs. Laura Ragan, of Brownsville union; Mrs. E. E. Ellis, of the Westfield union; Mrs. Milas Rhodes, of Spencerville union, and Mrs. Rachel Roberts, of Pickard Mills union. We are counting our loved ones in heaven; they have only gone before, to welcome our arrival.

Mrs. L. D. B. Cowan, state superintendent of mothers' meetings, reports, since state convention: In Spencer county, nine speeches, six mothers' meetings, fifty-three house visits, adding quite a number of members to the different local unions; in Gibson county, one week's work at Princeton, made seventy house visits, spoke once publicly, held three mothers' meetings, and added fifteen new members to the union. At Owensville, in the same county, Mrs. Cowan spent three days, held two meetings and made thirty calls; in White county at Monticello, she made ninety-four calls, held three meetings and obtained twenty-one members for the union. White county held an interesting convention December 16. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Grace Wirt, president; Mrs. Cooper, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Bingham, treasurer.

Bicknell writes of the good work of Mrs. Denny, whose letter to jail and prison workers is so full of interest to all. Mr. and Mrs. Fields have been giving reports of the Boston Conventions to the delight of their constituency. Miss Palmer says that besides the five hundred women represented by her in the Convention, fully 2,700 people have listened to her reports.

Mrs. Trish, after spending the holidays at home, is ready for work. Mrs. Cowan will soon work in Newton, Pulaski and Cass counties. Mrs. Nichols' appointments for this month and next are as follows: Brookville, Winchester, Ft. Wayne, Terre Haute, Plymouth, Mishawaka, La Porte, Hammond, Valparaiso, Michigan City, Crown Point, Rensselaer. I trust each county will call for its state president, and thus come in contact with her.

County presidents can greatly facilitate this idea by arranging for Mrs. Nichols to meet every white-ribboner in their counties. The Frances Willard union of Terre Haute has inaugurated the movement in Vigo county by giving their banquet in her honor.

Miss Maggie Burkette organized a union of seventeen members at Tobinsport, January 2. New Marion lately held a small gold medal contest. Chalmers union gave a literary entertainment recently at which they cleared thirty dollars for their work. Mrs. Leon Bailey is president of a new real estate association lately formed by enterprising Indianapolis women.

Your correspondent has been incapacitated from public speaking by the grip La Grippe has had on her vocal organs, but pen, fingers, heart and brain have been busy in the work among miners.

Mary Hadley, with the calm persistency which is her characteristic, is pushing the Hadley Industrial School Fund, and successfully too. She is the right woman in the right place, for she knows no such word as fail. Miss Hadley and her mother have been called to mourn the death of their brother and son, Alfred Hadley. May they be kept in this hour of sorrow and bereavement.

I watch with great interest W. C. T. U. news from other states, and greatly rejoice in their notes of progress. May God speed our work during the year.

SADIE B. WHISTLER,
State Reporter, Terre Haute.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MRS. LIDE MERIWETHER, a gifted speaker as well as president of the W. C. T. U. of Tennessee, has suffered an illness of many months, but has now returned home and will soon again be in the field.

JUDGE AND MRS. STEADMAN, of Canada, have gone to Southern California. Mrs. Steadman is president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., and in her absence on this health trip, Mrs. Judge Foster, the former president, will act.

MRS. S. F. GRUBB, National superintendent of foreign work, will deliver a lecture under the auspices of the West side W. C. T. U., Chicago, Sunday evening next, February 14, at 7:30 p. m. in the Western Avenue M. E. church, corner of Western Avenue and Monroe Street. Subject: "The Gate Keepers of the Nation."

MRS. JANE M. GEDDES, wife of the Hon. Norman Geddes, of Adrian, Mich., is another name added to the long list of those who have fulfilled life's mission and departed. A radiant stream of active service illuminates the record of her life. She was a recognized leader in every good work, and one who was identified with the temperance movement from the beginning of the Crusade, serving as vice-president from the state of Michigan for the National W. C. T. U., and as president of the local W. C. T. U. from the date of its organization until failing health compelled her to resign. Her simple creed that the love of God is best shown in love for humanity, was untiringly evidenced in her life.

Official Communications.

A GLANCE AHEAD FOR JUVENILE WORKERS.

The careful attention of each Loyal Temperance Legion worker is requested for the consideration of the following outline of special work for the current year, and the earnest coöperation of each in carrying out these plans.

1. Though the Columbian Exposition is still in the distance, it is very desirable that the autograph cards and the ten cent contributions to the fountain shall be sent as soon as possible to the World's juvenile superintendent, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Ill. Delay in attending to this will cause a great deal of unnecessary trouble and confusion, and we know that you would be most unwilling to add to the labors of one whose head, heart and hands are already filled to overflowing. The children should also be planning and making the articles for the sale table, whose proceeds are to be devoted to the work of the Loyal Temperance Legion in other lands.

2. The Young Crusader in its new form, having now only a monthly edition at the very moderate price of fifteen cents per year for a single copy, and one cent per number in lots of twenty-five or more to one address, should be in the hands of each Sunday-school and Loyal Temperance Legion child regularly. This cannot be accomplished without earnest endeavor upon the part of each worker. Let us prove what united effort in this direction can do. Samples will be furnished free by the W. T. P. A. to those desiring to extend the circulation of this paper.

3. It is gratifying to note that the holding of Loyal Temperance Legion county conventions is coming to be recognized as an important feature of our work, and it is hoped that these conventions may be multiplied indefinitely in the various states during the present year. Let us follow the advance movement of Windham county, Vermont, and at each of these gatherings this year organize a county Loyal Temperance Legion with full corps of adult and juvenile officers. Special directions for such organizations will be given later.

4. Let us request the executive committee of each county W. C. T. U. to take such action as shall secure in its annual convention representation for the county Loyal Temperance Legion by its juvenile secretary, who shall there present an annual report.

5. Each state superintendent should secure, if possible, from the executive committee of her State W. C. T. U., Loyal Temperance Legion representation by active, adult Loyal Temperance Legion workers, upon payment of dues into the state treasury, either by the local Loyal Temperance Legion companies directly or by those of county or district combined. The payment of dues should not be made obligatory upon any company.

6. Wisconsin has set us a grand example in calling last July a state Loyal Temperance Legion convention, on which occasion its sixty-one graduates with their leaders were organized into a state Loyal Temperance Legion. Following in her wake we should everywhere push the diploma plan, that we be not any of us left far behind in this matter of state organization. Who will have the second state Loyal Temperance Legion in the land?

7. We should strive this year for a very large number of adult honorary L. T. L. members. The children are to procure these themselves, inviting their parents and adult friends to join the Legion, the conditions of honorary membership being the signing of a pledge and the payment of a small annual membership fee, the amount of which shall be designated by each local leader. Cards for this purpose can be procured from the W. T. P. A.; in ordering these state whether you desire the triple or the single pledge. The advantage of securing these honorary members is threefold: it provides work for the children, a most important consideration; it brings money into the L. T. L. treasury; it gives to those who thus join a special interest in the work.

8. Now that arrangements have been made which render it possible for the W. C. T. U. to come into full ownership of the Temperance Temple at no distant day, in the consummation of this great undertaking the children should be encouraged to make this a special object of their gifts and efforts during the present year.

Recognizing our Master's call to advance by every means the blessed work for the children, let us go forward in the spirit of the motto:

"Attempt great things for God, Expect great things from God."

HELEN G. RICE, Nat. Supt.

I find there is a little misapprehension as to the term of Lady Somerset and Miss Willard. They have charge of the editorial work of THE UNION SIGNAL during the six months of Miss West's absence, but they were regularly elected editors without time limit.

ESTHER PUGH, Acting Secretary
W. T. P. A. Directors.

Our Library Table.

MAGAZINES FOR FEBRUARY.

The Forum. The Forum Pub. Co., Union Square, New York City.
The Atlantic Monthly. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., New York City.
The Review of Reviews. 13 Astor Place. New York City.
The Chautauquan. T. L. Flood Pub. House, Meadville, Penn.
The Californian Illustrated Magazine. The Californian Pub. Co., Los Angeles, Cal.
Current Literature. Current Literature Pub. Co., 30 W. 23d Street, New York City.
Christian Thought. Wilbur B. Ketcham, Publisher, 2 Cooper Union, New York City.
The Phrenological Journal. Fowler, Wells & Co., New York City.
Demorest's Family Magazine. 15 E. 14th Street, New York City.
Lippincott's Magazine. J. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.
Vick's Floral Guide. James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y.
Burpee's Farm Annual. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia.
Baby. Baby Pub. Co., 907 Broadway, New York.
Our Banner. N. R. Johnson, Box 752, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS is measureless by a paragraph. Its first pages, in "The Progress of the World," are prophetic of coming events in the history of the year. Perhaps its most striking features this month, in view of approaching political crises, are the two sketches of David Bennett Hill, one written by Charles A. Collin, of the law department of Cornell University, an intimate associate of Mr. Hill, as his private legal adviser. The second sketch is by a political opponent whose name is withheld. "Help for the Russian Starvelings," while it deepens our sympathy for the suffering nation, arouses also a feeling of justifiable pride in the generous spirit that, through the instrumentality of The Northwestern Miller, is making it possible for 6,000,000 pounds of flour to be shipped from these shores. "The 'Polytechnic' and Its Chicago Excursion" outlines the project of Mr. Robert Mitchell to "take an excursion party of a thousand people" from London to Liverpool, across the Atlantic to New York, thence to Chicago and the World's Fair. It is to be hoped that philanthropists everywhere will note well the origin and growth, management and true spirit of reform, as shown in this history of the "Polytechnic," founded by Mr. Quintin Hogg, "the wisest and most successful philanthropist of our generation."

Published at New York, 13 Astor Place. $2.50 per year.

THE CHAUTAUQUAN may fitly be called an "all around" magazine, commanding, as it does, contributions from the ablest writers of to-day, and indorsing through its columns the highest and best thought of the past; always loyal to American institutions—note the leading articles for February, and "Required Readings" for the year—yet giving ample space to friends and neighbors under other flags, presenting questions of religious and political interest, as well as the social, industrial, scientific and philosophic topics of the time. As it gathers about its round-table knowledge-seekers of nearly all nationalities, young and old, rich and poor alike, it is no small factor in those influences that are unifying the thought of this wide world, and making the "universal brotherhood of man" less a theory and more a fact.

T. L. Flood Publishing House, Meadville, Penn. Yearly subscription, $2.

THE CALIFORNIAN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE for this month has several most timely articles in its attractive table of contents. "A Stain on the Flag," by M. G. C. Edholm, throws a startlingly clear light upon "a slavery so vile and debasing that all the horrors of negro American slavery do not begin to compare with it,"—referring to the sale of Chinese women and children in cities, "where a local Chinatown prevails." The painfully graphic picture closes with the appeal, "Let America blot out yellow slavery as it has blotted out black slavery. Let the Chinese woman as well as the African man point to the stars and stripes and say, 'No man dares do me injustice under this flag.'"

The Californian Publishing Company, San Francisco. $3 a year.

The February number of THE FORUM, which it designates as its anniversary number, completes the twelfth volume of this invaluable magazine. THE FORUM was designed and established six years ago, primarily as a "great public institution" and as a "vehicle for the discussion of the great problems that press for solution in the United States." It has capable investigators abroad studying social systems and problems, that the "whole truth and nothing but the truth," in its most acceptable presentations may be delivered to the public. This month, politicians will read with appreciation "The Perils of Our National Elections," by ex-Senator G. F. Edmunds, and "The Choice of Presidential Electors," by Hon. E. J. Phelps; The three "Great Problems of Commercial Development," viz., the Nicaragua Canal, the further development of lake commerce and ways to the sea, and the reclaiming by irrigation of a great domain, 120,000,000 acres now desert, are alone of deep interest to every American. Hamilton Wright Maybie writes in a condensed and pleasing style of "A Year's Literary Productions," closing with these significant words: "If great books are not being written by Americans at this moment it is clear from even a brief and inadequate survey that good books are more numerous than ever before in our literary history, and the good book predicts the great book." A happy feature of THE FORUM are the brief sketches given of the contributors to each number, helping the reader as they do, to a more intelligent and interested perusal of the various articles. Union Square, New York. $5 per year.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for February has for its leading story, "Roy, the Royalist," by William Westall. It is a vivid portrayal of Revolutionary days in Paris during the time of Napoleon. "The Managing Editor," by Julius Chambers, is a bright rehearsal of the duties and responsibilities of the man or woman whose privilege it is to control the editing of a large daily journal, describing among other experiences how one managing editor in New York secured and gave to the public under the most opposing circumstances, information of the great fire then raging in Boston. Other equally interesting contributions on diverse themes, make up this very satisfactory number. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia. $3 per year.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report

Special Offer to Ladies.—If you secure a Life Insurance policy in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association before January 1st you pay no membership fee. Write at once for particulars Geo. E Godward Secy 187 Broadway N Y City

STRONG WORDS

I. "I could quote a thousand men who, when everything else failed them, found in Granula the very food their systems needed."—JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D., founder Dansville Sanatorium.

II. "Granula has saved my life on several occasions. I now carry the article with me as a sort of life preserver."—WM. GILLETTE (the actor).

III. "The Judge (A. W. Tourgee) has been crazy ever since he was in Dansville about the delicious Granula."—MRS. A. W. TOURGEE.

FOR THAT "PERFECT HEALTH FOOD"
GRANULA

GRANULA CO., Dansville, N. Y.
Pamphlet free. Trial box, postpaid, for 36 cts.

DEMOREST
$19.50. High Arm.

IS NOT A CHEAP IMITATION, BUT MADE IN OUR OWN FACTORY.
Send for Illustrated Catalogue and Testimonial
DEMOREST SEWING MACHINE COMPANY
17 East 14th Street, New York.

VOSE & SONS PIANOS. ESTABLISHED IN 1851.
Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Sold on easy terms. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue and full information.
170 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Abbott Bros. Cure
Positively Cures
RHEUMATISM
$1.25 per bottle.
All Druggists and
Abbott Brothers,
290 S FRANKLIN ST. CHICAGO
BOOK FREE.

World's Fair.

To Families, Syndicates and Individuals Do you want comfortable accommodations cheap during your visit to the World's Fair, within five minutes ride of the grounds? No Saloons. If so, write for particulars WM. RICHARDSON, 196 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ON THE SHORES OF IMPERIAL LAKE GENEVA
We offer elegant residence sites at LOW PRICES, EASY TERMS and CHOICEST LOCATION, 100 feet and upward Picturesque, beautifully wooded, magnificent views Every facility and advantage Full particulars given upon application to PRATT BROTHERS,
508 Chamber of Commerce Chicago, Ill

Women's Rest Tour Association
264 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON, MASS.
Send stamp for prospectus stating object of society and describing hand-book

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 DAYS TREATMENT FREE by mail. DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.

YOUR NAME on 25 LOVELY CARDS, 1 RING, 1 LACE PIN, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 400 Album Verses &c., with the New and Popular Monthly, WAYSIDE GLEANINGS, THREE MONTHS FOR 10c. LAUREL CARD CO., CLINTONVILLE, CONN.

20 Hidden Name, New Emb. Basket, Plush Fringe Cards, 1 complete Fountain Pen 25 Games & Agts. Outfit 10cts. Typewriter and Photo Cameras free to Agts. Clinton Bros. Clintonville, Ct.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prizes. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, B'way, New York

BORSCH-OPTICIAN
103 E. ADAMS ST.
CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT
SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

Publisher's Notes.

A Pull Together.

This is the time for a pull all together. The best opportunity to interest others in our work and our principles is NOW afforded. It will be enough to say to many that the editorial control of the UNION SIGNAL is in the hands of Miss Willard, and that associated with her is Lady Henry Somerset, to arouse their interest at once. People are eager to read what these leaders of thought have to say, and everywhere it will be easy to secure new subscribers. Tell those who in times past have taken the paper, but for some reason have not renewed their subscription, that they are missing a great deal, and they will hurry to again enroll their names on our list.

Let each subscriber at once try to secure another one. It will be easy work and work that will pay, in increased public sentiment favoring the principles for which we all are laboring.

Here is an example you should follow; and you—and you—and you:

"In response to your recent appeal in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 21, Mrs. T. and myself send to-day ten subscribers to be added to our list. You will have our most earnest sympathy and prayers."

Let us all

Pull together.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

You will not be wise if you do not see that all your friends, your teachers and your ministers get THE UNION SIGNAL. I know it will do lots of good everywhere. The boys and girls—I mean the temperance boys and girls of course—can do the work if you will ask them, and do it gladly. I know, because I am a little girl myself.

How to do it.

The following extracts are from an article written by a state superintendent of literature, published in her state paper. Read and heed:

"I have written to the state superintendent of each department, asking her to send me a list of the literature she would like to have kept on hand. I did this because I felt that the superintendent would know better than I the best literature for her department, as she might find time to read and study carefully her literature, while I could not possibly read and be prepared to pass judgment on that of all departments.

"The Union Signal.

"I would like to impress upon you the importance of a careful reading of THE UNION SIGNAL. I was surprised to hear an officer say, when I referred to some plan of work suggested in THE UNION SIGNAL, 'I really do not have time to read it, and am not informed on that subject.' Did you ever know a politician who had not time to read his paper? That is one of the things he must do, if he keeps posted. Is it not as necessary that we as white-ribboners should read our official organ? Nowhere else can we learn of the work and needs of our organization. Through this medium we know what our sisters are doing all over the land, we find many helps, many new ideas, such as the P. O. crusade, work among farmers, membership crusade day, the home protection reading course, etc. There too we find the list of new publications; all these, beside the many thoughts that inspire us and give us courage.

"Begin now.

"My sister superintendents, we can make this department a power for great good. Shall we do it? Take advantage, if you have not, of the samples at half price. Show them to any member of the union, take any order offered, if only five cents' worth. Always take your samples to your regular meetings. Push the work of THE UNION SIGNAL and the state paper. Let us go to convention next year reporting a superintendent of literature for every county and for every local union; superintendents who are working, not trusting in their own judgment, but seeking continually the guidance of the Holy Spirit that we may win souls."

Let all superintendents of literature look in like manner after the interests of her department.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Wake Up!

Every one wakes up sooner or later. Its the element of time that gives the act interest—in time, or behind time is the question. Particularly is this true of those in poor health. To such, time is life as well as money.

Every one knows that the recuperative power of nature is very great. But not every one knows that this fact is the foundation for the greatest discovery of modern science for the relief and restoration of suffering humanity.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN'S COMPOUND OXYGEN is the natural air which keeps us alive, enriched with more oxygen (its life-giving element) and magnetized.

This agent, administered by their method, has a healing and building power so great as to tax credulity. But 23 years of success, and over 60,000 recorded cases, will convince convincible people. Are you of this class?

The method, practice and proof will come to you in book form for the asking. Wake up! Or if awake, make the wisest use of your time.

Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. 66 Church St., Toronto, Canada.

THE WORLD'S FAIR
Is bu twenty-five minutes ride from
HARVEY.

Arrangements are being made to accommodate thousands of World's Fair Visitors

The Harvey Land Association

founded and platted the whole town of Harvey, and are selling choice property near the factories, the schools and churches, the hotels and business districts at original prices, that will give the Investor a handsome profit.

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

have just located the immense concern of

A. J. Sweeney & Son, Wheeling, W. Va.,

making the Tenth big factory for Harvey. Lots are selling rapidly. Prices advance March 1st. Hundreds are writing for our new 36-page pamphlet, that tells all about Harvey. This pamphlet sent free. Write at once, addressing all communications to

The Harvey Land Association

819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—Always buy real estate from first hands. Save commission to agents. Get title from the founders of the town with all the privileges and benefits free.

FREE IT WILL COST YOU NOTHING. Send us your address on a postal and you will receive the finest catalogue of PIANOS and ORGANS in the world. It will show you how to SAVE $100. Satisfaction guaranteed before you pay. CUT THIS OUT and mail it to us. You will be surprised at the result. But you must do it NOW. Write to CORNISH & CO. (Established 25 Years.) WASHINGTON, New Jersey.

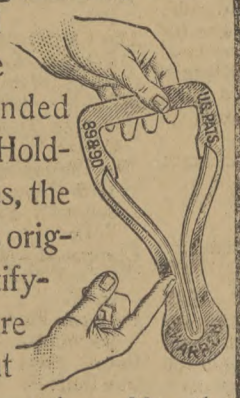
Warren Hose Supporter

Let all ladies see the Rounded Rib on Holding Edges, the Warren's original identifying feature to prevent stocking cutting. No other hose supporter can help cutting the stocking. The Warren for sale everywhere. George Frost Co., makers, Boston, Mass.



To Wives and Mothers

Many are the anxious hours a wife and mother has in looking into the future, and thinking what she would do with herself and little ones, if her support should be taken away, and leaving them without means to face a cold and unfriendly world. The husband and father, though kind, does not stop to think of the future, but day after day passes away until sickness overtakes him, and then it is too late to provide for those he loves. Would it not be wise in you to persuade your husband to secure a policy of insurance at once in the AMERICAN TEMPERANCE LIFE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION? Then you would feel less anxiety for the future, as you would have something to support yourself and little ones in the event of your husband's death.

Could you not save a little from your weekly expenses, or have your husband lay aside a small amount each week to pay the Mortuary Calls when they become due?

REMEMBER THAT MOTHERS CAN BE INSURED FOR THE BENEFIT OF THEIR CHILDREN.

No better COMPANY can be found in which to insure than in the AMERICAN TEMPERANCE LIFE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, as no person can become a member except he or she is a total abstainer from all intoxicating liquors. If further information is desired, or if you wish to secure a policy of insurance, please address G. E. GODWARD, Sec., 187 Broadway, New York City.

Save Money By Buying BICYCLES WINTER PRICES.
To reduce '91 stock we offer

	FORMERLY	NOW
Ormonde Safety 1¼ cushion tires	$140	$90
'90 Juno, (91 make) lady or man, all ball....	75	42
Mercury Diamond Safety, all steel "	100	57
40 in. Victor Jr. ball bgs. tangent [also other sizes]	37	17

50 other styles, & 200 2d hd wheels, greatly reduced. Cats. free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 G St. Peoria, Ill

COMPOUND OXYGEN Price reduced. For information address DR. A. H. HIATT Central Music Hall, Chicago.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

FREE CATALOGUE, SEEDS, PLANTS, BULBS, Etc.

HOME GROWN NORTHERN SEEDS.
Money made by buying my seeds. 35 pkts $1.00. 2c to 5c pkt. Presents with every order. Send postal card with name and address for catalogue.
A. R. AMES, Madison, Wis.

FREE
Grandest Illustrated Garden-Guide.
SEEDS 1 cent a packet. Up if rare or costly. Cheapest. Best of all. Free by mail. 500 000 packets of extras to Customers. Send at once for Free BOOK. R. H. Shumway, Rockford, Ill.

TESTED
GARDEN, FLOWER AND FARM
SEEDS
PLANTS, BULBS AND TOOLS.
Catalogues Sent Free on Application.
W. W. BARNARD & CO., Chicago, Ill.
Successors to HIRAM SIBLEY & CO.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
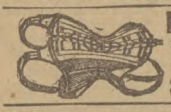
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.



LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.
$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

'DELSARTE'
Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.
Agents Wanted. Also
DELSARTE CORSET CO.,
142 W. 23d St., New York.
111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

Tennis. Boating. Riding.
YOUNG LADIES SHOULD WEAR
FERRIS' GOOD SENSE
CORDED CORSET WAIST
Permits Full Expansion of the Lungs.
Perfect Freedom of Motion.
—Tape-fastened Buttons. Cord-edge Button Holes.—Clamp Buckle at hip securely holds Hose Supporter.
CAN BE WASHED WITHOUT INJURY.
Be sure your Waist is stamped "GOOD SENSE."
FERRIS BROS. Manufacturers and Patentees, 341 Broadway, New York.
For sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., CHICAGO, Wholesale Western Agents.

FOR MANY LADIES THE BALKS
PERFECT COMFORT HEALTH — NO POSSIBLE INJURY TO LIFE — NO METAL EYELETS TO CUT STRINGS — PULL OUT OR CUT STRINGS — THE FIRST DAY EASY — NEVER BREAK OR ROLL UP — BONES NEVER WHICH FIT SAVE BUT
CORSETS & CORSET WAISTS FOR OTHERS THE
KABO
ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM — NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN YOUR CLOTHES — BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP — FULLY GUARANTEED BY THE CHICAGO CORSET CO.
CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

Publisher's Dept.

On The Square.

Things done on the square always leave a right impression—an impression of fairness. And we are convinced our readers will consider our square proposition one of the best. Some write to us complaining that we are fostering the spirit of contention by placing these biographies of warriors in the homes of the nation. We believe not. Much as the W. C. T. U. loves peace, very few would consider it necessary to refuse to read history because it contains a record of wars. The generals whose lives we place within your reach were foremost characters in our latest conflict, and every intelligent person, young or old, must know something regarding them. The best thing, then, is to give reliable information in relation to them. And so it is with satisfaction we publish again our offer, glad that even at a slight advance in prices we may continue it through February. This offer will be withdrawn on March 1. We ask a careful perusal of the following:

List.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year,	$1 00
Life of Gen. Grant, clo. gilt stamp, 734 pp	2 50
Life of Gen Sherman, clo. gilt stamp, 608 pp	1 50
Life of Gen. Sheridan, clo. 224 pp	1 00
Prof. Drummond's Addresses, heavy paper 308 pp.	35
Miss Willard's Annual Address,	05
Red Letter Day Calendar,	10

Offer A
for $3.40.
Retail Value $6.50.

Offer A
All of the Above.

Offer B
The Union Signal One Year.
Drummond's Addresses.
Red Letter Day Calendar
Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer B
for $1.25.
Retail Value $1.50.

Offer C.
for $2.00.
Retail Value $3.50.

Offer C.
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of General Grant.

Offer D
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of General Sherman.
Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer D
for $1.75.
Retail Value $2.55.

Offer E
for $1.40.
Retail Value $2.05.

Offer E
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of General Sheridan.
Miss Willard's Annual address.

Offer F
The Union Signal One Year.
Life of Grant.
Life of Sherman.
Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer F
for $2.50.
Retail Value $5.05

Special Proposition.

The Life of Grant or Life of Sherman will be sent for five new subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1.00 each. The $5 should be sent at one time with postage for either book: Grant, 21c: Sherman, 16c.

All the books are sent postpaid at prices named. The above privileges are for the benefit of old and new subscribers alike. The offers are good during February and expire March 1st, when they will be withdrawn.

Do not fail to avail yourself of this unequaled opportunity to get good books for almost nothing.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

Send for Color Samples and Price List. Patented February 23, 1886. Examine closely Stamp on inside of Waist.
TAKE NO OTHER.

THE GENUINE JACKSON CORSET WAISTS
ARE MADE ONLY BY THE
JACKSON CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.
The manufacturer's name is printed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of clasp in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. You should have one of them.

BE SURE AND GET THE RIGHT THING. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, SEND $1.25 FOR SAMPLE.

"The Crime of Not Insuring"

It may be plead in defense that old line companies charge so much and are so extravagant, and that assessment companies are so insecure, that it is no crime to refuse to trade with them. However that may be, here is a company which is NEITHER EXTRAVAGANT NOR INSECURE.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION . . . . OF AMERICA . . . . . .

Has its plans and rates adjusted to Insure at cost. Having only total abstainers as members, "cost" is reduced at least 30 per cent. under the charges of old line companies. Its expense account is $3.00 per $1,000—and cannot be more—instead of $9.32 per $1,000, the average of old companies. It has a guarantee fund of $64,000 securely invested. It stands almost, if not quite alone in paying one hundred cents on the dollar of every honest claim since its incorporation, July 24th, 1889. It has achieved, in two and one-half years, a success which old companies took about three times as long to reach. The company stands among business enterprises as an object lesson on total abstinence, which every good citizen should recognize.

WM. F SINGLETON, PRESIDENT.
902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

COLD BLAST. Feathers and Feather Pillows
ARE SOLD GUARANTEED
Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS
AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.
ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM.
IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MANUFACTURERS OF
FAULTLESS BEDDING
CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE
Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents, F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co., 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

HOME DRESSMAKING
A Complete Guide to Household Sewing.
Women who try to save who love to dress who have to sew Need It
Prepaid $2.75. The only book on the subject.
Free circulars giving Table of Contents.
Best Terms to Agents.
Address, CHARLES H. SERGEL & CO., Dept. 350 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE. A Christian woman's narrative of Mission work done "In His Name" in tough places, revealing the "inner life" of the underworld of New York "as seen by a woman." It describes Gospel work in the slums, and gives a famous detective's 30 years experiences. By Mrs. Helen Campbell, Col. Thos. W. Knox, and Inspector Thos. Byrnes (Chief of the N. Y. Detectives). With 250 engravings from flash-light photographs of scenes in Darkest New York by Day and by Night. Pure and good, full of tears and smiles, it is an ally of Temperance, a witness to the power of the Gospel,—a book for every home. Ministers say. "God speed it." Eminent women endorse it. 5,000 Agents Wanted, Men and Women. $200 a month made. Distance is no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to
A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

MORE MONEY IS MADE
Every year by agents working for us than for any other Company; why don't you make some of it? our circulars which we send free will tell you how. We pay salary or commission as party prefers, and want you now. OUTFIT FREE. Address at once,
Standard Silver Ware Co., Boston, Mass.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free.
G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send only five cents and receive a Large, Elegant Fashion Catalogue and how to secure 50c worth of dress patterns, FREE. Add Young Lady's Bazar 230 La Salle St. Chicago.

LADY wanted, on salary, to sell Roses, Shrubs, &c. Brown Bros. Nurs'm'n, Rochester, N. Y. & Chicago.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St. Chicago.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children. Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

LADY Agents $5 a day sure; new rubber undergarment. Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago, Ill.

MANAGERS WANTED Everywhere to take charge of our business. Advertise, distribute circulars & employ help to sell goods. WAGES $50 to $125 PER MONTH. Expenses advanced. State experience. Wages expected, also your preference for home work or traveling. SLOAN & CO., Mfrs. 294 George St., Cincinnati, O.

BABY CARRIAGES ARE DELIVERED FREE to any place in the United States. Also Baby JUMPERS, BICYCLES, SAFETIES and GIRLS' TRICYCLES. One or more at wholesale prices sent C. O. D. direct from L. O. SPENCER'S Factory, 221 W. Madison Street, CHICAGO. $3 to $10 saved. Send 2c. stamp for new catalogue. The largest factory in the world. Latest Styles.

THE

Owen Electric Belt

AND APPLIANCES

For Men and Women

Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.

They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.

CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.

[Trade Mark.]
DR. A. OWEN.

A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in

OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE

containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,
Main Office and only Factory,
191-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.
The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

PEATS THE
WALL PAPER
MERCHANT CHICAGO

Retails all grades of WALL PAPER of the newest designs and latest colorings in small quantities; many patterns cheaper than your home dealer can buy them.

GOOD PAPER, 3c. GOLD PAPER, 5c.

Handsome parlor paper 10—12½—15c per roll with wide border and ceiling to match.

If you intend to use any WALL PAPER whatever send 10 cents for postage on samples and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent free. Agents sample books $1.

See his samples before you buy.

ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant,
136-138 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed,

Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

YOU NEED THEM.

Crystal Glass Body. Silver Plate Top
Sample per mail 25 cents each.

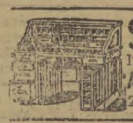
PAINE, DIEHL & CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THEY WILL FALL IN LOVE!

We mean young people; and when they do, they need some wise and gentle guarding and guiding. Annie Swan's books are all wholesome and clean, and especially helpful in this critical time. They show the safe path.

This high standard fiction will counteract the trashy prints so many of our young people are reading. Very low prices. Send for list.

ORANSTON & STOWE, Publishers,
Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis.



$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.
American Desk & Seating Co.
270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

PARENTS CANNOT AFFORD

to let their children grow up without the amusement and physical training which the World's Parlor and Lawn Game gives. ELASTIC TIP CO., 152 and 154 Lake Street, Chicago.

BUILD A MODEL HOME
Our book shows and tells you how. Designs and sample pages of the work sent. GEO. F. BARBER & CO. Architects, Knoxville, Tenn.

McMULLEN'S WOVEN WIRE FENCING.
Best Steel Wire, Galvanized. Prices reduced. Sold by dealers. Freight paid. THE McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., Chicago, Ills.

PILES CURED FREE. New, Painless, Certain. Gives instant relief and lasting cure—never returns. To prove it we will send a trial package FREE, to any address. PYRAMID DRUG COMPANY, Box 35, ALBION, MICHIGAN.

Publisher's Dep't.

A Special Sale.

We have on our shelves a small supply of dainty booklets and cards, some of which have become slightly soiled by being shown as samples, etc. These, together with a few very artistic art calendars in good condition, will now be put on sale at less than cost. You will probably find something in this column which you will want.

Art Calendars, 1892.

No. on Hand		Reg. Price	Price Now.
18	All the Year Through,	$ 20	$ 12
87	Daily Strength (with Scripture texts),	25	.17
41	Our Onward Way (with Scripture texts),	50	.22

These calendars are all very fine, and we warrant satisfaction. The stock will soon go at these prices, and we advise you to order early.

Golden Grain Booklets for the young, put up in packages of ten each. We have fifty packages. Fine lithographed cover with floral designs, landscape scenes, etc., the kind that children delight in. Each contains a four-page gospel story stated so that young minds can grasp it. The regular price is 25c. They will go at 15c per package.

An Assorted Package will be made up, consisting of the slightly soiled Booklets and Cards (including some Christmas Cards mentioned). We will put in a nice variety, one of the above-advertised calendars, and one or two nice enamel texts with Scripture verses. The assortment will be worth $1.75 at retail prices, and we will send it for 50c, warranted value.

These odd booklets, etc., can be put to good use by kindergartners, L. T. L. superintendents and others. They can also be given out as tracts, and would be excellent for that purpose. Notice, please, the price, which is less than one-third regular value; at such a reduction these goods will soon be disposed of, so that promptness will be necessary in order to get a nice assortment. We pay postage on all the above at prices named.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

For Mother and Child.

One of the purest and most charming books for mothers is "A Song of Life." All who read it speak words of commendation. "It is wonderful and beautiful," are the words of praise written by Dr. Julia Plummer, associate superintendent of the social purity department of the National W. C. T. U. "Just the thing for the mothers' work, and what I have been hoping some one would write," says Mrs. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., so long connected with social purity and mothers' meeting work. "It is a little book of immense significance," writes one. And so all along the line the words of praise are heard. The price of this book is $1.25.

Of another of our books the Advance says:

"Lady Gay and her Sister," by Mrs. George Archibald, is a gay little story of two gay little sisters whose names were Lady and Sally Gay, and it tells how they grew, and how Lady had her first tooth pulled out, and all about their kitten, and how Sally had a bad day and broke her arm, and how the canary Yeller was made to sign the temperance pledge, how they had a valentine party, how they went visiting, and how they did a great many other things. It is a bright, breezy, beautiful story for the little ones. Price 75c.

Send for either of these books to the

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Wanted—Results!

Are you in debt?
Have you a doctor's bill to pay?
Want some new furniture?
Or some spare funds?

In either event get an agency for our subscription books, "Glimpses" or "Childhood," for instance. Terms, territory and outfit practically free. Write us at once.

SUB'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Good Seeds, In Good Ground, Yield Good Crops.

WE supply the Seeds,
YOU gather the Crops.

IT WILL SOON BE SEED TIME; we have GOOD SEEDS, ready for planting,—and we know that at harvest you will report that they have yielded good crops. This WE GUARANTEE, unless failure should result from some natural causes beyond human control. You can rely absolutely that no failure will result from any fault of the seed if you plant ours, for

BURPEE'S SEEDS GROW.

Write to-day for BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1892, it is a very complete book of 160 pages, with numerous engravings from photographs, and colored plates painted from nature; it describes all the best seeds, including Rare Novelties of surpassing merit which cannot be had elsewhere.

W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

60c. worth for 20c. A Rare Collection of Flower Seed. 60c. worth for 20c.

Marguerite Carnations. A magnificent strain of this beautiful flower. Blooms easily from seed. Last all winter. Sweet scented. Red Ridinghood Pansy. Most beautiful of this popular flower; deep red, hazel eye, edged with gold. The Oriole, grand large double Golden Flowers, always in bloom. Giant English Show Balsams, (Queen Victoria's Strain.) 2 feet high, covered with large double flowers resembling roses, all colors. Helichrysum Monstrosum, best of all everlastings; keep their bright colors all winter. One packet each of the above choice varieties sent by mail for 20c. in stamps; retail price, 60c. Our beautiful illustrated 116 page catalogue accompanies each order. Address:

Samuel Wilson, Seed Grower, Mechanicsville, Pa.

$500 FOR A TOMATO

Last spring I offered $500 to any person producing a 3 lb. Mammoth Prize Tomato; T. R. Harris, Abbott, Neb., won it with one weighing 3 lbs. 3¼ ozs., and I sent him my check for $500. It measured over 5½ in. in diameter. 87 tomatoes grew on one stem over 3 feet from the ground. Largest plant on record 18 ft. 6 in. tall. This mammoth strain creates a sensation wherever it goes, and is the largest ever offered. Thousands of my customers have grown them to weigh over 45 ozs. The quality is excellent; after you once test it you will grow no others. If well cared for they will produce 1 bu. to a plant (see cut) of large, smooth, bright red tomatoes, very solid with only a few seeds in each, and entirely free from rot. If started early, fruit ripens from July 4th until frost. This year I offer $5.00 Cash to any person producing a 3½ lb. tomato. (It can be done.) Full directions how Mr. Harris grew his with each order. Plant some, you may win the prize. All my seed is saved from large specimens.

SURE HEAD CABBAGE

Is all head and sure to head, very uniform in size, firm and fine in texture, excellent in quality and a good keeper. Single heads have weighed over 8½ pounds.

EARLY SNOWBALL TURNIP

Is the earliest in the world, easy grown, good size, excellent quality. Will be far ahead of your neighbors.

My Catalogue, is worth 50 cts. to any one who gets it. $500 offered largest order; $500 for a pansy blossom; $500 for a bean plant with 100 pods, and above tomato prize.

I will send a packet each of Prize Tomato, Cabbage and Turnip, with my Catalogue of Bargains for only 25 cents. Greatest bargain catalogue ever sent out.

Every person sending silver for above collection, will receive free a packet LINCH'S IMPROVED EXTRA EARLY FREE TOMATO, and a 50c. certificate for seeds, your choice from my bargain catalogue Free.

F. B. MILLS, Rose Hill, Onandaga Co. N.Y.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC Founded by Dr. EBEN TOURJÉE. CARL FAELTEN, Director.

Gives Unequalled Facilities for Thorough and Systematic Instruction in all departments of Music, the Fine Arts, etc., at very reasonable rates. A Safe and Comfortable Home for Lady Pupils. Special Provisions for Self Help offered to prospective pupils who are needy and talented and who can furnish satisfactory references. For full information address, Frank W. Hale, Gen'l Manager, Franklin Sq., Boston.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D. C. H St., between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET. HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE. G. H. La Fetra, Prop'r

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City. 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR

Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish.

St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

PATTI A limited number of free scholarships in the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, Mass. Write for particulars to JAMES D. BALL, 36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists. McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft Wayne, Ind.

"HOME OF THE WHALEBACK."

$100 LOTS. Send for our paper on investments, "How to Get Rich."—Joseph L. Henvis & Co., West Superior, Wis.

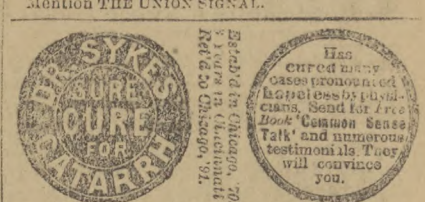
ASTHMA
WORST CASES CURED TO STAY CURED IF UNCOMPLICATED BY ORGANIC DISEASE.
Incurable cases declined.
WE WANT NAME OF EVERY ASTHMATIC.
Examination free by mail.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M.D.
BUFFALO, N. Y.

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes. Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved, cheapest, scientific, powerful, durable and effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspensories free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c stamp for pamphlet.

DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO

Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.



DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO. 113 State St., Chicago.

RUPTURE CURED!

(PATENT ALLOWED.)

Positively Holds Rupture.
WORN NIGHT AND DAY.
Has an Adjustable Pad which can be made larger or smaller to suit changing condition of rupture.
Illustrated Catalogue sent securely sealed by
G. V. HOUSE MFG. CO.
744 BROADWAY, N. Y. CITY

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE, and can be Cured, by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given without the knowledge of the patient, if desired, by placing it in coffee, tea or articles of food. Cures guaranteed. Send for free circulars. GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

F. P. VAN VALKENBURGH, Former Associate Physician and Surgeon to the Old People's Home, 3858 Indiana Avenue, Chicago, also examining Physician for the New York Life Insurance Co., Cures Drunkenness, Morphine, Opium, and destroys the desire for Tobacco. Cures guaranteed. Correspondence solicited Reference: Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Office, 103 State-st. Chicago

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dep't. C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3200, New York City, N.Y.

RHEUMATISM IF YOU CANNOT FIND A CURE Add. DR. W. H. ROSS, Grand Rapids, Mich.

TAPE WORM Removed alive, head and all, in three hours at your home. No starving required. Safe, sure and certain. Circulars free. 269 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy Successfully cured. Address Dr. C. L. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 20 to 30 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

PORTABLE BATHS.

Best ever Known. Wholesale and Retail. Agents Wanted Everywhere. Send for Circulars.

E. J. KNOWLTON, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Signal Notes.

In a recent issue, The Voice gave a history of twenty men who were hanged in St. Louis for murder; eighty per cent was due to licensed saloons!

Advices have reached this office from Rio Janeiro, Brazil, that Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt reached there (date not given) in excellent health. May she be safely guided now as in her most eventful past.

Mr. Keenan, president of the International Press Club, is a strong advocate of temperance, and at the lunches and banquets given while en route and while on the California coast during the recent excursion, kept his glass turned down.

Among the many projects for practical philanthropy that of the "Medical Mission" commends itself to Christians of all denominations, as affording a valuable opportunity for showing sympathy with and interest in the poor, while at the same time reflecting, by practical action, the love of God.

The movement in aid of the sufferers in Russia goes on apace. The President's message to Congress, together with the appeals from the Governors of various states, have called general attention to the great need. A committee of two has been appointed in charge of the "flour cargo" and will proceed in advance of it to Russia, and attend to its proper distribution.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey are conducting revival services in Scotland with marked results. In an account of one of these meetings, The Christian says: "In the course of his powerful address, Mr. Moody caused some sensation by his strong remarks on the whisky curse. He cried aloud and spared not, and when he saw that some of his audience 'looked very strange,' he did not hesitate to say so. Would to God Scotchmen had some of the patriotism of which Mr. Moody speaks and which ought alone to prompt them to fight this national evil that seems to have laid its hands on every community in the old land of Bibles and covenants."

Art embroideries, fancy needle work, expensive laces, in a word, all fine materials should never be washed with ordinary soap. The chances are three in four that they will be injured either by the powerful chemicals or "free alkali" found in nearly every soap. The only safe method is to make suds of hot water and Ivory Soap and allow it to cool till lukewarm. This solution is very effective.

Prof. Cornwall, of Princeton, after a chemical analysis of Ivory Soap, states that while it has more than the average cleansing power, it is so very well made that it will not injure the most delicate fabric.

Copyright 1891, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

FREE.
BEAUTIFUL BOOK ON THE CARE OF THE TEETH.
ADDRESS
E. W. HOYT & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.

The Double V Waist

Ladies' Infants' Childrens' Young Ladies'

A Very Satisfactory Garment.

WHY? Because it Supports Stockings and Underclothes from the SHOULDERS, and has no stiff cords; fits with perfect ease and freedom. Elegant, and strictly hygienic. Sold by leading dealers.

LADY CANVASSERS WANTED.
☞ Send for Illustrated Price List. ☜
The FOY, HAMMON & CHADWICK CO., Brooklyn, N.Y.

A Complete Line of Dress Reform Goods,
INCLUDING THE
NEWELL BUST SUPPORT,
Equipoise Waist and Jenness-Miller Specialties. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue.
MRS. S. W. PIKE,
75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill

READ YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 4[illegible] Clark St., Chicago.

THE WOMAN'S BAKING COMPANY

SUCCESS ON EVERY HAND CROWNS OUR EFFORTS.

Three weeks only have passed since first we offered stock for sale, and already SEVERAL HUNDRED SHARES ARE TAKEN.

Full information is contained in our illustrated pamphlet, which we send FREE.
Stock ABSOLUTELY NON-ASSESSABLE. No liability beyond amount invested
Present price $25 per share Par Value, payable, if desired, in monthly installments of $2.50 per share.

YOU CAN LOSE NOTHING, YOU MAY GAIN A GREAT DEAL.

To the ladies who wish to become identified with this company, and make money for themselves, we make the following offer: Send a deposit, no matter how small, to show us you are in earnest. Say how many shares you would like, and we will reserve them for you until you have time to investigate.

STOCK SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN.

Money derived from sale of stock is applied toward BUILDING BAKERIES, whereby we add to our assets, and thus the value of stock is advanced.
Profits derived from sale of our goods goes toward paying dividends to stockholders.
Each additional Bakery means a larger output of goods, hence larger dividends to stockholders. Would you not like a safe and profitable investment?

We own the right to equip as many bakeries as we may desire with the only patented machinery that successfully kneads dough and separates it into loaves of bread.
The actual cost of labor in manufacturing one barrel of flour into bread without this machinery is $2.50, and the actual cost with this machinery is 50c. It will thus readily be seen that we have a MONOPOLY wherever we see fit to operate.

EVERY FAMILY MUST HAVE BREAD
And it is woman's work to supply it. Either bake it herself or buy it.

We will supply better—more wholesome—bread, pies, cakes, etc., for less money than the housewife can make at home, and being a woman's concern, owned and operated by women, are we unreasonable in expecting an unlimited demand for our goods? An unlimited demand for our goods means unlimited profits to our stockholders.

HAVE YOU SECURED WHAT STOCK YOU WANT? IT IS SELLING FAST.

WOMEN WHO FULLY INVESTIGATE INVARIABLY BUY STOCK

Philadelphia, Jan. 11, 1892.

Woman's Baking Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
Ladies:—Please send me your illustrated pamphlet at once giving your plans. Personal knowledge of most of your officers leads me to entire confidence in the management, and my zeal for the advancement of woman makes me eager to participate in this enterprise, which seems worthy of the noble womanhood of the Nineteenth Century. Yours very truly,
E. L. B.

Philadelphia, Jan. 28, 1892.

Woman's Baking Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago.
Ladies:—I have carefully read your illustrated pamphlet, and find reason for increased confidence in your plans and their outcome, both from a humane and financial point of view. I desire now to subscribe for 40 shares of stock, and would like the option for 6 months for an additional 40 shares. I inclose draft herewith.
Yours very truly, E. L. B.

Hundreds of letters similar to above are received almost daily.

THE CHICAGO TIMES, THE GREAT DAILY NEWSPAPER, IN AN EDITORIAL ON THE 3d INSTANT, SAYS:

ANOTHER GREAT MONOPOLY.

WOMEN SECURE CONTROL OF A GREAT LABOR-SAVING MACHINE.

By Its Use in Making Bread $2 Is Saved for Every Barrel of Flour Consumed—It Promises to Materially Reduce the Price of Bread—A Women's Baking Company Secures Exclusive Control of the Invention in the United States.

Above is the headlines to a column article illustrated. Send us your name, and we will send paper.

SHREWD WOMEN FORESEE RESULTS AND PROFIT THEREBY.

If we only make one-half a cent a loaf on bread, and 1 cent a pie on pies, with 25 bakeries, averaging 3,000 loaves of bread and 1,000 pies daily, our annual profits will be $183,500, which will pay a dividend of $18.35 on each share of our capital stock.

An ordinary bakery in this city with a capital of $75,000 paid a dividend last year amounting to $30,000; its stock has advanced over 700 per ct. above par.

No better investment for money can be found than our capital stock. Invest in it NOW, while the company is new, and reap the benefits paid in dividends, perhaps for the BALANCE OF YOUR LIFE.

OFFICERS:

Mrs. Louise Rockwood Wardner, (of the Illinois Industrial School for Girls), President.
Mrs. Lydia Rice Bentley, (the well-known Vocalist), Vice-President.
Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, (Ravenna, Ohio), Vice-President.
Miss Caroline A. Huling, (President Working Woman's Improvement Association), Secretary.
Mrs. R. A. Emmons, (Secretary Woman's Lecture Bureau, W. C. T. U.), Treasurer.
Mrs. Frances E. Owens, (Publisher of the "Owen Cook Book"), Auditor.
Miss Ella S. Bass, (Proprietor Lily Publishing House), Auditor.

MAKE CHECKS, DRAFTS AND MONEY ORDERS PAYABLE TO

THE WOMAN'S BAKING COMPANY, 161 LA SALLE STREET. CHICAGO, ILL.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

Ursula D Hetrick
2419 19th st
92492

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 7.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 18, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Iowa Republicans in the State Senate are standing bravely for the prohibition law.

The Prohibition party in Michigan has fused with the Labor party for the next campaign.

The Japanese Parliament has voted $500,000 for the National exhibit at the World's Fair.

Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Mrs. Clara Hoffman will speak in Music Hall, Exposition building, St. Louis, Sunday afternoon, February 21.

The atrocious carrousels of Chicago have been closed by the police at the order of the mayor, thus removing one more pitfall from the youth of the city.

Mrs. S. F. Grubb, National superintendent of foreign work in the W. C. T. U., lectured to an immense audience in one of the largest Methodist churches in Chicago, Sunday evening.

Chicago celebrated "Lincoln Day"—February 12—by three notable public observances and many private ones. New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Columbus and other cities, both large and small, made banquets and oratory in honor of the martyr-President.

Additional evidences are accruing of fraudulent actions on the part of postmasters in declining to deliver The Voice to subscribers and notifying the publishers that the paper is no longer desired. These officials will be punished by fine and imprisonment.

Typhus-fever, small-pox and weather fifty-eight degrees below zero are rapidly killing off the starving peasants of Southwestern Russia. In many localities it is impossible to distribute the provisions received, owing to the fact that nearly all the horses have been killed for food.

The Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware is enjoying a remarkable revival. More than two hundred students have been converted, and the interest is deepening each day. The nine Greek-letter fraternities united February 9 in probably the first Pan-Hellenic prayer-meeting ever held in America.

The funeral of Mr. Spurgeon, London's greatest minister, was held on Thursday. All business was suspended in the vicinity of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and along the route taken by the funeral procession. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Arthur T. Peirson, of Philadelphia, who has been substituting for Mr. Spurgeon.

Mrs. Helen M. Barker, president of the W. C. T. U. of South Dakota, has removed from Huron to Chicago, to assume the duties of assistant to Mrs. Palmer, president of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Fair. Mrs. Barker will have special charge of press news. Her address is room 409, Rand & McNally building. Chicago white-ribboners are to be congratulated upon the residence of Mrs. Barker in their midst.

FOUR-LEAVED clovers tied with white ribbon, bearing mottoes from the "Birthday Book," were the luncheon favors at "Hawthorne" on the afternoon of February 12. By all who have been privileged to enjoy the gracious hospitality of Mrs. Lucien Hagans, the treasurer of the W. T. P. A., such an invitation is counted as "good luck" indeed. The guests of the day were the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL and other publications of the Association, Misses Pugh, Hood and Gordon, Mrs. Rastall, Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, of the Missionary Training School, and a few personal friends of the hostess. "Hawthorne" in its summer dress is a familiar place to the workers at "161," for many a delightful fête has been enjoyed there, but its glowing grate fires, its welcoming sofas and exquisite views, while "shut in from all the world without," were no less a boon to weary brain-workers.

"THUMB-NAIL Sketches of Leading White-Ribboners," by Julia A. Ames, has been carefully revised and brought up to date by Helen L. Hood, who has assumed the expense of this new issue, and will devote the proceeds to mission work in Chicago, in memory of the friend to whom she was loyal and devoted. We are glad that the orders are already numerous.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON in his summary of the condition of the temperance movement made in view of the coming election in England, speaks of the temperance party as "Prohibitionists." This outspoken language shows the advance in public sentiment. Whatever may have been the ultimate intention of the party, they have not until the present moment spoken in such an uncompromising manner.

SENATOR DOLPH, of Oregon, is acquiring unenviable fame through his advocacy of a license law in Alaska. It is astonishing that in the full noonday of the temperance reform a United States Senator will seriously advocate a license law. He complains that the prohibitory law now on the statute books is not enforced in Alaska. Is he then so illogical as to believe that the license law will be better enforced in those borderlands of civilization? Any law is rather educational than actual in its effects, and for the United States deliberately to fasten upon those unfortunate people who dwell in that ice-bound territory a law that protects the incoming of the poison that is doing them more harm than all other curses that have combined against their development and peace, passes our comprehension. Let the W. C. T. U. of Oregon use its utmost influence against Senator Dolph's measure.

LETTERS and queries from the "outlying parts" have come to some of our earnest workers, saying that they feared if they sent their names to the World's Petition, they would be "assessed and no knowing how much!" This is the latest difficulty that has come up, and we hope to "lay the ghost" by the announcement that every signature added to the Petition simply makes a larger representation to go before all the governments of the world in 1893, after the Petition shall have been exhibited at the World's Fair. We have already one million names, and we want one or two millions more. If the names were written one under the other, and not four or six on a line, the Petition would be already about ten miles long. Surely everybody who wishes well to humanity will be glad to have a part in this great work. Write to Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O., for copies of the Petition, and send them when signed to Miss Alice Briggs, Evanston, Ill.

WE are glad to learn from the Chicago Times of February 10th that the Postmaster-General has promptly taken action concerning the sale of liquor in country post-offices. He is reported as using the following language: "I mean to conduct an investigation throughout the country. If these things have been done they must be righted. I mean to know the facts as speedily as the best of my inspectors can learn them and report them to me." The Assistant Postmaster-General said, "The result of the Times' exposure will be the removal of every postmaster who has been conducting a saloon in connection with the post-office. We would never go into the Presidential campaign with this hanging over our heads." The committee of post-offices says it will let the Postmaster-General conduct this investigation, and that in every county in the South and West there will be a quiet examination and report concerning the smaller post-offices, how they are conducted, and how many officials are engaged in vending spirituous liquors. The summary of three counties in Wisconsin shows thirty-six post-offices at latest date which, with those already reported, make seventy saloon-post-offices in the beer-soaked state of Wisconsin.

THE bill now before the legislature for the regulation and restriction of what it coarsely calls "the business of public prostitution of the several cities and towns of the state of New York," is one of the baldest and most brutal ever put upon paper. Here are some of its provisions: "The fee for a license shall be one hundred dollars per annum, and for personal registration, involving a weekly medical examination, ten dollars. The proceeds of all license and registration fees and of all fines collected under this act shall be paid into the treasury of the several institutions throughout the state for the rescue and reformation of fallen women." This bill smells of brimstone, and if his Satanic majesty had penned it in liquid fire it would not bear more strongly the trace of its parentage. Any man who votes in its favor should be anathema maranatha from that time on to every home wherein his name is ever heard. Let the white-ribboners of the Nation combine their prayer forces and their sympathy with those of New York state in this time of a military exigency, than which a greater has never come.

MRS. MARY BANNISTER WILLARD, founder of the American Home School for Girls in Berlin, Germany, has recently returned from Russia, where she spent the holidays with her pupils. Mrs. Willard has just issued her summer tour circular from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. It is done in the best style, which is saying enough for its mechanical execution. The first tour of summer journeys for 1892 includes a trip through Russia, Austria, Germany (including the Baireuth Festival), Paris and London; the second, through the northern part of Norway, North Cape, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Paris and London; the third, through Great Britain, Holland, Germany, Italy, Switzerland and France. The three parties from America intending to take one or the other of these trips will leave New York City together the first week in June, sailing by North German Lloyd steamer, and the entire trip will cover about three months. Applications should be made early, especially for Tour No. 1, as tickets for the Baireuth Festival should be procured soon in order to secure good seats. During her Russian trip Mrs. Willard met Miss Kate Marsden, the English woman who is voluntarily devoting her life and skill to the alleviation of the victims of leprosy, and we have the promise of an interesting descriptive letter on this philanthropic mission from Mrs. Willard's own racy pen.

THE state union of New York has three notable enterprises on hand this winter in its legislative department. Perhaps the most important is its petition for a law prohibiting the employment of women and girls as barmaids in saloons and restaurants where liquor is sold:

To the Assembly of the State of New York:

Whereas, an effort is being made to introduce the English system of "barmaids" in this country, and girls are employed in this capacity in one saloon, if not more, in the city of New York, we, the undersigned citizens of——, knowing the system to be thoroughly iniquitous, demoralizing to both sexes, and especially degrading to women, earnestly and urgently petition you to enact a law prohibiting under severe penalty, the employment of women and girls as "barmaids" in saloons and restaurants where liquor is sold.

Besides the petition against barmaids, the New York women have a protest against the excise bill of the state Liquor Dealers' Association, wherein a Sunday license law has provided for the abolition of the requirement of real estate security on license bonds and other features altogether inimical to the best good of the people. Besides all this an attempt is once more being made to introduce the brutal Contagious Diseases Act long ago abolished from the Blue Books of parliament. Our valiant leader, Mrs. Burt, thus has her hands full, but she is backed up by a veteran regiment, the largest in the nation, and we do not fear the outcome of their legislative work this winter.

Contributed.

OVERWORK.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

In my sleep a spirit touched me, on my ears his accents fell,
Soft as summer's answering whisper when the daylight sighs farewell;
And his strong grey pinions folded, looked like silent towers of might
Which would spread far into ether as the clouds which hide the light.

"I have read your heart," he whispered; "it is strong to do and dare,
Quick to feel for others' troubles, glad to lighten others' care;
Then speed on towards your purpose, never pause for sleep or rest,
For as gods are the successful? Give your brightest and your best.

"All the dewy flush of morning, all the showers of freshening rain,
All the glowing heat of noon-tide, all the sheaves of ripened grain,
Every power of nerve and muscle, strive with heart and purpose true;
Lo! the vineyard's ripe to spoiling, and the work there waits for you."

Ay, I hearkened and I followed! for both heart and brain were young,
And the burning words of counsel leapt like fire to pen and tongue;
I worked from dawn of daylight to the setting of the sun,—
Then I fainted by the wayside, and my dream of life was done.

. . . . . .

Take the lesson home, my sisters, ye who are the salt of earth;
If the salt but lose its savor, ay, but little then 'tis worth:
Shun the nineteenth century vampire, with his greed of health and strength,
For the sword which cuts the scabbard, wears its edge away at length.

RECOLLECTIONS OF NOTED MEN AND WOMEN.

III.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Princess May.

Around the word "princess" there cluster still many pretty old world fancies. The swift steam power of the nineteenth century may bear us, with rushing speed, to the practicalities of life, past the old manor houses and the terrace gardens of a stately, quiet past; and yet, as we pursue our onward course, we linger in heart awhile on the green sward which has earned its velvet softness through the garnered sunshine of many seasons. We pause on the threshold of stately courts, and watch the shadows as they mark the deep purple outline of the clipped yew hedge, and melt with sweet graduation into the tender green, which seems to clasp with jealous love the border of bright flowers. Life seems now to have no place for leisure. Our grandmothers with powdered hair could walk in hoops and flounces, their high heels tapping the graveled paths and shady alleys, in idle industry gathering lavender and roses for the pot-pourri that should stand in old-fashioned china jars and scent the long corridors and marble halls of their prison palaces, but life comes with deeper reality to us. We gather not for time. We linger not in flower gardens, but wend our way to harvest fields. We are not gleaners only, but with the strong arm and steady sickle of the reaper, we gather the golden grain of better days for all; of happiness not for the few; of bread as a right for the hungry; of support as a necessity for the weak; and so, in this age of clearer vision, the word "princess" has lost, perhaps, some of its charm.

Hans Andersen, in his idyllic fairy tales, relates that an old witch declared her ability to recognize a real princess, and tells how one night there came to her doorstep a girl in tattered clothes, her long hair soaked in the beating rain, while with shivering form and chattering teeth she besought hospitality, saying that she was a princess who had lost her way. The old witch took her in, determined to ascertain the truth of her story. She prepared the guest chamber, and made ready the bed, placing a single pea surreptitiously upon the first mattress, over which she piled three feather beds and bade her sleep. The morning dawned, and the little princess gratefully thanked her for the night's shelter, but looked worn and tired. The old witch asked her how she had slept. "Not at all," said the girl; "there was that in my bed which disturbed my whole night's rest, a hard, round substance, upon which I could not lie." "You are a true princess," said the old woman; "none other would have felt it."

There is in this story a deeper truth than perhaps even the writer knew. The real princess—the real lady—is the one who with sweet intuition knows that which she has not seen, but which will impress itself upon her delicate, sensitive nature, enabling her to understand the difficulties and trials of others although, in her sheltered surroundings, she may never have experienced them.

Cardinal Newman says: "It is always a definition of a gentleman to say that he is one who never inflicts pain; he is tender toward the bashful, gentle toward the distant, and merciful toward the absurd." These are the qualities which give the right to lead, and these alone can command love and respect as their prerogative.

Royalty in England still remains an integral part of the nation's creed, it is held there by the strong bond of tradition. The strains of "God Save the Queen" seem, somehow, intermingled with "Home, Sweet Home." The royal family has become a national possession; and since the day when the fair face of a young girl beamed from the throne, kissed by the light that fell from the storied glass of Westminster's jeweled windows, and the soft, child hand grasped the scepter which the great dead had held who rested beneath the vaulted arches, the chivalry of England has gathered round the woman and the queen.

The tide of socialism has risen with the years. Those who rule have but dimly understood the only right by which men justly govern; and the "survival of the fittest" will be the history of the future of our monarchy and aristocracy as surely as in the past it has been the history of the world. Hard times have brought hard thoughts. Pinching poverty has caused men to drag ancient institutions into the glare of a new scrutiny. Education has equalized, and more widely distributed wealth has placed great positions within the power of the middle classes.

PRINCESS MAY.

With all these manifold changes, however, when in the Christmas season of last year, England learned that Princess May was to be her future Queen, there rang throughout the land the hearty peal of a nation's welcome, as true as that which greeted the young Danish bride, when the words of the laureate were only the echo of public sentiment:

"For Saxon or Dane or Norman we,
Teuton or Celt or whatever we be,
We are each all Dane in our welcome of thee."

Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck, first cousin of Queen Victoria, and mother of Princess May, has always been revered and loved. Whenever her kind face beamed upon assembled crowds, the sunlight of her smile has lit up the loyalty of hearts with that free masonry of goodwill which comes from the recognition of real worth in each. There is not a charity she has not helped with her presence nor a good work but owes her a debt of gratitude. Not only has she assisted them by the prestige of her position but her sympathy and interest have ever been added to cheer the workers and to help the work. In the great public functions, when with the other members of the royal family, she has passed through the streets, eager eyes have watched her and uplifted faces brighten, and hands, rough with toil, have pointed to her smiling face and said: "See good Princess Mary." It is not a matter of wonder, then, that the daughter of a mother so loved and true, coming from a home where her education had been simple and pure, was hailed by many as an earnest of good days. The fact of her English upbringing and her English blood were passports also to the nation's good will. The village people who live around the home where she was born, have long called her "Our little Princess," and have added, "She is fit to be a Queen." None so proud as they when the news reached them that she was to marry the heir to the English throne. For had they not known her when, as a child, her fair hair streaming down her back, she had gone in and out among their lowly homes, gathering flowers in the old-fashioned cottage gardens and listening to many a tale of aches and pains told by the old grandams in the rose-covered porches or by their firesides? Bright with the beauty of her Hebe-like youth, she has grown "Tall, and most divinely fair," with sweet, shy ways and gentle reticence that speak of a delicate, sensitive nature. The glare of the world's gas-light has not spoiled her. She listens with deep interest to the great realities of life, the stories of want and sorrow, and her straightforward grasp of the needs of the people, her appreciation of the necessity for different sides of work and different methods, her unconventionality and her large-souled charity are very striking. Speaking of Princess May her mother said: "If ever I forget an engagement I have made for some good work, May always reminds me. She will give up any amusement if she thinks I ought to go to a place where we may help others."

Some years back, Princess Mary organized a Guild throughout the country by which every member undertook to provide clothes for the poor. The work grew amazingly; presidents were appointed in different districts and thousands of garments were received and distributed. Princess May took an active share in the work, and for weeks together she and Princess Mary would stand sorting out calico shirts and unbleached linen underwear with tireless patience, the White Lodge, in Richmond Park, being for the time piled with articles of apparel. This simple, homely, practical training was a fitting education for a queen; and in such hands the charity that provides for the needs of the destitute will turn into roses brighter than those that bloom on the escutcheons of the Plantagenets.

One August day last year, when Princess Mary was sitting in my little Tower study, in my home at Eastnor Castle, she took up some verses which stood framed upon my table, and turning to her daughter she said: "Are they not beautiful?" I shortly afterwards gave her a copy and I well remember the thoughtful expression which came over Princess May's face as she stood in the deep window in the sunshine and read them:

"Let nothing make thee sad or fretful,
Or too regretful;
Be still.
What God hath ordered must be right;
Then find in it thine own delight,
My will!
Why shouldst thou fill to-day with sorrow
About to-morrow?
My heart.
One watches all with care most true;
Doubt not that He will give thee too
Thy part.
Only be steadfast; never waver,
Nor seek earth's favor
But rest.
Thou knowest what God's will must be
For all His creatures, so for thee,
The best."

Buoyant in her graceful beauty, Princess May has about her a thoughtfulness that speaks of the deeper intuitions which are the dawning of the soul's truest life.

I little thought as I looked at her bright face, bent over the old German poem, that she would be so soon called upon "Never to waver but to wait, knowing it best;" she, so joyous, laughing so merrily and enjoying the picnic parties on our beautiful Malvern Hills, so full of life and yet so full of consideration and courtesy.

On one occasion, when an old clergyman came to me to ask to be allowed to present a little poem to her, composed by a school-teacher, I went to her to ask permission, explaining how much it would mean in the girl's life. She acquiesced at once. After her reception of the little document, the old minister turned to me—he being little accustomed to courtly circles—and said: "I ought to have knelt, perhaps." When I told Princess May, she laughed and said: "I am glad he did not; the ground is damp, and I should have had to spread my cloak for him."

It was amid the ringing cheers of public approbation that Princess May and Prince Albert Victor drove through the crowded streets, last December, to meet the family party, assembled at Marlborough House, which waited to greet the bride. The young couple were the center of interest and the subject of discussion throughout the land. The diamond rose wreath to be presented by the women of England, the royal bridal gown to be woven in British looms, were matters of universal interest, for rich and poor seemed alike to join in the nation's wedding festival, and "all went merry as a marriage bell" until the chill touch of death was breathed upon the orange blossoms, transforming them into the snowy garlands laid on the coffin-lid, and the voice of joy was turned into the wail of mourning.

The fatal plague of these days which has borne so many to the shores beyond, laid its iron grasp upon the young Prince and his delicate constitution could not resist the deadly disease. Death knows no precedence but only calls the names written on the roll-call of eternity. Within six weeks of the time when the young Princess was to have stood a bride before the altar, she knelt beside the dead form of her intended husband.

The fair young head bowed beneath the weight of a great sorrow may possibly never wear an earthly crown;—we do not covet that as this world's fairest prize, or heaven's best gift for her.

There is a "throne founded on the rock of justice, and descended from, only by the steps of mercy, the power of the Royal hand that heals in touching." The flowers that England would have strewn before her have withered almost ere they bloomed, but there are blossoms that "shall rise behind her steps, not before them." "Her feet have touched the meadows and left the daisies rosy."

There may come a time, when looking back over life's winding way, the valley that seems so dark and rugged through which she has been called to pass may "blossom as the rose," because from thence she saw more clearly the truer Royalty that holds its right divine from the Prince of Peace, whose kingdom is not of this world, but whose government is for the eternal well-being of all humanity.

THE WOMAN'S ANTI-LOTTERY LEAGUE—AN URGENT CALL FOR RECRUITS.

In August, 1868, the chaotic days of reconstruction, when the legislature, if it visited at all, for the most part came in at the back gates of respectable homes in Louisiana, the charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company was obtained for a period of twenty-five years, beginning with January, 1869. The records of the courts prove that this charter was secured by means of wholesale bribery of corrupt whites and the negro against the best white element of the state.

The legislature of 1879 repealed this charter. The lottery company at once put on "the livery of angels" to assist the long-suffering people in a call for a Constitutional Convention which should wipe out the infamous carpet-bag constitution, under which the state had left a loathsome trail in history. The convention made provision for licensing other lotteries, in order to destroy a monopoly by the Louisiana lottery. This convention imbedded in its constitution that gambling was a vice and commanded the legislature to enact laws for its suppression and signed the death warrant of all lotteries after January 1, 1895. So great was the opposition to the lottery charter, that the people desired to have the lottery clause submitted to their vote separately, but this the lottery company had influence enough to prevent; rather than reject the whole new constitution, into which the State had struggled from the negro dynasty it had lived under since 1865, the evil lottery was adopted, along with much good, in the new constitution.

The strength of a nation centers in the estimate it puts upon the citizen. The power of an individual or a people is vested in the struggle to wrest from a complex and hostile environment the elements needful for its fullest life. The cessation of this struggle means death. That individual who, by an overt act, obtains something for nothing is labeled "thief" by the courts of the land. To bring the will of the individual to the acceptance of that thing for which he has made no honest compensation is to cross the dead line of self-respect beyond which no manly virtue can exist.

The lottery scheme sells tickets all over the nation for its twelve great monthly drawings which aggregate $28,000,000; the prizes included in these sales amount to $14,767,200, leaving clear profit to the company, $13,232,800, or about forty-seven per cent of gross receipts. In addition, there are daily drawings in over one hundred "policy shops" in New Orleans which sum up annually more than $2,000,000, coming chiefly out of the pockets of the New Orleans residents. It has gathered into its toils for these daily drawings, at twenty-five cents to a dollar a ticket, thousands of children and women of all classes from the society leader to the scrub-woman.

The lottery builds on the corrupting power of money. It says to the state, "There is gold for you; sell me your good report," and pledges $1,250,000 for public education, public levees and public charities, which to the individual means reduced taxation. It has given freely to the church, donating sites and building funds for the house of God, and has been known just before the session of an ecclesiastical body, that might resolute in an anti-lottery fashion, to send the gift of a large sum to one of its influential congregations. It is said by those who are in a position to know, that no election has been held in Louisiana for years in which it has failed to contribute largely to the campaign fund of both parties. In the last city election it spent $100,000. To-day, the corrupt ring that was put out of power by the Young Men's Democratic Association of New Orleans, are all working for the lottery and expect to be rewarded by the city offices. From the start it has kept subsidized about ninety per cent of the press of the state, and controls a press bureau that formulates the tone of nearly all the editorials printed in the parishes.

The political game which the lottery plays is an exceedingly shrewd one. The lotteryites were in full force at the State Democratic Convention at Baton Rouge last November. Finding they could not control the convention, after the fusion of the anti-lottery men and the Farmers' Alliance element, the lottery representatives withdrew and nominated their own candidate. While bewailing the cleavage in the party that would let in an inundation of the negro and black Republicanism, running this split as the "Straight Democratic ticket," it also ran the State Republican Convention meeting soon after, putting into its platform a weak anti-lottery plank, which can be knocked out at the right moment. The man who only reads with his eyes is expected to flurry out with the cry, "The Murphy Foster and Republican ticket are both anti-lottery; they must be in collusion!" Negro domination is flared in the face of the masses who let others do their thinking, while Herwig, Pinchback, Demas, Houston, Baldwin of the lottery crowd are all Republicans, holding "Sambo" by the hand to further their game.

Hon. Murphy J. Foster is the anti-lottery candidate for Governor and ex-Governor McEnery carries the flag of the lottery party. The election of the lottery candidate for Governor means lottery control of the state executive, a "complaisant judiciary" and a succession of bought-up legislatures. Ex-Governor McEnery poses as a conservative anti-lotteryite, yet he was one of the Louisiana Supreme Court, who in 1891, reversed in favor of the lottery a decision of the lower court, made by a lottery judge, and said that a governor has no right to veto a constitutional amendment, and that the officers of both houses of the legislature may change the journals of these houses after adjournment of the same.

With all its trickery, the lottery makes some mistakes, none more palpable than its attacks of Cardinal Gibbons and Bishop Jansens for their recent letters in behalf of the anti-lottery cause. Cardinal Gibbons said: "It is the duty of every upright citizen and earnest Christian to aid in its dethronement or suppression—a dire enemy to their manhood, their homes and their prosperity." Sharp criticisms of these two popular prelates have brought the resentment of the Roman Catholics.

On Monday, February 1, the United States Supreme Court decided the anti-lottery postal law to be constitutional. This will militate tremendously against the revenues of the lottery. Animated, doubtless, by this stinging fact, Jno. A. Morris, the lottery magnate, published a letter to the people, declaring, upon his own part and that of his associates, that they "would not accept or qualify under the amendment, even were it to be adopted by the people at the general election of April next. Convinced that the granting of another lottery charter in the state would be the cause of continued agitation and discontent on the part of a number of citizens of Louisiana for the entire period for which a charter might be granted, we would be unwilling to accept such a charter even though it was given to us without the payment of one dollar of license tax."

Far be it from us to say these statements are not made in perfect good faith, prompted by the certainty that $1,250,000 is too large a tax to pay while running under fire of the postal law. But the New Delta of New Orleans, the anti-lottery organ that has wrought the present status by its vigilance and boldness, says in its February 4 issue: "They may yet strive to call a constitutional convention under the pretext of regulating suffrage, as was done in the steal of Mississippi, and obtain another grant for the lottery in the new constitution upon terms more favorable to its advocates than the amendment now before the people, or adopt some other means of achieving their object. All former experience with the lottery has taught us that it is fertile in occult schemes to effect its purposes. We intend to see that the amendment is voted down in April by such a majority as to preclude all possibility of further agitation on the question, and that none but anti-lottery men be placed on guard until all lotteries have ceased to maintain any legal existence in the state of Louisiana. We are perfectly satisfied with the present condition of the canvass."

Louisiana's present governor, Francis T. Nichols, holds in his hands the election machinery and next April intends to see a fair count at the polls. In anticipation the lotteryites are openly and defiantly massing arms in New Orleans, disclaiming any desire to provoke bloodshed or an intention to "bulldoze or bluff;" their published purpose is to secure a perfectly peaceful and honest election by this pacific demonstration.

Governor Nichols' veto of the fraudulent constitutional lottery amendment has sent his name ringing round the world. In his veto message he said: "I will never permit one of my hands to assist in destroying what the other was sacrificed in endeavoring to uphold—the honor of my native state. Should I affix my signature to this bill, I should indeed be ashamed to let my left hand know what my right hand had done." Governor Nichols lost an arm in the Confederate army. He went back into the service and lost a leg, yet fought to the end. He was affianced to his wife at this time. When the news of the second amputation came, some one said to her, "What will you do? you cannot marry a man decimated like this?" This spirited woman splendidly replied, "I shall marry him if there is enough of him left to hold his noble soul." She kept her word.

Besides this noble man, who had the grandeur of character to stand at one time nearly alone in his battle against the lottery, the anti-lottery side has all the better elements of the people with it—professional men, all religious sects, the country parishes, the Congress of the United States and the United States supreme court. The honest brains and power of the platform are with it, ministers of the various churches being among its most aggressive platform speakers.

Into the midst of this struggle the women of Louisiana have entered with an elan worthy of the cause, organizing into the Woman's Anti-Lottery League. The New Orleans members constitute the "mother league," numbering about 725, and every parish has its auxiliary, and there are members from nearly every state in the union. The officers are: Mrs. Wm. Preston Johnston, president; Mrs. E. Jno. Ellis, Mrs. H. Dickson Bruns, Mrs. Henry Leovy, Mrs. T. G. Richardson, Miss Dickson, vice-presidents; Miss Kate McCall, corresponding secretary; Miss Belle Dickson, recording secretary; Mrs. J. W. Caldwell, treasurer. Their object is to influence the election in April in every way open to them. They desire to link with them the women of every state in the union, who are as vitally concerned in this matter as Louisianians since the lottery advances as its winning argument to Louisiana that ninety-three per cent of its spoils comes from other states.

The Woman's League says: "We implore all good women to come forward and send material aid. The wife's pittance and the widow's mite will be equally appreciated. In every instance the W. C. T. Unions have shown warm sympathy; we appeal to them for aid as well as moral support." Any woman may become a member by subscribing to the following:

To the Woman's Anti-Lottery League of Louisiana:

I am in sympathy with the object of your League—the suppression of the Louisiana State Lottery Co. Inclosed find initiation fee, $1, for which I desire to have my name enrolled as a member.

Name——.....

Address——.....

Mrs. E T Merrick Jr., Chairman Membership Committee.

Most earnest appeals come to THE UNION SIGNAL from Northern women to know what they can do to aid the fight in Louisiana: Join the Woman's Anti-Lottery League and DO IT QUICKLY, FOR THE TIME IS SHORT. Let the women of the nation band together from lakes to gulf to help. If the lottery should succeed in obtaining a new lease of life, there is not a mother's son growing up in Louisiana who could hope for position from his people unless he were the tool of the lottery. No state could hope to be exempt from the deadly contamination.

Every hundred dollars collected in the treasury of the Woman's League is remitted to the State Anti-Lottery Committee for the campaign fund. It is said that good women of Louisiana are known to be willing to part with their last possession of jewelry for the cause, and children are as intelligently enthusiastic as their elders.

On the evening of January 18, a monster demonstration of the Woman's League was held in New Orleans, at which stirring speeches were made by Judge McGloin, Rev. B. Palmer, D. D., Judge White and many other prominent anti-lotteryites. Bishop Davis Sessums, the young successor of the late Bishop Gallagher, in a brilliant address on this occasion, said:

"It is my duty, which I gratefully discharge, to thank the members of the Woman's Anti-Lottery League for accrediting me, as their invitation indicates, with convictions like their own upon this question, and to lament that they are not yet equipped with the full power of franchise to which they are entitled in order that their principles might have the representation which they deserve in the life of the community, and to express my belief that, if they were so equipped, they would wisely use their balance of power, would rally with noble unanimity to defeat this amendment, and would speedily win victory for the cause of true enlightenment and civilization."

The last movement in the contest is an effort to harmonize the lottery and anti-lottery factions of the Democratic party, lest the Republicans carry the state with Leonard for governor. The anti-lottery party will sacrifice no tittle of its hard won advantage; every day is pregnant with new developments. Christian patriotism is ringing the death-knell of the Louisiana lottery.

The above statements concerning the Woman's Anti-Lottery League are made with the authorization of the president, Mrs Wm. Preston Johnston, and the writer is greatly indebted also for facts to Miss Kate Nobles, the gifted and progressive secretary of the Woman's Club of New Orleans.

Correspondence.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is one of the most singular and striking facts in the temperance history of Great Britain that the special evangelization of the army and navy, which has marked recent years, and has done more to raise the moral standard of the men than any previous or contemporary effort, should have fallen to the lot of two devoted women—the work in the army to that of Miss Sarah Robinson, "the soldier's friend," and that in the navy, to Miss Agnes E. Weston, "the sailor's friend." Each felt called to the work, being led by small beginnings, each by letter-writing to individual men at the request of others, and in each case rapid growth and development has followed. There are many points of similarity in the two life-works, and both are marked by singular devotion, self-sacrifice, indomitable energy, remarkable business capacity, shrewd common sense, unwavering principle, burning love for the souls of men and single-hearted loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ. There could be no more fitting theme, perhaps, for this letter than that of temperance and gospel work among British sailors—leaving the twin topic of the army for another occasion.

It was the writer's privilege not many days ago to "interview" Miss Weston about her work, for Jack Tar is ever an interesting figure to the English eye, and therefore it is specially interesting to see what has been and is being done for him, morally, physically, spiritually; and where could that be seen, and of whom inquired, except at Miss Weston's Sailors' Rests and Institutes, and of Miss Weston herself? These Rests are located at Devonport and Portsmouth, the two great naval arsenals of England. Great buildings in each town are the scenes of never-ceasing effort for the good of "Jack." The Portsmouth house is a brightly lighted, cheerful-looking building—large, roomy, bright, attractive—the "bar" taking the whole corner, with great windows, and within, plenty of gas, and glass, and shining urns, and many colored, harmless drinks, and appetizing eatables on dainty dishes and marble tables, aye, and cushioned seats; and customers clearly well satisfied with their purchases—sailors and soldiers and civilians too.

"Miss Weston has just come in, sir. Step this way," and "buttons" shows us through the bar and upstairs, and into Miss Weston's private sanctum, where we renew acquaintance with the woman who has labored for twenty-five years in the interests of Jack Tar, and who is the mainspring of this great undertaking which stretches out hands of welcome and of help to thousands, who else were left to drift and fall among thieves or worse. And then for a brief spell we listen as Miss Weston pleasantly chats about her work, her plans, her successes.

"Yes," she says, in answer to questions, "this place has been practically rebuilt. Indeed, it is not yet finished. We have spent nearly fourteen thousand pounds upon it in doubling its former size. As at Devonport, so here, the Rest and Institute are exclusively for blue-jackets—the men and boys of the Royal Navy. We have crowds of them here; all the beds full, and the reading and recreation rooms, and the public halls—oh, yes, the large one we can get 1,500 in—and the other smaller halls. Yes, we have something going on every night—on Saturdays a temperance entertainment. No, no speeches. Songs and readings, band selections, and so on, but though we have no speeches, we take plenty of pledges—over a thousand a year. On Wednesday we have a platform meeting, and on Sundays a 'Happy Afternoon' for the boys, and a gospel service at night. At this the hall is always crowded, often many turned away."

"And have you outside processions or band playing?"

"Oh, no. We don't need anything of that sort. The men come in sufficiently large numbers, and some few civilians, too, but chiefly sailors. The dormitories and beds are exclusively for sailors, and the Institute, including reading, billiard, and recreation rooms."

"But civilians are allowed to use the bar?"

"Yes, we are glad to have them. In times when there are few ships in port the civilian trade helps to keep the place going."

"And you do a large refreshment business?"

"Yes, and though the tariff is very low, the refreshment business here and at Devonport makes large profits, and that helps to support our gospel and temperance work. But you must see the Devonport Rest and Miss Wintz who is there. She is my right hand. She manages everything connected with the business side, and also edits our monthly, Ashore and Afloat."

"And what about your personal work among the blue-jackets, Miss Weston? Are you well received by the men and are you making headway?"

"Yes. I often speak to the men when the ships are in port and get splendid meetings, and many pledges, and many letters, and many grateful testimonials from men both at home and abroad. You see I know the men so well and understand all about them and their lives and modes of thought, that I can speak of things they understand and without making the mistakes that others would, and so the men are interested and they listen to me. Yes, it is very encouraging to have the approval of the naval authorities, as I have from the Admiral downward. Yes, they find from experience the good effects of the work. They have, as you say, been converted by the logic of facts. It was not such plain sailing at first, but now they have to admit that our work has greatly improved the men in every way."

The Devonport "Rest" is an even more imposing-looking structure than its Portsmouth counterpart, and occupies a commanding position right opposite the dock gates, where erstwhile stood three of the worst public-houses (drinking saloons) in the town. Inside the bar is fitted after the manner of the Portsmouth one. Passing through the bar and through a spacious reading-room, just now in preparation for "the boys," as the younger blue-jackets are affectionately called,—and hundreds of whom, somewhat later, swarm this and other portions of the establishment specially reserved for them—we come at once to Miss Wintz's private office, and soon are deep into question and answer pertaining to the thousand and one points that are of interest here.

A most excellent alter ego for Miss Weston is Miss Wintz, "My right hand," Miss Weston calls her. And it is easy to see how much this slim-built, quiet-mannered, keen-eyed, musical-voiced woman infuses her own intense individuality into all she does and magnetizes into willing service all her subordinates.

"I am very glad to see you," says Miss Wintz, with a pleasant smile and in pleasing tones. "And I am glad you have seen Miss Weston and the Portsmouth house. You see she attends to the gospel and temperance work—the evangelization, takes the meetings, and looks after subscriptions and so on, but I have charge of the business side. Yes, I manage all the commercial department, both here and at Portsmouth, traveling occasionally between the two places; and also the smaller Rest at Keyham. It is an absorbing work. You see it has grown up with us. Miss Weston and I started the work together and it has increased until it is what you see it. I have had the business control all the time, and have appointed every manager and every servant myself. Would you like to go over the premises? Yes? Then we will go." And master key in hand, Miss Wintz leads the way, upstairs and downstairs, into hall and reading rooms, billiard room and bar, store room and baths, and through a very labyrinth of dormitories, and bedroom "cabins," and rougher "shakedowns," and into the comparatively tumble-down old houses that have been lately added, and are soon to give place to new buildings to use as laundry and work-room and crèche for sailors' wives and widows and children.

"We'll begin," Miss Wintz says, "with the rougher side. These beds"—in room after room—"are kept for the rougher sorts of men. Oh, yes, plenty of them come here for a bed after the public house has done its work upon them. Drunk? Yes some of them, and quarrelsome. They carry on awfully sometimes, and occasionally our men have to turn one out in very bad cases. We have to have strong, firm men as attendants for this side. Yes, it's a good thing the men can come here. They are far better off than in the old days when three public houses stood on this site—the 'Fountain,' the 'Napier,' and the 'Dock Gates Inn.' Awful stories have been told me by some of them—how that they have been drunk for days, and often hidden away behind when even the police were searching for them. And worse things used to happen, too. Men were robbed of everything, and some even disappeared. Skeletons were found walled up in the cellars when neighboring houses were pulled down; no doubt, sailors who had been decoyed, made drunk, and never heard of more.

"Yes, everything is nice and clean and sweet now, but we have always a great clearing up going on. First thing in a morning these rooms look very different.

"And these," as we come to the newer buildings, "are the better quarters." Row after row of sweet, wholesome, airy "cabins," each of them dedicated to some friend or relative, or comrade, as is indicated by a brass or painted tablet on every door, and donated to the Rest by the payment of a gift of thirty guineas. "Here we bed the more select class of men. Our manager selects, according to his knowledge of the men, the best and steadiest of the applicants for these rooms. Yes, we make one uniform charge—sixpence—so that the steady, reliable men reap the benefit in superior quarters."

"How many beds can you make up?"

"Nearly four hundred—387, I think, is the exact number; but sometimes, when we are busy, and there are several ships in port, we not only fill all the beds, but make shake-downs in various other rooms, sometimes sixty or seventy in a night."

Downstairs again we visit the hall, where every afternoon "the boys" have a musical entertainment to themselves, and largely by themselves, and where, too, the gospel and temperance meetings are held, crowded and of good effect. In the basement are the kitchens, and store rooms, and bath rooms. "We pride ourselves on our baths," Miss Wintz says, and well they may. Like all else the baths are in great request. "Yes, the refreshment business pays," Miss Wintz answers to another question. "The bar here made over £1,200 profit the first year, just closed, so we say our bread and butter keeps us going, and goes far toward keeping up the other side of the work—the gospel and temperance work. Our accounts are very closely kept, checked every day, and are so entered that we can tell exactly the results of each day's doings;" and at Miss Wintz's call the manager shows his account book, and turns over many a page to show the filling up of beds, the demand for baths, the takings of the bar, and all the rest.

"The boys will be in soon," says Miss Wintz, as again we pass through the boys' rooms. "Ah! here you see," and as if by magic, or from out the floor, there comes a crowd of bright-faced young sailors—England's future hope. They buy what they want at the bar, and sit and eat, talk, or read, and all seem to have a bright look or a smile for Miss Wintz as she nods to one, or pats another on the shoulder.

"Yes," she answers to yet another query, "there is a measure of recompense in the work, but there are discouragements as well. People still say—sailors too, some of them—that Miss Weston is making a fine thing out of it all—a fortune, indeed," with a smile that indicates how far that is from being true. As a fact, though Miss Weston and Miss Wintz live on the premises, they both pay their own charges for board and lodging.

A special Sailors' Rest was erected at the just closed Naval Exhibition at a cost of £500 ($2,500) and was most successful, over 110,000 seamen and marines slept during the last twelve months at the three Rests; a total of £11,541 ($57,700) was taken for refreshments at the three houses in the same period; and over £2,000 ($10,000) profit on that department went to support the gospel and temperance work; monthly letters to the number of 400,000 a year are sent to naval men in all parts of the world; and 30,000 copies of a monthly paper, Ashore and Afloat, are issued. These facts are but the merest indications of the magnitude of the work.

HENRY J. OSBORNE.

London, England.

TEMPERANCE AND FINANCIAL REFORMERS SHOULD UNITE AT THE ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE.

[We print this from a labor leader, and reserve comment until our next issue.—EDS.]

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—It is conceded by all thoughtful men that universal discontent with existing conditions of society and government is agitating the public mind and all true reformers are looking forward to coming events with unusual interest. Not the least of approaching events will be the National Conference of the great industrial organizations at St. Louis, February 22. If all the reform elements can be united the success of the People's ticket at the next election is reasonably sure, but the greatest danger lies in the fact, that an unfortunate division of ideas and plans exists within the ranks of reformers on "the liquor question." All admit that it is a problem pressing for solution in some practical way that will commend the plan adopted to the common sense and support of the industrial masses and reform elements in all walks of life among our people.

Therefore it is best to discuss it in advance and unite if possible on a plan to go before the coming Prohibition and People's party national conventions, rather than hastily decide on a matter of such importance with only a few hours consideration at the conventions. The writer therefore avails himself of a hearing through THE UNION SIGNAL, and will suggest to our prohibition friends, that if they will meet the friends of financial reform upon the basis laid down in the declarations of the Farmers' Alliance and kindred industrial organizations, represented at the St. Louis conference, February 22, an agreement may probably be reached that will unite all forces. The producing and industrial masses now organized, cannot agree that "financial reform," through which the "sovereignty of the people" must be "reasserted," is a "secondary question," or that prohibition, as the one and only issue, enacted into law, will relieve our people and the mortgaged homes in our land from the destroying power of the most unjust, unholy usury-taking system of finance ever inflicted on a civilized nation.

All classes of reformers must be persuaded, if possible, to join their votes in the coming contest. The writer is also satisfied that an overwhelming majority of the members of the great industrial and reform organizations would gladly assist in driving "the open saloon" from American soil and the control of political parties with the way opened to unify these forces.

Both elements, all elements, favoring temperance and financial reform must be satisfied and united, if possible. Permit the writer to suggest to all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL a way out of the difficulty, which it is believed the People's Party would accept and place in their platform, if accepted with assurances of support by our prohibition friends, viz.: Inasmuch as prohibition has so far made no substantial progress in closing the saloon, will our prohibition friends now join in a system of "gradual approaches" against the entrenched liquor power that now controls the old parties, and eventually reach the citadel of the enemy? Can we not agree at St. Louis to place a plank in the conference platform, declaring in favor of placing the manufacture and sale of spirituous and malt liquors under control of United States salaried and bonded agents, at such places within the states not prohibited by state law; said liquors to be sold at cost and guaranteed by the government to be absolutely pure? All such places to be devoid of games of any kind, or other attractions that induce loitering. Not more than one such place to each ten thousand inhabitants, and all such places to be "absolutely closed" on the Sabbath day. Adopt this plan in a resolution that says nothing about the saloon and our friends will find that the leading journals, politicians and ward heelers in both the old parties will at once come to the support of the liquor traffic with an argument in favor of sustaining and keeping up the open saloon as a matter of revenue to the cities, a result which actually followed the late Sherman House conference at Chicago, the Chicago Tribune actually attacking Mr. Donnelly on this very line, because of his advocating the nationalizing idea. Can not our reasonable prohibition friends see that this plan is a decided advance in temperance reform, relieves them of the open hostility of a large element now in our citizenship, and compels the old parties to assume both the offensive and defensive on this question? In the writer's opinion it would do more to open the eyes of preachers, priests and laymen in the churches to the unholy usurpation of the liquor power in its domination of the people through unscrupulous politicians than any other proposition ever introduced for the curtailment of the influence of the saloon in politics.

Let us agree to make a forward movement on this line, and the victory for temperance and ultimate prohibition will be in sight; and one of the dangerous agencies to the future peace and prosperity of our land will be minified in its influence and ultimately extinguished.

An objection with some against this plan would be the loss of revenue, which would have to be taxed up to the people in some other form. But the writer would suggest to Prohibitionists and all others, that an acceptance of the Alliance and People's party plan of loaning the government credit (money) on land and a few of its imperishable products, at not exceeding three per cent, the revenue from this source turned into the national, state and county treasuries (one per cent of the tax to each), will more than replace the license fees and internal revenue now collected from the liquor traffic and under the plan proposed by the writer breaks up the power of the open saloon, used as it now is—the most corrupting and dangerous factor in American politics.

No reform, however, is in sight, financially or otherwise, until the "god of gold" set up in every church in America, both Protestant and Catholic, is dethroned and Jehovah's divine law preached and practiced in dealing with the money question. Permitting the money of the people to be controlled by a specially favored few, under the forms of law, made by lawyers and bankers in Congress, in defiance of the people's will, will soon bring the vengeance of God's outraged law down upon the American people for the "sin of usury," which is one of the great national sins of our people to-day. Not so long as men will get up from the sacramental table, professing to be Christians, and go straightway to the polls and vote into office the "pot-house politicians" bred in and supported by the saloons, because they are the "nominees of my party," will temperance reform have any show for success.

Prohibition friends, can we not agree to unite on this "practical line of approach" towards curtailing the power of the saloon as now conducted, and save millions of our young men from its blighting influence, otherwise our forces will be divided and one of the old parties again succeed at the coming election, through our divisions, and go on licensing and perpetuating the influence of these open sinks of corruption. Civil government is a divine institution, but we are permitting the "sovereignty" of Jehovah to be trampled under foot by the liquor power in this Heaven-favored land through senseless divisions in the face of a disciplined, organized army in our front.

As neither the Republican nor Democratic party will attempt making these reforms, is it not time all true reformers were united in a new party of the people, that will be strong enough to take possession of the "law-making power" in both state and national legislatures, and give the country real temperance and financial reform?

Let there be a large gathering of true reformers at St. Louis, February 22d.

C. A. POWER.

Member Nat'l Committee People's Party for Indiana.
Terre Haute, Feb. 4, 1892.

President's Column.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.

AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., 161 La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, W. C. 57 Gordon Square.

The following letter from Lawyer John Hooker, husband of Isabella Beecher Hooker referring to Miss Willard's letter to a "Young Syndicater," republished Feb. 4, in this column, bears its recommendation on its face, like all other honest things:

HARTFORD, CONN., January 21, 1892.

MY DEAR MISS WILLARD:—I am greatly pleased with your letter to the Woman's Journal, advising the election of a woman president and with the nomination you make for the place, that of Mrs. Livermore. She is grandly executive and wise, and would give us an administration that would go into history as a signal one. Indeed, Washington's, Lincoln's, and hers would stand as three great ones.

I understood you to say that an amendment of the Constitution would be necessary for this. It clearly is not so. The Constitution does not allude to sex. It requires only that the President be a citizen (all women are, as is well settled), native born and thirty-five years of age.

I am not sure but you mean that it would require a change of the Constitution to make a man and woman joint Presidents. Of course it would. But I think such an amendment could never be carried, and if it could, there are serious objections to such a change.

God bless you in your work for human progress.

Most truly yours, J. HOOKER.

***

Mr. Henry D. Lloyd, one of our brightest students and teachers of the new political economy, entertained the Sunset Club with the following original and unique fable:

"A fresh milch Cow was hard at work in a pasture when she attracted the attention of a Foreign Syndicate of Flies, who were traveling through the country in search of investments. 'This is a sure thing,' said the head of the Syndicate, who was a Model Merchant. 'There are no flies on this Cow. Let us put our Trust in Her, and put Her in our Trust, for it is a poor rule that will not work both ways.' The Cow gave her consent by silence, as is usual in such cases. Harmony being thus restored, the Flies settled themselves on her neck, and drew their Dividends from her Circulating Medium. The Cow began to run. When they were full, those of the Syndicate who had a talent for after-dinner speaking addressed the Cow on the questions of Reform. One dwelt on the manifest goodness of the Almighty, who had sent them to give employment to her otherwise undirected energies. Another who was versed in the science of Political Economy pointed out to her the perfection of the law of Supply and Demand by which the faster they put their Suckers into her the faster ran the blood. Meanwhile the Cow feeling that the Destiny of Woman was something nobler than to be treated as a mere pasture ground, lay down and began to roll over on her back. The Model Merchant warned her that the Syndicate would withdraw their Capital and Plant and close their works, if she persisted in this disregard of their vested rights. The animal continuing to roll, he said to his fellow-stockholders, 'This Cow is evidently a member of the Farmers' Alliance, and cares nothing for an honest currency or the obligations of a contract. Let us withdraw and seek a better field for investment.' Essaying to follow this sage advice, the Syndicate found that their feet were so mired in the superfluity of the Blood they had been feasting upon that to escape or to rise by themselves without the Cow was impossible. 'To uplift ourselves we must uplift the Mass,' their leader cried, who in a previous state of existence had been a member of the Sunset Club. The Syndicate were just pluming their wings for a long pull and a strong pull to uplift the Cow, to uplift themselves, when that animal, finishing her roll, finished the Flies."

Moral, First:—Its jugular vein is not the best place to tap a Cow or a People.

Moral, Second:—Those who live upon others should not be too Philanthropic. They are likely to find that their anxieties, like Charity, will need to begin at home, and may end there.

***

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Good friends, please cut this out, get signatures and send to Miss Alice Briggs, Evanston, Ill.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The following extract is taken from a private letter written by Henry Osborne, of London, who has done such a great work in England for temperance: "I have lately evoked the warmest responsive cheers from audiences in various parts of England by references to the W. C. T. U. and its work, pointed by a photograph of the Temple. Shown by lime light as one of the accessories of a 'lantern lecture' the building itself calls forth admiration, but much more the tale of heroic service for God and humanity of which it is the permanent evidence."

***

Miss E. C. Coulson, Harriston, Miss., sends a most precious document which has been in a Maryland family over a century. It is to be sold for the benefit of the Temple. It is a newspaper, brown with age, printed August 17, 1773, The Maryland and Baltimore Journal and Advertiser. One of its columns is devoted to an advertisement of the sale, by George Washington, of twenty thousand acres of land on the Ohio. Let those who have money and who delight in the possession of rare old manuscripts, write us saying how much they will pay for it; we will sell it to the highest bidder.

Mrs. M. Booth, Wyoming, Ohio, sends two yards of beautiful, fine white thread lace, two inches wide, which we will sell for 50 cents a yard. She writes: "I am an old lady seventy-six years of age. I have been much interested in the Temple items. Wishing to do something towards the Temple, I thought I would send you this lace, a piece of my own handiwork, hoping you may be able to sell it, thus adding my mite."

***

The Temple Trust bonds are selling freely. Within a few days large amounts of bonds have been disposed of and sent to Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and England; also $1,500 to the Netherlands. Any one who desires to invest in these excellent, paying bonds should address our financial agent, Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle street, Chicago. He will gladly give information in regard to them.

***

Willard Hall is taking upon itself a semblance of what it will soon become—a perfect gem; gems are not large, and Willard Hall will be no exception to the rule, as it will hold only a little over six hundred persons. Mr. Prettyman, who has charge of all the decorations for the World's Fair, has been engaged as our decorator; he promises to make it a thing of beauty. Walter Crane, the great English painter, who has lately been in Chicago, and whose paintings have been on exhibition at the Art Institute, greatly to the delight of all true lovers of art, has undertaken to paint four symbolical figures for the two panels on each side of the platform, separated by pilasters of colored marble. They are to represent Temperance and Purity, Justice and Mercy. He is also engaged to prepare designs for the fourteen memorial windows of the Hall. When all are finished there will be a harmony and completeness about them showing that the hand and spirit of a master conceived the whole. These windows will cost $500 each, and will be finished as persons may order them. Mr. Crane will have them completed in London according to his own designs. On each there will be a space left at the bottom on the glass for the name and date. We will have something more to say later about the Hall and the great marble corridor leading to it. By May it is expected that the Hall with its marble linings will be ready to receive the names of donors or those in memoriam.

***

We are now ready to take orders for the silver models of the Temple. The banks have a screw in the bottom, by which, when unscrewed, they unload their treasures. The price of the model in this form, in silver, is $1.75, including transportation.

Then we have the model in lacquered silver in the shape of an inkstand, which contains two one-ounce bottles. When closed it is a perfect model of the building. By a touch the roof springs back and two commodious ink-wells are discovered. We have the same model made into a jewel case, lined in delicate shades of pink, blue, purple, and gold silk plush. They are a beautiful and useful addition to a lady's toilet table. The price of these, with transportation, will be $2.25. There cannot be anything more beautiful conceived than these lovely models of our superb Temple.

***

Mrs. Jennie MacArthur sends $50 from the Canadian white-ribboners. This is first payment on one hundred dollars for Mrs. Letitia Youmans' name to be placed on a tablet in Willard Hall.

We are glad to announce that a tablet has been started in honor of our dear friend, Elizabeth L. Comstock. Malinda H. Ridgeway and Martha B. Talmage, La Porte, Ind., send the first $2 towards it. The members of the Society of Friends ought to quickly provide a tablet to the memory of this heroic woman. The first money towards a memorial window in memory of our loved, lost, and deeply mourned Yolande Ames has just been received from Emma Bailey, Emlenton, Pa. A pathetic letter comes from Mrs. Quigley, daughter of our loved and lamented Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs of New Jersey. She writes: "I have just opened mother's pocket-book. I touch the coins placed there by the dear hands with reverent fingers. I count the pennies and find $5.42. I want to keep the book as she left it, but I must not. She gave from it so freely; it was always open. I send the last opening to you for the Temple."

***

All money sent to the Temple should be in the form of draft, post-office and express orders or in registered letters, and should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, and sent to her at Evanston, Ill. A two cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 149 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, will secure a Temple mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin.

Our Children.

PURE COLD WATER.

BY S. JENNIE SMITH.

There is a drink that never harms,
'Tis pure cold water;
There is a drink that ne'er alarms,
'Tis pure cold water.
It always keeps our senses right,
Our minds and faces ever bright,
Can keep the heart within us right,—
'Tis pure cold water!

But there's a drink that we must shun,
Not pure cold water;
There is a drink much harm has done,
Not pure cold water.
Oh no, this drink is one that steals
Our senses from us and reveals
A power to harm, but never heals,—
Not pure cold water!

The God in Heaven gave us taste
For pure cold water;
Then we must not this blessing waste,
We'll take cold water;
For if we form a habit now
Of drinking liquor we'll allow,
Ourselves before this fiend to bow;—
We'll take cold water!

Then let us always give our friends
This pure cold water;
It is the drink our father sends,
This pure cold water.
We'll form a resolution here
That liquor stores we won't go near,
And to such drink be foes severe,—
And take cold water!

East Norwich, L. I.

PAUL'S DECISION AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

BY NAOMI.

No merrier boy attended the Fairfield village school than Paul Denton. If a stranger had inquired who was chief leader in all the village sports, the answer would have been, Paul Denton.

Somehow the older boys, unconsciously to themselves, yielded to Paul's decision in everything of importance, for in the two years he had lived among them he had won the hearts of all, from the stern schoolmaster down to little Susie Cross, the tavern-keeper's daughter

No wonder, then, when early one Monday morning it was reported that Jessie Clinton was going to form a Band of Hope, all the boys looked at Paul to see what he thought about it.

"Hello, Paul! going to join the Band of Hope?" cried two or three at once.

"Band of Hope, who has started a Band of Hope?"

"Jessie Clinton, and all the girls are going to join and they want you to."

"I know what they think," cried Harry Austin, the oldest boy in school, "they know if they get Paul they are sure of all the rest."

A frown seemed to settle on the usually fair countenance as he answered: "Well! they won't get me, that's sure; I'm not going to promise not to touch sweet cider, and that is what they want you to do; most a wonder they don't want a fellow to stop eating apples for fear the juice will make us all drunkards. No, sir! boys, I haven't forgotten how we are all invited down to Farmer Atkin's on Saturday to try his new cider, so don't forget to be on hand."

Jessie Clinton, who, unseen, had overheard the whole conversation, well knew it would be useless to urge the point at present. "If only I knew how to win Paul," she said to herself as the bell rang, and from her heart there arose a silent prayer that God would show this Paul as He did Paul of Tarsus what He would have him do.

Saturday morning dawned bright and clear, just such an October day as rejoices the heart of a fun-loving boy. Nine o'clock found the boys, with Paul Denton at the head, at Farmer Atkin's gate. They had evidently been expected, for through the open doors of the barn could be seen the table spread with glasses and straws ready for use, while in the center loomed up a pyramid of cookies such as only Auntie Atkin (as every one in the village called her) could make.

Farmer Atkin seemed almost to be a boy again, so heartily did he enter into the boys' enjoyment.

"I just tell you I'm glad I didn't join the Band of Hope," said little Charlie Clawson.

"So am I," chimed in several of the other smaller boys.

"What's that you are saying, boys?" chuckled the farmer.

"Oh, Jessie Clinton has started a Band of Hope, and wanted all us fellows to join, but Paul said 'no,' and that settled it for the rest."

"Paul settled it, did he? That's right, Paul, my boy; Bands of Hope are all well enough for girls, and Jessie Clinton is a mighty nice one, but I guess there is no danger of you boys getting to be like Jim Cross."

"'Tis a pity Jessie could not get him to join, for they do say his little girl takes it dreadful hard because her father sells rum."

Paul winced a little as the farmer said this, and bended his head low over his glass, lest the other boys should see the flush he felt stealing over each cheek.

Just then, to Paul's great relief, King, the farmer's mastiff, came bounding into the barn. All the boys shouted, "Let's treat King." Pieces of cookies were distributed in great abundance, to which King responded with a knowing wag of his tail, and an intelligent look from his great brown eyes.

"Here's to the health of King Atkin," shouted Paul, while every boy followed his example and placed his glass to his lips. "Now King must drink to his own;" and placing a basin on the floor, each boy emptied the remaining contents of his glass into it. King walked slowly up to the basin, took one smell, settled his tail down between his hind legs, and solemnly walked away. Farmer Atkin laughed merrily as some of the boys said: "King must have joined the Band of Hope." But Paul, somehow, felt uncomfortable; he tried to call King back, but in vain.

Twelve o'clock found only fragments of cake, broken straws, and soiled glasses, as with shouts of laughter the boys bade the farmer good-by, promising to come again the next week.

As the boys passed the tavern, the bloated face of Jim Cross appeared in the doorway. Charlie Clawson drew nearer the older boys and whispered, "Don't he look awful? I wouldn't want to drink cider if I thought I would ever look like that."

All the boys seemed to feel the effect of Charlie's words, for a silence began to settle upon them, broken only by the good-byes spoken, as they one by one separated to go their different ways.

As Paul prepared for church the next morning unwelcome thoughts crowded themselves upon his mind—thoughts of yesterday, of Charlie's remark and Jim Cross' ugly countenance. Could he ever look like that? The very thought made him shudder. Surely sweet cider could never have such an effect. Then he remembered how King would not even taste it, and the thought made him ashamed. Was it possible that the act of a dumb animal was meant as a lesson to show him the stand he ought to take? No! It was simply absurd. He would not believe it; and stilling his conscience he ran down the stairs just in time to meet the other members of the family as they started for church.

When they entered the church, the very air seemed oppressive to Paul, the sermon dull and the singing in which he always took an active part dragged wearily. The school service immediately followed that of the church, and for a moment Paul was tempted to absent himself for once, but knowing the other members of the class would wonder, he reluctantly entered. Scarcely was he seated before some one whispered about the jolly time yesterday, to which he replied that "he wished yesterday and everything about it was in the Red Sea," at which remark the boys exchanged glances and were silent.

The exercises over, Paul hurried out longing to run away from his own thoughts, but scarce had he gone two blocks before he heard a timid voice calling him and glancing up he saw the figure of little Susie Cross hastening toward him.

"Oh, Paul! I want to speak to you just one moment; you won't mind, will you, if I tell you something? I heard papa say something so dreadful the other day when you boys passed, and I like you so because you are always kind to me, and if—oh! if you should ever be like him. Paul, don't drink any more cider—because—I must tell you what he said"—and convulsive sobs shook the little frame. Paul drew Susie's hand in his, walking slowly along until she became quiet.

"Now, Susie, what is it you must say? Do not be afraid."

"I tell you, not because I like to, but because I must. He said Farmer Atkin was doing him the best turn he ever had in his life in having you boys up there drinking cider, because it wouldn't be long before you would want something stronger."

"Did—did he dare to say that?" and the grasp on Susie's hand tightened.

"He really did and it was so awful."

Paul relaxed his hold of Susie's hand and bidding her return home, started to go he cared not where, to quiet the tumult he felt raging within.

With clinched hands and bated breath he hurried on, until he found himself alone on the open common.

Throwing himself at full length under the nearest tree with face buried in his hands, anger and mortification raging in his heart, he thought of Susie's words. How dared Jim Cross to think of such a thing, much less say it, and of him!

Over and over the words rang in his ears until they seemed written with a pen of iron. Would he ever want anything stronger, and if he did not, would any of the other boys? Could he appear so weak to the boys as to tell them he was afraid to drink cider?

Like an omen of peace came the words, "When we are weak then are we strong." Could he by owning his weakness really become strong? Slowly the hands unclinched, and the sledge-hammer beating of his heart ceased.

Long he lay thus, and when at last he rose from the ground, the battle had ceased, and there was a great calm, for Paul had decided,—and had decided right.

Jessie Clinton was radiant when the following week the boys, headed by Paul, told her they were ready to join the Band of Hope, and the tears rolled down Susie Cross' face when Charlie Clawson whispered, he was so glad she told them what her father said.

. . . . . .

Jim Cross never knew why Farmer Atkin never made any more cider, but Susie and the boys did, and that was enough.

What Shall We Call It?

A few names have already been suggested for this corner of "Our Children's" page. The letter which we publish below is from a Chicago boy. Who will be the next to send in a name, or write us a letter? Will not you?

DEAR EDITOR:—I read your letter to the boys and girls in THE UNION SIGNAL last week where you asked us to come into a circle to talk over things and have puzzles, and so on. I'm in it for one, and can make some puzzles if you'd like them. Enclosed you will find the answers to those last week. They were pretty easy to guess. I hope the answers are right. I thought up a name but don't know whether you will like it; it's "Headquarters," because you see we'll get our heads together, and all the soldiers in the white ribbon army should have headquarters, too. I think it's a pretty good name. I belong to the Loyal Temperance Legion, but am nearly big enough to graduate. I have signed the triple pledge until I'm twenty-one, and I mean to keep it after that, too.

Yours respectfully,

RALPH M. H.

Chicago, February 15.

Send in the puzzles, we will be glad to have them, Ralph, and we are much obliged for your prompt letter. The name is a real good one, and suggests some bright thoughts. There would be no danger of "bumping" heads in our cozy quarters, would there? ED.

SOFT SHELLED NUTS.

4.

BURIED BEVERAGES.

1. John Smith & Co., Coat and Vest Makers.
2. The infirmary directors discussed the topic of feeding the needy poor.
3. We took a trip to Salem on Adelaide's birthday,
4. In summer's heat, eat sparingly.
5. Emil kept very quiet.
6. The jackdaw ate raw oysters.

5.

HIDDEN PROHIBITION STATES.

1. Clio waits our call.
2. A kodak! O! take our pictures.
3. Mill & Dakan, Sash, Doors and Blinds.
4. Emma, in every case, is the best nurse.

6.

CONCEALED GREAT NAMES.

1. Please close the window.
2. That dog ought to be chained.
3. Will ardent spirits intoxicate?
4. The air on the cliff is keen.

TO THE BOYS AND GIRLS:—Answers to these puzzles will be published in three weeks. Send puzzles and answers to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.

"MA," said a certain school-boy, "can't Sarah always put up my lunch? She's got a better appetite than you, and she puts more in."

The Household.

A CHILD IN THE MIDST.

BY MRS. GEORGE ARCHIBALD.

With crafty hatred, tempting Him
They stood,—the Scribe and Pharisee,
And even those who loved Him best,
Contended which should greatest be.
But He, reproaching not His own,
Nor them who covertly reviled,
Turned, took, and in the midst set down
A fair and sinless little child.

The while some deeper truths He taught
The chosen twelve, with loving word,
Clasped closely in His arms it lay.
Amazed they saw, ashamed they heard,
And knew their hidden fault revealed,
And felt the folly of their strife,
And learned of childlike innocence
The meanings of a higher life.

To-day as then the hours go on,
And everywhere and everywhere,
A little child is in the midst
To cheat the world of its despair.
To soften cruelty; to win
The wayward heart; to bring relief
When time wears wearily; to smooth
The heavy way and comfort grief.

And everywhere and everywhere
But for the children sweetly set
Among us, would our wayward hearts
Full soon the dear Christ-child forget.
And oh, perhaps we might forget
But that He, sometimes, stoops from far,
To lift and set one in the midst
Of heaven, where His angels are.

Let him walk worthily, who walks
Where in the midst the children be.
Who dares offend one, better that
He die in dreadful deeps of sea;
For he hath hurt the Son of God,
Who visits harm to one of them;
And who receiveth one receives
The Blessed Child of Bethlehem.

Elmira, N. Y.

ONE OF THE STAY-AT-HOMES.

BY PAUL DEREBEY.

"What will Patience Grey do now?" I asked of my cousin, as we sat on the veranda, one morning, and looked across the field to the deserted looking Grey farm-house.

"Poor Patience! my heart aches for her," said my cousin.

I looked up, at the tremor in her voice. There were tears in her eyes.

"She isn't so very poor, is she? or she wouldn't be so considered here," I said. "She will have a thousand or two from her father's estate, I suppose, and a woman like Patience Grey will easily earn her living in some way."

"O Paul! with all your learning you know very little about some things," said Catherine, severely. "Let me tell you. In the first place, Patience is forty; her health is broken; she will never be strong again. Her nerves have been overtaxed for years. For fifteen years her mother has been an invalid, and many times she has been at the point of death. I verily believe that Patience's untiring devotion and prayers have added years to her mother's life. Many times I have stood by Mrs. Grey's bedside, with the thought that her sufferings were over, but Patience nursed her back to life again and again. There were often weeks that the devoted daughter did not go to bed at night, and many nights in succession when her eyes were not closed. Three years ago Mrs. Grey died, and soon after Mr. Grey had a paralytic stroke and until he died, a week ago, he has been as helpless as a child. The other children went out from the old home to homes of their own. Fred has a fine position in a bank. Walter is a teacher, and commands a good salary. Jane and Delia married well, but what has Patience to show for all her 'vanished years'?"

"Her father gave her a weekly allowance, surely," I said. "Though of course money cannot pay such debts, neither can money buy such unselfish devotion."

"No," said Catherine, "Patience never received any wages. Besides the care of her parents and the house-work, she employed her spare moments in doing fine sewing and making rugs which she sold, and bought her clothes and furnished many little comforts for her father and mother, besides."

"Well, I never supposed Mr. Grey was so small a man as that," I said.

"No, you misjudge him, Paul. Mr. Grey's little property was in land, you know, and it was let out on shares; and if you know anything about the profits of a farm in these days, you will understand how small his income was. Then there were always big doctor's bills, and the debts of that 'scape-goat'—Jack. Oh! my blood boils when I think of him! I doubt if he ever did one thing in his life from a pure, unselfish motive, or has ever made the world one whit better for having lived in it. He certainly never did anything to brighten his parents' lives, and yet he will share equally with Patience in the few thousand dollars that his father left. Oh! Paul, this is a strange world! Have you made the discovery that it is so?"

"Yes," I said, "I have formed that opinion from certain phases I have seen of it. But Catherine, isn't there a law of compensation? Do not you believe in that?"

"Yes, Paul, I believe there is such a law written in the statute-books of heaven, but there is none in this selfish world, except the consciousness of right living, and the joy that comes to a heart at peace with God and one's own conscience. But I do believe if there is a soft place in heaven, it is for Patience Grey, and the scores of women like her, who spend their lives in unappreciated toil and self-sacrifice."

"But her parents appreciated Patience's devotion, did they not?" I asked.

"Yes, certainly they did," said Catherine. "Only it seemed as if they accepted and expected it, as we do our common blessings of air and sunshine. And Patience thought it only her duty. I am sure no one ever heard her complain."

"But her brothers and sisters know what you have told me. Surely they will give up all claims to their father's estate," I questioned. "He must have known they would do what was right else he would have given it to Patience by will. I wonder that he did not do that. It would have been little enough, I am sure."

"O yes," said Catherine, "I will tell you just how magnanimous they were. They came to the funeral, well-dressed, well-fed looking people, every one of them, unless it was Jack. He did look a little seedy, to be sure. But he would under any circumstances. Patience is the youngest of the family, if you reckon age according to years, but she looked almost old enough to be the mother of them all. Well, after it was all over, and it was found there was no will, the children agreed that Patience should have whatever articles of household furniture she wished to keep, 'as she had taken care of her parents in their last sickness,' 'though to be sure she had had a good home all these years,' as Jack said, 'and that was more than he could say.' You can imagine, Paul, how valuable the best of the furniture would be, after the wear of sixty years."

"But the farm, is that to be sold?" I asked.

"Yes, as soon as a purchaser can be found," said Catherine. "That was what they decided was best to be done. An advertisement was sent to the local paper the week after the funeral. They seemed in a hurry to send Patience adrift, before she had time to make any plans, or adjust herself to her changed circumstances."

"But they offered to give her a home, I suppose?" I asked meekly, fearing the storm of wrath which I saw gathering in my cousin's face would burst on my defenseless head.

"O yes, they went through that formula," said Catherine. "They knew very well Patience would never be dependent upon their bounty. Though I haven't a doubt but she will go to them whenever they are sick, and go through the old routine of nursing again. Oh Patience Grey will find a niche to fill, I have no doubt of that. And her home shall be here until she finds a better place. She knows she has one friend who loves her for herself alone. Our friendship has stood the test of thirty years."

"Happy Patience Grey!" I said. For well I knew whoever gained my cousin's affections, found a friend, tender, unswerving and true.

WHY I NEVER TASTED LIQUOR.

Edward W. Bok, editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, in an article to The Young Crusader, a few months back, made some statements that ought to have wider wings. As an exceptionally successful business man and brilliant writer, the following testimony must find its way to reason with all the energy of acquired momentum:

"First of all, I never did so because I seemed to possess an inborn hatred of all intoxicants. Although brought up with wine on the table, I could never be induced to taste of it, when, as a child, some light wine would be placed to my mouth to sip. To some good mothers this may seem an unwise thing for my parents to have done, but it must be remembered that I was born and brought up until my sixth year in Holland—a country where drunkenness is never seen, but whose people, high and low, believe in a moderate use of light wines, and have been brought up for years in that belief.

"But, as I grew older, I began to apply reasoning to my principles. Being early thrown into business life and among men older than myself, I naturally matured quickly. I was about sixteen years old, if I remember rightly, when I began attending public dinners and assemblages in the capacity of a newspaper reporter. Wines were more freely used then at dinners than now, and I soon saw that I must make up my mind whether at these gatherings I should partake of wines or decline them.

"I had been trained to the belief that it was always best to err on the safe side, and as I sat down to the first public dinner I ever attended—a New England dinner in Brooklyn—I turned down all the wine-glasses set before my plate, and this I have followed ever since.

"At first, my principle never to touch liquor or spirits of any kind directed to me the chaffings of my friends. I was told it looked 'babyish,' that I could not expect to go out much and keep to my principle, that I would often find it considered as discourteous to refuse a simple glass of wine tendered me by my hostess. But I made up my mind that there was no use having a principle unless one stuck to it. And I soon saw that people respected me the more for it. And just let me say right here to all my young readers who may see these words: I never lost one friend by my refusals, but I made scores of friendships, —of men, from one who has occupied the Presidential chair, down—of women, among whom are the best and most famous in our land to-day.

"I honestly believe that a young man who starts out in this life with a fixed principle, whether it be that he will not drink, smoke or indulge in anything which in his heart he feels is not good for him, or in which he does not conscientiously believe, and adheres to that principle, no matter under what circumstances he may be placed, holds in his hand one of the most powerful elements of success in the world to-day. There is a great deal of common sense abroad in this world of ours, and a young man with a good principle is always safe to depend upon it. The men and women in this world whose friendships are worth having are the men and women who have principles themselves, and respect them in others, especially when they find them in a young man.

"Another thing which led me to make up my mind never to touch liquor, was the damage which I saw wrought by it upon some of the finest minds with which it was ever my privilege to come into contact, and I concluded that what had resulted injuriously to others might prove so to me. I have seen, even in my few years of professional life, some of the smartest, yea, brilliant literary men dethroned from splendid positions owing to nothing else but their indulgence in wine. I have known men with salaries of thousands of dollars per year, occupying positions which hundreds would strive a lifetime to attain, come to beggary from drink. Only recently there applied to me, for any position I could offer him, one of the most brilliant editorial writers in the newspaper profession—a man who, two years ago, easily commanded one hundred dollars for a single editorial in his special field. That man became so unreliable from drink that editors are now afraid of his articles, and although he can to-day write as forcible editorials as at any time during his life, he sits in a cellar in one of our cities, writing newspaper wrappers for one dollar per thousand. And that is only one instance of several I could recite here. I do not hold my friend up as 'a terrible example'; he is but one of a type of men who convinced me, and may convince others, that a clear mind and liquor do not go together.

"I know it is said when one brings up such an instance as this: 'Oh, well, that man drank to excess. One glass will hurt no one.' How do these people know that it won't? One drop of kerosene has been known to throw into flame an almost hopeless fire, and one glass of liquor may fan into flame a smouldering spark hidden away where we never thought it existed. The spark may be there, and it may not. Why take the risk? Liquor to a healthy boy or young man will never do him the least particle of good; it may do him harm. The man for whom I have absolutely no use in this world, is the man who is continually asking a young man 'just to have a little. One glass, you know.' A man who will wittingly urge a young man whom he knows has a principle against liquor, is a man for whom a halter is too good.

"Then, as I looked around and came to know more of people and things, I found the always-unanswerable argument in favor of a young man's abstinence: i. e., that the most successful men in America to-day are those who never lift a wine-glass to their lips. Becoming interested in this fact, I had the curiosity to personally inquire into it, and of twenty-eight of the leading business men in the country whose names I selected at random, twenty-two never touch a drop of wine of any sort. I made up my mind that there was some reason for this. If liquor brought safe pleasures, why did these men abstain from it? If, as some say, it is a stimulant to a busy man, why did not these men, directing the largest business interests in this country, resort to it? And when I saw that these were the men whose opinions in great business matters were accepted by the leading concerns of the world, I concluded that their judgment in the use of liquor would satisfy me. If their judgment in business matters could command the respect and attention of the leaders of trade on both sides of the sea, their decision as to the use of liquor was not apt to be wrong "And as opportunities come to me to go round in homes and at public places, I find that I do not occupy a solitary position. The tendency to abstain from liquors is growing more and more among young men of to-day. The brightest young men I know, young men who are filling positions of power and promise, never touch a drop of beer, wines or intoxicants of any sort. And the young man who to-day makes up his mind that he will be on the safe side and adhere to strict abstinence, will find that he is not alone. He has now the very best element in business and social life in the largest cities of our land with him.

"He will not be chided for his principle, but through it will command respect.

"It will not retard him in commercial success, but prove his surest help.

"It will win him no enemies, but bring him the friendships of upright men and good women.

"It will win him surer favor than aught else in eyes which he will some time in his life think are the sweetest he has ever looked into.

"It will insure him the highest commercial esteem and the brightest social position.

"And as it moulds his character in youth, so will it develop him into a successful man and a good citizen.

"Try it, my young friend, and see!"

UNION SIGNAL
WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS. } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec.—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.

For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY. Editor.

W. C. T. U. COURSE OF STUDY—MARCH READINGS.

Bible.—Fishers of Men. Elizabeth W. Greenwood.
Responsive.—How the W. C. T. U. Looks to Outsiders. A Symposium
Topical.—National Leaflets: No. 1, The National W. C. T. U.; No. 18, Work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; The Temperance Movement, pp. 502-503; Glimpses of Fifty Years, pp. 475-478.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: The Present Crisis in the Prohibition Party—Charity Organization—Homes for the Morally Incapable—A Letter Worth Preserving 8, 9
WATCH-TOWER 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem, Overwork, by Warner Snoad—Recollections of Noted Men and Women, by Lady Henry Somerset—The Woman's Anti-Lottery League, An Urgent Call for Recruits 2, 3, 4
CORRESPONDENCE: Letter from England—Temperance and Financial Reformers Should Unite at the St. Louis Conference—Temperance Temple Items 4, 5
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, Pure Cold Water—Paul's Decision and What Came of It 6
WHAT SHALL WE CALL IT? 6
THE HOUSEHOLD: Poem, A Child in the Midst—One of the Stay-at-Homes—Why I Never Tasted Liquor 7
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.: West Africa's Wrong—Two Good Investors—Forward Movements in Holland—Report of the Victorian Convention 19
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: Minnesota, Idaho Items, Southern California—News in a Nutshell 10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS Demorest Medal Contests—National Temperance Hospital Notes—Receipts for Temperance Temple 12
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 13
SIGNAL NOTES 14

For a great door and effectual is opened unto me.—I Cor. 16: 9.

THE PRESENT CRISIS IN THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

James Russell Lowell humorously says in his famous "Biglow Papers": "The party that I belong to is the party that I am singing this 'ere song to." We take this as our text in all sincerity and faith. The true friends of the great political movement to which THE UNION SIGNAL is committed and which we fervently hope will eventually concentrate the reform forces of this country, should speak their minds plainly at the present hour. There are three mooted questions in our court of opinion:

1. Whether or not to change the name of the party.
2. Whether or not to narrow its platform.
3. Whether or not to combine with other groups of good men and women who seek to reach beneficent results through the People's party and other lesser organizations of like character.

Upon all these points we have opinions which we hold with sincere tenacity and yet which we are willing to relinquish if they are wrong.

1. For many years we have believed that it would be to the advantage of the Prohibition party if it had another name. We think the cause of prohibition by law has suffered greatly through the ambiguity that made the same name, in a sense, the property of a particular political organization. Thousands of ministers have "fought shy" of mentioning prohibition in their pulpits because they feared the inference that would be drawn concerning their politics, or else they owed a grudge to the Prohibition party and would not nail its chief plank in their pulpit platform for that reason. Clearness in language always helps to good results in action, and we believe that prohibition as a principle, as a law, as an amendment to the organic law of the state and nation should stand by itself, should rise or fall on its own merits, and should be in nowise complicated with the contradictions, criminations and, alas, the hatreds that are involved in all political movements. We deem it short-sighted, and for ourselves it would be positively wrong to hold on to the name "Prohibition" as the name of a party. The objections made to a change have always seemed to us not to be founded in clear ideas. Scores of noble and true men have said to us, "Why do you want to change the name? We have battled for it, we are attached to it, we love it," but if women had used such arguments they would have been called sentimental. What we wish to bring about is, that men who do not love this name and will not rally to the political movement it represents, should be conciliated without the sacrifice of principle on our part. That we should take some other name with which they have not uncomfortable political associations, seems to us tactful and strategic. We wish to get inside the prickly pear hedge of prejudice, and a name like "Home Protection Party," "National Reform Party," "Whig Party," "People's Party," would help us greatly in this particular and would leave the prohibition propaganda to spread more generally throughout the brain and heart of Christendom unhindered by political impediment.

2. To our minds the watchword is, "Let us broaden, not narrow our platform."

"No pent-up Utica contracts our powers,
But all the boundless continent is ours."

We must bait for many kinds of fish, we must set our sails to catch all breezes. Ours is not a "one-man party" it is meant to be an "all-men" party, hence we have no sympathy with the cry of "one-plank." We think it would prove to be the plank of the drowning man with no ship in sight.

3. We believe with Gilbert Delamater that not to seek a union of our forces with those of other reformers would be criminal. We are aware that that good and true man, the leader of our party, Professor Samuel Dickey, has sought to form such alliances and is still open to approach from labor leaders, but he is staunch and firm, as is our noble Governor St. John, our great organ, The Voice, and other leaders against surrendering the principle for which we stand. This is right, but there are many ways of expressing our principles, there are many subsidiary movements that we might advocate which all really conduct to prohibition and not away from it. High license is not one of these, because it admits and incorporates the principle of "revenue to the government" from the blood-tarnished gold of the saloon.

We confidently believe that a patient discussion among the leaders of these various movements would result in a consensus of opinion that would be loyal to the different interests represented and would mass in the ballot-box of 1892 such a vote against the two old parties entrenched as they are in tradition, prestige and patronage, as would make old party leaders tremble in their shoes, and would mean more to the people of this country than any single event since the declaration of peace at Appomatox.

In the machinery of the Prohibition party we believe it would be a great advantage if, instead of committees, specific lines of work were intrusted to individuals. We have found immense advantage from this method in the white-ribbon movement. Perhaps no single feature of our work has been more approved by results. What is everybody's business is nobody's; different members of the committee wait for one another, but one man or woman called to a certain task or assigned to a certain line of duty or duties, without waiting for consultation, proceeds to execute the personal trust.

We believe another thing, and that is, that one or more women should be on the national committee of the Prohibition party, and also on every state, county and local committee. If men and women are to come into the realm of government together, and if our party believes in this, let it prove its faith by works, let it welcome to its official councils the best women it can find who are willing to participate. Two heads are better than one. Men and women work better together than alone. The Prohibition party has nobly stood through storm and fire for woman's cause; it has endeared itself indissolubly to the home-makers of the country. Whether its declaration takes the form of equal suffrage in the largest sense, or of that magnificent measure, municipal suffrage with an educational test, we are not specially concerned, but that its platform shall still prove its faith in womanhood and its chivalric attitude towards those who have borne so much in its defense, we may confidently assume. Now if the party will broadly declare and carry out its purpose to invite women to its committees as a foreshadowing of the day when they will be in its triumphant councils in the nation, nothing will be left to be desired.

All of which is respectfully submitted in the interest of the larger hope.

CHARITY ORGANIZATION.

There is great need of an organic union of charitable societies, especially in our large cities. Such a union, with a central management and oversight of the entire work, is necessary to secure,

1. The greatest economy of administration;
2. Concurrent and harmonious action of all charitable societies and individuals;
3. Efficiency in diffusing knowledge on subjects connected with the relief of the poor;
4. To prevent begging and imposition upon charitable people.

When individuals or societies attempt to minister to the wants of the needy in a great city without any common policy or interchange of information, and even, as is sometimes the case, by concealing their transactions from each other, there is great waste in the employment of too many officials or agents; in giving, through lack of information, to unworthy persons who make a business of going from one isolated society to another and begging; from want of wise measures for self-help, and from general lack of efficiency and thoroughness.

At a recent meeting of the Illinois Conference of Charities and Corrections, the chairman stated that there are not far from two hundred charitable societies in Chicago, having no connection with one another, separately soliciting and applying funds, employing a large number of agents who are responsible to no central authority and cross and recross each other's path in their work. There was a strong sentiment in favor of the organization or at least a federation of these societies under one central board, but owing to the opposition of one or two influential men, nothing was done in this direction. It seems clear that so long as our churches, guilds, societies, benevolent orders and private individuals continue to act without unity or concert or common management, refusing to make known to each other what they have done or who are their beneficiaries, they can never properly do the charitable work that needs to be done in a large town or city.

The annual report of the Associated Charities of Boston, for 1891, presents a plan of work worthy of consideration, if not imitation, by people of other cities. The objects of the organization are:

1. To provide that the case of every applicant for relief shall be thoroughly investigated.
2. To place the results of such investigation at the disposal of the overseers of the poor, of charitable societies and agencies, and of private persons of benevolence.
3. To obtain employment if possible; if not, to obtain, so far as necessary, suitable assistance for every deserving applicant from public authorities, charitable agencies, or benevolent individuals.
4. To make all relief, either by alms or charitable work, conditional upon good conduct and progress.
5. To send to each poor family, under the advice of a district conference, a friendly visitor.
6. To hold meetings and print papers for distribution.

In order to accomplish these objects, the city is divided into districts, in each of which there is a conference consisting of representatives of societies or churches coöperating with the society, which meets regularly to consider the best action to be taken in each case of need in the district. There are now fourteen of these conferences, each having an executive committee and an agent who has an office in the district and is employed by the central board and paid a salary out of its funds. The salaries of the fourteen agents range from $212 to $869; and the expenses of the district officers including salaries of agents range from $315 to $1,087. The whole work is under the control of a central board of which Mr. Robert Treat Paine is president, whose salary, with that of the general secretary, amounts to $4,070. The total expense of the central office is $5,560. The entire expenses of the society for the last year amounted to $15,583.

The peculiarity of the organization is that it is mainly a bureau of information. It does not use the money from its funds for relief. That money is contributed to support the agents whose business is to investigate cases of need, whether of employment or of immediate relief, and report them to the proper sources of supply, as shown in paragraphs two and three of the statement of objects printed above.

The directors say:

The society believes in the most adequate relief; and while it always procures food and fuel to relieve immediate distress pending investigation, it does not construe food, fuel, or pittances of money to mean the best form of permanent relief. The greatest problem with which the society and its visitors has to contend is to prevent it from drifting into the old method of giving material relief, which is the easiest way of temporarily helping a family. When investigation shows that relief is needed, relief which shall relieve—not necessarily food or money in the form of alms, but that greatest of relief, "a friend in need"—is found. If an able-bodied man can work and will not, he is allowed to suffer the effects of idleness, if no one is dependent upon him. If others are to suffer, the power of the law is invoked to compel him to work and to provide for them, and they are relieved. If he would work, he is helped to it. If he is intemperate, effort is made to reform him or to help him to sobriety for as long a time as the disease can be fought. If sickness or misfortune has brought him to want, then relief is found in the friend who will assure him that, in the absence of relatives or neighbors able to assist him, he and his shall not become a public charge, but that all that one friend can do for another shall be done for him.

To furnish information and prevent imposture a complete registration of all persons who apply for relief anywhere in the city is kept at the central office. During the twelve years since the society was organized there have been 41,482 names registered, and there has been an annual increase of 2,000. The report contains much that is interesting and instructive concerning the work of the agents and visitors in the different districts. It is printed by Geo. H. Ellis, 141 Franklin street, Boston, and can probably be obtained by applying to Miss Zilpa D. Smith, the general secretary, at Charity Building, Chardon street.

The historic name of Mrs. James T. Fields has been for years prominently associated with this salient illustration of brains (as well as heart) applied to people's needs.

HOMES FOR THE MORALLY INCAPABLE.

The duty of the government to take care of the output of saloons so long as it legalizes them, is emphasized by the home miseries of those whose next of kin are given to drink. This demand is so just and inexorable that we shall continue to press it upon the attention of white-ribbon women until something explicit is arranged for in our methods. From the letter of one who has greatly suffered, a woman of the utmost refinement and heart culture, we venture to take a few sentences. Her son makes life for himself and his family a sort of organized pandemonium. They have borne this for years, and seem to have found no redress for themselves or for him.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—You spoke when I met you last of the need of a hospital for inebriates where they could be committed as insane. Have you thought this out yet? There are so many men, and not a few women, as you so well know, who claim that they cannot help drinking. Now if this is true, they are not criminal, but insane, and as long as the government legalizes the liquor traffic, it is in duty bound to provide for its victims. But since it does not, and perhaps will not, would it not be possible to organize a private hospital, and secure a law which would permit physicians to commit the inebriate insane, and to recommit if necessary? I believe there would be no difficulty in getting the institution if we can but obtain the law. There are too many people, alas, who are seeking for some place where their weak and suffering loved ones can have hope held out to them. So I come to you asking if in all this wide land there is no spot where such men can be safe from the clutches of the drink monster except behind prison walls. Those who love these unfortunate ones do not wish to wait until they are forced into the criminal ranks before they can be protected. I cannot tell you how important this seems to me, nor how great a necessity. I am not able to think it out in detail, but there should be an institution where the brain set free could be educated, and the hand, also. It should be hospital and school, the latter partly industrial. Do we not owe these helpless ones a chance, whether they themselves admit the need or not? If, after a term in such an institution their conduct proves that there is no longer need of confinement for them, we should feel that the work was abundantly justified. If it did not cure them, it would still be justified, and the sick patient could be returned and kept and cared for, if not as curable, then as incurable. My brain has been racked till it almost refuses to work, in seeking a solution of this problem. I have always quoted with approbation these lines:

"For every evil under the sun,
There is a remedy or there's none;
If there is one, try and find it,
If there is none, never mind it."

But there's the rub, the "never mind it!" That seems impossible when the victim continually confronts me, and to be with him is like being in a perpetual storm-center. One can scarcely sit down under these circumstances and feel the peace of God. The strain is too constant. God certainly does not will us to be resigned to such conditions, and impels us by His love placed in our hearts for our children "to move heaven and earth," if need be, until rescue or help is found. This work does not at all conflict with our efforts against the liquor traffic, but the dictates of humanity are that the wounded be cared for in the meantime, even if a large detail of soldiers must be set apart to secure this end. I know you will excuse my many words and earnestness of plea, and understand that I have thought this letter might be my small contribution toward setting such a work in motion. May "every stone do its share of the upbuilding." Perhaps many other avenues of work seem closed to us that we may help to open this new way. Into your hands I commit this sacred interest.

Surely the case could not be more emphatically put than by the pen of one whose heart has been well-nigh broken, and whose home darkened by the presence of a morally incapable son. She makes an admirable point about getting legal permission. This would avoid all difficulties in the courts, and the institution should be, to our minds, under the care of the state. But if this cannot be done, let us endeavor to secure such a law. Many legislatures are now in session, and we urge white-ribboners to memorialize them on this subject, that we may know what the possibilities and difficulties of this enterprise are going to be. If we could make this movement legal, there are so many who would desire to patronize an institution promising to give to their homes the relief contemplated, and to their loved ones immunity from temptation, and the possibility of a rehabilitated manhood, that private homes would speedily be built. If we could but have one in Chicago, as an object-lesson to the whole world, when the Columbian Exposition is convened, it would mean more to the happiness and moral elevation of all our people, than we can by any possibility estimate. Will not white-ribboners think and pray about this subject, and set at work in their usual practical fashion to see what can be done?

A LETTER WORTH PRESERVING.

An interesting thing occurred at the Boston Convention which should have been reported earlier. Our good friend, Mrs. Joseph Cook, wrote the distinguished Rev. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, founder of Robert College, Constantinople, and perhaps as celebrated a missionary as has ever gone out from this country,—asking him to attend our National Convention. The doctor is in his eighty-third year, but is still doing grand service for the missionary board, and Mrs. Cook knew that many people would be delighted to see him among the veterans presented at Tremont Temple. He replied that he "had endeavored to get into the hall at the time of the annual address on Friday morning, but instead had to content himself with a seat on the stairs of Park Street Church, where an overflow meeting was in progress." Later he worked his way into Tremont Temple and "had standing room in one of the galleries where, although he could not hear, he felt repaid by seeing one of the greatest sights of the century." An urgent invitation was sent him to be presented to the audience the next day, whereupon he sent the following characteristic note:

LEXINGTON, MASS., Nov. 17, 1891.

MY DEAR MRS. COOK:—It grieves me to the heart not to comply with the request of two ladies who stand supreme in my regard (except the exception that is always excepted) but I should never respect myself again did I allow myself to be presented to such an audience as something worth looking at. Your president could only say with truth, "Ladies, here is an old, worn-out, superannuated missionary who has attempted a number of good things in this world, but for want of sufficient pluck, faith and force has brought nothing to a conclusion. Ladies, he is eighty-two years old. Let us salute him on his way to a better land and better service." This would all be kind and true, but not worth taking up the time of the great Convention. Further, although my back is pretty well, please consider it so much shaken by a recent railroad experience that it would be imprudent to subject myself to a far greater peril. Pray give to all the ladies the assurance of my affectionate admiration. May infinite wisdom and love guide and support them!

Very sincerely yours,
CYRUS HAMLIN.

JAMES G. BLAINE announces that his name will not go before the next Republican convention as a candidate for President. Nothing could be more explicit than this declaration, which we receive in good faith and for which we are sincerely glad, not because we regard him as the most formidable candidate that the Republicans could have chosen, for his long public career has made for him many enemies, and while his splendid talents have gained universal admiration, there are great groups of men and women in this country whose confidence this "brilliant and magnetic statesman" does not possess, but we are glad, because his attitude toward the prohibition question is one that no thoughtful Christian patriot could tolerate. Men whose nature it is to hurrah with the crowd might follow, but sober second thought has shown the Christian voters of this country in a constantly increasing number that a man whose life was spent in Maine, and who has declared prohibition to be its greatest blessing, yet who would take the position of making a revenue on the liquor traffic a perpetual source of income to the United States, who would deliberately decline to vote for prohibition when the crisis was on in his own state through constitutional amendment, and who would send out from the state department, at the request of brewers, circulars of information, the object of which was to spread the American liquor traffic throughout other countries, was not the man for whom the temperance voter could cast his ballot except by practically disavowing his own prayers. We wish that all the parties would put up temperance candidates, and as a natural sequence of this we are glad that at least one candidate who is not a temperance man has withdrawn his name; would that every other might follow this example! In writing this we do not undervalue the services of James G. Blaine to his country, nor begrudge the fair full fame that he enjoys, which we believe will grow and gather with the years, but we grieve for "the rift in the lute," and that as Daniel Webster's name, though it shines with glorious luster as a defender of the constitution, has less radiance than if he had stood by the reformers of an early day, so the "plumed knight" must evermore lower his crest in history because he was not true to prohibition.

ON February 1, in St. Paul, Minn., a W. C. T. U. was organized with one hundred and ten signatures to the pledge, and on suggestion of the senior editor of this paper it was named the Lady Henry Somerset W. C. T. U. Mrs. P. B. Groat, well known in Missouri and who is one of the best workers that state has produced, was elected to the presidency, and THE UNION SIGNAL predicts that that society will be heard from.

The Watch-Tower.

There is no phase of the woman question more notable than the rapidity with which the work of men and women is changing places. It is being admitted now that as dressmakers, cleaners of clothing, and cooks, men are unrivaled, while women are at a premium to-day as clerks, saleswomen, amanuenses, telegraphers, designers, etc. The fact that there is no sex in work has wrought its way into the average brain, and when we become equally clear in our perception that there is no sex in the affairs of government, the world will take its longest stride on towards paradise regained.

***

Special strength and vigor, solidarity and force, are daily coming to the white-ribbon cause from our having but one name, one badge, one hour of prayer, one constitution, one great petition, one plan of work, one prayer of faith and consecration.

***

The following letter from the son of Bishop Vincent, will be of interest to Chautauquans:

BUFFALO, January 28, 1892.

Permit me to say that the appointment of Mrs. E. H. Griffiths, of Rochester, N. Y., as the custodian of the Kellogg Cottage at Chautauqua, is in every way satisfactory to the management. We have long known Mrs. Griffiths, who is a loyal Chautauquan, and who will, we are assured, fill the position to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. We have planned to continue Mrs. Buell in charge of the temperance conferences, and have invited Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan, to speak.

GEORGE E. VINCENT.

***

Middlebury College, Vermont, has as its president Rev. Dr. Brainard, brother-in-law of our California W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. B. Sturtevant Peet. He is a lineal descendant of Daniel Brainard, of saintly memory. It was at Middlebury that Emma Willard founded her first school for girls; the historic old college graduated more ministers, and, besides the first missionary, has sent out more missionaries than any other college in the world, according to the number of its graduates, and has within a few years opened its doors to women. There are now several young ladies in college who are carrying off the honors, as they seem to have a knack of doing wherever admitted. An effort is now being made to endow an Emma Willard scholarship for the benefit of young women. This means much to the girls of Vermont.

***

Mrs. Josephine Butler, of England, has agreed to stand at the head of the purity work in the World's W. C. T. U., and Miss Robinson, a noted specialist in work among soldiers will take that position in relation to the same society, Miss Agnes Weston having already signified her willingness, in response to a request that she should stand at the head of World's work among the sailors.

***

Miss Parvenu, pointing out in the Vatican Gallery the most famous statues: — "There's the dying Gladiolus and Appollo with the bevelled ear."

***

Lord Westbury was conferring with a committee of parliament as to which was better, a stone or wooden pavement. He said he preferred the latter, as to furnish it all the committee would have to do would be "to get their heads together."

***

A London paper has been gathering in answers to the question, "What is a baby, anyway?" and has just awarded a prize to the best expression. Here are some of the brightest answers:

"Father's rival in mother's love."

"The magic soul by which the gods transform a house into a home."

"A mite of a thing that requires a mighty lot of attention."

"A native of all countries who speaks the language of none."

"A pleasure to two, a nuisance to every other body and a necessity to the world."

"A crying evil that you only aggravate by putting down."

***

We believe it would be well to have illustrated in the beautiful women's building of the Columbian Exposition the development of woman's home from its most primitive form to its most magnificent, with models to furnish illustrations also, and in a similar manner to illustrate the development of woman's industry from the time when wheat cakes were patted out on stones to bake, and when "two women were grinding at the mill," up to the present magnificent development of machinery for cooking and other purposes. In the illustration of homes, "the dug-out with its mud lid on," as a child once called its roof, would be included. The great law of evolution could thus be shown in scores of ways, if our ingenious women would undertake the study. ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

WEST AFRICA'S WRONG.

It may interest your readers to know that there is a little sisterhood over here that comes within the compass of the "white ribbon band."

Our society numbers thirty-nine active and fourteen honorary members. Thirty of the former are native women, who, but a few years ago, were kneeling before "devil houses" or paying tribute to the "Bundah," the great secret society for the women.

While we have, in our membership, a few who are not the "true blue," yet we have some workers who would cause many an American woman to blush for shame.

To hear these poor women tell what struggles they must encounter, what obstacles they must meet when out trying to teach the people is indeed most pathetic. Some of them cannot speak a word of English and must talk through an interpreter; others speak very brokenly indeed, and yet God hears and helps them wonderfully.

Oh! the sin, the awful sin Christian nations are committing by sending intoxicating liquors to our shores! Heathenism is awful but when coupled with drunkenness, the scene is too black for any portrayal. We can only raise our eyes to heaven and cry, "how long, oh! how long?"

When will we arise in the strength of the Lord, and with the voice of one man say this accursed traffic shall cease?

How long shall the blood of our brethren cry unto us and be not avenged?

Talk about the evangelization of the world in this century!! The world will never be evangelized so long as this death-dealing liquid is manufactured and sold by Christian (?) nations and shipped by the millions of gallons to heathen shores.

Oh, brothers! in the name of manhood, in the name of common sense and justice, in the name of God, arise in your might and put down this atrocious evil.

May God give us sight and sense to see our duty and then to do it "In His name."

M. ELLA SCHENCK.

Rotufunk, W. Africa.

TWO GOOD INVESTORS.

After reading Mrs. Leavitt's appeal for funds to carry on the work of the World's W. C. T. U., I am reminded of a little incident in connection with her work in Burmah. When gathering our free-will offering for her, my Burman girl came to me and said, "I want to give this to help Mamma Leavitt to preach temperance," handing me a sum equal to a fifth of her wages for the month, about a dollar and a quarter in American money. I hesitated about taking it.

"Why, how can you afford to give this, little one? You told me you needed money for food for the family before the month closed," I asked her, and she answered brightly, "Yes, but this is the Lord's money and has nothing to do with that." Putting aside the portion for the Lord monthly enabled her to have a share in many interests besides the weekly church offering.

This Burman sister has felt the heavy curse of intemperance blighting her home, depriving her of a father's love and protection, and a brother's assistance in caring for the younger members of the family. She welcomed any messenger who should be the means of rousing her people to a sense of their danger, and felt the Lord would approve the giving of His money for such a purpose.

Surely there is much of "the Lord's money" waiting to be put at interest, and can it yield a higher rate than in this work? Some say this is not a work which appeals directly to them—they have never had the evil brought home to them. Let me quote the words of a friend, a widow, who had successfully brought up three sons.

An acquaintance said to her, "Why should you be so interested in temperance, your sons are all they should be."

"For that very reason," she replied, "I should expect a judgment from the Lord if I were not doing all in my power as a thank-offering."

R. W. RANNEY.

Stoke Newington, Eng.

FORWARD MOVEMENTS IN HOLLAND.

At last, after thirty years constant labor, I found it possible to start a weekly, Christian, total abstinence paper. With a yet almost general aversion against our principle among the women of all classes and among members of all denominations, it was very difficult to find a publisher having the faith and the zeal to be my helper. God's providence did help me meet such a Christian and the paper is started.

We copied the emblem, the world with the band, "For God, Home and Fatherland," and called the paper "The Struggle of the World" or "The World's War." I don't know an exact English equivalent of the Dutch. The first piece is the Petition of the W. C. T. U. to all governments with a recommendation of my friend, M. M. Scholten, a former teacher and the only lady that acts as a public speaker for our cause; in the second article, Tryphena tells what has already been done by women and the value of their work; the third, "There are Bands of Ribbon White;" fourth, "A Word to Soldiers;" fifth, "The Dangerous Abyss;" sixth, "The Origin and History of our Dutch Union;" seventh, "Chronology of the General Work since John Wesley;" eighth, "Be Followers of Good Examples;" ninth, "A Word of Miss Scholten on behalf of the Paper;" tenth, "A Word on 'Does Prohibition Prohibit?'" eleventh, "A Battle Song;" twelfth, "Do You Hear the Cry of the Sufferers?" thirteenth, a temperance story; fourteenth, the paper recommended.

As the paper appears to-day on the anniversary of the feast of the relief and disengagement of Leyden from the beleaguering of the Spaniards, we sell it in Leyden in orange covers with an appropriate song for the day and the portrait of our young queen.

From our monthly paper The Voice of Charity you will learn that we number thirty-two unions in the land, and also that hitherto I have the lion's part in the work. Very few of our members read on the question and so remain strangers to the general work. Happily though old and weak, the Lord sustains me, and in His time, He will multiply the real workers for our good cause.

The visit of Mrs. Leavitt to us was not so productive, because of her coming in June when meetings are almost impossible; she, moreover, being ill. But at least it moved me to do the utmost for a weekly paper, principally to stir our ladies and ask their coöperation. A visit in winter time by one of the English ladies might prove a success.

The large Street Almanach is prepared by the secretary of the Temperance Mission Hall (the King William's House), in Amsterdam. In one of the poorer streets in the town it has been a blessing to hundreds. Besides religious and temperance meetings, we have two infant schools with 400 children, and a large school in the neighborhood for those leaving the infant schools. There are also sewing, knitting and singing classes, and Sunday-schools with 1,000 children. In all about 2,400 children are influenced by the work. Unhappily none of the older members in Amsterdam was or is a total abstainer, so the many have later to meet the drinking customs.

It is uphill work, but the Lord blesses us, and we look on it as His work and not our own. The members, etc., like their glass of lighter wines, and the ladies the champagne, egg flip, sweet liquors, etc.

Our weekly paper will be more for our working classes, and so short temperance tales and anecdotes must spice it—even the other classes like these and they are a help to speakers—so if you can help us with smaller books of this kind they will be most welcome.

Will not the Dutch teetotalers in America be subscribers to our paper? One dollar and twelve cents is not so very much.

I am very willing to take one or two thousand on the new loan Temple Trust Bond, but how to get and how to pay these? Has Mr. H. J. Speer, banker, connections in this country? Have you not colored engravings of the Temple? For our people who are not accustomed to such high edifices the black looks so much like a state prison, many of which now have an outward palace form. The color of the different materials will very much beautify the appearance.

In our National League ladies are welcome as delegates and speakers. In our William's House, Miss Mary von der Goer is the most active member of our committee. Every fortnight she visits 100 gin saloons in the poor neighborhood, and has rescued large numbers.

C. S. ADAMA VON SCHELTEMA.

Arnheim, Holland,

REPORT OF THE VICTORIAN CONVENTION.

The fourth annual convention of the Victorian W. C. T. U. opened most auspiciously with a public meeting in the Congregational Church the evening of November 23, the Premier of the colony presiding, speaking earnestly for temperance and the enfranchisement of woman. The printed report of the secretary was circulated among the audience and the treasurer's report presented; appropriate songs and the congress of nations, rendered by eleven Y's, added to the pleasure of the entertainment. The following resolutions were ably moved and unanimously carried:

1. That this meeting expresses its conviction that, in addition to moral suasion, there is great need for further legislation; that we welcome and help on any measure that will tend to the suppression of intemperance, such as the abolition of grocers' and wine licenses, bringing the clubs where drink is found under the same restrictions as licensed houses, and that we keep before us, as the goal at which we aim, prohibition of the liquor traffic.
2. Believing it to be our duty to protect our homes and our loved ones from intemperance and other evils, and feeling that we cannot hope successfully to do this unless our power be felt at the ballot-box, we, maintaining that woman has equal rights with man in this respect, resolve that we do not cease to agitate until the right is allowed us of recording our votes in the interests of home and country, of justice and purity. That for this end we use our influence at the coming elections to send men into Parliament whom we can trust as pledged to our principles.

Rev. David Jones, who has just returned to the colony after an absence of several years, said he took a special interest in the W. C. T. U. because he attended a convention of the organization, for the first time in Philadelphia in 1886. There he was privileged to meet that ideal president, Frances E. Willard, and by her was thoroughly converted to the idea that women had not yet taken their proper position in public life. The church was filled, a larger attendance at this opening meeting than on any previous occasion and the collection amounted to $250.

During the sessions of the three succeeding days, reports of the work of the following departments were received and discussed: Unfermented wine, which is being largely used in the churches; white cross and white shield (since the convention the Victorian Parliament passed the bill, December 17, raising the age of protection for girls from twelve to sixteen years, as it is in England and South Australia); woman suffrage, in which the unions are actively working (the introduction of the bill for granting equal electoral privileges to women has made the question a political one, and a prominent issue in the near election); peace and arbitration, the interest in which is spreading (mothers are asking and teaching a better than military glory for their sons; one evening of the convention was devoted to a dissolving view lecture, "War as It Is"); evangelistic work (in addition to the superintendent the Misses Vincent and Cumming are engaged throughout the colony, reviving old unions and preparing the way for new ones); drawing-room meetings have been successfully undertaken; scientific temperance instruction (the text-book for use in schools has just been completed; in South Australia pledge cards are placed in the hands of teachers and diagrams used, showing the effect of strong drink on the human organs); press department (most of the unions are supplying local papers with temperance matter); prison and lockup work shows much good from the efforts of Mrs. Swinborne, who has labored for years in the Elizabeth Fry Retreat; hospital and sick visiting; the Working Women's Home in the city and the Home of Rest at the seaside, opened the past year, are proof of the practical help provided for women; our Girls' Coffee Rooms, where our headquarters prove all too small. The W. C. T. U. of Victoria must soon seek a permanent home, headquarters or temple from which to carry on the ever-growing work.

Report of L. T. L. shows increased interest and importance attached to the teaching of the young. A model lesson with blackboard exercise gave practical methods. One evening was devoted to the little ones, when a beautiful banner, just brought out from England by their superintendent, Mrs. Halsey, was unfurled.

The Y's who have felt deeply the loss of their superintendent, Mrs. Thurgood (returned to the states) report encouraging growth. They also occupied an evening, rendered the more happy and interesting by the unexpected arrival of Miss Ackerman with cheering messages from the Y's in other colonies. She was present during the remaining sessions, and particularly urged the World's Petition. Her efforts have led to the formation of many new unions. The secretary, Mrs. Kirk, reported sixty-eight unions and twenty-eight Y's, an increase since last year of twenty-seven W's and fifteen Y's. The membership is 3,250, honorary members, 338.

Deputations were received from the Victorian Alliance and National Scripture Education League, also a kindly greeting from the Y. M. C. A., offering the use of their rooms. The acting president, Mrs. McLean, in her able and earnest address, gave, as watchword for the coming year, "Strengthen thy stakes," Isa. 54:2. Loving mention and earnest petition for the absent president, Mrs. Love, were coupled with most kind appreciation of the acting president's sincere and faithful efforts.

CATHARINE P. WALLACE.

Melbourne, Australia.

News from the Field.

MINNESOTA.

LADY SOMERSET AND MISS WILLARD IN MINNEAPOLIS.

The past week has been a notable one in temperance agitation in this city. It began before the coming of the two ladies, our honored Leader, and England's gracious daughter, and lasted after their departure, but centered in them. On Thursday evening John G. Woolley spoke at the Franklin Avenue M. E. Church on the occasion of the weekly prayer-meeting. "I would rather," he said, "take my chances of entering heaven if I staggered up to its gates drunk, than if I went with the guilt of licensing the system upon my conscience." Plain words those, to an audience largely composed of believers in high license as a necessary evil.

On Friday evening, Miss Willard and Lady Somerset spoke at the Swedish Tabernacle, capable of holding 2,000, and yet long before time to open the doors, a crowd was waiting to be admitted, so fearful were the people that they could not get seats. When the speakers arrived they were greeted with great applause. Mr. Woolley opened the exercises in a few sentences, Miss Gordon read from the Scripture, and Rev. Mr. Skogsbergh, pastor of the church, led in prayer. The world-wideness of the temperance movement was well brought out by those upon the platform. There sat Miss Willard and Mr. Woolley, representative Americans, Lady Somerset, of Old England, and Mr. Skogsbergh, whose countenance betokened the blood of the Northmen of Scandinavia.

Mr. Woolley introduced Miss Willard who alluded to Lady Somerset and her work in England, and then presented her to the audience. As she stood there before the people, simply clad, calm and earnest, the words most fittingly describing her, seemed to be "gracious and gentle." Her voice in itself has a wonderful power, so earnest in its pleading, so laden with strong desire to aid this sin-sick and sorrow-laden world of ours. For nearly an hour the audience listened as she told them of the women of England, how the liquor traffic has degraded them and held many of them in bondage. Then in regard to the work in our own country, its importance, she urged the women before her to lend their aid.

On Saturday evening, the ladies spoke in the People's church of St. Paul, and returning to Minneapolis spoke at two meetings Sunday afternoon. It had been announced that they would speak in Plymouth church, but before the hour arrived, it became evident that an overflow meeting would have to be held, for no sooner were the doors of Plymouth church opened than every seat was filled and the aisles crowded. The announcement was made that an overflow meeting would be held at Westminster, near by. All were so anxious to hear both speakers, however, that no one stirred until the assurance was given that both ladies would be heard in the overflow meeting which was then equally as well attended.

Mr. Woolley, Dr. Holman and others addressed those at Westminster until the coming of Miss Willard and Lady Somerset.

Surely the seed sown in the hearts of those hundreds of people must bear abundant harvest. "What was the best thing Lady Somerset said?" was asked of a young girl who heard her. "She quoted the Bible a great deal," was the significant answer. "It was pure gospel temperance," said a young man, alluding to Mr. Woolley's remarks. When the people, especially the young people, begin to realize that the Bible and gospel temperance are at the foundation of our work, the prejudice existing in the minds of many against the W. C. T. U. will vanish.

It was a subject of great regret that Lady Somerset and Miss Willard could not remain over until Tuesday to attend the banquet on Monday evening, given by the W. C. T. U. to the central committee of the state Prohibition party, which met in this city on Monday to arrange for the state convention.

The banquet was given in the dining-rooms of the Central Union Coffee House, the tables in all three spacious rooms being surrounded by Prohibitionists and their friends. The air of festivity which prevailed proved that a prohibition banquet can be just as merry, enjoyable and successful as any other. After the inner man had been satisfied, the "feast of reason" began with the toasts. Bishop Fitzgerald, of the M. E. church, an ardent Prohibitionist, was toast-master.

The first toast, "Shall we Nationalize the American Saloon?" was responded to by Robert Taylor, who logically and clearly proved that the national government had no right to do any such thing.

"The Laboring Classes and the Saloons" was treated by Prof. Innis, of Hamline University, who presented some startling statistics.

"The Thing that is to be done" called forth a witty response from Father Mahony, of St. Paul.

Mrs. Amanda Webber, state superintendent of work among lumbermen, responded to the toast, "The women are with us in the struggle against the saloon."

Mr. M. O. Nelson, of Wisconsin, answered for "The Prohibition Editors." Belonging to that fraternity himself, Mr. Nelson spoke from experience, and gave some laughable instances of what such an editor may or may not do and be.

Rev. George F. Wells then read a letter from Miss Willard to the state central committee. He also spoke of the need of a party paper in the state, and said that editors had been found to conduct such a one, if the friends of the cause would give it financial support. A goodly number pledged themselves, as rapidly as names could be taken, to help the matter along, and it is hoped to issue the first edition of the paper next month.

Dr. T. O. Holman and John G. Woolley made some remarks, and the banquet closed, having been one of the most enjoyable and successful things in the history of Minnesota temperance progress.

IN ST. PAUL.

The audience that gathered to hear Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard in St. Paul, Saturday evening, felt more than repaid, judging by the words heard here and there as the people were dispersing. The city papers have given excellent reports of the meeting, that of the Pioneer Press being especially good.

Another meeting was held in the First M. E. Church on Monday afternoon, Lady Somerset and Miss Willard addressing those interested in the W. C. T. U. work. This meeting was a success beyond anything ever held here. Though the day was wet and disagreeable as only a rainy day in winter can be, the church was full, and 110 put on the white ribbon. Thirty-five of these next day formed themselves into the Lady Somerset Union, making a nucleus round which the others will gather as W's or Y's. All told, there has not been for years, if ever, such an arousing in St. Paul upon the subject of W. C. T. U. work.

About two years ago Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball visited the little city of Rochester, and many heard her helpful talks on temperance work among the young, and signed her petition for quarterly temperance lessons in the Sabbath-schools. The Rochester union at a recent meeting adopted the following:

Believing that the unselfish, untiring and earnest efforts of Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball in securing after fourteen years of praying, working and memorializing, the Quarterly Temperance Lessons in the International series, beginning Sunday, January 17, deserves the gratitude of all W. C. T. U. workers,

Resolved, That we, the Rochester union, express to Miss Kimball our thanks and appreciation of her work, and our hope that the Sunday-schools of the world will reap great benefit from this temperance teaching.

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT.

Saturday afternoon Lady Somerset and Miss Willard and Miss Gordon spoke words of cheer and encouragement at the conference of unions, composed of the eighteen local unions of Minneapolis which hold meetings the last Saturday of every month at Coffee House Hall.

Sunday morning the service for the employés of the Coffee House was conducted by Mrs. Russell, and consisted of gospel hymns in Swedish and English, prayer and a Bible lesson by Mr. Woolley. Our honored guests were present; their gospel message touched the hearts with a desire to be more like the blessed Master, and the sweet spirit of the morning lessons seemed to pervade the hours of the entire day.

Sunday, January 31, may well be likened to the "great day of the feast." The prophecy of Mary T. Lathrap at the National Convention "What the nineteenth century has been for man the twentieth century will be for woman," seemed to be nearer fulfillment when two women were the magnets to attract so vast a multitude as to fill two of our largest and most conservative churches, while hundreds returned to their homes unable to obtain admittance.

The like of this magnificent demonstration in the interest of temperance is without a precedent in the history of Minneapolis. The occasion was the anniversary of John G. Woolley's birth into the kingdom of the Christ, four years before. The Masonic Quartette sang

"Saviour, more than life to me;"

Dr. Wells, pastor of Plymouth, read the 20th Psalm and offered prayer; Rev. Willis A. Hadley, pastor of Lyndale Congregational Church, conducted services at Westminster for the overflow meeting, which was addressed first by Mr. Woolley and later by Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard.

After the quartette sang "Launch away," Dr. McKaig, of Franklin M. E. Church, read greetings from absent friends. From Mr. Woolley's own pastor, Dr. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers, New York: "I love the man who founded Rest Island. May God bless all those who help John G. Woolley." From Joseph Cook: "My watchword to your meeting is: 'Greetings and Godspeed to gospel temperance and all its friends, and confusion to all its foes.'" Telegrams were read from Drs. Sample and Burrell, former pastors of Westminster, and Dr. W. T. Chase, of Philadelphia, former pastor of the First Baptist Church of Minneapolis.

Miss Willard was the first speaker. "It is delightful," she said, "to meet with so many kindly hearts, but with Mr. Woolley absent (at Westminster church) it is a sort of Sunday dramatic exhibition of Hamlet with Hamlet left out." After a few more pleasant words she read the following message to Mrs. Woolley at Boston, and asked all who set their character and seal to the telegram to say "aye." The chorus of "ayes" which followed was numberless and sincere. The same message was read at Westminster with a like result: "The congregation sends reverent and affectionate greetings to Mary Woolley and the boys. Read Joel 2:25; Luke 2:51. What hath God wrought."

Miss Willard added that she thought there could hardly be a happier woman in this great world to-day than the gentle, quiet Mary Woolley in Boston. Since it had been her privilege to know the family, she had called them in familiar language after the characters in Pilgrim's Progress. John Woolley was Christian, and the others were Christiana and the boys, all with their faces set toward the country Beautiful.

She also referred to the time when no women's voices were heard, but in these new, glad, tolerant days all is changed! The gospel temperance movement was the very keynote to which they marched forward, and it broadened and brightened and deepened with the signs of the times.

After the congregation had sung a familiar hymn, Dr. Wells introduced Lady Henry Somerset, who spoke as follows:

"As I heard just now the words of that beautiful hymn surging through this vast multitude, it seemed as though I was never present at any occasion when I was more glad to rejoice with those who do rejoice, over the birth of a soul which has helped so many other souls to find peace amid the cruel buffetings of this world. It is indeed good to rejoice with one who has come from the darkness of death into the glorious resurrection of life in Jesus Christ."

At Westminster, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard spoke with great earnestness and longer than at the first meeting. Mr. Woolley was the last speaker of the afternoon, moving many to tears as he pictured those dark days in Minneapolis. Referring to the generous collection he said: "Four years ago to-day not a man in this city would lend me ten cents; my gentle wife, God bless her, sat in the most wretched widowhood ever known, and not a door in this wide world would open to me." Even his wife had no door to open, for the mortgagee had taken possession of their home. It was a pitiful picture which he drew of himself as a drunkard.

As he stood in his regained manhood with the light of a redeemed soul shining out of his tear-dimmed eyes, he pleaded, "Oh, won't you take me into your prayers as I go to preach the gospel to fallen men? May God keep the shadow of the curse of drink out of every life here to-day."

This report would be incomplete without quoting the telegram of Mrs. Woolley to her husband: "Four happy, loving hearts praise God continually for this day; read John 3:1, 2; Ruth 2:12; Phil. 1:6."

At eventide "the Temperance Triangle" went to the barracks of the Salvation Army where they were no less willing to lift up the standard of the cross than in the conservative church edifice, having one faith, one hope, one purpose—to serve their Lord and Saviour.

MRS. E. J. M. NEWCOMB.
Minneapolis.

IDAHO ITEMS.

Our state organizer, Mrs. R. Mitchell, is now in Northern Idaho, where she has been very cordially received. She has organized a union at Lewiston and reorganized the one at Genesee.

The unions of Southern Idaho have received much help and encouragement from the lectures of Captain O. R. Van Etten, known as the "Dakota cyclone." He came asking for nothing but the free-will offerings of the people; he remained from three to five nights in each place, and from every union comes the report of large attendance and increasing interest until the close of the meetings. The lectures are full of solid arguments, also rendered very entertaining by anecdote and illustration; sometimes he is pathetic, at other times witty and intensely amusing.

We feel very grateful to Captain Van Etten for the help he has given the work in this field where public sentiment does not favor it and where he has succeeded so well, not only in reaching the people, but in presenting the most radical temperance ideas in such a way that they attracted the closest attention.

MARY E. MCGEE,
State Reporter, Nampa.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

ODDS AND ENDS.

It is a good plan to stop right in the midst of things occasionally to report what has been done, even if we do not see just how we are to crowd it in when every day, hour and minute is full to overflowing. A little reminder, however, from one higher in authority brings the fact to view that Southern California has not been heard from through its state reporter for ever so long. Time hurries on at so swift a gait that he keeps one out of breath nearly the whole time trying to keep up with him. Often he slips clear round the corner out of sight.

There are several signs of "moving on" in our section. One is the formation of a gospel temperance union in our churches in Los Angeles through the efforts of Mrs. L. L. Abbott. The object of the union is to educate the people on the temperance question and to be able to unite and concentrate Christian effort against the saloon, especially in all local affairs. Its plan is to form a central committee of representatives from the different churches. The W. C. T. U. of Los Angeles will have a representative upon the committee and be ready to unite with them in all forward movements. The churches, especially the pastors, are answering to this call with great enthusiasm. In the First Methodist Church, I hear the new pastor, Rev. Mr. Campbell from Ohio, proposes to make every fourth Thursday evening prayer meeting a special temperance meeting. Surely the air is full of temperance ozone.

In October, at a special meeting of our state executive committee, your correspondent was appointed state organizer for the year. It is a new departure for us to have an organizer from among our very own. We have always depended upon our National organizers to help us out along this line. The writer was chosen, perhaps, because they thought she hadn't very much to do. She accepted with a decided protest; but the little she has been about compels her to say that it has been a blessed experience, even if no one else has been helped very much, or the work pushed forward more than a fraction of an inch.

There are some few notes of the work which are interesting enough to report. The first visit was to Redlands, to help the union in a Sunday evening temperance meeting, in which all the churches united. In the note of invitation special stress was laid upon the word gospel. It must be strictly a gospel temperance meeting, the ministers were very particular upon this point. This was very well, for the gospel utters no uncertain sound upon a man's duty towards the saloon. The large proportion of men in the audience, two-thirds at least of whom were young men, was especially noticeable. On the way home, the Ontario union, which is full to overflowing with consecrated zeal, was visited.

The Y's, consisting mainly of school-girls, came together for an hour after school, in which Mrs. Ransom gave them a little motherly talk, while the new state organizer tried to show them a few of the opportunities young girls have to offer the "cup of loving service."

In the evening the union held a public meeting in the Methodist church.

A small union of thirteen members was organized at Vernondale (a suburb, we might say, of Los Angeles), and a little later, one at Wilmington, a small town in close proximity to San Pedro. Mrs. Phillips, "one of the faithful," with her good husband, who is a Prohibitionist from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, was at the train and we spent the whole day calling upon women whom he thought might be interested in the work, and invited them to a meeting to be held the following day—Sunday evening—in the Presbyterian church. We found nearly all ready to promise to attend the meeting and several willing to join the union, should one be organized.

A Saturday evening meeting was held at San Pedro; and on returning to Wilmington with Mrs. Davis, president of the San Pedro union. Sunday we started to the little "meeting house" with fear and trembling, not knowing whether we should even find the door unlocked and the church lighted. We carried matches ready to strike our own light if need be. Our missionary work the day before, however, had not fallen to the ground; the people came, "a remarkable audience" one lady said, for that village given over almost entirely to the saloon element. God was in our midst and gave us strength and courage to preside, introduce ourselves, and carry on the meeting from the introductory song service to the closing doxology without any breaks or discords. The next morning we organized a handful of women into a union. This little union has staying qualities because it has in it four women with a fixed purpose.

A Loyal Temperance Legion has been organized by Miss Phillips, superintendent; a public temperance meeting has been held; an entertainment of the L. T. L. is to be given very soon, and other work planned. The union is doing something, that is another reason why it will live.

The first two weeks of January were spent in Kern county. The next day after arriving, the teachers' institute was attended. The county superintendent of education had allowed at least one hour and a half upon the program to scientific temperance at the solicitation of the Bakersfield union. There were two very interesting and practical papers upon the subject presented, one by Miss Crusoe, one of the teachers. I was pleased to see that she wore the white ribbon; the other prepared by Mrs. Hull, county superintendent of scientific instruction of San Diego county. These were followed by a class exercise upon the subject given to the little folks.

The union felt that they had achieved quite a victory, for the year before they not only failed to secure any hearing of the subject, but had received a public insult from Mr. Anderson, state superintendent of public instruction. He stood in the presence of the corps of teachers of Kern county and visitors in attendance at the institute, and said that there was no such law in the state of California as a scientific temperance instruction law; that he would take a drink when he wanted to and no one had any right to interfere; that if he wanted to use tobacco, he would use it; "Indeed," said he, "I am talking to you now with a quid of tobacco in my mouth." Such boorish remarks from one holding the highest position in educational matters the state can offer, caused great indignation and disgust, and reacted in favor of the union, and its efforts to secure the proper recognition of the law.

Kern county had no unions until a year ago, when Mrs. Bullock organized three. I visited there and talked over the work with them, organized a new union at Sumner and called a county convention, which met in Bakersfield for the purpose of organizing the county. An all-day meeting was held, ending with a platform meeting in the evening. After the half hour of consecration service in the morning, which was a spiritual uplift to all present, the time was occupied with the organization of the county. Mrs. S. S. Hunter, formerly district president from Illinois, was the convention's choice for president. In the afternoon the principal topics presented were reports of work from the local unions; an interesting talk on department work by Mrs. McLeod, lately from Michigan, where she had been county president; a discussion of Loyal Temperance Legion work, opened by Mrs. Anderson, of Delano; a paper on mothers' meetings by Mrs. Hunter, followed by a Bible reading closely related to the subject. The topics were all so ably presented, and the discussions entered into so heartily, that the afternoon slipped by all too soon.

In the evening, after a very able paper on "Our Influence," by Miss Titus, of Delano, designed especially for the young people, the meeting was given over to the ministers, four in number, who gave us serious and humorous, complimentary and critical remarks—the latter lest we get to thinking too much of ourselves. This convention will be one of the red-letter days. Kern county promises much for the future of our work there. The unions have stood the test of many trials; they have received a fresh impetus, and the women, so many of them, are women who have heard the call of the Master to the work, and have responded in fullest measure, "Here am I."

MARY E. GARBUTT,
State Reporter, Los Angeles.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS LUCIA KIMBALL has been appointed a member of the auxiliary committee on temperance of the Woman's Board of the World's Fair.

MRS. MINNIE KEELER GOAD, a young woman of Appleton City, Mo., was admitted to the bar January 19. She is the second woman lawyer in her state, Miss Phœbe Couzens leading the list.

THE Central union of Los Angeles gave a reception to Miss Mary Allen West and Dr. Mary Wood Allen, Friday afternoon, January 29, at the residence of Mrs. Crow. Over four hundred invitations were issued.

MISS NETTIE HOUGHTON'S territory, as an acceptable speaker and worker for the Chicago W. C. T. U. Anchorage, extends as far as she has time and strength to go, since friendless girls from all parts of the United States find shelter there.

BY a mistake, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge was announced in the Lecture Bureau column as available for Pennsylvania, during March; this should have read May. She can also give June to that state. Any union desiring her services will please apply at once to the Woman's Lecture Bureau, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, that a consecutive route may be made.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

The hospital is controlled by a board of fifteen elected by the National Temperance Hospital Association. This board of managers select a board of physicians. The hospital is open to any physician on this board, whenever he desires to enter a patient and there is room. Any patient can have his choice of physician.

The finances of the hospital are beginning to "look up," and the wish is that they would have a still greater upward tendency. The hospital is out of debt. The contributions in money received are small and national assistance is yet to come. But we feel sure it will come.

This institution is working to benefit humanity. It has demonstrated that alcoholic medication can be dispensed with in the treatment of diseases. It is educational in its aim, and expects to have an increasing influence on the practice of medicine. The doors of temperance have always opened to admit any one who sought admission. For her teachings are not for any one class or set of individuals, but for all humanity. The hospital does not anticipate leaving the beaten track of the principle she is demonstrating.

The board has not yet selected a site for our new building, but hopes to be able to determine upon one soon. Some very able arguments have been presented regarding the educational advantages derived from locating on the West Side. In some other particulars more favorable locations can be secured in other parts of the city.

This is an age of combinations. Organizations practice consistency in that combinations of like teachings and beliefs are formed. Only such combines can consistently meet the world and each other, and especially is this true when a great principle is being proven and the world is prejudiced against it. The hospital has had varied experiences, but these have only given strength, and today it feels more positive as to what can be done in the treatment of disease without the use of alcoholics.

Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, state president of Indiana's W. C. T. U., gave a very interesting lecture on Clara Barton to the nurses of the Clara Barton Training School at the hospital, January 28. Mrs. Nichols is a very pleasant speaker, and her lecture was listened to with interest and attention.

Arrangements have been made to hold religious exercises at the hospital on Sunday afternoons from three to four o'clock.

A movement is on foot to endow a bed for the working girls and the poor children at the hospital. Contributions both great and small will be gladly received by Mrs. Hornby, No. 3411 Cottage Grove Ave., or Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, 539 West Adams street, Chicago. It is hoped the working girls will contribute their mite, for in what one assists in supporting, he naturally has a feeling of ownership.

All contributions in money will be received by Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, treasurer, 539 West Adams street. All donations of fruit should be sent to Mrs. Sarah M. Hornby, No. 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue.

ELLA SNYDER, Sec.

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTESTS.

Medal contest workers everywhere are particularly requested to notice the following terms for winning the Demorest medals, and on inside cover of recitation books; no other circulars or terms are now in use: All silver medal contestants who have not won a medal, if they have had one trial, may have two more; if they have had two trials, may have one more, making "three trials for silver medal." Gold medal contestants who have not won the first gold medal, if they have had one trial, may have one more trial, making "two trials for first gold medal."

Three disinterested persons of intelligence are to be chosen to act as judges, for whom suitable blanks will be furnished. Judges are advised to avoid a tie, as but one medal can be presented at a contest.

A competing class shall consist of not less than six nor more than ten persons.

When not less than six young persons of either sex, between the ages of twelve and twenty-five, shall recite before an audience selections taken from either of the three volumes, "From Contest to Conquest," the one adjudged to have made the best recitation will be awarded a silver medal in satin-lined case.

When not less than six of the silver medals are secured by as many contestants, the winners will be entitled to compete for a gold medal.

When eight or more have won gold medals they may compete for a grand gold medal.

When eight or more have won grand gold medals, the holders may compete for a handsome gold medal studded with diamonds.

On these terms the medals will be presented by W. Jennings Demorest, free of expense.

No one having won a medal will be allowed to compete again for the same kind of medal. Three trials will be allowed to each speaker for the silver medal, two trials for the first gold medal, but only one trial for a grand gold or a diamond medal. No one can receive the higher prize until the lower ones are secured. At every contest a new piece must be recited.

Not less than the required number will be entitled to speak for any of the medals. If any members of the class are absent, let those who are ready recite, and a different prize be given. Postpone the contest for the medal until the entire class shall be prepared. Contests in any church or hall must be held not less than thirty days apart. The recitations are to be taken exclusively from the books prepared for this purpose, which can be procured at this office and of state superintendents, at ten cents each, postpaid.

To avoid confusion and dissatisfaction, our friends will please remember that these rules are imperative and must be enforced. No second medal will be sent until the certificate accompanying the first has been filled and returned to the superintendent. When the request for a medal is sent, date of contest is required, and the medal will be forwarded. Give date far enough in advance for the medal to reach its destination in time to be presented on the evening of the contest.

Admission tickets may be sold or a collection taken. All money above expenses may be used in local prohibition work.

The contests are designed to be educational, and it is requested that the prose matter contained in the books be given the preference for the competitions.

Pastors, parents, teachers, officers and members of the W. C. T. U. and I. O. G. T., leaders of temperance and religious organizations, schools, colleges and all others interested, are invited to encourage the young people under their direction or control to learn the pieces and enter the contests.

N. B.—All parties interested in the work are requested to read this entire circular before introducing the matter to contestants. When ordering books or medals, write your name plainly, also full address.

Circulars, recitations and medals can be obtained on application to

MRS. CHARLOTTE F. WOODBURY, Gen'l Supt.,
10 East 14th Street, New York City.

Official Communications.

CONCERNING WORLD'S PETITION.

DEAR CO-LABORERS:—Under but one condition would you listen, were I to ask you to pay no heed to a request of our well-beloved president. Only when she is wrong and it can be easily proven, would I dare to ask you to do so, but she has committed so palpable an error in the last sentence of the "President's Column," on page 5 of THE UNION SIGNAL of February 4, that I am impelled to beg you to do no such thing. Never, never send signed Petitions to me, but always to Miss Alice Briggs, office secretary World's W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill.; but if you will send to me for PETITION BLANKS and instruction for their circulation, I will be most happy to fill your order; and if after reading this, you will turn to page 12, in the department of "Official Communications" you will find such instruction. Petition blanks are in constant demand, far in advance of anything known before the Boston Convention and we think "the more the merrier," provided the number of signed Petitions received by Miss Briggs corresponds with the number of blanks sent out from this office.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
Secretary World's W. C. T. U.

Our Library Table.

CURRENT LITERATURE for February contains as always, many choice selections. Among the more striking are the prefaces to J. F. Nisbet's, "The Insanity of Genius," the two articles giving a comprehensive review of a startling book. The keynote of the book is struck in the following sentence: "Genius is not lunacy; it is insight, power and energy in excess of the normal allowance, and my contention is that such great gifts, however desirable in themselves, are not obtained as a rule, without some disturbance of the healthy equilibrium of the brain and nervous system."

In the department of "Prattle of the Children," are some exquisite bits of child poetry, from which we cull one verse on the old bed-time prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep":

"And somehow, with that little prayer,
And that sweet treble in my ears.
My thought goes back to distant years
And lingers with a dear one there;
And as I hear the child's 'Amen,'
My mother's faith comes back to me;
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again."

Current Literature Publishing Co., New York, 30 West 23d street. $3 per year.

DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE furnishes miscellaneous reading for the leisure hours of the family circle. Stories, sketches and poems, valuable hints on domestic lines of activity, and beautiful illustrations throughout, make the February number of this magazine attractive in every way. W. Jennings Demorest, 15 E. 14th street, New York City. $2 per year.

THE most important Roman archæological discovery of the past twenty-five years is described by Rodolfo Lanciani in the ATLANTIC MONTHLY for February. The title of his paper is the Pageant at Rome in the Year 17 B. C. French collegiate study for girls is described by Miss Henrietta Channing Dana in a paper called "What French Girls Study." Miss Dana draws a comparison, doubtless a just one, between the French and American school-girl:

"In my experience of private schools in both countries, it has seemed to me that the French girl is more simple and childlike on the one hand, and more serious-minded, more capable of sustained work and thought, on the other, than the average American girl of the same age. From the fact of not having frivolous amusements and sentimental vagaries to disturb her mind and work on her nerves, and being better disciplined from infancy to obedience, regularity and self-control, she throws her youthful energy and enthusiasm more wholly into the interests of her school work and family life; and as a consequence she is less nervous than her American sister, less subject to backaches and headaches, works with less fatigue, is more active and merry at play, more simple in her tastes, more easily amused and contented with every-day life and labors, and perhaps more frank, loyal, and affectionate in her family relations and school friendships. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. $4 yearly.

OUR CLERK FROM BARKTON, by Edward A. Rand, is one of the Look Ahead series. Like all of Mr. Rand's stories, this is healthy in tone, and in other ways just the kind of a book to put into the hands of a boy or young man. Carleton, the clerk from Barkton, goes, when a boy of sixteen, from his country home to New York, and this book tells what befell him there. He had plenty of adventures to keep boy readers interested, and through them all, lived up to his mother's parting injunction, "I want you to be good, Carleton, whether you get rich or not."

Published by Thomas Whittaker, Bible House, New York. For sale by A. C. McClurg & Company, Chicago. Price, $1.25.

LIFE OF WILLIAM TECUMSEH SHERMAN, by W. Fletcher Johnson, published by Hubbard Bros., Philadelphia.

Major-General O. O. Howard writes the introductory chapter, and in it gives this very just critique of the book: "The title of this work is hardly a fair index to the contents. 'The Life of General Sherman,' written with any reasonable detail . . . could not be contained in any three volumes of this size. The work, so far as the labor of the author is concerned is eclectic—mainly a compendium. There are beautiful sketches, choice pictorial presentations of Sherman and his environments from childhood to age. Some chapters have been furnished by war editorials and the writings of field correspondents which the author must have collected and carefully preserved. Many of these are life-like, and bear the impress and the inspiration of the exciting events amid which they were composed. . . . The author appears to have done exceedingly well, and has herein furnished a choice entertainment to his readers."

THE NEW WOMANHOOD, by J. C. Fernald, with an introduction by Marion Harland, will be thoroughly appreciated by those who believe in the truest type of womanhood. A quotation from the introduction, which we heartily indorse, will best bespeak the merits of the work:

"THE NEW WOMANHOOD takes high ground upon this lofty plane of belief and conscience in affirming and maintaining that it is her solemn duty to do that which she can perform best of all living creatures. It is a man who writes, yet no author of her own sex has a nobler ideal of her character, her capabilities and the destiny she may achieve. From the first to the last line there is not a touch of prejudice, or of the flippant flattery with which the average masculine critic greets woman's efforts to fill the generous sphere to which an enlightened age has called her." D. Lothrop Co., Boston.

THE MEMORIAL SKETCH OF REV. A. KENYON gives a brief history of the life of one who labored faithfully in the Lord's vineyard, upholding without faltering the banner of temperance. Besides the sketch, the book contains several sermons and hymns written by the Rev. Kenyon. Compiled by Mrs. A. B. Kenyon, Chicago, Ill.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

Van Houten's Cocoa. The original, most soluble.

Special Offer to Ladies.—If you secure a Life Insurance policy in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association before January 1st, you pay no membership fee. Write at once for particulars. Geo E Godward, Sec'y, 187 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

WANTED.—Good, Christian men and women to sell lots in the choicest Temperance suburb of Chicago.
Address "LAND OWNER,"
Care Publisher of this Paper.

How to Make $500

Is told in the advertisement of Peter Henderson & Co. in another column. Every one knows of the great seed house of Peter Henderson & Co., of New York City, whose magnificent catalogue of "Everything for the Garden" is anxiously awaited each year by every lover of flowers. Their special offer of $500 is open to all, and affords an opportunity to combine the pleasure of gardening with profit.

ONE OF THE FINEST.

Here is one of the many letters the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railway is constantly receiving in commendation of its superior facilities in the way of brand new coaches and sleeping-car accommodations:

"What you said about the cars on your road was true. They were the finest I saw on my way here, and the most roomy and comfortable. Should I have occasion to travel east, I shall try to use your part of the road, and shall recommend it to others."

It will be remembered this line is the only line in the west running the celebrated vestibuled compartment Pullman sleeping-cars, in which the price for exclusive use of a drawing-room is no more than that of a section in the ordinary sleeping-car. The dining-car service is beyond comparison and its express trains are run on the fastest schedules.

PERFECTION

KEEPS FLOUR PERFECTLY DRY AND FREE FROM DIRT VERMIN ETC.

COMBINES BIN SIFTER PAN & SCOOP. AERATES AND PRESERVES FLOUR FROM MOLD

FLOUR BIN AND SIEVE

Avoids the great inconvenience of reaching into a barrel or sack. No scattering. Saves time and waste. Once tried you would not be without it for many times its cost. Send for circular.

Prices to hold { 25 lbs. $2.50 / 50 lbs. $3.00 / 100 lbs. $4.00 }

Your dealer sells them or ought to. If he does not please write to us.

SHERMAN & BUTLER, Manufacturers, 25-28 W. Lake Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

U "WHAT I EAT, THAT I AM." U

GRANULA

AN INCOMPARABLE FOOD

Discovered by JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D., Founder of the Famous

DANSVILLE SANATORIUM,

Being the life-giving principle of WHEAT. Easily digested; readily assimilated by all. "A universal favorite wherever known."

Trial Package 36 cents, by mail postpaid. Send for our Pamphlet (free).

GRANULA MFG. CO.
DANSVILLE, N.Y.

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. Mrs. G. W. C., of Detroit, Mich., writes: "Tokology treatment, under God, saved my life in childbirth, and gave me a strong, healthy baby girl. I would like to place a copy of your book in the hands of every woman in the land." Price prepaid $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO. 277 Madison-st. Chicago

DRUNKENNESS cured by using BOSTON DRUG. Absolute secrecy guaranteed or money refunded. Price $1. All druggists, or by mail, W. R. BROWN & CO., 105 Chauncey St., Boston.

Publisher's Notes.

The Union Signal Alphabet.

Able. THE UNION SIGNAL cannot be excelled as an able exponent of temperance and reform principles. Its corps of Brilliant editors and contributors keep it fully up to all demands. They number among them the leading thinkers and writers of the country, who in Courteous and pleasant style discuss the most important questions now before the people. It is a Daring exponent of true reform, exposing the fallacies which protect wrong, and pointing out a remedy. Its Earnest appeals for the protection of home and dear ones is only equalled by its Fearless course in demanding righteousness in government. Wherever it is read it will do an immense amount of Good, working conviction in its readers and winning converts to the cause it advocates.
Have you not some friends who are not yet won to support this cause. See that they get this paper regularly for a year.

Read

The "square proposition" on another page, and send without delay for all these books and THE UNION SIGNAL to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

February 8, 1892.

"I take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of 'Life of Gen. Grant' in good condition, and the approval of all my family of it as a most excellent premium on the terms offered new or old subscribers. Long live THE UNION SIGNAL, and may its circulation increase daily, for it is a grand educator and helper.

Resp'y yours, L. W. H."

Some Standing Offers.

There are some offers that we make to our subscribers that have a time limit, and some that are not so limited. We desire now to remind you that we will send at any time until further notice:

Neeley's Great Historical Chart and Political and United States Map, 5 feet 6 inches by 3 feet 10 inches, on rollers, ready to hang, and The Union Signal one year postpaid, for $2. We are receiving many flattering notices from persons who have purchased this map from us on these terms.

Or we will send at any time until further notice, a Union Signal Sewing Machine with full set of attachments, and The Union Signal one year on receipt of $22.

Or one of our wall pocket packages for 50 cents,

Or a souvenir spoon for $1.50; tea, $2.25; orange, $2.50,

Or any of our books or leaflets at catalogue price.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Christmas is Past but many pleasant memories of the happy holiday season linger in our minds. One worker writes: "I feel that your help in the way of the book, 'Childhood: Its Care and Culture,' has enabled me to enjoy what would otherwise have been a gloomy Christmas."

Probably there are others with similar experiences and we are happy to know that we can contribute to the happiness of others by putting people in the way of making money (and happiness) for themselves.

There is still room "at the top" for active agents to sell "Glimpses" and "Childhood." It pays.

Send postal to learn all about it.

SUBS'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A new Version of an old Story

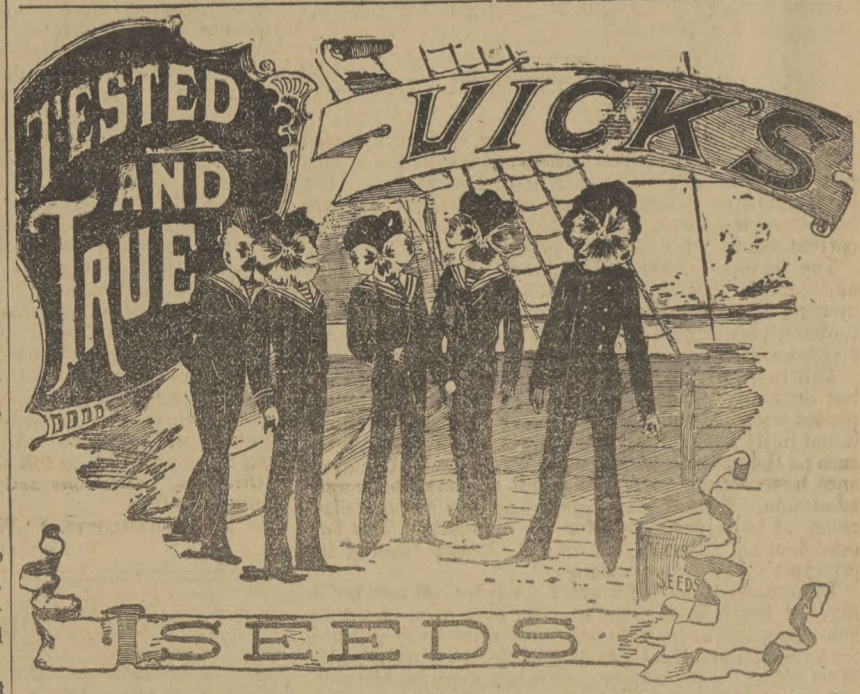
Three Black Crows

"There were three crows sat on a tree,
As black as any crows could be."
"Alas!" said one, "would I were white
Instead of being black as night."
"Such foolish wishing," said his friends,
"In disappointment often ends;"
But now, forsooth, to make you white,
Will be an easy matter, quite.
We'll wash you well with some GOLD DUST,
And, when you're white, we fondly trust
That while you wonder at the feat,
Your happiness will be complete."

* * * * * * * * *

Behold him now as white as snow!
Wonder of wonders! saith the crow,
"If GOLD DUST POWDER makes black white,
'Twill surely all the world delight;
And mistress, mother, nurse and maid
Will find themselves henceforth well paid
In using this great help for all,
The household's needs—both great and small;
For dishes, kettles, pots and pans,
For paint, and floors, and milkmen's cans—
It surely will great comfort bring,
And clean each dirty place or thing;
For what will make a black crow white,
Will make whate'er is dingy bright."

GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER.
N. K. Fairbank & Co.,
Sole Manufacturers,
Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, San Francisco, Portland, Me., Portland, Ore., Pittsburgh and Milwaukee.



VICK'S "SUPERB" PANSY,

is, as a lady remarked, "Almost human in the face."

Our new strain, "SUPERB," is taken from carefully selected plants of only the very choicest strains. These "very cream of Pansies," only 50 cents per packet; limited supply.

PANSY "EXTRA CHOICE," very large flowering. The finest selection for the money. Only 25c. per packet; order early.

With either of the above, when desired, we give free

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE 1892,

which contains colored plates of Carnations, Poppies, Cannas, Peas, Onions, Corn and Potatoes. 1,000 illustrations, over 100 pages 8 x 10½ inches. Instructions in regard to planting, &c. Description of many new and worthy novelties. Mailed on receipt of 10 cents, which may be deducted from first order.

JAMES VICK'S SONS, Rochester, N.Y.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS

Examine the new Mason & Hamlin Piano and Organ catalogues, sent free to any address. The Mason & Hamlin Grand and Upright Pianos are constructed on an Improved Method of Stringing, invented and exclusively used by Mason & Hamlin, by which remarkable purity of tone and great durability are secured, and phenomenal capacity to stand in tune. The SCREW-STRINGER was patented in July, 1883, and is a veritable triumph for American ingenuity, being pronounced by experts "the greatest improvement of the century" in pianos. American Pianos and Organs are superior to all others. Mason & Hamlin Organs have long been the Standard the world over. The Mason & Hamlin Piano is fast becoming as famous as the Mason & Hamlin Organ, and illustrates that HIGHEST STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE which has always characterized the latter instrument, and won for it Highest Honors at all great World's Exhibitions since Paris, 1867. Illustrated catalogues free.

Without under-estimating the improvements effected by others in pianos, the Mason & Hamlin STRINGER is claimed to be the greatest improvement of them all, and without it the highest attainable excellence is simply impossible.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN AND PIANO CO.
BOSTON. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL in your own home. First-class Sewing Machines at wholesale prices.
$35 Standard Singer Machine for $9.50
$45 " " " $15.50
$55 Arlington " " $19.50
All latest improvements, light running. Warranted 5 years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 358 Dearborn St. B 201 Chicago, Ill.

YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

ASTHMA—DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE CURED never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial BOTTLE FREE
THE DR. TAFT BROS. M. CO., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory. Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

BAKER'S COCOA
IS ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used

GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS
Give better satisfaction than any other. Are the best substitute for corsets.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

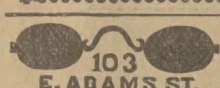
MR. PICKWICK.

"Chops and tomato sauce are excellent, my dear Mrs. Bardell, but Let the liquid be VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA. It is a glorious Restorative after A fatiguing journey."

PERFECTLY PURE.

VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS increases by 50 PER CENT. the solubility of the flesh-forming elements, making of the cocoa bean an easily digested, delicious, nourishing and stimulating drink, readily assimilated even by the most delicate.

Ask your grocer for VAN HOUTEN'S and take no substitute. ☞If not obtainable enclose 25cts. to either VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, 106 Reade Street, New York, or 45 Wabash Ave., Chicago, and a can containing enough for 35 to 40 cups will be mailed. Mention this publication. Prepared only by the inventors VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, Weesp, Holland. a2.



103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSGH-OPTIGIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them. YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

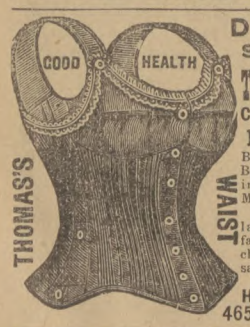
LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

PATTI A limited number of free scholarships in the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, Mass. Write for particulars to JAMES D. BALL, 36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE. OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

Normandie Plushes

Direct from the Mills. For HAT and DRESS TRIMMINGS. SPECIAL MERIT for Painting, Embroidery, and all kinds of Fancy Work. Send 10c. for 30 good sized samples (no two colors same shade) and price list of remnant packages. Price of samples deducted from first order amounting to $1.00. Agents Wanted. Pleasant and profitable work. CONTREXEVILLE MFG. CO. 312 Grant Ave. Manville, R. I.



DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS. Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL. Ladies $1.50 Misses 1.25 Children .60 Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best. Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory. Agents wanted everywhere. H. A. Thomas & Co., Manf'rs 465 W. Van Buren St. Chicago.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid Keeps the hair in curl for days. No Odor or Sediment. Harmless. Gives vigor and beauty to hair, increases its growth. A toilet necessity. At druggists or sent prepaid 50c. LADY AGENTS wanted. DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (11) LaSalle St., Chicago.

ESPEY'S FRAGRANT CREAM.

Cures Chapped Hands, Face, Lips, or any irritation of the skin. Is a scientific food and tonic for the skin and complexion. Prevents tendency to wrinkles or ageing of the skin. Keeps the face and hands soft, smooth and plump. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM warranted to hold the Hair in Curl, Bangs and Frizzes. Is absolutely harmless. Both preparations for sale by dealers everywhere. Inclose 2-cent stamp for free Card Case to P. B. KEYS, 405 State St., Chicago, Ill.

FOR MANY LADIES THE KABO CORSET

ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM — NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN CLOTHES — BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL — ALL GUARANTEED BY CHICAGO CORSET CO.

CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

Publisher's Dep't.

ANNOUOCEMENT.

Glimpses of Fifty Years, Price Reduced.

White-ribboners everywhere will gladly welcome the announcement of a reduction in price of Miss Willard's book.

From this date the price will be as follows:

Cloth	$2.25
Half morocco	3.00
Full morocco	3.75

Agents wanted everywhere to sell the book on commission. Generous terms. Send for particulars.

SUBS'N BOOK DEP'T W. T. P. A.,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A Special Sale.

We have on our shelves a small supply of dainty booklets and cards, some of which have become slightly soiled by being shown as samples, etc. These, together with a few very artistic art calendars in good condition, will now be put on sale at less than cost. You will probably find something in this column which you will want.

Art Calendars, 1892.

No. on Hand		Reg. Price.	Price Now.
18	All the Year Through,	$ 20	$ 12
87	Daily Strength (with Scripture texts),	25	.13
44	Our Onward Way (with Scripture texts),	50	.22

These calendars are all very fine, and we warrant satisfaction. The stock will soon go at these prices, and we advise you to order early.

Golden Grain Booklets for the young, put up in packages of ten each. We have fifty packages. Fine lithographed cover with floral designs, landscape scenes, etc., the kind that children delight in. Each contains a four-page gospel story stated so that young minds can grasp it. The regular price is 25c. They will go at 15c per package.

An Assorted Package will be made up, consisting of the slightly soiled Booklets and Cards (including some Christmas Cards mentioned). We will put in a nice variety, one of the above-advertised calendars, and one or two nice enamel texts with Scripture verses. The assortment will be worth $1.75 at retail prices, and we will send it for 50c, warranted value.

These odd booklets, etc., can be put to good use by kindergartners, L. T. L. superintendents and others. They can also be given out as tracts, and would be excellent for that purpose. Notice, please, the price, which is less than one-third regular value; at such a reduction these goods will soon be disposed of, so that promptness will be necessary in order to get a nice assortment. We pay postage on all the above at prices named.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Spurgeon is Gone.

Sad news to all who love humanity and rejoice in those who labor for its uplifting. He was a hero. His work equals in extent and results that of any man who has labored, like him, for others. It was hard to let him go. Multitudes said this. But being dead, he speaks.

It is with pleasure we announce that we can introduce him to homes where he is unknown, and help those who know him to know and love him more, and perhaps to follow him, by a little volume of 219 pages, in the series "Lives that Speak." The author is Rev. James J. Ellis, who gives a very interesting narration of the life of this eminent divine.

Send for it. Price, $1.00.

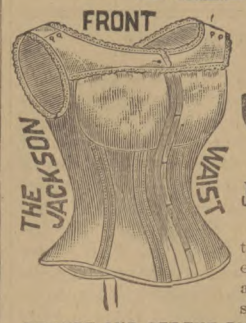
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

THE Willard Calendar for 1892 is a beauty. Send for one. Price 15c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Send for Color Samples and Price List. Patented February 23, 1886. Examine closely Stamp on inside of Waist.

TAKE NO OTHER.



THE GENUINE JACKSON CORSET WAISTS

ARE MADE ONLY BY THE JACKSON CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.

The manufacturer's name is printed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of clasp in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. You should have one of them.

BE SURE AND GET THE RIGHT THING. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, SEND $1.25 FOR SAMPLE.

"The Crime of Not Insuring"

It may be plead in defense that old line companies charge so much and are so extravagant, and that assessment companies are so insecure, that it is no crime to refuse to trade with them. However that may be, here is a company which is NEITHER EXTRAVAGANT NOR INSECURE.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION . . . . OF AMERICA . . . . . .

Has its plans and rates adjusted to Insure at cost. Having only total abstainers as members, "cost" is reduced at least 30 per cent. under the charges of old line companies. Its expense account is $3.00 per $1,000—and cannot be more—instead of $9.32 per $1,000, the average of old companies. It has a guarantee fund of $64,000 securely invested. It stands almost, if not quite alone in paying one hundred cents on the dollar of every honest claim since its incorporation, July 24th, 1889. It has achieved, in two and one-half years, a success which old companies took about three times as long to reach. The company stands among business enterprises as an object lesson on total abstinence, which every good citizen should recognize.

WM. F SINGLETON, PRESIDENT.
902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

COLD BLAST. NO ODOR. COLD BLAST CHICAGO. Feathers and Feather Pillows ARE SOLD GUARANTEED Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.

ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM. IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO. MANUFACTURERS OF FAULTLESS BEDDING CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish. St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

HOME DRESSMAKING A Complete Guide to Household Sewing. Women who try to save who love to dress who have to sew Need It Prepaid $2.75. The only book on the subject. Free circulars giving Table of Contents. Best Terms to Agents. Address, CHARLES H. SERGEL & CO., Dept. A 350 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE. A Christian woman's narrative of Mission work done "In His Name" in tough places, revealing the "inner life" of the underworld of New York "as seen by a woman." It describes Gospel work in the slums, and gives a famous detective's 30 years experiences. By Mrs. Helen Campbell, Col. Thos. W. Knox, and Inspector Thos. Byrnes (Chief of the N. Y. Detectives). With 250 engravings from flash-light photographs of scenes in Darkest New York by Day and by Night. Pure and good, full of tears and smiles, it is an ally of Temperance, a witness to the power of the Gospel,—a book for every home. Ministers say, "God speed it." Eminent women endorse it. ☞5,000 Agents Wanted. Men and Women. ☞$200 a month made. ☞Distance is no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill. We do not sell liquors in any shape.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send only five cents and receive a Large, Elegant Fashion Catalogue and how to secure 50c worth of dress patterns, FREE. Add. Young Lady's Bazar 230 La Salle St. Chicago.

LADY wanted, on salary, to sell Roses, Shrubs, &c Brown Bros Nurym'n, Rochester, N. Y. & Chicago

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St. Chicago.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

LADY Agents $5 a day sure; new rubber undergarment Mrs N. B. LITTLE Chicago, Ill.

MORE MONEY IS MADE Every year by agents working for us than for any other Company; why don't you make some of it? our circulars which we send free will tell you how. We pay salary or commission as party prefers, and want you now. OUTFIT FREE. Address at once, Standard Silver Ware Co., Boston, Mass.

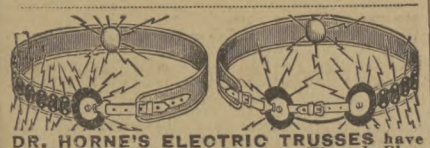
HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

THE
Owen Electric Belt
AND APPLIANCES
For Men and Women

Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.
They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.
CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.
[Trade Mark.] DR. A. OWEN.
A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in
OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.
The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,
Main Office and only Factory,
191-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.
The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

SIR HENRY THOMPSON, the most noted physician of England, says that more than half of all diseases come from errors in diet.
Send for Free Sample of Garfield Tea to 319 West 45th Street, New York City.
GARFIELD TEA Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

COE & CONVERSE, Fort Atkinson, Wis.
Offer a large stock of best Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Vines and Plants adapted to the cold Northwest. Also choice Seed Potatoes. Send for descriptive priced Catalogue. Established 1879.



DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DRUNKENNESS Is A DISEASE, and can be Cured, by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given without the knowledge of the patient, if desired, by placing it in coffee, tea or articles of food. Cures guaranteed. Send for free circulars. GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

F. P. VAN VALKENBURGH, Former Associate Physician and Surgeon to the Old People's Home, 3858 Indiana Avenue, Chicago, also examining Physician for the New York Life Insurance Co., Cures Drunkenness, Morphine, Opium, and destroys the desire for Tobacco. Cures guaranteed. Correspondence solicited. Reference Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Office, 103 State-st. Chicago

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept. G C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 58 Jefferson St., Chicago

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. HISCOX, 853 B'way, N. Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM IF YOU CANNOT FIND A CURE Add. DR. W. H. ROSS, Grand Rapids, Mich.

TAPE WORM Removed alive, head and all, in three hours at your home. No starving required. Safe, sure and certain. Circulars free. 269 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

Publisher's Dept.

On The Square.

Things done on the square always leave a right impression—an impression of fairness. And we are convinced our readers will consider our square proposition one of the best. Some write to us complaining that we are fostering the spirit of contention by placing these biographies of warriors in the homes of the nation. We believe not. Much as the W. C. T. U. loves peace, very few would consider it necessary to refuse to read history because it contains a record of wars. The generals whose lives we place within your reach were foremost characters in our latest conflict, and every intelligent person, young or old, must know something regarding them. The best thing, then, is to give reliable information in relation to them. And so it is with satisfaction we publish again our offer, glad that even at a slight advance in prices we may continue it through February. This offer will be withdrawn on March 1. We ask a careful perusal of the following:

List.

THE UNION SIGNAL one year,	$1 00
Life of Gen. Grant, clo. gilt stamp. 734 pp.	2 50
Life of Gen. Sherman, clo. gilt stamp, 608 pp	1 50
Life of Gen. Sheridan, clo. 224 pp.	1 00
Prof. Drummond's Addresses, heavy paper, 308 pp.	35
Miss Willard's Annual Address,	05
Red Letter Day Calendar,	10

Offer A for $3.40. Retail Value $6.50. — Offer A All of the Above.

Offer B for $1.25. Retail Value $1.50.
The Union Signal One Year. Drummond's Addresses. Red Letter Day Calendar. Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer C. for $2.00. Retail Value $3.50. — Offer C. The Union Signal One Year. Life of General Grant.

Offer D for $1.75. Retail Value $2.55.
The Union Signal One Year. Life of General Sherman. Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Offer E for $1.40. Retail Value $2.05. — Offer E The Union Signal One Year. Life of General Sheridan. Miss Willard's Annual address.

Offer F for $2.50. Retail Value $5.05
The Union Signal One Year. Life of Grant. Life of Sherman. Miss Willard's Annual Address.

Special Proposition.

The Life of Grant or Life of Sherman will be sent for five new subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1.00 each. The $5 should be sent at one time with postage for either book: Grant, 21c: Sherman, 16c.

All the books are sent postpaid at prices named. The above privileges are for the benefit of old and new subscribers alike. The offers are good during February and expire March 1st, when they will be withdrawn.

Do not fail to avail yourself of this unequaled opportunity to get good books for almost nothing.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

Burpee's Seeds Grow

And are Warranted First Class in every respect. We test all seeds both as to vitality and purity, hence we know there are few equal and none better. If you appreciate quality in seeds—and the best are the cheapest—write to-day for BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1892. It is a handsome book of 160 pages, illustrations true to nature, and several beautiful colored plates. It tells all about the best garden, farm and flower seeds, including Rare Novelties of real merit, which cannot be had elsewhere; it is a thoroughly trustworthy guide, entirely free from exaggeration yet progressive in every department. FREE to all who intend to purchase.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

Raise The BIGGEST PONDEROSA TOMATO AND BOTH GLORY and PROFIT AWAIT YOU.

so valuable that we paid $250 last year for the NAME alone when sold under the No. "400." This year we think more of it than ever and to aid in making its merits still wider known we have doubled the amount of the money prizes.

NOW THEN FOR 1892 WE OFFER $500.00 for the heaviest single fruits raised from seeds of Ponderosa bought in 1892 in our sealed packets. Full details in Catalogue mentioned below, where also its fine qualities are told at length. It should be grown in because the essential features of EARLINESS, SIZE, WEIGHT, COLOR, SOLIDITY and QUALITY, that make the ideal Tomato, this Ponderosa variety possesses in the superlative degree. Delicate persons will always prefer it because it is nearly seedless.

Every Garden in the Land

Price per packet 20c, 6 packets for $1, 12 packets for $1.75, 25 packets for $3.

DON'T FORGET, that with every order for a packet or more we will send FREE, our CATALOGUE of EVERYTHING for the GARDEN, (which alone costs us 25 cents) provided you will state where you saw this advertisement. This Catalogue of 150 pages is bound in illuminated covers, and is the largest and handsomest ever issued. It is replete with many engravings and colored plates of all that is new and desirable in SEEDS and PLANTS.

If Catalogue alone is wanted, we will mail it on receipt of 25 cts., which amount can be deducted on first order from Catalogue. Postage stamps accepted as cash.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35 & 37 Cortland Street, NEW YORK.

SEEDS ROSES PLANTS TREES
THEY GROW--THEY BLOOM.
Catalogue Free 150 pages describing one of the most complete stocks in the U. S.
38 YEARS. 700 ACRES. 25 GREENHOUSES.
The STORRS & HARRISON CO.
PAINESVILLE, Lake Co., OHIO.

FREE
Grandest Illustrated Garden-Guide.
SEEDS 1 cent a packet. Up if rare or costly. Cheapest. Best of all. Free by mail. 500 000 packets of extras to Customers. Send at once for Free BOOK. R. H. Shumway, Rockford, Ill.

BEST STEEL WIRE FENCING Woven Wire.

WIRE ROPE SELVAGE the BEST. PRICES REDUCED. Sold by dealers. FREIGHT PAID. McMULLEN'S POULTRY NETTING. Newthing. No sagging! No bagging! Extra Heavy Selvage. The McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago, Ill.

WORST CASES CURED TO STAY CURED IF UNCOMPLICATED BY ORGANIC DISEASE. Incurable cases declined.
ASTHMA
WE WANT NAME OF EVERY ASTHMATIC. Examination free by mail.
P. HAROLD HAYES M.D.
BUFFALO, N. Y.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH
Taken internally and used locally with Insufflator.
At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

Signal Notes.

THE Salvation Army holds about 50,000 meetings every week in different parts of the world.

ALL reformers are invited to the conference at St. Louis, February 22. It looks now as if it were going to be a great gathering.

THE Mary J. Drexel Deaconess Home in Philadelphia numbers at present fifteen deaconesses, fourteen "Help-sisters," and about ten probationers.

A BILL for the suppression of drunkenness, in which the Emperor takes great interest, is in course of preparation in the Bundesrath, Berlin, Germany.

IT appears from a recent report that the total amount of British capital invested in American breweries aggregates at the present time $92,019,240.

GEORGE W. CHILDS says: "It is an undoubted fact that the serving of many and heavy wines at large dinners is gradually becoming a thing of the past."

IN a speech before the Massachusetts legislature, a short time ago, Hon. Henry H. Faxon asked for the repeal of the drink law of 1891, condemning it in unqualified terms.

IN New York last year 1,434 husbands procured divorces from their wives on the ground of drunkenness. During the same year 12,432 wives procured divorces from their husbands on the same charge.

A STRONG stand was that taken by Hon. David A. Healy of The Irish World, at the convention of the Apostolate of the Press in New York not long ago. In emphatic terms he called attention to the great need of a more earnest attitude among Catholics on the saloon question and the splendid service which the Apostolate of the Press could render "in vindicating the Catholic character in the eyes of the country by showing that the genius of Catholicity is opposed to the evil influence of the saloons."

CARDINAL MANNING used to tell this story: He once met an Irishman the worse of liquor. Dr. Manning stopped him. "You're an Irishman and a Catholic," said the future Cardinal. "Sure, what else would I be?" answered the inebriate. "Then why don't you take the pledge, and keep from disgracing your religion?" asked Dr. Manning. "I only take a drop now and then, and I'm not so far gone," answered the Irishman. Then Manning explained that he was a priest, and he had taken the pledge. The man crossed himself. "Ah! then," said he, "I never thought I'd see such a bad day, to meet a priest that had fallen so low as to have to take the pledge. God help your reverence!"—The Reformer, Glasgow.

CALIFORNIA.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 621 Rialto Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY

Hollow Tires.

Perfection of cycle manufacture; no need now to ride springless cycles or depend on tires alone for comfort. SYLPH SPRING FRAME destroys vibrat'n. Light, simple, strong. Cata. free

Rouse-Duryea Cy. Co. 77 G St., Peoria, Ill. Agts. Wanted

BABY CARRIAGES ARE DELIVERED FREE

to any place in the United States. Also Baby JUMPERS, BICYCLES, SAFETIES and GIRLS' TRICYCLES. One or more at wholesale price sent C. O. D. direct from L. G. SPENCER'S Factory, 221 W. Madison Street CHICAGO. $3 to $10 saved. Send 2c. stamp for new catalogue. The largest factory in the world. Latest Styles in each locality to manage Toilet Parlor at home; write, obtain names, send circulars. $5 to $15 weekly. Our Toilet Art Book Free. Send stamp. SYLVAN TOILET CO., Fort Huron, Mich.

A LADY WANTED

WALL PAPER Attractive styles. Extremely low price. 100 samples sent for 8 cts. Prices 5c. to 50c. a roll. A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St. Phila. Pa.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample Sold by all Druggists. McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

"What's the matter, Bob? Chapped hands? You ought to use Ivory Soap. That stops it in no time."

"Yes, I've just found that out. You're the fifth man this morning that's told me to use Ivory Soap."

"Why, where have you been living for the last three years? I thought nearly every one had got waked up to using Ivory. You try it for one week and you'll never go through another winter without it."

(Reader, do your hands ever become dry, hard or rough in cold weather? Then bathe with Ivory Soap.)

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

THE WORLD'S FAIR

Is but twenty-five minutes ride from

HARVEY.

Arrangements are being made to accommodate thousands of World's Fair Visitors

The Harvey Land Association

founded and platted the whole town of Harvey, and are selling choice property near the factories, the schools and churches, the hotels and business districts at original prices, that will give the Investor a handsome profit.

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

have just located the immense concern of

A. J. Sweeney & Son, Wheeling, W. Va.,

making the Tenth big factory for Harvey. Lots are selling rapidly. Prices advance March 1st. Hundreds are writing for our new 36-page pamphlet, that tells all about Harvey. This pamphlet sent free. Write at once, addressing all communications to

The Harvey Land Association

819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—Always buy real estate from first hands. Save commission to agents. Get title from the founders of the town with all the privileges and benefits free.

HARVEY.

Are you aware of what is going on at this wonderful town? Few realize it, even after all the advertising we have done, until when they come and see that millions are being invested at HARVEY they say: "Why don't you talk louder about the town?" We want every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL to visit HARVEY during the month of February. If you will come direct to our office, we will furnish you with an escort and free transportation from our office, and show you all the factories, the academy, water works, and, in fact, the whole town, and aid you in making the best possible selection. We have a new and important circular just out; send for it.

WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO.,

161 LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

WORLD'S FAIR.

I offer a limited number of lots in Chicago within 5 minutes' ride of World's Fair, with privilege of erecting temporary buildings for use during Exposition. Location healthful; land high and dry; city water; trees; stone sidewalks; streets curbed and macadamized. NO SALOONS, NO OVERCROWDED STREET CARS. For particulars apply to WM. RICHARDSON. 196 La Salle St., Chicago,

ACME CORSET & DRESS PROTECTOR

AGENTS WANTED. A complete garment, worn under the corset or flannels, protecting the clothing from perspiration. Cheaper than dress shields 1 pair doing the work of 6. Misses', bust measure, 28-33, 80c; Ladies', bust measure 34-39, $1; Ladies', bust measure, 40-46, $1.25. M. DEWEY, Manf'r, 1397 West Monroe Street, Chicago. Send money by Post Office Order. Catalogue Free.

WRITE US If you are going to BUILD.

Sample designs of MODEL HOMES sent on application. Our New Book— "Cottage Souvenir" No. 2 with over 200 illustrations, is A GEM for all who want to build. Price $2.00. Send for prospectus and sample pages—free. Geo. F. Barber & Co., Architects, Knoxville, Tenn.

HALF-A-JIFFY COFFEE MAKER.

MAKES COFFEE UNSURPASSED WITHOUT ATTENTION ONE GOES WITH EACH SELF-POURING POT.

That pours by pressing the lid as illustrated. Get list.

PAINE, DIEHL & CO., Phila., Pa.

PEATS THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT CHICAGO

Retails all grades of WALL PAPER of the newest designs and latest colorings in small quantities; many patterns cheaper than your home dealer can buy them.

GOOD PAPER, 3c. GOLD PAPER, 5c.

Handsome parlor paper 10—12½—15c per roll with wide border and ceiling to match.

If you intend to use any WALL PAPER whatever send 10 cents for postage on samples and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent free. Agents sample books $1.

See his samples before you buy.

ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 136-138 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

A SCOTCH LASSIE.

ANNIE S. SWAN

SHE'S A PRESBYTERIAN!

A SCOTCH PRESBYTERIAN AT THAT!

But you ought to read her wonderfully bright and cheery books Her heroes and heroines are thoroughly human, their loves and other experiences everyway natural, and yet what wholesome companions they are for our American youth. We are selling thousands of her books at this Methodist Publishing House. Send for list.

CRANSTON & STOWE, Publishers, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis.

PURE GUM RUBBER GOODS

Of Every Description; also,

Mackintosh Clothing; also, Japanese Tissue,

For Mending Without Needle or Thread.

ELASTIC TIP CO., Headquarters 152-154 Lake St., Chicago

STUDY LAW At Home.

Take a Course in the Sprague Correspondence School of Law. (Incorporated.) Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH. 525 Whitney Block.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF

Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.

We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.

GRAND TERRACE ADDITION

For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

THE CHICAGO & ALTON R. R. IS THE BEST LINE TO HOT SPRINGS

Arkansas. Fast time. Leave Chicago today, arrive Hot Spring to-morrow via "THE ALTON." You are only one night on the road. Through Pullman Service

FROM CHICAGO TO HOT SPRINGS.

City Ticket Office, 195 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

VOSE & SONS PIANOS EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 8.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 25, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Ursula D. Herrick 2419 19th St. 92 92

Table of Contents on Page 8.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Our own Moody is talked of as the successor of the lamented Spurgeon.

All the members of the French Ministry tendered their resignation to President Carnot, February 19.

United States Senator Blair from New Hampshire has announced himself a Presidential candidate.

February 22 was universally observed as a patriotic holiday in memory of the "Father of our Country."

John Greenleaf Whittier, the American household poet, is slowly recovering from a second attack of La Grippe.

The "Anti-Beefsteak Club" was organized in Chicago last week, as a branch of the National Vegetarian Association.

The Wisconsin Anti-saloon League, a non-partisan temperance society, was organized at Madison, Wis., on Thursday.

It is reported that the secret of the withdrawal of the Louisiana lottery is found in the announcement of its removal to Mexico.

Industrial and reform associations met in friendly conference in St. Louis, February 22 and 23, with a view to entering national politics as a consolidated third party.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury and the Convocation of Bishops have declared any but fermented wine to be illegal, characterizing unfermented wine as "Jam and water."

Rev. B. Fay Mills, now the leading evangelist in our American field, is at work in Cincinnati, and five thousand converts are reported. No city needs them more than Sinsinnati.

Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and Miss Gordon left Chicago for St. Louis, on Friday, for attendance upon the great Industrial Convention and public mass-meetings of the latter city on Sunday and Monday.

Congressional visitors, to the number of four hundred, spent Saturday, Sunday and Monday in Chicago, inspecting the Columbian Exposition grounds, viewing the magnificent buildings and enjoying the famous hospitality of the Electric city.

EDITORIAL comment on the St. Louis Conference article published in our last issue, will appear in next week's paper.

WE wish to call attention to the self-denial days (April 17 to April 23 inclusive) earnestly hoping that they will be universally observed by our white-ribboners. It will cost us but little and will mean more to the cause than we can calculate.

IT is being suggested in England that a bust of Cardinal Manning be placed in Westminster Abbey. Agnostics and all sorts of unorthodox people are already there, and it is felt that there has been no greater, truer Englishman than he, and no one who has done more for the suffering and poor.

THE Minutes of the World's and National W. C. T. U. are out and all expert white-ribboners will want copies. Send to Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, Evanstor, Ill., for the National, and to Miss Alice E. Briggs, office secretary World's W. C. T. U., for the World's Minutes. Price of each fifteen cents.

WE urge state officers to issue either in the annual minutes or by means of an annual leaflet, a register of all the local unions in their respective states, giving name and post-office address of the presidents. We should be exceedingly glad to receive all such lists at Headquarters, addressed to Mrs. F. H. Rastall, business manager.

THERE are to be no saloons on the grounds of the World's Exposition—that is settled so far as the local Directorate can do it. But with meals, beer at least will be sold, so say the same authorities. However, their power is not supreme. The National Commissioners meet before long and should be vigorously petitioned to rescind this action.

SENATOR HOAR, of Massachusetts, should have no end of letters from women thanking him for introducing his recent bill against the infamous sweating system. This bill is the result of an investigation made by trades unions in Boston. A similar bill has already been passed by the legislature of the old Bay State. It provides that owners of goods manufactured in a room where persons are ill of any contagious disease, or where there is less than three hundred feet of air space for each person occupying the room while working on the apparel, shall suffer penalty. State inspectors are required to see this law enforced. We hope state presidents will write Senator Hoar their thanks and assure him of their coöperation.

EIGHTY-FIVE Congregational churches of Chicago, with thirteen thousand members and twenty-six thousand Sunday-school children, combined their representatives in a magnificent meeting at the Auditorium, February 18. Men, good and great, sat on the platform, and made the large hall ring with eloquence, but this cultured church was too cultured and too little progressive to invite the president of its Women's Home Missionary, and of its Women's Foreign Missionary society and other gentle leaders to the platform, or to put any name of its bright "women folks" on the program. No, we take that explanation back; it was not because of their culture and conservatism that women were left out; these good men would have been glad to represent the two-thirds who send most prayers to heaven, and stretch out steadiest hands of blessing over the earth; they simply "didn't think"—that's all. Brethren, honored and beloved,

"'Tis sweet to be remembered,
'Tis sad to be forgot."

NO DRAMA in the nineteenth century has been more tragic than the history of the last few months of the life of the Emperor Frederick. One of the principal dramatis personæ connected with his last days has just passed from earth, and his name, although famous among the great medical specialists of our day, is especially so when connected with that chapter in the world's political history. The German law has rendered it impossible for any man to succeed to the crown who is suffering from mortal disease, or incapacitated by any affliction. When, therefore, Dr. Mackenzie realized that the dread disease, from which the Emperor subsequently died, was upon him, he bravely fought the whole body of the German medical profession, standing for the right of the dying man whose wife and children would suffer so severely were he to be denied his access to the throne. We can but admire the loyalty which bade him serve his master at all costs, and few histories would be more interesting than that which perhaps will some day be given to the world, and which will reveal the true story of that historic death-bed.

ON Thursday last, the World's Auxiliary Committee on Labor were gathered by invitation of the Chicago Woman's Club, to meet Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. In the course of her remarks, Lady Henry Somerset said that the motto, "Not things but men," seemed to sum up the spirit, not only of the labor reform, but of every other great movement. "It is difficult," said she, "to tell where one cause diverges from another, for religion correlates them all into the greater and true brotherhood of man." She went on to speak of the swift tread of England's oncoming idea bringing legislation in favor of the laboring classes quicker even than we know. "Woman's suffrage is officered by the Conservative, and the mighty influence of woman's voice at the ballot-box will give untold impetus to all reform movements. If the vast sums of money that are poured by the wage-earners into the coffers of the liquor dealers were diverted into other channels, an immense impetus would be given to industrial movements. We are tempted to forget that we are making history, and are therefore contented by examining the fossils of the past. Can it be that the very party which rose to rend the shackles of the slave shall yet rivet the chains of the saloon?" Miss Willard also addressed the meeting, and spoke powerfully for woman's suffrage.

ABOUT two months ago the employés of the Cleveland Rolling Mills Company upon going to their work saw the following notice posted on the gates and in all the mills: "Now, and after this date any employé who leaves his work or the yard during working hours, or is known to have entered or left a saloon, or to carry any beer or intoxicating liquors to the works, or is seen under the influence of liquor either coming to work, at work, or at any time during which he is supposed to be on duty, will be immediately discharged. W. B. Chisholm." When pay-day came and the men went to draw their money, about half a dozen of them were informed that their services were no longer required. When they asked the reason they were told that they had been seen going into the saloon during working hours. Naturally enough the sentiment among the workingmen seems to be divided. Some say it is just right, as the work in which they are engaged is dangerous enough for men who are perfectly clear-headed. Others think the order dictatorial, and that it imposes on their "personal liberty," rehashing the stale argument with which we are familiar. Doubtless some of these are fellows of "the baser sort" when in drink, and are not willing to take the consequences of their conduct. All right-minded workingmen, and people generally will say that the proprietor has done a favor to those to whom he has furnished an added motive to lead sober lives.

THE following was received at World's Fair Headquarters this week:

MRS. BERTHA M. HONORE PALMER:

Dear Madam:—We address you in the name of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Michigan, and ask you to use your influence and official power to reverse the recent decision of the local managers of the World's Columbian Exposition, by which they permit the sale of intoxicating liquors upon the grounds, and become partners in such sale by accepting a revenue therefrom.

We make earnest protest against the easy moral sentiment in very high places, which says: "The people of the world are coming to see us and must have what they want."

As we claim a higher civilization than any in the family of nations, let it be illustrated at its best. We also unite with the highest Christian thought in urging that the Exposition be closed on the Sabbath.

This Republic should refuse to lower its ideals or abrogate its laws to satisfy the clamor of either greed or viciousness, since all we are is the outgrowth of principles entirely opposed to that which lies back of such clamor.

In behalf of twelve thousand white-ribbon women of Michigan,

MARY T. LATHRAP, Pres.
EMMA A. WHEELER, Sec.

To this important letter was appended this deeply significant note, over which we all rejoice:

HON. GEO. R. DAVIS, Director General Columbian Exposition:

Dear Sir:—We have the honor to hand you the enclosed petition with our official indorsement.

BERTHA M. H. PALMER.

Contributed.

CHICAGO AGAINST THE WORLD.

BY H. U. JOHNSON.

"The Local Board has decided to allow the sale of liquors on the Exposition grounds."—Press Dispatch.

"Four hundred years!" "Four hundred years!"
Columbia's children sing;
Adown the corridors of time,
The sweeping echoes ring,
And all the lands make willing haste
To honor the bold stroke
That burst Atlantic's mystic seal,
And a new world awoke.

The Fatherhood of God the Lord,
The brotherhood of man,
For these the nation lifts her voice
In most admiring plan—
And bids all peoples joyfully
Unto her shores draw near,
And o'er Columbus and his work
Hold jubilistic year.

In blithesome mood come Frank and Hun;
Come Swede, and Finn and Lap;
Come Arab, Moor and Ethiop,
Celestial, Hindu, Jap;
Come Angles and old Scotia's sons,
And Celts of Emerald Isle;
The Saxon, Slav, and placid Dane,
And Copts from off the Nile;

The nations South, and Coz Canuck,
From Islands of the Sea,
All wending to Chicago Fair,
The world's great jubilee:
And bringing of their choicest gifts
From earth, and sea, and air,
The work of shop, and loom and art,
For exhibition there.

O grand displays! exquisite, rich
In hues of purple, gold!
These to the eye on every hand
Their beauties do unfold.
What wondrous works of science, art;
Of the mechanic's skill!
But winding deftly everywhere,
The death worm of the still!

'Mid teas and spices from the East,
Blades of Damascus steel;
The choicest fabrics of Cashmere,
And silks from many a reel;
The flowers and dyes from tropic climes,
And goods from far Gaboon;—
From out a world of wonders, rise
"Saloons!" "Saloons!" "Saloons!"

And the nations give their millions,
And millions pay their fare,
As claimed, to honor Christopher,
His historic worth declare;
But great Chicago's "Local Board"
Sets the grand scheme a-blear
Aye, prostitutes the program
To boom Milwaukee beer.

Orwell, O.

RECOLLECTIONS OF NOTED MEN AND WOMEN.

IV.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Gwellian E. F. Morgan.

One bleak November day I was standing in the great hall of my home in England, looking at the blazing logs; the firelight flickered on the steel suits of armor that hang around the walls, now and again lighting the flashing steel with scintillating light, now dying into gloom which seemed the deeper from the heavy shadows of the tapestry with its quaint, mediæval design that loomed dark and gaunt upon the wall. Many and various were the thoughts that passed through my mind. I was awaiting a guest and listening for the sound of the bell that should tell me that the carriage had passed the stone archway and driven to the courtyard leading to the main entrance. It was a night ever memorable in the history of my life,—although its import was not then fully known to me. I had determined to enter the lists of the temperance cause, and that evening was to stand for the first time on a public platform in order to identify myself with its interests. The future with its hidden possibilities and its golden opportunities, its supreme difficulties and its bitter sorrows, is hidden from us. But at such time when a new step takes us further into the unknown we stretch out our hands in faith and take the sealed book, trusting to the guiding hand that turns the pages so gently and teaches us line upon line and precept upon precept with tender patience. As I look back now upon that hour I bless God for that day, for not only did I enter a field which has been rich to me with its harvest of experience and its garnered store of blessings, but I came into touch with one of the truest, rarest souls I have ever met, and formed a friendship with one of England's noblest women.

When first I decided to enter the temperance work, and begin according to the Master's precepts in the Jerusalem of my own home and among my own people, I consulted Mrs. Cyril Flower, a woman of fine intellect and admirable judgment, who has long been a leader of progressive thought and reform movement among the refined and educated, and has worked with indefatigable zeal for the betterment of humanity and the upraising of the downtrodden. Among other things, I asked her to whom I could turn for advice and encouragement in the work; and without a moment's hesitation she said, "Miss Gwellian E. F. Morgan, of Brecon, is one of the grandest women I know, and if she will give you her services the success of your temperance work will be secured." I wrote to her at once, and received a reply to the effect that she would be with me on the day I asked, and would go with me to my first meeting and help me in all ways in her power. How much I wondered, as I waited for my guest, what manner of woman she would be. I had so little experience of such good people, and like many another rooted belief that great reformers were likely to be angular in mind and unattractive in appearance.

At last the carriage wheels betokened that surmise would soon pass into knowledge, and in the soft light I saw advancing, a gentle, fair-haired, calm-faced, intellectual woman. With sweet voice and outstretched hands she made me understand, with quick intuition, that the visit to me that day would be the beginning of a lasting friendship which should have a deep import in my life.

GWELLIAN E. F. MORGAN.

Gwellian E. F. Morgan is the eldest daughter of the late Philips Howell Morgan, M. A., rector of Llanhamlach, in the county of Brecon, in South Wales.

There are undoubted advantages in the quiet country up-bringing of a refined and cultivated home which early creates an atmosphere of repose, and nurtures that love of nature which forms so great a part of every true and tender character. The very distance from which the great questions of the day are judged, the leisure which makes history vivid, because the passing panorama of events is limited, produces that quality of mind which has a clearer sense of proportion and a more dispassionate judgment than are otherwise possible.

After the death of her father Miss Morgan went to reside in the town of Brecon, in an old historic house, with her mother and her younger sister. Buckingham Place has a shady garden running down to the Usk, while across the water rise the beautiful Brecon beacons, undulating like the waves of the sea and melting from the delicate green of the foreground into the deeper tints of the distant blue outline. There is an old proverb which says: "Show me your friends and I will tell you what you are," but I say, "Show me the home and I will tell you the character of the occupants." The carefully chosen books, the works of the great masters, the thought-atmosphere which is impressed even on inanimate objects by those who live noble lives, produce an influence which is felt by all who come within its radius. And such surroundings, simple, but exquisitely refined, were a part of the formative influences which moulded the life of this cultivated woman.

Mrs. Morgan was a mother of rare worth, widely read in the literature of her country and a deep and earnest Christian. She had seen in her eldest daughter from a child a disposition to intellectual pursuits which she had fostered and encouraged with true wisdom and deep sympathy. Mother and daughter had in the quiet leisure of their lives reveled in the thoughts of the best English authors, laying up a storehouse of knowledge in the young girl's heart which in after years has stood her in good stead.

During her early life she had been accustomed to take a share in visiting among the poor and in Sunday-school teaching. I often think among the wider fields of philanthropy we are apt to forget the self-denial which constant and regular Sunday-school instruction imposes upon many young lives. How on a winter's day when the snow is falling and the fireside is bright round which the family circle has gathered, it is with a little sigh that the girl lays down her book and rises to go out and meet the weather; to overcome the little impatience which may rise at the inattention of her class or the noisy turbulence of her spiritual children; but how tenderly garnered are such deeds in the heart of the Father of love!

The independence of spirit which absorbs ideas and acts on conviction had led Mrs. Morgan and her daughter, contrary to the accepted standards of their social circle in their country town, to take a strong interest in liberal principles. In 1875, when Mr. Cyril Flower was candidate for Brecon, Miss Morgan made the acquaintance of his gifted wife, the eldest daughter of Sir Anthony de Rothschilds. A firm friendship sprang up between them which has resulted in lasting affection, cemented by their mutual sympathy in all great and noble causes. During the election Miss Morgan worked with untiring energy to secure the return of the Liberal candidate. Her knowledge of the country and people were of incalculable assistance to him. On the day of the election, when the hope of both parties ran high, the Liberal candidate was surrounded by his friends, at the hotel, awaiting the result of the poll. When it was known that he, as Mr. Gladstone's supporter, had been returned, amid the shouts and hurrahs a feeble cry fell on the ears of one to whom the news had brought such gladness, and looking around from the scene of noisy triumph which she was viewing from the balcony, Miss Morgan saw that her mother had fallen and was apparently insensible. With the keen presentiment that sorrow was in store for her, she went to her and lifted her helpless form, and from that hour dated an illness which continued for several years. Mrs. Morgan never rallied from the stroke that had fallen upon her that day. With all the tenderness which is so eminent a characteristic of her great nature, her daughter devoted her time and strength to the care of her now absolutely helpless mother, assisted in her arduous duty by her young sister. She has often told me that in the fatigue and pressure of those days, only the immediate sense of the presence of God and His unfailing support would have given her the strength to go through the mental and physical strain of those long months of watching, working and waiting.

During this period of her life a lady came to live in her immediate vicinity, who is now doing a great work as a president of the W. C. T. U. in New Zealand, Mrs. Packe. Her vivid presentation of the Christianity of Jesus Christ and her devotion to the cause of humanity made a deep and lasting impression upon the heart of Miss Morgan. It was under her influence that she first saw the great principle of personal prohibition for home protection which led her to sign the pledge. To her that step formed the bridge to a wider outlook and led her to devote her influence to the great cause which has been so essentially woman's highest calling in the hour of the world's greatest need. Soon afterwards the first gospel temperance mission was held in Brecon and Miss Morgan threw her whole heart into this work, and night after night appeared on the platform a silent but earnest partaker in a movement for which she has now worked so long. From that time her bright pen and her clear, level head have been consecrated to this cause.

The drudgery of the work in those early days is perhaps not to be estimated by those whose path now lies along easier ways. At the time when Miss Morgan began her temperance crusade in Brecon, the educated public opinion was against her; it was considered a subject which was unfit for the cultivated or the refined, ridiculed by the press and maligned by political opponents. But with the steady perseverance which speaks of a heart that has heard above the din of the world's clamor and the empty argument of shallow wisdom, the still voice of the call of God, she went bravely along the lines which she saw would at last lead to victory. The little principality of Wales is perhaps now the leader of temperance thought in the British Islands. Some two years ago the Conservative government, actuated by the desire to compromise as far as possible with the liquor party, instituted a royal commission to inquire into the working of Sunday closing in Wales. Among the commissioners who were sent to undertake that arduous task there was, I believe, only one who was really in favor of the Act as it then stood. It was believed among the Tory squires, the conservative clergy and the ignorant upper classes, that no movement would be so popular as that which should restore to the "poor man his beer" on the Lord's day. Great, however, was their surprise when the opposition which met them on all hands came from the toilers in the iron and steel works, the miners and almost all the classes of men who formed the backbone of public opinion throughout the Welsh valleys. Deputations representing thousands of working men waited upon the commission, and when the "blue book" was laid before the House of Commons containing their report, they summed up their evidence with remarkable words, stating that their inquiry had led them to the inevitable conclusion that there was a large body of men who were anxious to be protected from the temptation which they felt they were unable to resist when it was placed in their midst; thus teaching our legislative bodies the great lesson they needed so much to learn, namely: that when the question of home protection was placed in the hands of the men who felt most severely the pressure of the evil which was legalized in their midst, they were the very first to rise against it.

During the time of the inquiry of the royal commission Miss Morgan worked with untiring zeal. Thousands of appeals, petitions and legislative work of all kinds was sent by her single-handed, without the aid of any secretary, to all parts of the country. The leaders among the people came to her for advice, and her home was the center of influence which largely affected the ultimate issue of the inquiry. In her own town she has worked indefatigably along all lines, initiating reforms on fair-days for the hiring of servants, instigating temperance missions in the poorest parts of the town, while she and her sister, together with some friends, have opened a beautiful gymnasium which is a source of incalculable good to the young men of the place.

Her literary taste would have led her into other fields of thought; she has a genius for antiquarian research and her papers upon the antiquities and poetry of Wales have been widely read and much appreciated. Whenever circumstances have brought her into contact with distinguished men and women she has invariably impressed them as a woman of great and unusual gifts. It has often been my good fortune to go with her up the lovely valleys of the Wye, celebrated in Tennyson's incomparable "Idyls of the King," and pass some rare days of rest and quiet among the ruined castles of that historic country. There is not a stone, the turn of an arch, the outline of a tower in which Miss Morgan does not read the history of the past and does not know with an exactitude as rare as it is delightful, the reason which prompted the expression of every architectural thought.

Wondrous and varied are the stories she can relate of the old days when the owners of these ruined fortresses resisted shot and shell, believing the cause of God to be involved in the struggle for the rights of a tottering monarchy.

Often we have walked along the ruined ramparts and looked over the peaceful meadows where stand the great oak trees, which have witnessed those hours of bloodshed, peacefully spreading to-day their green arms over the grazing sheep and grassy slopes. And as we went we have talked of the peaceful war we wage for God and Home and England, of the great fortress of reform which we hold for the better times when the children of to-day shall be the citizens of to-morrow, when the struggle shall be ended and right shall win and the true concept of Christ's Christianity shall triumph.

During these last years Miss Morgan has done much for the Rechabite movement in Wales; attracted especially to its principles by the position they have taken in giving women equal advantages with men. In 1889 she attended as delegate the great Rechabite Convention, and the support she has given the order has been of the greatest value.

She has a rooted belief in the power of organized work, and although she has the rare gift of a beautiful voice and a particularly convincing and logical way of presenting an argument, she has never been drawn into the ranks of public speakers, but has always given others the benefit of her clear thought and varied experience, and with a loyalty which can set all desire for personal success aside, she has prompted her friends rather than voiced her own ideas.

Her accuracy as to facts and attention to detail render her help invaluable; whatever she undertakes is carried forward with a thoroughness which, in these somewhat superficial days, is a rock of strength.

Miss Morgan was appointed secretary to the English board of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union a year ago, and the success of the English petition is mainly owing to her effort. In a surprisingly short time she gathered the thousands of names which stood recorded as one country's protest against the world's greatest evil, in the grand Convention held at Boston, November, 1891.

A mind so full of holy activity, so inspired by the love of God and humanity, is a rare gift to the cause for which we labor, a rich blessing to the womanhood of our day;—a heart that has found in the fulfillment of its noble calling,

"Despite of all which seems at strife
With blessing, all with curses rife,
That this is blessing, this is life—"

the highest, the holiest life that is willing to lose itself in order to find again its being in the renewed life of rescued humanity.

RAILROAD TIES.

III.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

The saloon demoralizes everything that touches it. It has debauched the law and even the language. If you should ask a policeman where you could get a drink, he would never once suppose you meant water: even the word has become alcoholic.

So the word "license," which every school-boy knows is permission, is interpreted by many very good people to mean exactly the opposite. Only yesterday, my friend, the deacon, was saying that license is really restriction, for "Don't you see," said he, "it shuts up so many places."

How strange it is a perfectly free man dare not sell alcohol, at least not until after he shall have been "restricted:" a free man is prohibited, a restricted man is super-free, as it were. Funny, isn't it? No wonder restriction "comes high!"

While we were speaking, my friend's dog, a sedate old Irish setter, walked into the conversation with the city clerk's tag on his collar. Touching the tag, I said, "Now, what does that signify?"

Smart old man, the deacon! He said, "Why, that shows that the city law is anti-dog, and practically it signifies a policy of limitation, or restriction of dogs."

"Yes," I said, "but it isn't fair for you to ring in all the dead dogs. What does it show about this dog?"

Then he said the Republican party had given us all the temperance laws we ever had.

. . . . . .

License opens ten saloons to shut up two.

I am told that certain homeopathists claim to multiply the potency by diminishing the drug. A drop of drug is put into a hundred drops of water, shaken, and a drop of the dilution again put with another hundred drops of water, and so on a thousand times or so, as if one should drop a single grain of quinine in the gulf stream off the Florida coast to cure the Scandinavian peninsula of ague. It might do. I'm no physician, but a license law which is a drop of prohibition in an ocean of permission does not impress me hopefully. Similia similibus curantur (decanter).

B. & O. R. R., Feb. 6, 1892.

LIQUOR ON THE COLUMBIAN FAIR GROUNDS—EMINENT OPINIONS.

RESTAURANTS ON FAIR GROUNDS.

Opening of restaurants that sell intoxicating liquors on the Fair grounds would be to add to the exhibition a saloon attachment and so to make every stockholder in the enterprise a partner in the whisky traffic. This would be an outrage upon sensible public sentiment and an example full of local, national and international mischief. It is disreputable enough for the individual citizen to become a rumseller, but it is infamous for a World's Fair to be a rumseller and a drunkard factory.

Boston, Mass. JOSEPH COOK.

A QUESTION OF SANITATION.

The sale of spirits on the Columbian Fair Grounds should be determined as a question of sanitation. If it can be made to appear that the sale of spirits on the grounds increases the health and comfort of the visitors, and the quietness and order of the exhibition, and aids to lessen all possible perils which follow the gathering of large crowds, then it should be permitted. On the other side, if there is any possibility of the sale of spirits on the grounds periling the health and comfort of the visitors, disturbing the order and quietness of the exhibition, and increasing the dangers that are likely to occur from large crowds, it should not be allowed. The managers are responsible to the public and in duty bound to remove every possible source of danger and provide every means of safety to the masses who will come. It is not a question of politics, religion or personalities, but one of practical science. The saloon has no more claims than a powder or dynamite factory or any other hazardous establishment. Judging from experience and observation of saloons in all parts of the country, it would be unreasonable to expect that the success of the Fair would be increased by the sale of liquor on the grounds. On the contrary, the peril and dangers of all sorts, likely to follow the crowds, would be increased from the sale of spirits, with an almost astronomical certainty.

Hartford, Conn. D. F. CROTHERS, M. D.

A TOKEN OF MENTAL AND MORAL DEBAUCHERY.

The action of the local directory of the Columbian Exposition in admitting the sale of liquors to the grounds and receiving a revenue therefrom, is only a token of the mental and moral debauchery of our people by the license principle and method in government.

Why not, if such revenue is lawful for state and national treasuries, transfer the same policy to the World's Fair, and make the world drunk for our pecuniary benefit?

Jackson, Mich. MARY T. LATHRAP.

DISHONORS THE MEMORY OF COLUMBUS.

I regard it an outrage upon the moral sense of the nation to have intoxicating liquors sold on the World's Fair grounds. It is to be hoped that respect for the Christian sentiment of the country will induce the local directory to reconsider their action and not engage in the saloon business. The first act of Columbus, when he landed on the island of San Salvador, was a religious act. Surely we cannot honor but rather dishonor his memory by making drunk the visitors to the Columbian Exposition.

Jackson, Miss. CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

REPEAL THE WICKED DECREE.

It is a very heinous decision of the local directory that liquors may be sold on the grounds of the World's Fair. It will put our nation before the world as a gigantic liquor dealer.

The same local directory, if I understand it, pleads for the Sunday opening of the World's Fair, on the ground that to close the gates will drive the vast crowds into the ever open saloons of Chicago, and now, with guilty inconsistency, it enacts that the saloons may come inside the gates, where the people cannot escape them. Cannot this wicked decree be repealed? Every temperance man and woman in the country should promptly and vigorously protest. Yours truly,

Melrose, Mass. M. A. LIVERMORE.

DOES CHRISTIANITY NEED COMPLETED SALOON PRODUCTS TO KEEP IT IN HEALTHY EXERCISE?

There should be a distinctively temperance exhibit gotten up with taste and completeness; a temperance gallery, where the pictures of all the most notable temperance workers might be seen, could be made a striking feature of the department. Complete figures showing the results of the liquor traffic should be where they will readily catch the eye. Illustrative pictures showing every phase of the question would be in order. There ought to be one picture specially made showing the AMERICAN SALOON, ablaze with light, thronged with customers, men fighting in and around the place, some dead drunk on the ground and floor, others robbing them; in the background, miserable hovels with wretched women and children, and off in another direction a gallows with victims suspended. Under it should be something like this: "A great American industry. This nation is getting rich too fast and the population is too dense. Our work is to deplete the nation's wealth and thin down the population. The spoils we divide with the government and Fair Commissioners, which have entered into partnership with us in our work. The Christianity of the country needs something to do to keep it in healthy exercise."

So we turn over to the Christian public the poor and the sinning and the sick, made so by this great American industry, as a fair exchange for the generous support the Christian public gives us in our business by sustaining political parties in our interest, buying and drinking our liquors, and retaining in church fellowship our most influential "friends." The picture should have all the touches a real artist could give it. I barely suggest the thought.

Books, papers, and everything educating, should be on sale. And, of course, there should be a set time for a temperance gathering when men and women from Maine and others from Mississippi would meet and shake hands in a national temperance fellowship.

Meridian, Miss. J. B. GAMBRELL.

CHRISTIANS SHOULD REFUSE TO PARTICIPATE.

There should be no participation in the Fair on the part of temperance people or church members, unless the sale of intoxicating liquors is entirely excluded from the Fair grounds. With a row of saloons surrounding the Fair grounds outside, there was no need of providing for the sale of liquor inside, under the official control of the officers of the Fair. But local dispatches show that the World's Fair management is going into the liquor business for profit. This takes the reality out of all the fine talk about the benefit of the Fair to the higher interests of the nation. No other educational exhibit will have a tithe of the practical effect of this official sale of liquor on the Fair grounds. The interesting products of science and the arts gathered from all the world are to be used as bait to attract visitors into the region of these official drinking places. The downfall of multitudes of young men will date from their experience in these places. The moral perils of the city outside would be great enough, without this official solicitation to drink.

The Christian men and women of this country are being appealed to and urged in every possible way to aid this exhibition at Chicago. If there is any difference between right and wrong, any such thing as moral responsibility, the issue is clearly made up. If we uphold this liquor-selling Fair and help to increase its profits, we shall never be able to make good the resulting loss of moral power and influence. What strength will there be in our future protests against the liquor traffic, if we in any way give it our sanction and aid in this conspicuous instance? J. B. HARRISON.

Franklin Falls, N. H.

LICENSE A TEMPERANCE STOCK COMPANY WHICH WILL SUPPLY THE "REVENUE" THE FAIR NEEDS.

In connection with the question of the sale of liquor at the World's Fair, and which the local board have decided to allow stating plainly it is "for revenue only," it seems to me this action opens the gate for a grand opportunity for the temperance people to form a "trust," which will be at once fashionable, legal, and up to the times, and, if taken hold of as the women grip some of their fancies, it should be a success from every point of view. Open a set of stock books for a system of coffee and bread and milk saloons to be run inside the grounds, paying the Fair management for the privilege, advertise the stock for sale and urge all temperance people to subscribe for it, stating that it is expressly to make it unnecessary for the poverty of the management to resort to the pitiable spectacle of being obliged to depend on the alcoholic tastes of our foreign visitors for the financial success of a celebration of the greatness of a free country. Could not the temperance people, by a combined effort, secure enough subscriptions to the stock from their own ranks, and from that class of people who are temperance enough to not want the Fair turned into a national "what will you take?" society, to meet the deficiency the Fair managers fear so much? X.

Chicago, Ill.

UNNECESSARY AND UNWISE.

It is encouraging to know that the statement status of alcoholics as a beverage, to be sold at the World's Fair, is not yet fixed and no local directorate should be able to decide upon it, for all English-speaking nations are affected by this decision as to their temperance work.

If a clear key-note could but be set for the banishment of strong drink from the Columbian Exposition, its echo would be heard in every land. Surely, Chicago, with its 5,000 saloons should be able to furnish to European visitors who will have intoxicants, all that they need, and the grounds should be kept clean and safe for the children and youth who will be there by millions. To introduce alcoholics in the restaurants of the Fair is needlessly and most unwisely to put temptation before young men and boys, such as they have never before known. I am sure the women's directorate will vote with practical unanimity against doing this, and I am not without hope that the Congressional Commissioners may rescind the action of the local authorities.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

COMPLETE THE EXHIBIT.

If the saloon is to be a part of the Columbian Exposition, then the perfected products ought to be shown. We should hardly be well instructed as to this industry, unless the different processes and stages of manufacture were thoroughly displayed and explained.

Let various specimens preserved in alcohol, which are usually sought for in medical museums, be utilized. For instance, that artistic development known in the market as "rum-blossom" should be accorded a conspicuous position—it is accustomed to marked prominence. The hob-nailed liver is entitled to respectful attention—that vital organ which so readily yields itself to energetic saloon treatment. A heart whose muscular tissues are well charged with fat, so that it cannot do the required pumping for health and work, could be appropriately added. Cancerous lips and other alcoholized portions of the human frame divine should not be wanting.

Then there should be the young man who has taken just enough to be merry—he is not so shocking; the man who is farther advanced, and is snarling at every one he has any right to direct; the fellow who has taken a glass more than he can carry gracefully, and who is a little reeling and rather high-stepping; the poor victim supported by a lamp-post, and he that is senseless in the gutter.

Some family scenes might be enacted. Yes, turn on the lights and let us rudely gaze upon that cumulative wretchedness which seeks privacy; which will not submit to publicity until the last hope lies still, with sealed eyes and silent lips: until that terrible publicity pales beside the more ghastly lips within the home. Show the gradual destruction of every holy sentiment, the slow sundering of every sacred tie—the abolition of the human and the apotheosis of the brutal.

A little stronger light! Show poverty, gaunt and thin, where sleek prosperity once sat regnant; show hunger clutching at the white throats of little children; show cold and nakedness stalking through the household, forerunners of disease and death; show dishonor, and theft, and murder—all the hideous, fiendish brood, begotten and brought forth and nourished in the saloon!

The exhibit would be incomplete without a Keeley Cure; it is so profitable for the life that now is, and for that which is to come, that a man should perseveringly follow for fifteen or twenty years, a course that is sure to bring physical ruin, and then, complacently join the ranks of those that march around to receive the "shot." It is heroic!

Then an almshouse with its pitiable occupants and conditions should be on the ground. For four-fifths of the paupers are made by drink.

An insane hospital, also, as three-fifths of the inmates are the products of the drink habit.

An idiot asylum, as one-half of these wrecked lives are due to alcohol.

A prison, too; four-fifths of the criminals from the saloon business.

We ought not to forget a large cemetery, for "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

Let the saloon have all the space it wants; it has a right to demand this; and for the sake of God and man, do not defraud the saloon of a full exhibit!

MARY A. RIPLEY.

LET THE SALOON "PRODUCTS" HAVE A FULL EXHIBIT.

Will the liquor dealers and manufacturers show to the world the true results of their business, and the fruits of their large investment? No! a thousand times, no! But the temperance people can and ought to. Let the W. C. T. U. take the matter in hand and call on every other temperance organization in this country and every other country to help. The first step would be to secure a license for temperance restaurants on the Fair grounds, this to protect them in the privilege, not to "restrict," "you know." Then represent the first fraud practiced on the Indians when they were made drunk and their land taken for a few trinkets. Try to find, if possible, the first machine used in the manufacture of whisky in this country; have a picture anyhow and compare it with the monster brewery and distillery of to-day. Get an account of the first votes secured by making men drunk, and bring it down to the means now used to prevent prohibition. Take a picture of the first prison in the country, and bring that down to date, both in size of building and the number of inmates, and show how many went there through the liquor business. Depict scenes in the liquor business that are transpiring every day. If you cannot get room for its exhibition on the Fair grounds, use the Temperance Temple, and make it a great art gallery all the time the Fair is going on, to show to the world the doings of the liquor traffic, and it will pay a larger profit on the investment than any other use it will be put to. Keep this art gallery open every day except Sunday, and let it tell its own silent story.

ONE WHO BELIEVES IN JUSTICE.

Correspondence.

AN AGED SAINT AT REST.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—At Neosho, Mo., January 12, 1892, Mrs. Mary Putnam Rand Lemen, the oldest white-ribboner in Missouri, aged eighty years and eight months, entered into rest. Mrs. Lemen was born near Boston in 1811, educated in New Hampshire, and was a lineal descendant of General Putnam of Revolutionary fame, her mother being his niece.

In 1830 she experienced religion and joined the Baptist church. In 1834, about to graduate, she allied herself with a band of young ladies in the seminary, who were intending to go to Asia as missionaries, but were induced by the Rev. Bela Jacobs to go to Illinois as teachers, under the direction of the Baptist Educational Board. On the 9th of November of the same year she began school work in Salem, Ill. From Albany, N. Y., to Schenectady they traveled on the only passenger train then running in the United States, from the latter point progressing on the Erie canal. She is said to be the first woman to teach in a regular college, being an instructor in Thustliffe College at Rocky Spring. In 1842 she married B. F. Lemen, a member of one of the most illustrious families of Illinois.

Some of the noted persons who have been Mrs. Lemen's pupils are: Ex-Gov. H. C. Warmoth, of Louisiana; the late I. N. Hayne, adjutant-general of Illinois; Congressman W. J. Bryan, of Nebraska; Hon. Luke H. Hite, of St. Louis; the late Dr. T. B. Lester, of Kansas City, Mo.; Gen. J. S. Martin, and the late Judge B. F. Marshall, of Salem, Ill.

For more than a decade Mrs. Lemen has lived in Missouri, and has been actively identified with its educational, religious and temperance interests. When I first met her she was seventy-three years old, erect, dignified and commanding, engaged every day teaching a large class of young ladies Latin, Greek, philosophy and higher mathematics. She was superintendent of the Sunday-school in her own church (Baptist), and county president of the W. C. T. U. With all these things on hand, she found time to write many letters and frequent articles for the Christian Home, a paper published by her son, Rev. J. G. Lemen, Baptist pastor in Council Bluffs, Iowa. During the last few years Mrs. Lemen has taken sole charge of the Demorest medal contests in her county, making them always and everywhere in the highest sense educational. At our school of methods last July, Mrs. Lemen, although past eighty years of age, was a regular attendant in all the classes. Her little granddaughter, whose father is Col. John Sobieski, was with the aged saint, and took part in the medal contest with which our school closed.

She taught sixty-one years, but beyond books and beyond schools, association with Mrs. Lemen was the highest type of education. "Though dead she yet speaketh" and her influence will continue to be a mighty force for good among Missouri's women. Her example, her untiring activity under the weight of many years, will incite young and old to better work.

Dear Mother Lemen was in the Missouri delegation at the Boston Convention, and when she returned home gave a most glowing account of that mighty assembly to her townspeople. The first day of January, 1892, she spent in writing to hosts of friends and workers asking them to renew their allegiance to the Master, believing this would be an eventful year for Prohibitionists.

Possessed by inheritance of a noble nature, she added every mental acquirement—every spiritual grace. The Scripture text chosen for her funeral service was in every sense appropriate, "The path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

THE LATEST FROM WASHINGTON—CAPITAL EVENTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Two suggestive announcements appeared in Saturday's Washington Star, of two meetings, one under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., the other under the direction of another organization. Both these bodies met at the same hour, and within a short distance of each other. While the Hon. John G. Woolley, in behalf of the union, enchained a large audience in the Congregational Church with a very practical but magnetic address to young men, the others were discussing the proposed repeal of the law which closed saloons within one mile of the Soldiers' Home. Here is another of the constantly recurring illustrations of the need of a general prohibitory or constitutional enactment. Our friends who do not believe in taking temperance into politics must find themselves overburdened in continually defending so many small local option districts, that like the little Republics of ancient history, are subjected to perpetual attacks from without. A united army, battling for prohibition for the whole country, would put the enemy on the defensive, and prevent all these perpetually recurring local option contests.

THE RUSK BILL.

Mr. Rusk, who seeks by congressional action to amend the act passed a year ago prohibiting the granting of liquor licenses within one mile of the Soldiers' Home, is a Democratic representative from Baltimore; and those who know on what stuff the Democratic party of his district too largely feeds, will hardly be surprised at any attack he may make upon the temperance cause. The law, as it now stands, makes the prohibition area extend into the city as far as Rhode Island avenue, but Mr. Rusk's bill excepts all territory south of Florida avenue; thus exposing the 500 students of Howard University, as well as the large and rapidly increasing population of the intervening neighborhood, to all the horrible evils of the saloon, to say nothing of the increased temptation for the soldiers. According to the report of the District commissioners, during the past year in which the law has been in operation, there has been a decrease of forty-three bar-rooms and thirty-one wholesale places, and fifteen persons were in possession of their licenses at the time the bill was passed. Certainly, a law that has produced such beneficent results ought to be extended to the entire District. The Rusk amendment is now in the hands of the House committee, on the District of Columbia, and the eyes of the people are on that committee.

ALASKA.

Alas, Alaska! "Distance lends enchantment," and though so far away, thou, too, canst not escape the polluting fiend's embrace. Senator Dolph's Alaska License Bill is being persistently urged upon the committee on territories, who have it under consideration, and though it is earnestly hoped that committee will make an unfavorable report, the probabilities at present seem to be the other way. The bill recites that applicants for license shall be of "good character" (?); shall keep an "orderly (?) house"; shall sell on "week days" (?); and between six o'clock ante meridian and twelve o'clock midnight "only," and to persons other than Indians or minors under eighteen years of age (as though the poor Indian would be protected by any such provision as this, after opening saloons in the territory right among them). A gentleman, who is familiar with the territory and who has given the subject much study, declares that the Dolph Bill, which sets aside the stringent provisions of the Revised Statutes on the liquor question, will prove ruinous to the last degree to the natives.

In view of the threatened evil to Alaska, the Methodist ministers of this city appointed a committee at their last meeting to prepare a paper upon the subject, which will probably be presented to the committee on territories at an early date. Apropos of this license business, one misses the familiar face of Mr. Blair in the Senate chamber, whose staunch advocacy of prohibition is no longer heard at the capital.

JUDGE KIMBALL'S COURT.

If one would form an idea of what the saloons are doing in the Nation's capital, let him visit the police court. Just a half hundred were in the procession on Monday; and in almost every case liquor was the cause of arrest. The judge delivered an address before the Young Men's Christian Association a few weeks ago, and he averred that, year in and year out, the great majority of those who came before him were brought there by liquor.

THE GOLD CURE.

It has come at last. Chloride of gold and bichloride of gold—these are the phrases that meet the eye of the inebriate, and we are led to expect that very soon prohibitory laws will be altogether unnecessary, because nobody will want strong drink, and the demand ceasing, of course the supply must cease. Our courts will have little to do. High license, local option, prohibition, all these terms will become meaningless and obsolete. Meantime, the W. C. T. U. are holding day and night meetings at the Metropolitan M. E. Church, and the addresses of Mr. Woolley and Mrs. M. G. Snell, of Mississippi, stir up the lukewarm, and arouse the backslider, bringing the conviction that only by the united and persistent effort of all the friends of temperance can the District of Columbia be rid of the saloon.

* * *

The Temple Question Box.

PRACTICAL QUERIES AND REPLIES.

QUESTION.—Why are the names of those who give a certain amount of money placed upon the walls of the Temple? Is it not a foolish waste of money?

ANSWER.—The offer to place on marble tablets, in Willard Hall, the names of those who give one hundred dollars for themselves, or in memoriam for departed friends, was designed to induce persons to give gifts for the purpose of paying for the building, and at the same time convert Willard Hall into another Westminster Abbey, where for generations the names of the great departed heroes and heroines of the temperance host might have a fitting place of memorial, in an entirely fire-proof building, not subject to the ravages of our moist and changeable climate, which soon destroys the most costly monuments when exposed to the outer air. It is no waste of money, as the entire Hall is to be lined with marble. The idea is not to have a separate tablet for each name, but these tablets will be placed by states, with a suitable heading to each. The expense of carving the name will be slight, as a new and very rapid process, by sand-blast, is now being adopted, which we intend to use. By this method, instead of the letters being cut in, they will stand out beautifully on the polished surface of the marble.

Q.—Does the money for tablets apply on state funds from which a revenue is to come?

A.—The money sent in from whatsoever source in a state, is counted to that state's credit.

Q.—What per cent yearly income is assured to the state on the money sent?

A.—No certain income will be assured. Whatever net income the building yields will be divided, one-half going to the National society, and the other half to the states pro rata the amount each state has given toward the building. It is expected when the Temple is entirely paid for, that the stock will pay a dividend of twenty per cent.

President's Column.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.

AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., 161 La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, W. C. 57 Gordon Square.

NOT THE HOME WOMAN, BUT HUMANITY'S WOMAN.

A leading religious weekly furnishes the following contribution to its young women readers in their study of the woman question. It says:

Two types of women were presented to our mental vision almost simultaneously in the course of a morning's reading. One character was described in a private letter to a friend as follows: "She is one of the rare women whom we meet occasionally and read of often, who gives so many minutes every day to French and German and Greek, and the Sunday-school lesson, etc. She has exceptional mental ability and must be an inspiration to her husband, but I am told that no one ever thinks of going to her with any personal grief or trial." The other character is revealed in the pages of a little memorial volume of Mrs. Henry Clay Trumbull, recently published. There is no record of brilliant intellectual achievement, no summary of public service in any of the organized movements of the day. But we read: "A peculiar charm was her unmistakable personal interest in each and every individual with whom she was in conversation, or to whom she had an opportunity of ministering." A veteran postman who brought the daily mail to her home in Philadelphia, said of her, "She was the best woman who ever lived," as he recalled gratefully the cups of hot coffee she often had ready for him on stormy winter mornings. Testimonies of a similar nature abound in the book from those whom she served for years with a rare unselfishness. Which of these two characters seems the more attractive? After which type are you shaping your life?

As we read the paragraph, something called "righteous indignation" rose in our minds. We felt the injustice of setting the two characters over against each other, presenting these two types and asking the formative brain of girlhood to decide which should be her model, for the truth is, that not the slightest antagonism exists between them. A woman may study French, German and Greek, may have exceptional mental ability, and yet be precisely the woman to whom the humblest goes with her personal griefs and trials. We have known many such, whereas another who is declared to be "the best woman who ever lived" and "gives out cups of hot coffee on a stormy winter morning," may have a mentality that revels in the most abstruse philosophies, and finds its most inspiring element among the classic writings of antiquity and the choicest orators and poets of modern days. It is a pity to set these qualities in opposition one to another, for the impression left in untaught minds is, that somehow or other truth is opposed to charity, knowledge to gentleness, and achievement is incongruous with womanhood. Whoever makes this impression has done distinct damage to humanity and hindered the on-rolling of Christianity's chariot wheels, for to know and to achieve all that one can for the sweet sake of humanity, and the sacred sake of God, is life's true aim—and none more grievously need to find this out than the young women of these days. High ideals devoutly loved and devotedly followed are what we need to set before them, not the old type of woman, but the new; not the mediæval, but the modern; not the continental, but the American; not the home woman, but humanity's woman—she shall be the fittest survival, the crowning work of the great reformer, even Christ who came "to preach deliverance to the captive and . . . to set at liberty them that are bruised."

***

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Good friends, please cut this out, get signatures and send to Miss Alice Briggs, Evanston, Ill.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

C. Rohl Smith, a distinguished Danish sculptor who has done much for art in Europe, has been called to Chicago to do work for the World's Fair. He is now engaged modeling in clay the beautiful seal of the National W. C. T. U. for the temple. It is to be placed in the center of the pointed gothic stone finish over the doorway on the Monroe street entrance which leads to Willard Hall. It is to be cast in bronze and measures almost three feet across the center of the seal. A more lovely medallion can hardly be conceived now that space sufficient is allowed the sculptor to work out in detail the beautiful symbolism it represents. The Madonna and child would delight the eyes of Raphael himself. The pine of the North and the palmetto of the South are perfect in every detail. The cross stands out distinct with the graceful drapings of our National flag, making a fine background. Underneath the star which shines over the holy child is the monogram of the W. C. T. U. On the lower margin of the medallion is the legend in words large enough for the passers-by to read, "For God and Home and Every Land." Lady Somerset, who is considered an art critic of the highest order, pronounces our seal as modeled by Mr. Smith, a gem of art.

***

The white-ribboners of Nebraska in order to show their appreciation for their long tried and brave leader, Mrs. Hitchcock, are at work raising a hundred dollars for a tablet in her honor. In our next number we will tell what some of the other presidents of states are doing for the Temple.

***

A very caustic letter has been received from "A white-ribboner" (she does not give her name) because the writer of this column was thoughtless enough to say in the Temple items of January 21, "Hardly a union of any importance in the state of Minnesota but is at work raising a hundred dollars for the Temple." I certainly was unfortunate in the selection of the word importance. I should have said and meant to say, a union of any size, for I know quite as well as the writer of the letter that many small unions would gladly raise a hundred if they could, and the little they send in God's sight may be more valued than four times the amount sent by a large and more able union. I have always given so much credit in this column to the value of small gifts, sent either by individuals or unions when it cost great self-denial, that when I am unfortunate in the use of a word to express myself, a charitable construction should be put upon it. I beg the leniency of my white-ribbon sisters wherein I may wound any of them or make a mistake. If they only knew the burdens I am bearing and the tremendous work that is upon my shoulders, with health almost broken with the strain that I am under, they would be charitable. Often this column is written in great weariness late in the night after a hard day's work.

***

Minnesota is not the only state that is hard at work for the Temple. The new president of Texas, Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, of Fort Worth, writes the following cheering letter: "I shall write, speak, and otherwise labor for the ownership of that beautiful Temple. I believe in it with my whole heart, and shall not rest until we own it. I want Texas to come in for a goodly income. That she has done little previously is not a just criterion of what she is able to do." Nebraska is also coming bravely to the front in work for the Temple. The subject is kept constantly before the white-ribboners through their state paper, The Union Worker. The January number of this paper was devoted almost exclusively to articles about the Temple. Nebraska's broad-minded president, Mrs. Mary A. Hitchcock, writes as follows: "The Temple has risen from the 'imaginary to the real.' It now stands a thing of beauty; it will be a joy to all future generations; a fitting memorial to the permanency of our organization, a lasting monument to the name of one that saw in the night watches a vision of its beauty and our need of a home in which our National officers could carry on the work of this ever-increasing, world-wide society. As I looked upon this beautiful Temple, when in Chicago I said, 'Nothing is too good or too beautiful for those who are toiling day and night, through summer's heat and winter's cold; through weariness of body and mind; through discouragements and seeming defeats; through lack of sympathy and kind words where we most expected them.' And why should we not rear a monument to such perseverance, such love for 'Home and Native Land'?"

***

Probably no woman in America ever did more for the advancement of her sex than Mrs. Emma Willard, the founder of Troy Seminary. This glorious pioneer in the higher education for women deserves to be handed down to posterity as a benefactor of her race. So many hold her name in reverence, that by request I now make an appeal for a tablet to her memory in the Temple. Surely no more fitting place could be found for such a memento than in Willard Hall in the most beautiful building in America, reared as it has been by woman's hand. Would it not be a most suitable thing for teachers to combine and each send a dollar to such a tablet? Let the teachers be heard from.

***

Mrs. Elizabeth Manly, Evanston, Ill., sends a $100 check for the Temple. May F. Warner, of New York City, sends $100 for a tablet in honor of Eva M. Warner. A lady in Belvidere, Mo., sends $100 to have her name inscribed on a tablet—(she does not wish her name published). Mrs. Alice F. Chambers, Chicago, sends her check for $100. Mrs. H. C. Lamb, Dennison, Iowa, sends $50, the balance on a hundred dollars she had pledged; $25 comes from one of our hidden friends in Sandwich, Ill.; it is her third installment on a hundred dollar pledge. Maria Hale Gordon, of Boston, sends $35 which completes her pledge of a hundred dollars.

149 Ashland Boulevard.

Our Children.

TEMPERANCE TOWN.

[This is one of the songs sung at this Temperance Town.]

I'm a jolly temp'rance Blacksmith,
I can fit your horse with shoes,
You will see my head is level,
For no liquor do I use.

CHORUS:
Hurrah! Hurrah! We've put the evil down!
Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah for Temp'rance Town!

Of this thriving little village,
I'm the Storekeeper, you see,
But for whisky, beer, tobacco,
Let no person come to me.

If a Carpenter or Builder
You would like, just note my sign;
For I trust my head is level,
And my work true to the line.

Doctor: Oh, I'll always vote for temp'rance,
Crooked druggists, too, must go,
For my patients can't have liquor,
My prescriptions don't read so.

Baker: I've bread and cakes and pies enough,
To well supply you all:
So, if you're hungry, and would buy,
Just please give me a call.

Tailor: I sit and stitch with right good-will;
My heart is light and free,
Pray, if you need a suit of clothes,
Come, order it of me.

Oh, I'm a temp'rance Housekeeper,
I just stepped in to say;
You can tell that I am happy,
For I'm singing all the day.

All: We'll join together, hand in hand,
Three hearty cheers to give;
"For God and Home and Native Land"
We always mean to live.

—Lillian P. Bradford, in Marching Songs.

HOW BARBARA BECAME A HEROINE.

BY ELIZABETH FLINT MERRILL.

"Does 'oo want a fower, 'ittle dirl? My papa has lots pitty fowers."

A dainty little fairy of three years, all in white, with floating hair soft and shiny as thistledown, reached a dimpled fist full of crumpled flowers up to a meager slip of a girl some twelve or thirteen years of age, who had stopped by the way to look over the paling at the pretty picture of which the fairy was the center.

Bits of velvet lawn, masses of shrubbery wreathed in bloom, and withal the radiant child in their midst, was it not a veritable heaven to the eyes of the poor, forlorn, unkempt and uncared-for child who stood without to survey it? Her dark face lit up with a quick, glad smile as she thrust a brown hand through the fence to take the little one's offering.

"Ain't you a darling?" she exclaimed.

"Ess, I's mamma's darling, and papa's treasure, and burver's daisy, but my really, truly name's Eleanor, Eleanor Southcote Bowman. 'At's what's my name. What's 'oo name, 'ittle dirl?"

"I ain't got no nice, pretty name, like you have. My name's horrid, I hate it."

"Horwid? Is 'at 'our name?"

"Oh, no, I didn't mean that, you funny little midge. My name is Barbara."

"Barbawa, I likes Barbawa. Hasn't 'oo dot no uvver name?"

"Barbara Bayley, that's all."

"I's dot one, two, fee 'ittle kitties. Does 'oo like 'ittle kitties, Barbawa? My gray kittie katched me. See! Naughty kitty."

She held up the back of her plump, little hand which showed the mark of kitty's savage claw in a long, red scratch. The girl leaned over the low paling and caught and kissed the small fist. The child gave a little gurgle of laughter.

"I love 'oo, Barbawa. I will kiss 'oo fro 'ee fence."

The girl stooped and put her face close to the palings on a level with the child's to receive the proffered kiss.

At that instant a tall boy of fourteen appeared at a turn in the walk. "Eleanor," he called sharply, "what are you doing? Come away at once."

The two children sprang apart.

"Clear out of this," he continued, addressing Barbara. "What right have you to be talking to my little sister?"

The girl stood, apparently, unmoved, leaning on the paling in an attitude of sullen defiance, flashing hate and scorn at him from a pair of great black eyes.

"Didn't I tell you to leave? I will have you arrested if you come around here, you black fury." He was fairly choking with anger, for the girl only laughed scornfully.

"No, 'oo won't have my Barbawa wested, burver Philip. Oo're a naughty, naughty boy, and I'm doin' to tell my mamma. Let me do; let me do, I say."

It was a very furious little fairy that brother Philip held firmly by the hand, and she kicked and screamed so lustily that mamma, sitting on the piazza, quite out of sight, hearing the rumpus came hastily down the walk. Barbara at once took flight and was out of sight in an instant. Philip released the struggling child and she fled, sobbing, to her mother's arms.

"What is it all about, Philip?" said his mother.

"It's that black fury of a Bayley girl. She was making talk with Eleanor, and actually kissing the child through the fence. Just imagine it, mamma!"

"I do not see how she could harm Eleanor by kissing her, Philip. Was that all? And was all this loud and angry talk on your part because a poor child stopped to talk with, and kiss, your little sister? You have no proof that she intended harm in the least."

"But she might give Eleanor some horrid disease, mamma. Why, the girl is a perfect terror. Her father is that old, drunken Dick Bayley."

"She is all the more to be pitied, Philip. I think you will be ashamed of yourself when you have thought the matter over. My son should not forget to be a gentleman."

She took the child and went into the house, leaving Philip crest-fallen though still angry. He had conceived a strong dislike for the girl, first, on account of her connection with such a father, and secondly, on account of her wild, hoydenish ways, and a certain fierce, independence of look and manner which shocked his somewhat fastidious taste.

Barbara did not stop in her flight until she reached the miserable shanty in the outskirts of the town, which she called home, and where she lived alone, with her poor, drink-enslaved father, for the child's mother had died when Barbara was a mere baby, and it was after that that Dick had taken to drink, going lower and lower every year, while the child was left to grow up uncared for, with no more restraint than a veritable savage. She went to school when she chose, and stayed away at will. She was conceded to be unusually quick-witted and intelligent, but declared to be sullenly stubborn and wholly untamable.

Two friends, indeed, the child had, and these were Mary McCree and her crippled boy, Billy. Billy's father had been killed by a premature blast in the quarries, and so the mother had to go out washing to support herself and the lad, who had not always been a cripple. There was nothing Barbara would not do for these friends, and more especially for the disabled boy. She brought him wild flowers from the woods, books from the public library and lessons from school when it was not possible for him to be in attendance, which, indeed, was the greater part of the time.

When Barbara reached her desolate home she threw herself on the floor and gave way to a storm of weeping. "I hate him!" she cried, clinching her small hands, "I wish I could kill him! I do! I do!"

The storm had spent itself when she heard her father's uncertain steps approaching the door. She sprang up and began making some preparations for their meager supper.

Dick was a good fellow if he would only let rum alone. He now and then had spasms of remorse over his manner of life, and at such times the child would profit to a small extent. He had never been inclined to be brutal in his cups. To-night he brought home to Barbara a pair of new shoes of which the child had long stood in need, but which she had long since despaired of obtaining. She was greatly pleased and went about her tasks with alacrity, for the moment quite forgetting the recent injustice that had filled her soul with such bitterness and wrath.

After supper her father went out, and Barbara well knew that the balance of his day's wages would find its way into the till of Pat Rooney, who kept the saloon just beyond the railroad.

After clearing away the supper things, she took her new shoes and ran over to show them to her friends, the McCrees. She returned before nine o'clock and crawled into her wretched little bed and was soon fast asleep.

How long she had been asleep she did not know, but she waked with the impression that the night was far advanced and that her father had not returned. She sat up in bed and listened, but the house was as silent as the grave. The town clock struck two.

Her father was seldom out until midnight. What i he had fallen on the railroad track like Pete Anderso who was run over by the night express and cut into piece only a few months before? Pete was just going hom from Rooney's.

The thought troubled her. She got up, struck a matc and assured herself that her father was not in the house She hastily dressed and went out into the night, o rather the early morning in search of him.

Accustomed to roaming about at any and all times, sh had no thought of fear. The moon was shining and sh scanned the wayside closely as she sped along. H might have fallen there. The streets were deserted, an everything in the town seemed as silent as death.

(Concluded next week.)

What Shall We Call It?

DEAR CHILDREN:—The editor of THE UNION SIGNA has invited me, oh, so kindly, to take possession of a cor ner nook of this paper on the children's own page, ther to meet each week the boys and girls of the great whit ribbon family. What a happy prospect this will be And how we will enjoy coming each week, rain or shine right to this bright spot which we can call "our ver own."

Some of you have already sent in names for this corne of ours in answer to the editor's request of two weeks ago Many have not yet had a chance to do so for THE UNIO SIGNAL has to travel many miles from Chicago before i shines into some of your homes. Will you who have no already done so, please send in a name very soon? The we will not have to wait too long before making a choice

AUNT JANE.

A LITTLE GIRL'S IDEA.

I am a little girl eight years old. I have a little broth er named Eddie, six years old. Mamma has been read ing to us to-day from the children's page in THE UNIO SIGNAL, and we want to help answer the question abou the name for our corner. We like to get around ou mamma's chair and have her read and talk to us so well so we think "Around Auntie's Easy Chair," would be good name. Your little friend,

HILDA MARY VIVIAN.

Wellington, Ill.

This is such a good letter. A little girl who wants "t help" will always be happy and have friends. Hilda Aunt Jane thinks your idea a real good one, and has pu the name on her list.

SOFT SHELLED NUTS.

7.

CHARADE.

By gracious ways and friendly mien,
By sympathy oft shown;
By gentle tact and helpfulness,
My first is always known.

When the grass grows green, the leaves appear,
The birds sing a merry tune,
And our hearts respond; we may be sure
That our second's coming soon.

At the close of happy daylight hours
Of the sun my third is said
When 'neath the west horizon's line
He dips his glowing head.

Across the wide, Atlantic's waves
From a far English home,
To benefit humanity
My lovely whole has come.

8.

WORD SQUARE.

1. The greatest thing in the world.
2. A precious stone.
3. Large wagons.
4. Something beside.

9.

DECAPITATIONS.

1. Behead a common article of food and leave to devour
2. Behead to swallow, and leave an artificial body o water under cover.
3. Behead a food prepared by baking, and leave learned
4. Behead a juice and leave the same.
5. Behead a color, and leave to roam.
6. Behead the best part of a thing, and leave twent quires.

Answers to these puzzles given in three weeks. Sen all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNIO SIGNAL, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED FEBRUARY 11.

1. Enigma:—"The Children's Hour."
2. Anagram:—Alcohol.
3. Riddle:—Water.

The Household.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

BY LINDA SCHERMERHORN HIBNER.

Thou who alone of all earth's sovereign few
Sweet singers, spared awhile from choirs above,
Hadst language large enough for woman's love,
Hadst courage this most daring thing to do—
To bare thy woman's heart to all men's view,
In song divinely sweet and strong to prove
The holiness, the lowliness of love,—
Take from thy songless sisters tribute due.
We give thee thanks, that thou hast given speech
To us whom God made mute. All thou hast said
Our lips re-echo, lingering over each
Sublime soul-utterance, blessing God who gave Thy "star-tuned harp," and with the power to reach
Its utmost limit sent thee to our aid.

Hecla, S. D.

DRAWN TOGETHER BY LITTLE WAXEN HANDS.

BY ELLA GUERNSEY.

"And now for the quiet afternoon in my own cool snuggery! I've earned the treat, as I've swept the house from attic to cellar, and baked bread and cake to last awhile. Dear, dear, this August heat is prostrating, and I have to do for six healthy, hungry people. I am so glad to rest. I'll read my magazine," said Mrs. Byrne, an energetic housekeeper who looked well to the ways of her household.

Mrs. Byrne's knack of "turning off work," making things "go" when she took the helm, was the admiration of many women less capable.

Aware of her "talents," Mrs. Byrne was in danger of losing all sympathy for the unfortunate women who must battle with debility, and stagger under burdens too heavy to be borne by weak shoulders.

Sympathetic women when intent upon comforting the sorrowing, or carrying aid into poverty-stricken homes, were learning to avoid calling upon Martha Byrne for a donation.

Mrs. Byrne looked about her pretty room, all in beautiful order. The costly china and silver toilet articles and the polished granite trimmings of the "handsomest bedroom set in town," were a delight to the beauty-loving eye. The couch and easy chairs were inviting, the window blinds lowered just right to exclude the hot sun, and several new periodicals lay upon a table at hand.

"I hope that no one will call. The children are all in the country, and I mean to rest. I've richly earned it. Why can't every woman have a home like mine? There is a great plenty in this world for those who—work for it. Ah! what is going on across the way?" said Mrs. Byrne, peeping through the blinds, then dropping them with a contemptuously uttered, "It's that funeral! I wonder who will go? That little hovel is a disgrace to this part of town. Mrs. Warder has no energy; from morning until night all she did was to amuse that baby. I think he drinks. Such neighbors are annoying. If there aren't some of the flower mission ladies going into that house carrying wreaths! Such foolishness, and over a baby, too."

Mrs. Byrne took up her magazine and read, "The poor ye have always with you." She looked out again through the "peep-hole;" an anguished cry startled her. Again she read—"The poor ye"—

Hastily taking up another magazine the words glimmered and danced before her eyes, "The poor ye have always with you."

A south wind wafted into her ears a wail, "Rachel" weeping for her child. Mrs. Warder was indeed one of the weak ones, weak in health and in mind, a double appeal for kindly sympathy.

"And you in your pride and strength withhold even the cup of water, or a hand pressure to this stricken mother," said a spirit voice to Mrs. Byrne.

She looked at the marble clock, which had cost fifty dollars. There was yet time to attend that humble funeral, and speedily Mrs. Byrne was in the despised house.

The father, with white, thin face and the poor mother, both clean and decently attired, sat beside "little Maggie," a pure, sweet flower lying in a cheap casket. Snowy blossoms beautified the bare room and sympathetic women were "looking after things." A tenderness came into the heart of the "capable woman," entirely new to it. With a sweetness born of human love she sang tenderly:

"For He gathers in His bosom witless, worthless lambs like me,
An' carries them Himsel' to His ain countrie."

The hour spent by Mrs. Byrne in that miserable little room was a blessed one. The crust of self-esteem and selfishness was melted by the sunbeams of pity and love, and a mantle of charity was begun in the loom of human sympathy which would cover a multitude of the faults she had hitherto mercilessly dragged from their hiding places and exposed to view when people failed to "toe the mark."

In a few days after "little Maggie" was laid to rest, Mrs. Warder came timidly into the cheery kitchen where Mrs. Byrne stood at a table mixing a salad. Awkwardly responding to the pleasant greeting, the poor woman said:

"I—we—that is, my man, thought that I ought to tell you how thankfnl we were to you—for—for—singin' so lovely for—Maggie. You see—she was—so—sweet—an' precious. My man was most crazy—when—she was took—an' said luck was—ag'in us, an' no use to try. I knew that meant he'd go to drinkin' ag'in. Miss, he has beat me—when in drink; that's what ails my head. He hurt it an' I've been confused ever since. He said you was scornful, an' didn't think our baby fit to be buried respect'ble. We hadn't a dollar in the house.

"Jack knows better now; you hain't proud, or you wouldn't have sung so sweet about the little one's being carried in His arms. An' the ladies brought sweet flowers. Jack knows now that you do think we have—souls. He is goin' to try to do better, an' I'm wantin' some washin' or ironin'; I can do linen beautiful. Jack an' me are tired, so tired of half starvin' an' we've looked so often at you, settin' in your porch, dressed so nice. We said it wasn't just—that you should have it all an' us nothin'. Jack said you held yourself above us, but we know now that warn't so, for you cried over little Maggie. You'll tell me how to keep things nicer, for I want the company of my man, since baby's gone. He allus said it warn't any sort of a home to stay in; an' I might have kept it better. I want to work; teach me how."

"I will. Mr. Byrne will help Jack into something to do. A restful, cleanly home, if it be only one room, is what we may all have, if we use our energy," returned Mrs. Byrne.

From that day the little woman has lent a hand in the blessed work of healing the sick and comforting the mourner.

Many have wondered at the friendship existing between Martha Byrne and weak Mrs. Warder, drawn together by the waxen baby hands of little Maggie.

A LETTER TO JOHN FROM HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW.

BY CAROLINE E. MERRICK.

MY DEAR JOHN:—Once upon a time an old woman lived in a pretty house on a public road. She had a pet bird. It was a rara avis. It was the sweetest, cutest, daintiest little songster you ever heard; the old woman loved it better than anything in the world. When it lay in the warm nest without a feather to its back, naked as it came out of its shell, blind almost as a bat, and greedy, too, as any pig, she thought it had angel's wings, and it was a perfect specimen of its species; so she went into ecstacies over it every day, especially when it learned to splash around in its bath or to set up a little twittering song in the cage. Oh, how pleased she was to see the forlorn, helpless little thing mature day by day into new strength and beauty, until she thought it had reached perfection!

This poor woman was not very wise. The bird loved to look out on the green trees and to enjoy the fresh air at the door, so it was exhibited and admired by everybody who passed that way, and the owner was proud and happy, and not a little vain of her treasure.

One day a stranger man came along. He looked up and saw the little bird in its pretty cage, swinging back and forth, and yet singing with all its might at the very top of its voice. He stopped; he listened to the tuneful song; he took note of it all—the fair and delicate plumage, the graceful form—until he was completely fascinated and enchanted, so that he was not willing to leave the spot. The man said he could neither eat nor sleep unless he was there; so he came every day for weeks and weeks until the neighbors began to make remarks, and one of them went so far as to accuse the man of a design to steal the old woman's pet, for he could hardly keep his hands off its clean, soft feathers.

He would come with beautiful things and even when the old woman remonstrated he would hand out fruit and sugar plums. The man persisted and firmly insisted that the bird loved sugar and he loved the bird, until at last he came right out and asked her to make him a present of her pet. Easter was approaching and he said he wanted it for a holy gift. I tell you there was a panic in the old soul's heart and consternation in the house, when she heard this bold request in that commanding tone. The neighbors said that was the way with pets—they never lasted. It was to be expected that they should change hands. So the old woman, after thinking a long time and shedding many tears, got ready to give away her precious treasure. People came from far and near to see the transaction and she made a feast when she felt more like going to a funeral; the minister came and gave his benediction and the man took a journey to a far country, carrying the pet bird and leaving desolation in the pretty home by the roadside.

After awhile, however, the old woman pined and grieved so for a sight of her pet, that one night she concluded not to stand it any longer, and determined to free her mind to this selfish, heartless man instead of quietly crying her old eyes out in her loneliness. So here she goes—sending this letter.

John, John, you are that cruel man and Lucy is our bird. Easter is coming, will you not bring our darling to see her beloved mother? She is yours now, but will you not come and let my old eyes rest upon my child's sweet face once more before I die? I gave her to you can you not, won't you bring her to me, John, this Easter time? Please do!

This letter is from Lucy's mother.

New Orleans, La.

WALKING IN HIS SHADOW.

BY LOIS S. SMITH.

How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God, therefore, the children of men put their trust under the shadow of Thy wings.

It was a hot September day, and it semeed all too soon for the summer visitors to be returning to the heated brick houses of their city homes. But "the season" was ended, papa had returned to business, the home-schools were open, and the non-residents of Ocean Grove were crowding every outward train. With sun-burned faces and hands well covered with the "popular shade of tan," their spruce new suits, that had glistened in the June sunshine as they journeyed hitherward, grown limp and dull, if not actually "tattered and torn," by the wear and tear of two months' life at the seashore, the homeward bound procession pressed steadily through the great gateways at Broadway and Main Avenue from morning until night.

Taking an after-dinner seat on the east porch that I might catch the ocean breeze, my attention was soon attracted by a mother and her little girl, scarcely more than three years old. Evidently they were foot passengers from the railroad station. With one hand the mother carried a heavy traveling bag, and with the other she held a sun umbrella of ample dimensions; both hands being thus occupied, she was unable to lead the little one who was following as best she could, and as they passed me, I heard her say, "Walk in my shadow, baby, and you will not feel the heat." With a bunch of pretty beach grasses in her hand, and her dearest dollie hugged tightly in her arms, the wee toddler endeavored to obey. She drew nearer to her mamma, and so, "walking in her shadow," they went on out of my sight. But the sweet lesson that the incident brought to my spiritual apprehension remained like "dew upon the mown grass." As I looked after them with moistened eyes, I thought: "A man shall be as a shadow of a great rock in a weary land." "Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice." Be comforted, my soul! Be as a little child! Put away endless reasoning and philosophizing and amid the dust and heat of life's trials and sorrows, "walk in His shadow!"

Baby knew nothing of the scientific facts about light and shade, but, as she heard her mother's voice, she looked up to her face and instinctively drew nearer to her, until her shadow enveloped and shielded her from the fierce rays of the sun. Beloved, let us not think it strange, nor be amazed "concerning the fiery trials that are to try us, as though some strange thing happened unto us," but rather, let us draw nigh to God as the little child drew near her mother, while our hearts cry out: "Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me! For my soul trusteth in thee. Yes, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast."

Ocean Grove, N. J.

"THE word became flesh" that finally the flesh might become the Word.

WHATEVER tends to make us ill-contented with ourselves, and more earnest aspirants after perfect truth and goodness, is gold, though it comes to us all molten and burning, and we know not our treasure till we have had long smarting.—George Eliot.

I WOULD rather be what God chose to make me than the most glorious creature I could think of For to have been thought about—born in God's thought—and then made by God, is the dearest and most precious thing in all thinking.—George MacDonald.

UNION SIGNAL
WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH,
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS. } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: The Ideal Sunday—The English Situation—The Welcome Guest—Miss Catharine Gurney..... 8, 9
WATCH-TOWER:..... 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem, Chicago Against the World, by H. U. Johnson—Recollections of Noted Men and Women, by Lady Henry Somerset—Railroad Ties, by John G. Woolley—Liquor on the Columbian Fair Grounds, Eminent Opinions 2, 3, 4
CORRESPONDENCE: The Latest from Washington, Capital Events—An Aged Saint at Rest—Temperance Temple Items..... 4, 5
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN:..... 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, Temperance Town—How Barbara Became a Heroine..... 6
WHAT SHALL WE CALL IT?..... 6
THE HOUSEHOLD: Poem, Elizabeth Barrett Browning—Drawn Together by Little Waxen Hands—A Letter to John from His Mother-in-Law—Walking in His Shadow..... 7
QUEEN'S GARDENS: The Little Friend I Lost..... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: New Jersey, Virginia, Colorado, Nebraska, Utah, Louisiana—News in a Nutshell.....10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: The Exposition and the April Prayer Week—A Ringing Call—Receipts for Temperance Temple..... 12
OUR LIBRARY TABLE:..... 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT:..... 13
SIGNAL NOTES:..... 14

And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.—Col. 3: 17.

THE IDEAL SUNDAY.

It would be a most interesting study to ascertain the home training of white-ribboners in respect to Sunday observance. Probably this country has not another body of women more devoted to that cause than are the members of the W. C. T. U. Our superintendent, Mrs. Josephine C. Bateham, is descended from a New Englander, who was a distinguished professor in Oberlin College, and whose rock-ribbed ethics were imparted to a daughter, whose heroic history proves her to be the loyal successor of her father's character and opinions. In the home of the President of the National W. C. T. U., New England ideas have always set the key-notes of conduct. While the mother was less minute in her observances, the father would not open a letter or look for a word in the dictionary on the Sabbath day. The regimen became somewhat oppressive to the blithe young spirits of the children, and possibly helped to bring about that natural rebound of which we read in the lives of Lyman Beecher's young folks. A residence of several years abroad added a further modifying influence, and now in sober earnest, an effort will be made to set forth what seems, to one at least, to be the ideal Sunday for an American. First of all, it is not Puritanical, it is not after the pattern seen under the legality of a hundred years ago upon New England soil. The earliest rhyme we learned at home upon this sacred theme, ran thus:

"I'll awake and rise at the dawn of day
For I must not sleep holy time away."

This now seems to us altogether unreasonable. In the light of modern science and modern thought—both of which are handmaids of the Lord if we will only claim them—it may be as holy a thing as one can do to rest longer on Sunday than any other day. The body has forged its way to the front as having certain inalienable rights, and among them are life, recuperation, and Sunday rest. The jingling couplet takes no cognizance of man, save as a disembodied spirit, when the facts are, that although his forehead is lifted toward the skies, his feet are firmly planted on the earth. The weary brain, nerve and muscular system cry out for rest, and the rhythmic seventh day interval seems specially adapted to insure it. In this generation, when the printed page dominates all other forces as a light-bringer, the attendance at church services lacks the impetus that it had when the pastor was the dictionary and encyclopedia of the parish, its intellectual electric battery, and when the quickening of thought could hardly be achieved so well as by going to hear him preach.

In these days, too, the family life has altogether changed, the religion of the fireside needs cultivating, the privacy of the home must be protected, and for the deepening of affection between parents and children and the outblossoming of all those sweet and holy sympathies it would be well that our people remain at home more than they do upon the day of Christ. These are the times of competition never before equaled in the world's history. The hand grows weary with the completion of its many tasks. Artisans, business men and women, professional workers all need a Sabbath for the rest of hand as well as brain and heart. Ministers are under stress in these days such as is borne by hardly any other class. They must compete with the bristling style of the daily newspaper, the crisp brightness of the magazine, the freshness of the newly issued book. To require of them two sermons in one day seems to us a senseless cruelty.

To our minds the ideal Sunday would involve an hour or two of extra rest as a good, solid, physical basis of holiness,—for we cannot forget that the word means wholeness, wholesomeness, healthfulness, sanity. Then after a breakfast simpler than usual (that those who help in the household may themselves have longer time for rest,) we would ask all hands in to family prayers, making that a most delightful service of music, repeating passages of Scripture, combined with a brief selection by each from the noblest utterances of poets and philosophers, followed by whole-souled singing in which all should join, and tender, loving prayer, closing with the prayer of our Lord that all voices and hearts might therein mingle. Then church, with devout and earnest hearts worshiping God in the public audience, confessing our gratitude, love, and dependence, joining our voices in hymns of praise and reverently adding our prayers to those voiced by the minister. Then, home, not to a dinner in seven courses, five or three, but a simple, homely meal which shows again consideration for those who are a part of our households and whose rights on a New Testament basis are as great as our own whether we think so or not. It would do away with the weary, flushed-faced maid in the kitchen struggling to get up just those delicate dishes that the master of the house specially delights in. It would help to simplify the tastes of children and to develop in them that sweet sense of universal brotherhood which has in it more happiness than all the viands of the epicure or the gratified pride that rejoices in the trappings of the fine equipage waiting at the church door. This would forever do away with the coachman sitting on his box throughout the service and wondering why some are called to worship and some to hold the horses during the interval. Then, for all members of the family, the Sunday-school at three o'clock or four, the gospel temperance meeting, visitation of the sick and those who do not attend church—this work to include about two hours,—then a simple, toothsome supper, and the evening at home giving rest to all and enriching the fireside with the charm of leisure, social intercourse, sweet music, books, companionship. Meanwhile the minister would not have to cudgel his brains for a second sermon to a sparse audience, and husband and wife, parents and children would positively enjoy the opportunity to become acquainted with each other. To our minds this is an ideal program of Sunday observance, and whether we like it or not the whole trend and tendency sets toward it. Household religion is gaining ground more rapidly than at any previous period; the gospel song, the international lesson, the delightful religious and philanthropic magazines and weeklies are all combining to this end.

In such a delineation there can of course be no hard and fast rule. In our great cities there should be Sunday evening services for the younger class of people, who, having no homes might be at a loss how to invest their time but for this beneficent opportunity. In our larger towns, too, and perhaps our villages, some evening gathering will be useful for those who have not homes, but we would make of it a praise service or a service of song rather than a repetition of the morning meeting with a new sermon.

We have not here entered into a discussion of the Sunday newspaper, the Sunday train and tramway, the opening of picture galleries, museums, libraries and expositions. To our own lives all these are foreign. The department of Sabbath Observance in our National W. C. T. U. works against them, and we stand pledged as follows in the words given by our National superintendent several years ago:

"The following personal pledge I take (works of necessity and mercy always excepted), and I urge all comrades to do the same, not only as a religious observance, but in the interest of the wage workers, who, to the number of three millions, or one in every six families, are deprived of their rest day, largely through the inconsiderateness of the Christian public.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE PLEDGE RECOMMENDED BY THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

I agree,

1. To observe the Sabbath as a day of rest and worship.

2. To neither purchase nor patronize Sunday news papers.

3. To use my influence, by word and example, against railroad and steamboat travel and excursions.

4. Not to patronize any store, barber shop, news-stand, drug store (except for medicines), bakery, or any other place of unnecessary work on the Sabbath, and to use my influence to close them.

5. Not to send or call for mail on the Sabbath.

6. To make the Sabbath work at home as light and simple as possible that all may enjoy the privileges of the day.

7. To use my influence for legislation that will protect the Sabbath as a day of rest and worship."

For ourselves we are confident that the American Sunday must assert itself and win its way into power, as the distinctly confessed substitute on the part of the Christian people for the Puritanic Sunday that is already practically gone, though it lingers in theory and causes searchings of heart in many to whom it is but a hereditary trait and a reverent memory.

The Sunday closing of the saloon is so vital to a well-ordered day of rest that outside the circle of those who make money from the sale of alcoholics and those who are devoted to their use, hardly an apologist can be found for the open saloon on the world's great day of rest. It would be well if temperance people—divided on so many issues—could unite in a national effort for Sunday closing, such as was made with most beneficent results in Scotland and Wales. To our minds it seems important that a broad distinction should be made between the Sabbath of the Old Testament and the Sunday of the new. One was enshrined in law, the other is radiant with the gospel; one represents Moses, the other stands for Christ.

THE ENGLISH SITUATION.

It is now the opinion of those best qualified to judge that the great Parliamentary elections will not take place before the late summer. There is no just reason why the present government should dissolve now. The result at Rossendale, January 24th, may well frighten the conservatives, for the Gladstonian candidate polled sixty-six more votes than Lord Hartington did in 1885, and beat the Unionist candidate by a majority of 1,225. For such a result to be achieved at Lord Hartington's very door is sufficiently significant. The Conservatives had thought to dissolve Parliament during the harvest, when thousands of men are away from home—most of them Liberal voters, but it is not now believed that even for this reason the party in power will dare dissolve Parliament in midsummer.

It is more than probable that Gladstone will be returned to power with a large majority. He will then secure the passage of a "one man, one vote" bill (thus taking from landed proprietors the plurality of votes to which, by ancient theory they are entitled as representing land), and then the great Prime Minister will go again to the country to reinforce his legions before dealing with home rule. Meantime, the friends of temperance may succeed in slipping in some temperance measure, although there is not much hope in the presence of the great overmastering issue to which the powers of the "Grand Old Man" have long been dedicated. Still, the majority will be pledged to the United Kingdom Alliance program (local option and Sunday closing) and much will depend on the pressure from the country. As long as Gladstone lives the Liberal party will be united; but when he is gone, the progressive element in England is likely to have trouble with Sir Charles Dilke, who is blinding the English working man, by going in for the eight hour bill, and posing as "injured innocence." He is likely to be returned for the Forest of Dean, and once in Parliament, his place will be on the front benches from his right as Privy Counsellor. People forget so easily, and the working men have never grasped the facts of his case even. London society will swallow a good deal, but it could not swallow Dilke, and this is where they are clearer-sighted than the people at large.

Hugh Price Hughes, the great leader of the Methodists, thinks the Liberal party will split up over Dilke when Gladstone is no longer here, for the present leader will never admit him to the Cabinet. The Non-conformists will not have him either, and thousands of his warmest adherents would go against Gladstone himself if he ventured to support Sir Charles Dilke, who, while one of the ablest men in England, has proved himself one of the most corrupt. It is pitiable to think how the people's interests will be retarded and valuable time wasted quarreling over this one man. Never was there a more salient illustration of the Scripture saying that "one sinner destroyeth much good."

The "one man, one vote" is a right principle, though many say that property should carry representation with it, but the principle of "a life for a life," "a man for a man," is broader and more just. Why not then "a woman for a woman"? Surely we need this weapon of protection as much as men do, if not more, but the Liberals do not agree to this, and there has been a misunderstanding of the position taken by Gladstone. He is a great statesman, but bigoted in religion, intolerant of the Non-conformists, and extremely narrow on the woman question. A weak cause makes weak arguments, and nothing can be more illogical and foolish than those brought forward by the Liberal leaders when they write down the cause of equal franchise.

But the longest lane will have a turning. Lord Salisbury has declared for the ballot for women because he believes that the majority would stand with the Conservative party. In this he is, we believe, mistaken, but his advocacy has already given amazing power to the movement. Armed with the municipal ballot and having used it for the protection of their homes in the municipal and school elections where they have been tried, women will ere long win the Parliament franchise which is all that is now denied them in Great Britain.

Strange to say, England is in advance of the United States on this issue. A good, thorough revival of religion would do more than anything else to promote the enfranchisement of women in the mother country; there is great deadness in all of the churches. The apathy of Christians is almost invincible, the established church teaching one gospel and the Dissenters quite another. The state church will not take up reforms; it is quite too stereotyped for that, but the heart-warmth of a sweeping revival would open men's eyes to the golden rule doctrine which has been at the basis of everything that they have done for women. "Put yourself in her place" is the final argument for woman suffrage and will yet prevail; then we shall see prohibition with enforcing officers back of the law, and the great world will take an upward turn in the spiral of its everlasting progress toward God and brotherhood.

MISS CATHARINE GURNEY.

It is admitted on all hands to-day that separate bodies require separate workers. And when the care of the police of England was first laid on the heart of the woman who has been to them mother and sister for the last fourteen years, there was, perhaps, never a movement which so strongly emphasized the necessity for individual work. The Christian Police Association has now grown to be one of England's institutions. It began in a very small way in Miss Gurney's own home. A class for policemen having been started, one by one the men who came out and gave their hearts to God, asked to start an association which should reach out helping hands to the whole force and enlist the sympathy of the men.

In 1883 several ladies interested in the movement met at Miss Gurney's house, and rules were drawn up for such an association. At the next meeting sixty policemen were present, and those who had under God's guidance planned this work, were rejoiced to hear from the mouths of many men how they had been waiting for the help which had come to them when it was so much needed. The full approval of the London Police Commissioners was obtained. Money subscription was not asked as a condition of membership, and the work grew with amazing rapidity. Exeter Hall is now filled every year at the annual meetings, the men come up from all parts of England; enthusiastic speeches are made by the "guardians of the peace," and many have gone to their work filled with the love which enables them to deal with those with whom they come in contact, not with the sternness born of their hard duty, but with the gentle tenderness that speaks of a love within.

Miss Gurney has been for years an indefatigable worker. The Police Association has 183 branches in England, Ireland, Scotland and Australia, and in South and West Africa. She is now in the United States endeavoring to rouse an interest in the work, and has met with much encouragement in this direction. She has held meetings in most of the large cities, her chief object being to enlist the sympathies of Christian women to enable her to establish a friendly relation with those men who so need love and sympathy in their somewhat hard and difficult lives.

TEMPERANCE RESTAURANT SCHOOL OF METHODS.

The varied fortunes that have attended white-ribboners in their efforts to establish temperance restaurants and hotels have led to the plan of having a school of methods, so to speak, by training in which, women adapted to that work may become experts.

Mrs. E. A. Russell, of Minneapolis, Minn., has made a magnificent success of the W. C. T. U. Coffee House where over $100,000 have been received within three years, and 2,300 persons are often fed in one day.

Mrs. Russell is a genius in her line, full of resources, and understands by a lifetime of experience all the minutiæ of successful hotel and restaurant management. We advise local unions wishing to establish a restaurant to send a woman adapted to that work to Mrs. Russell for thorough training, with the object lesson of the coffee house she has established under the auspices of the Central W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis as their training school.

One of the good points of Mrs. Russell's work is that she has in the coffee house, a plain, large room, in which on Sunday mornings, she convenes the employés, of whom there are over one hundred, for prayers. She also has a Sunday-school for their benefit, and they are nearly all Christians. Lady Henry Somerset, Anna Gordon and others addressed them lately and some leading temperance worker does so almost every week. This room has been placed at the disposal of the industrial young women of the city, who are at liberty to bring their lunches every noon and who purchase a cup of coffee, thus securing for themselves comfort and good associations during their noon hour. This helps them in a practical way and helps the restaurant, besides making its work known throughout the business community.

THE death of Margaret, Lady Sandhurst, has left a vacancy in the ranks of English women which they will find difficult to fill. She was always in the forefront of the battle, and ever ready to defend the rights of her sisters upon public and political platforms by her social influence. A noble woman in every sense of the word, she has done good service for the Liberal cause and stood amongst the few brave spirits who came forward to be elected for the London county council and who were returned by large majorities. The "invincible ignorance," however, which has hitherto debarred women from their rights, was never more manifest than when, after long discussion, a law was passed which forbade them to take the place to which they had been called by the public voice. "In London," said Lady Sandhurst, "mountains must be removed before Liberalism shall triumph, but I am going to be among those who shall help to remove those mountains. It is the working classes, men and women, that we must set right and I mean to do my political work in the slums." Her work was done not only among the poor for whose rights she fought, but among the sick and sorrowful. She had about her that strange magnetism which seems to triumph over pain, and in the hospital to which she daily went and which she supported entirely, her strong, soft hand left many a patient in a deep, quiet sleep which brought forgetfulness of suffering and gratefulness to the heart of the patient. In a little house among the green lanes in the neighborhood of London she was hailed not as a patroness, but as a mother-heart by the twenty little cripples, children of the poor whom Lady Sandhurst had picked up here and there in her wanderings through London. The little children would crawl around her and their pale faces light up with smiles as, one by one, she took them on her knee and stroked the poor deformed limbs and the little aching backs, with tender words and that rare smile that lighted her somewhat stern face, as the sunlight breaks through the gray clouds on a winter's day. As a political speaker and an advocate of all that affects woman's progress Lady Sandhurst was a pillar of strength. She would plead the need of union among the workgirls, and the cause of woman suffrage with a heart filled with a deep desire for woman's best good, and a steady, well-balanced judgment which gave power to her utterances and logic to her argument.

THE Progressive Age, our prohibitory paper in Minneapolis, has an editorial worthy of thought. It notes with pleasure the fact that the press of the People's party gives more and more attention to the liquor monopoly, and says that the drift of sentiment indicates that the declaration of 1892 will be against the liquor traffic as a monopoly. The form of expression would be different from that employed by Prohibitionists, but the practical outcome very much the same. "The great dream of public life for the uplift of humanity is the federation of the reform forces in America. Out of federation there is no hope. In narrowness are defeat and disaster. Let us combine all those who love humanity and hate the practices indulged in by its enemies." In another editorial the point is made that the platform might be more general than we have been wont to frame. Some have thought we should say simply this: "Our party is organized to protect the home against the saloon, the masses against the classes, the wage-workers against monopolies, the government against place-hunting, patronage-supported politicians, the nation against the rule of parties whose bodies yet remain but whose spirits have departed; we stand for the larger hope, the purer present life, the truer freedom, and ask all those to rally to the white flag of reform whose hearts are like-minded with us and whose hands are ready to hold aloft this banner." It seems as if there might be light ahead if we could combine on this position. Practically we ought to have a committee appointed from the Prohibition party and another from the People's party,—these two by patient conference to work out such a platform as they can unite to recommend, then go before the two great conventions for its adoption. Then let the two conventions fuse and nominate their candidates. We believe this is altogether practicable; that it ought to come about and will, if there is enough prayer and good common sense brought to bear on this greatest problem of our present national life by patriots, philanthropists and Christians.

The Watch-Tower.

Many of our white-ribboners think it would be better in taking the collection to speak of it as "a free-will offering." This is a phrase that goes deeper into the merits of the question and is more in consonance with the spirit of the gospel. As a free-will offering from the people the collection has an explicit significance, and is a saving grace.

***

Joseph Pinkham, of Minnesota, one of the temperance leaders of the country, in a great railroad accident at Havre de Grace, when the concussion had driven one shoulder down into the middle of his breast, and the breast bone almost out on the other side, besides breaking his ribs, heard God's voice saying to him, "My son, I yet have work for you to do." When the doctors examined him six hours later, they said, "You cannot live beyond to-night." He sturdily answered, "God told me He has work for me to do; I shall work twenty years yet. Put me together the best you can." Of such stout stuff are the temperance workers made in these difficult days.

***

The following are a few of the choice definitions of a kiss received in reply to the prize offer of London Tid Bits. The prize definition was, "An insipid and tasteless morsel which becomes delicious and delectable in proportion as it is flavored with love." "The sweetest fruit on the tree of love. The oftener plucked the more abundant it grows;" "Nothing, divided between two;" "A report at headquarters;" "That in which two heads are better than one;" "A gift which is sometimes expected, seldom rejected, though often returned;" "The striking of a love match;" "The soul's ambassador;" "The cream of courtship;" "An unspeakable communication."

***

Mrs. Mary Middleton Hayne, the widow of Paul Hayne, the Southern poet who died recently in Augusta, Ga., was the ideal life companion of a most ideal literary man. Visiting them in their home at Copse Hill, we were profoundly impressed by the evident unity of spirit and character between these two. The husband was a poet in language and character, the wife a poet in character only, but her appreciation of his genius and her devotion to his work were in themselves an epic no less immortal in the eyes of God and those who witnessed the heroic devotion of her whole life than were the beautiful poems of the South's beloved Paul Hayne.

***

A Nebraska farmer sat down the other day and figured out what could be made from a bushel of corn, and here is his verdict: "A bushel of corn can be made to produce four gallons of whisky, which when made ripe by the rapid process, will sell for four dollars per gallon, amounting to sixteen dollars for four gallons. Of this sixteen dollars the farmer gets twenty-five cents, the government gets two dollars, the manufacturer four dollars, the vender gets six dollars and twenty-five cents, the user gets the devil, and the producer and tax-payer foot the bill."

***

The position of many good men in relation to the parties to which they are devoted for temperamental reasons and from long habitude, has been amusingly stated by one of our speakers in the following fashion: "These good men remind me of an old farmer who was trying to break a fractious mule. He mounted, the mule put back his ears and started on a run. The farmer could not control him, and the mud flew in all directions. As the mule and the farmer passed a neighbor's house, some one called out, 'Hallo, Uncle John, where are you going?' His hat blew off, and, not daring to turn hi head, he answered, 'Don't ask me; ask the mule.'" The old parties are both riding the saloon. Don't ask them where they are going; ask the saloon.

***

Our silver-tongued George W. Bain sometimes says: "If you think yourselves of importance in the world, take a boat and row out into the midst of a limpid lake some summer day; put your finger down into its waters; remove the intruding digit and see how much of a vacancy is left. So much shall we be missed in this world, save by a few affectionate hearts when we pass onward." This is doubtless largely true and ought to be, for when we pass onward to worlds even brighter and more fascinating than the planet earth, we shall not be greatly preoccupied with what we left behind us. The opening scenes, education and aspiration will doubtless almost totally preoccupy us, and what a travesty it would be for the world that we have left, to spend its time bemoaning our promotion! Such conduct would be as senseless as for the little children in the a, b, c class to set up a wail over the unfortunate condition of the comrade who left that lower room to enter the intermediate school. It is always better further on, and it is always brighter higher up. The great sky is full of worlds and our journey shall be long.

ON DUTY.

Queen's Gardens.

THE LITTLE FRIEND I LOST.

BY AMBER.

There was a little friend closely interwoven with my life long ago, when time (for me) was young, whose memory comes back with each radiant return of spring, and of whom I have the fancy to talk to you to-night.

As I remember her, the child was an innocent-faced little thing with wide eyes of golden-brown, shaded by soft lashes, and a head closely covered with a feathery crop of golden hair. We were inseparable companions, and there is not an experience of my child-life with which her memory is not allied.

The first definite recollection I have of her is that of a May day long ago, when I lost myself in the deep woods while gathering flowers, and sat me down in her company to wait for God to come to our relief. So implicit was that little child's faith that He would come, that I felt no fear when the shadows fell around me, and into the depths of the twilight sky, one by one stole the silvery stars. I remember just how the thrushes sang in the tops of the tall trees, and how long it seemed before our deliverance came.

I remember questioning her, as we sat on our bed of moss, how she thought it possible that God could have been started without anybody to make Him, and if she really believed He was going to go on living forever, and forever and FOREVER! The thought grew too heavy, at last, for our little minds to uplift, and we lay back on our velvet couch, and looked away into the depths of the starry sky and wept for very wonder.

I remember how we cheered one another by enacting the drama of the deserted babes, and gently wooed the twilight birds to cover us with leaves, a proceeding which they declined to carry out with many twitters of sleepy song.

I date the memory of my little friend chiefly from this experience, for the reason that then, for the first time, we were left alone and dependent upon one another for comfort and cheer. After that afternoon she and I were often by ourselves. We found a nest away up among the singing branches of a willow tree, where we used to lie for hours, and dream our fairy dreams together. There we often sought to solve the riddle of a strange, perplexing world. What was the power which curved the great, blue sky above our heads, and kept the sun and stars in place within it? Whence came the winds, and whither did they go? Why, without note of warning or sound of rushing wings, did great clouds wheel into the sky, and what voice was that which spoke in thunder from the shadowed hills? What was the lightning, and who kindled it? Why did the wild rose always bear the same kind of flower, and the apple tree never forget itself and put forth a plum? What made the bee blunder so awkwardly against the hollyhocks, and settle within their flaring cups with such an endless fret and flurry? Who taught the birds to build their nests, and was all the music of the earth copied from the score of their minstrel notes? Why did the blue dragon-fly never sit still, and was it kind in God to let the "devil's darning needle" sew up little children's ears?

Where would we go when we died, as Neighbor Jordan's baby did, and was it not wicked to leave a baby alone in a graveyard with nobody nigh to keep it warm and cuddled? What was a ghost, and did it really walk about at midnight in a white sheet? Wouldn't we be apt to get tired singing psalm-tunes up in heaven forever? And wouldn't it be nice if God would only keep a special place for little girls who did not care to sing or play on harps? If a bird could fly in the air why couldn't a little girl with a big umbrella? If heaven was just the other side of the sky, why didn't the angels ever fall through? Perhaps the stars were their shining feet twinkling over the crystal floor! Who made the grass know just when to turn green, or told the trees when to unfold their leaves?

These were but a few of the questions that we were wont to ponder, and although the years are many since we rocked together in our swinging willow bough cradle, the answer has never yet been revealed. She, perhaps, has learned the mystery of it all, for she left me suddenly one day never to return, and perhaps in the mystic land whither she has vanished, the secrets of nature are all revealed.

She was a truthful creature, that blessed little girl, and her heart was as pure as unstained snow. She was trustful, and confiding, and tender, too. She thought no evil, and she did no wrong. Beyond a childish naughtiness, now and then, her baby-soul was free from the defilement of sin.

Ah, me! the difference between us now! I hold in my hands to-night the withered stalk whereon life's rose should blossom fair and dewy-sweet, and find it bears but a few scorched and wind-torn leaves. Could but my childhood's angel have tarried with me, would not these flowers have kept their fragrance and sweetness with them to the last?

None but God can tell why she left me, and why, deprived of her presence, I have grown so far away from heaven. Can it be that she went because I grew to ridicule her pretty faiths and simple creeds?

We first "fell out" over "Santa Claus," and came to open rupture, I remember, when I laughed at the idea that he lived in a palace in the Northern Lights, and kept a herd of immortal reindeer. We grew farther and farther apart each year, in our belief that new-born mortals were found in the trunks of hollow trees, and that the angels laid them there fresh from the arms of God.

Her assertion that every time a baby smiled in its sleep, the cherub angels were whispering in its little pink ear, made me laugh, and gradually created a coldness between us. For a long time she continued to accompany me wherever I went, and with whomever I chose to walk, but when the village boys began by and by to try to turn our heads with flattery and gently chaffed her simple ways, she drew aside and only watched me from afar. But though sundered by day, we never slept apart, and it was she who for long years kept up the simple prayer we learned together at our mother's knee.

The day she left me to return no more, I never can forget! She carried with her so much that made life radiant, that looking backward to-night, a long way on my journey towards the beautiful gate, I shade my dazzled eyes, as one watching from a shadowy land, the break of golden billows beneath a sparkling sun. We had been growing farther and farther apart for a long time, until it came to be that only at prayer time or during the singing of some heavenly hymn, or when picking flowers together on a fair spring morning, when God seemed very near to us, that we held counsel. She had grown so ethereal of presence that she seemed scarcely more than a spirit standing by my side, as impalpable as a wreath of mist, or a falling flake of downy snow.

I stood before my mirror one day dressed for my coming-out party. About my neck were clasped the first jewels I had ever worn, and in my heart the happy consciousness that I was free to enter the untried realm of womanhood and gather its roses (I knew nothing then of its thorns!) thrilled my soul with foolish joy. Just behind me, her dim eyes full of tears, her lips tremulous with a smile of unutterable longing and love, I saw my Child Angel, my little constant friend and companion. From those sweet lips there came, like the chimes of unseen and far-off silver bells, these words:

"Farewell! you have no further need of me. My ways are no longer your ways, nor my thoughts your thoughts. You have put aside the things that made us one; you are entering upon a life where I cannot follow. Farewell! A long, but not an eternal farewell. For when tired out and disappointed, your hands torn and bleeding with the thorns you must gather with your roses, your heart emptied of its dreams and sighing for the innocent delights of those days which we have spent together, your feet draw near the gate which naught but your dying breath can waft ajar, I will meet you again, and lead you very gently along the way that shall bring you at last to the presence of your God and into everlasting peace and rest."

Thus saying, my child-nature departed. The angel in me stole heavenward again and left me what I am.

News from the Field.

NEW JERSEY.

RAYS OF LIGHT IN THE DARKNESS.

We lay our loved ones from us, the sun shines just as brightly, the world moves on as of yore; we are saddened at the thought of its seeming indifference, for we question if ever we can be the same, if ever we can take up work again. Just so we all have felt in the months back, since our royal leader left us for her coronation; but time, the great consoler, and the legacy of her life with her dying message, enables us to lay aside our garb of mourning, though not forgetting, and endeavor to carry on the work which she began; and in saying this, I but echo the voice of the unions from Sussex to Cape May, that they will "work harder than ever, because she is not there to spur them on."

Mrs. Emma Bourne, who was elected to fill the vacant term, was almost immediately stricken with serious illness, and for a long time wandered amid the shadows of death, but thanks to a kind and merciful Providence, is improving, and hopes soon to resume work. Our state superintendent of press work, Mrs. Helen Peck Crane, was suddenly called from labor to reward, upon her return from the National Convention. Our future meetings will sadly miss her logical mind and trenchant pen.

Thus it seems, "clouds and darkness have been round and about us," yet we must believe, "righteousness and judgment are the habitation of His throne."

Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ellis, has been, through the preserving care of our Father, able to be at the front during all these trying times, for which we feel most truly thankful. Midwinter conventions have been held in Monmouth and Burlington counties, and their speakers and resolutions give no uncertain sound, no backward steps taken, but a solid front to the foe for prohibition. Not so our legislature now in session. The only temperance bill which has been reported from the committee was "adversely reported" and the "committee's report concurred in."

The famous "Wert's Bill" is now robbed of its only restrictive clause, namely the right of boroughs to grant license, now they have no power, but must apply to the courts, and this seriously affects places in our lower counties, where for years no-license has been the law. This bill was "rushed through with bells on it" and passed before temperance men woke up. This week, a bill for the study of the effect of alcohol on the human system in our public schools was introduced by some one, only to be killed as usual. Our women have about decided to let the law have the "go-by" and use their efforts through school boards.

Race-track bills are the order of the day, but as the race-track men seem to be quarreling, I trust they will so continue, and thus we be delivered from that curse.

The Law and Order Society of Camden is wide awake. They have waited on the governor to protest against the appointment of a certain judge in their county, but as history so often repeats itself, I fear the protest will avail but little—yet, if it will only arouse the dormant powers of the "goody-good" kind, who talk much, but do little, it will be a blessing in disguise. This same Law and Order Society has authorized the arrest of Thompson and others who are running the Gloucester race-track in defiance of law.

My own county, Mercer, which all along has been classed as one of the "moral counties," will, I fear, have to be grouped with the beer counties of upper Jersey, for in order to save one brewing company twenty thousand dollars per year—its freight bill the past year for the city of Trenton—they have just erected, in this city, a brewery, also numerous bottling establishments, and an artificial ice manufactory to keep the beverage cool.

The annual ball of the Liedertaeftle society was the most disgraceful Trenton ever witnessed. Generally the drinking and carousing does not begin until the respectable (?) people leave—about twelve, midnight—but this year, an eye-witness informs me, the orgies began at nine, with men,—not of the baser sort—but "highly influential citizens," with a large sprinkling of the lawmakers, who with lewd women held high carnival until morning. And yet our morning press has not a word of condemnation, but pronounces it a "grand affair," because forsooth the Germans must not be touched by either political party—still I am glad to state that the better class of Germans are becoming disgusted, and I trust soon its vileness, which is its present concomitant, will be its death.

But we turn from all this darkness, and behold a gleam of light appears! In the city of Burlington the acting mayor gave permission to hold a Sunday concert in the opera house. The ministers by telegram ordered the mayor-elect home, and entered their protest. The mayor, after looking up the law, found such concerts to be a "willful misdemeanor," and consequently prohibited the sale of tickets. This is a point we should "make note on't," that, law can be enforced if there is power behind the law to enforce it. Another ray of light is that God holds the power, and though we be many or few, some day victory shall be ours, so we labor on, and leave results to Him.

N. L. CAMINADE,
State Reporter, Trenton.

VIRGINIA.

HOPEFUL, HAPPY WORKERS.

There is a fascination in the work of the W. C. T. U., an ever fresh delight in its study, as well as a stimulus, which urges one to a nobler life and a bolder endeavor for "God, Home and Humanity."

After the successful convention in Richmond, our twenty-eight unions, nine Y's and nineteen Loyal Temperance Legions, determined to make this the best year of our history. They began the year well equipped for our "peaceful war," courageous and brave, believing that "he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

Our state paper, The Virginia Call, edited by Mrs. Wemple, is a fearless defender of the truth and is finding its way into many of the best homes in the state.

We have but one organized district in the state, and this one, Norfolk district, is keeping up with the times. Their convention was held in Norfolk last month Several of the ministers of the city attended the sessions and gave helpful addresses.

The reports from the unions were full of encouragement. Atlantic City union reported steady work, and are making plans to build themselves a permanent home. Brambleton union told of the crowded condition of their public school—a number could not gain admission and their parents could not furnish means to pay for their education. This enterprising W. C. T. U. rented a room at three dollars per month, and furnished it comfortably. They pay a teacher fifteen dollars per month, and are now running a well equipped school with thirty scholars. A temperance lesson is taught every day. A charming little entertainment was given at Christmas; the pupils gave temperance recitations and songs, and were afterward treated to temperance jelly and other things equally as good. Gifts were also provided for these poor little ones, whose homes were brightened with but few Christmas blessings. This union is also working actively in other lines of philanthropic work. Norfolk union has sustained a loss in the death of their treasurer, Mrs. W. Francis. She possessed a spirit unflinching in its loyalty to duty; stability of character was combined with gentleness in a way to command the esteem, confidence and admiration of all who knew her. Honored in life, triumphant in death, and blessed in eternity, is her epitaph.

In Winchester and many other places our work was crippled by sickness, but some loyal hearts "held the fort" until reinforcements came. Bright, good reports have been received from Lincoln, Hamilton, Riverton, Staunton, and Harrisonburg.

Onancock union was the first to send a contribution to the Temple to have the name of our state president inscribed on a tablet in Willard Hall. I hear that other unions are providing themselves with mite-boxes for the same purpose, so you will hear of that farther on.

The circulation of petitions seems to be the special work of our unions this winter. The first on our record was an appeal to have assistant female physicians in the female wards of the insane asylums of the state. This bill passed the House by an overwhelming majority. Our women in the state have written letters to senators asking for their votes and influence, and are now prayerfully waiting for the decision of the Senate.

Our next petition was framed by the temperance convention held in Richmond in December, and was a lengthy one, embracing eight different points. Two other petitions are waiting for our tireless feet to give them free circulation: One to the legislature to give us police matrons, the other for closing the Columbian Exposition on the Lord's day.

Mrs. Love, from Australia, has been at work in Loudoun county, and has given help and strength to the unions visited. She expects to come soon to the Shenandoah Valley, and will travel in other parts of the state.

Our Y's are working beautifully. They have exercised their inventive faculties in every possible way to push forward the work.

To try to tell of all the good things done by our white-ribboners, would be opening a large volume of noble acts and merciful deeds.

"With grateful hearts the past we own;
The future all to us unknown
We to Thy guardian care commit,
And peaceful leave before Thy feet."

LONA A. KERN,
State Reporter, Winchester.

COLORADO.

NEWSY NOTES FROM THE CENTENNIAL STATE.

The El Paso county convention was held in Colorado City on December 11. The afternoon session was given to a parliamentary drill and a paper on "Kindergarten Work for Mothers." The devotional exercises were in the form of a Bible reading on Sabbath observance.

The Loyal Temperance Legion of the city, forty strong, gave us marching songs, and were served refreshments at the close of the afternoon session. The Y's of Colorado Springs furnished the program for the evening, with the exception of the singing, which was in charge of the Good Templars. Colorado City never fails in social entertainment.

The meetings of the Colorado Springs union are becoming more and more interesting. Miss Helen Dencey, the president, being the leader and teacher of kindergarten work, has introduced practical lessons in the work of mothers' meetings; the last was attended by thirty ladies. Their parliamentary drills are also illustrated by the practical working of the point under consideration.

Table Rock union is doing excellent work, though but five months old, in securing signers of the total abstinence pledge, a work which I fear we sometimes forget to push beyond our own circle of members.

The press superintendent has secured the privilege of having temperance items published in papers of the adjacent towns, Monument and Eastonville.

The Denver Central union has had printed a thousand copies of our state law on narcotics, with the hope of putting a copy in the hands of every teacher in the state. The Day Nursery of this union is in a flourishing condition, usually over thirty children a day present.

North Denver union has held a medal contest, the prize being won by Miss Gertrude Hollman. The Denver Central Y's have organized a Parliamentary Law Club, to be under the direction of Mr. G. M. Varnum. Drills are to be held once a month, and are open to all interested.

Boulder union was requested to place a history of the W. C. T. U. in the corner-stone of the new M. E. Church recently laid.

Bessemer union held a very interesting gospel temperance meeting in the M. E. Church when an address was given by our state president, Mrs. Higgins, and the Cottage Home Work was presented. The Bessemer Loyal Temperance Legion hold two regular meetings each week, one for the older members Saturday evening from seven to nine o'clock, and the other for the little ones on Saturday afternoons.

The Grand Junction Y's have re-opened their reading-room with a book social, the cobweb design being used for entertainment. A card bearing the name of a book was attached to the beginning of each string and a number at the end; a card duplicating the number was worn as a badge by a young lady, whom the gentleman, paying ten cents for the privilege of taking a book from the circulating library, was to escort to supper. Each guest was expected to donate a book, which gave quite a beginning for the library.

The Salida Y's gave a convention social on December 31, to which the members invited friends to watch the old year out and the new year in. The young ladies of this union are not afraid of old-fashioned work. They have carpet-rags ready for twenty-five yards of carpeting for the Cottage Home. During the month of December there were five admitted to the Cottage Home, three births and one inmate dismissed. The receipts for the same month somewhat exceeded the expenditures, but a surplus is a good thing to have.

The Pueblo county convention was held in Pueblo on January 11. The afternoon session was occupied by reports and addresses by L. J. Smith, state prohibition organizer, and Rev. Allen of the Mesa M. E. Church. In the evening Rev. Mann of the North Congregational Church gave a short address, and Mrs. Higgins conducted a question box on the World's and National Convention. Miss Spaulding gave a paper on "Young Woman's Work."

The Arapahoe county convention was held in the Second Congregational Church of Denver, on January 14. Papers were read on "The Columbian Fair," by Mrs. Geo. L. Scott. on "The W. C. T. U. Mission Work," by Rev. Ella F. Leonard, and on "Intemperance in Siam," by Miss Mary L. Cort, who is a returned missionary from Siam. In the evening Rev. T. Uzzel of the "People's Tabernacle," gave an address on "The Work of the W. C. T. U."

Mrs. M. J. Telford has given three evening lectures under the auspices of the Salida W. C. T. U., also an afternoon talk to women and a talk to the Band of Hope. We are glad to welcome Mrs. Telford back to active work among us, and hope renewed health and strength may be hers.

And now, my dear sisters of Colorado, as I take this work of the press in hand for the remainder of the year, will not each one lend a hand by being faithful in her own post of local work, securing the publication of as many temperance articles of interest as possible, and reporting local union work promptly to the county superintendent, if there is one, if not, directly to me, that I may have news for THE UNION SIGNAL?

E. W. CHAMBERS,
Signal Reporter, Colorado Springs.

NEBRASKA.

ANTICIPATIONS AND REALIZATIONS.

The new year began in Nebraska with a special effort in behalf of the World's Petition and the million voters' pledge. The latter is most heartily indorsed by our state president, in a letter to the Voice. Other subjects which seem to be attracting a renewed interest are the Temperance Temple and the Sunday closing of the World's Fair. A recent number of the Union Worker was devoted to the Temple, and a beginning has been made for a tablet to Mrs. Hitchcock, our state president, which enterprise is sure to be a success. Other departments have been given an issue of the paper for the presentation of their work. A greater interest is thus created in all departments.

Crete union is feeling bereft in the removal of Mrs. S. T. Corey, to Harvard. She has been a member of the union from its beginning, and the superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion for years. Mrs. Corey had also the reputation, during the amendment campaign, of being the best county president in the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Noble have also removed from Crete to Iowa, and having been most efficient workers in every line of temperance work, are greatly missed.

Kearney union is doing good work this year. They conduct an evening school for working girls, which meets twice a week, and has fifty pupils enrolled. A working girls' club meets at the W. C. T. U. parlors every Thursday afternoon, where the culinary department is discussed. They conduct a mission Sunday-school with 100 pupils of the poorer classes, and hold a woman's prayer-meeting once a week, to which all women are invited. On Christmas Day they gave a free dinner to the poor at the City Hall. Kearney is the home of Miss Ripley, our accomplished state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, so that department is well attended to.

The Lincoln W. C. T. U. gave a New Year's reception to the state officers at the elegant Hotel Lincoln. All state officers but one, and many of the superintendents, were present. Representatives of the Y. M. C. A. and many young ladies gathered to honor the guests, and music and conversation made more delightful the pleasant hours.

The Nebraska State Teachers' Association at their recent meeting in Lincoln, passed the following resolution:

WHEREAS, We, the members of the Nebraska State Teachers' Association, recognize the necessity and reasonableness of the state law regarding the teaching of the effects of stimulants and narcotics upon the human system, and

WHEREAS, We believe that the use of these drugs as beverages tends to degrade manhood and womanhood and to corrupt citizenship, therefore,

Resolved. That we will do our utmost to secure greater fidelity and efficiency in the observance of this law, and the teaching of this truth, both in our own schools, and throughout the state.

The W. C. T. U. rejoices that its work is so heartily recognized and sustained by so influential a body.

Mrs. Jennie F. Holmes, of Tecumseh, a former state president, has been appointed W. C. T. U. commissioner for the World's Fair from Nebraska. She is preparing a complete history of the work of the union from its beginning to the present time. This will include a most interesting account of woman's work in the great amendment campaign—history which will be wonderfully interesting, not only to ourselves, but to all who aided us in that work. Many important items will thus be preserved which would otherwise have been forgotten, and which we, as a union, cannot afford to have lost, forming as they do, so significant a part of the history of prohibition, of woman's work, and of the "On-Coming Womanhood." These may be preserved and read, but the inner, unwritten history of that time is embalmed in tears and hidden in the hearts of our white-ribboners.

DORA V. WHEELOCK,
State Reporter, Beatrice.

UTAH.

INTERESTING EVENTS.

The chief event of interest here, in the temperance line, since my last letter, has been the series of services conducted in the hall of the New West Academy, a prosperous institution under the New West Commission, by Mr. Wolfenbarger, of Lincoln, Neb., assisted by his friend, the singer, Professor Huckins. Large audiences were secured both by the earnest, timely words of the former, and by the comic as well as the beautiful, strong songs of the latter. I understand that these gentlemen are trustees of the National Prohibition party, and are taking this tour to arouse prohibition sentiment, and to secure the pledges to the 1,000,000 voters for the prohibition candidate in the coming presidential campaign.

Since the Sabbath school at the Utah Territorial Reform School was instituted (a year ago the first Sabbath in January), I have had a class of young men there. Mrs. Col. Cropsey, of Lynne, is its superintendent. The boys of this institution certainly need much in the line of temperance work. In my own class two-thirds have known the curse of drink from sad experience. The proportion of those who have been addicted to the drink habit would be fully as great, if not greater, if taken throughout the school.

The first Sabbath in January our W. C. T. U. state superintendent, Mrs. A. J. Bailey, was present and made an earnest address to the inmates. The third Sabbath of the year came the regular international Sunday-school lesson on "Overcome with Wine." And the fourth Sabbath we were glad to have the plain, practical truths presented to the pupils by Messrs. Wolfenbarger and Huckins. After these had finished their exercises, one boy was heard to say, "That's the best thing we ever had!" I do hope and pray that many of these boys may be won for total abstinence before they leave the school.

While the use of intoxicants as a beverage seems to be increasing, a distinct mark of progress in sentiment on the part of professed Christians in "Zion" (Salt Lake City) has lately appeared. The churches of that city have decided to form a temperance society in connection with each local church. This is a decided step forward in which we all rejoice.

I have just received a note from our W. C. T. U. superintendent of jail work in this city (Ogden) an extract from which must close my letter:

"I have been in the jail and prison work about twenty-two months. From the 2,000 cases before the police and other courts in this time, let me speak of one upon which I have given some thought.

"About a year since, I. Dillon from Wyoming, came to our city for a few days. After a night of revelry he came to the bar of the Broom Hotel and called for a drink. When it was prepared he asked the bar-keeper to drink with him. When the latter refused, Dillon said he would make him, drew his pistol and shot him. Mitchell (the bar-keeper) died, leaving a wife and two children. The December term of the court tried and sentenced Dillon to nine years in the Utah penitentiary. Dillon is a man of money, and has several saloons and gambling houses now in good business order, and licensed in Wyoming.

"The question comes to us—who is responsible for this murder, and for the continued killing going on as a result of these saloons? To me answer is found in Isaiah 5:23: 'Which justify the wicked for a reward.'

"One partner in the firm is the United States government. What can or will we do about it?

"MRS. HARRIET P. HUNTER,"

The writer of the above is a very earnest worker, now far advanced in life, and rich in experience. The jail work is doubtless doing much good.

MARY HOWARD NUTTING,
Territorial Reporter, Ogden.

LOUISIANA.

WORK OF THE NEW ORLEANS W. C. T. U.

I have just accepted the appointment of state reporter for THE UNION SIGNAL, and I am glad to begin my account of work in Louisiana by telling of the establishment of a lunch house by our local W. C. T. U. at New Orleans.

For some months, and even years, our workers there have been looking forward to the accomplishment of this great work, and it has been an object of prayer as well as of work. The hearts of the women have been in it, and hence they were enthusiastic and active in carrying out their desires.

The W. C. T. U. were assisted in their new enterprise by merchants in the city, through monthly subscription, and cash donations. In pleasant rooms at 142 Gravier street, a business part of the city, the Lunch House was opened on December 9, 1891. It has been carried on successfully since, paying all running expenses, also debts incurred in "setting up housekeeping."

A specialty is made of fifteen cent lunches which are served from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m., though the Lunch House is open from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. for ordinary lunches. This fifteen cent lunch is made a specialty to compete with the saloon lunches for which New Orleans, in common with all large cities, is famous. Many have been lured into the saloons because of the offer of cheap or free lunch who if they had known where else to go for as good or better fare at a cheap rate, would have been kept from the debasing saloon influence.

The patronage of the new lunch house is good and encouragement great to go on with the enterprise.

Where all have done well and bravely, it is hard to discriminate, but I am told that Miss Mary Werlein showed a peculiar fitness for the part of the work she undertook in getting up the lunch house, and the subscriptions and donations were almost entirely solicited by her.

As always, our own white ribbon women were generous with time and money to the full extent of their ability. They opened the lunch house without a cook, or a waiter girl, a superintendent only being employed. The women of the W. C. T. U., prominent and leading women of New Orleans, took turns in doing the necessary work, and with grace and pleasantness served lunch to their patrons. To-day they employ a cook, an assistant cook, and four waiters, and they are on the lookout for "just the right woman" to fill the important post of superintendent.

Need I say more to prove to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL that the New Orleans W. C. T. U. have the three successful and rare qualities of "genius, grit and gumption"?

We all believe that a W. C. T. U. lunch house was the thing needed in New Orleans, and that it will prove a success even in that city of saloons and free lunches. May other unions follow the example of New Orleans W. C. T. U. and let the good work grow.

MARY READ GOODALE,
State Reporter, Baton Rouge.

Official Communications.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec.—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.

For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

THE EXPOSITION AND THE APRIL PRAYER WEEK.

By a coincidence of God's ordering, the commissioners are to decide the question of opening the Exposition gates on Sabbath, the very week when all Christians are to be or should be unitedly praying to God to avert such a world-wide calamity. The outlook for their closing grows less and less hopeful except as God shall intervene. We must do all within our power, see that every petition is sent forward at once to Congress, to legislature and to commissioners; must pray over it daily, realizing the great moral issues at stake, and especially let us in connection with all other Sabbath organizations observe our customary prayer week, April 3-10, more thoroughly than ever before.

We should begin the preparations now, as arrangements for special sermons need often to be made a month in advance, and it takes time to select and procure literature and work up public meetings. There are five points to be looked after: Sermons, prayer-meetings, public meetings, Sabbath-school instruction in opening exercises and distribution of leaflets, adding thereto our own united, earnest and daily supplications.

The topics suggested for sermons and prayer are:

1. That the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago may be wholly closed on the Lord's Day.

2. That the efforts now making to secure the shutting of postoffices on the Lord's Day may soon be successful.

3. That Christians may more fully realize the claims and value of the Christian Sabbath and be careful to keep it holy, and that the pursuit of pleasure and business on the Lord's Day may cease.

The first will naturally claim great attention, the third is immeasurably important, and we wish to join our prayers with those of our friends in England for the second, for which they are heroically working. The progress towards securing Sunday rest has latterly been most marked in nearly every European country, for which let us give thanks while praying that our own land may not lag behind in the race.

For literature, send to the undersigned. No. 44, "A Request to Pastors and all Christians," (ten cents a hundred) should go to all who pray. Send stamp for price list or eight cents for thirty different samples. Annual report two cents extra. J. C. BATEHAM.

26 Charlotte street, Asheville, N. C.

A RINGING CALL.

DEAR EDITORS:—The following call sent out to the women of the Dominion and maritime provinces is so timely and appropriate for the older and younger women of the United States, that I take the liberty of forwarding it, with the request that it may be given space in THE UNION SIGNAL. Yours for the young people.

FRANCES J. BARNES.

Awake, awake, Deborah; awake, awake.—Judges 5: 12.

The temperance question is to the front as never before. The demands for earnest endeavor are more and more pressing. This country is waking up in answer to the call of the advocates of this reform, to see the urgency of dealing with this problem. The sentiment in favor of the suppression of the liquor traffic is growing, and with it is growing the determined opposition of the saloon and those who patronize it. Every community of these provinces, to a greater or less degree, is agitating on some of the questions that are included in our departments of work, and this agitation has been largely due (during the past few years) to the steady and determined work of the W. C. T. U. All over our Dominion it presents a most formidable and aggressive front to the enemy. Yet it is felt that there lies, almost unarmed, untrained and unused, a detachment that on many battle-fields would rout and destroy the enemy, where those already in the field who are fighting so bravely make very little headway. I refer to the young women. When will we recognize the immense power stored in the young womanhood of our country? When will the unions in our towns organize the girls?

Who is it that sways and influences the habits of our sons so much as our daughters? How soon would many of the social customs and abuses, tolerated in society now, be abolished if the daughters of our land but issued an edict? We deem it necessary that our daughters shall be possessed of those qualities that grace home and society and that render them attractive and influential. We desire that they shall be equipped to take our places in the struggle for right. We expect them to take advanced ground We expect our daughters to order their lives and govern their homes and mould society and public opinion as we have never been able to do.

Why, then, is not every union bending its energies in this important mission field? The young women are active in every church and missionary work. Young women largely teach our Sabbath-schools. Young women have charge, by a large majority, of the children of our land in the public schools. Young women are the life and soul of the various temperance societies that are doing noble work; and yet, in much the larger number of our unions we fail to organize this enthusiastic force which stands at our call to go into the work.

If you live in a community large enough to organize a Y, authorize your local superintendent of Y work to at once call the young women together and explain the matter and organize a Y union. If the population be small, organize them under a superintendent as a Y committee, and as members of your union, give them special work, allow them plenty of latitude, and give them hearty support, and let the influence of your union be extended to the young people. See to it that they lead the social life of your community.

The work has been so gratifying where it has been taken up, and the results so precious, that no words can be too strong to urge every union to do something. Remember our girls will be matrons soon. It is the God-given mission of our army to see that every new home in Canada is pure and that hearts loyal to God and humanity are united under the knot of ribbon white.

Yours for God and Home and Humanity,

JESSIE B. WOODBURY,
Dartmouth, N. S. Supt. Maritime Provinces.

PARLOR MEETINGS.

Our National associate, Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, of Plainfield, N. J., who is also the state superintendent of this department, asks, in one of her circulars: "Do Parlor Meetings pay?" I can answer, "Yes," in every instance; very often in securing well-wishers, honorary members and new members. A parlor meeting held in this city a few evenings ago, at which I spoke, gave six new members to the union, and these out of a gathering of about sixty—surely, a satisfactory showing. This meeting was also held with the intention of raising money to go into the work of the state superintendent of this department. At the last convention of Pennsylvania, it was decided that each union, as far as practicable, should hold a parlor meeting, either ask an admission fee, have a paid supper, or take up a collection, the proceeds to go toward a state fund with which to carry on the work of parlor meetings; the fund, as is the case with all other moneys, to pass through the hands of the state treasurer. We earnestly commend this plan to other states; it is impossible to make bricks without straw. From so many local unions, all over the country, comes the cry, "Will you not tell us how to get up and manage a parlor meeting?"

The plan is simple enough. Select a parlor, well adapted to the purpose, from an outsider, if possible, if not, one of our own. Invite the guests by dainty card or note, and only include enough white-ribboners to give "color" to the entertainment. Then proceed as circumstances permit, for we well understand the needs of a city and country locality differ. Let the occasion be of a social nature; have flowers, music, recitations, readings, addresses, refreshments, simple or complex, a question-box, well handled; not all of these things at once, or your program would be too long, but judiciously vary for different occasions, and the interest will not abate. One lady, sometime ago, reported a weekly parlor meeting. The opening exercises consisted of singing, a brief prayer and short selection of Scripture, followed by a reading from a W. C. T. U. woman on some one of the departments of our many-sided work, viz.: The use of alcoholic liquors in the culinary department, and how palatable and nourishing food may be prepared without; how to teach and train children; hygiene and heredity; temperance literature; Y. W. C. T. U. work and its mission; social purity; unfermented wine and its uses; foreign work; scientific temperance instruction, etc.: then a slight collation, tea, coffee or chocolate and cake or wafers, this part left to the hostess,—a different home each week. The result was an overflowing union, full of good works and zeal, and plenty of money in the treasury to help the other departments. One state superintendent says, "always have refreshments. I have yet to attend a parlor meeting without refreshments, that I was satisfied with the results." It is a wonderful promoter of sociability. These suggestions are mostly for home talent, but when you can vary the program and increase the interest, have a good speaker from abroad.

A thought for the question-box: The visitors, as a rule, have not sufficiently gained the true inwardness of things to ask intelligent or rather pertinent questions; it is well for a committee to write the questions beforehand, always, however, giving an opportunity or any to be added by the guests. Have your committee large enough so as to avoid the labor falling upon any one individual; especially save the hostess. Have your pledge roll and white ribbon on hand. Teach temperance truths and new workers will be the result; it never fails, for our consecrated sisterhood, outside of our lines are only waiting to be convinced that they have an individual responsibility in this important question. Do not forget to invite your gentlemen, clergymen, physicians, lawyers, merchants and above all, the teachers, male and female. I addressed seventy-five school teachers last winter in this city, at a luncheon to which one of our cultured women invited them, and threw open her elegant home with its picture gallery, for their enjoyment. This meeting was held at eleven o'clock Saturday morning.

Dear sisters all over the land, I have written this article in this simple strain to enlighten the many who are constantly writing letters filled with interrogation points. One thing please remember, we do not keep the literature of these various departments on hand. It may all be found at W. T. P. A., 161 La Salle street, Chicago, Ill. Sometimes a clergyman or two, or three, will willingly speak briefly to points drawn or given beforehand. Be sure and report your meetings quarterly, to your county superintendent; if you have none, then to your state superintendent.

ANNA M. HAMMER,
National Supt. Parlor Meetings.

Seminary, Forty-third and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MRS. H. KING, the former president of Curry, Pa., W. C. T. U., passed away January 29, leaving a vacancy in the hearts of friends and co-workers.

MRS. MARY GARBUTT, of Southern California, is a zealous and faithful worker, whose initial trip recently, as organizer in that state, will be fruitful in results.

THE Spring Lake, Wis., W. C. T. U. passed resolutions last month on the death of Mr. Albert Pettis, of Eau Galle, who was a faithful honorary member of their union.

A CONSECRATED young Christian worker, and one who was deeply interested in temperance work, was Miss Clara Dickerman, of Benton Harbor, Mich. Her short but fruitful life came to a close January 25.

MRS. MARRIAGE ALLEN has returned to this country, and is about to enter on an extended tour of gospel temperance work among the colored people, beginning at St. Louis. Those who know best of her methods recommend her highly.

AGAIN has the angel of death entered the home of one of Illinois' best loved white-ribboners, Mrs. G. H. Read, this time taking to her heavenly reward the aged mother of Mr. Read, crowned with ninety-one faithful years of Christian service and vigorous in both mind and body.

OUR sympathies are extended to Mrs. Lydia M. Chace, of Kansas City, who suffered a paralytic stroke while on a visit in Providence, R. I., soon after the National Convention; she is still detained there, though improving. Mrs. Chace was, formerly, president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U.

IN the years since Mrs. Sophia F. Grubb became superintendent of work among foreigners she has raised ten thousand dollars for her department, a record which sufficiently indicates her ability to insure for it the success which it is attaining rapidly.

MISSOURI has decided in favor of woman office-holders, in the case of Mrs. Annie Baxter, of Carthage, who was elected to the office of county clerk by a majority of over four hundred votes. Her opponent contested the election on the ground of her ineligibility; judgment was rendered in her favor by the county court.

AS A reward for their persistent efforts, the W. C. T. U. of Beaumont, Cal., have seen the last saloon depart from their village. They are determined that their prohibitory law shall "prohibit." Twenty-four white-ribboned women attended the trial of the keeper of a "blind tiger" whom they had caused to be arrested. He was found guilty and heavily fined.

THE April Young Crusader will contain the first of a series of "Crusade Stories," to be written by "Mother Thompson." Giving many bits of history heretofore unpublished, these sketches will be a valuable addition to the literature of the W. C. T. U. The first is entitled, "The Young Crusaders' Prayer Meeting," and will delight its readers.

MRS. FRANCES E. W. HARPER, National W. C. T. U. organizer among the colored people, has been with her daughter in Boston and vicinity since the National W. C. T. U. Convention, engaged in literary work. She has spoken about thirty times before unions, reform clubs and churches, and always with good acceptance. Mrs. Harper went from Boston to Baltimore, Md., to fill a lecture engagement.

THE town of Nassau, N. Y., has lost a benefactress, and the local W. C. T. U., its founder and most active member, by the death of Miss Julia Dickinson, January 9. Though physically infirm, she was mentally strong and endowed with Christian grace, tact and energy. The large attendance of citizens and members of temperance and charitable organizations evidenced the high esteem in which she and her far-reaching efforts are held.

HON. JOHN G. WOOLLEY and Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, National W. C. T. U. evangelist, began a series of meetings in Washington, D. C., on Sunday, February 5, in the Tenth Street Congregational church and in Metropolitan M. E. church. Mrs. Snell has been conducting evangelistic services in the capital city for a couple of weeks. A member of the North Capital Church in which she spoke, writes: "All liked Mrs. Snell. The house has not been so full since Christmas; the interest was intense, and did not flag. We intend to have her again after the Woolley meetings, and shall pack the church."

EXTRACT from a letter received from the president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., dated Pueblo, January 13, 1892: "We have just held an executive meeting in Denver. Committees were appointed to prepare to entertain the National Convention. There is much enthusiasm, not only among our workers but the citizens as well. Already many have sent word that they want to entertain our guests. Our delegates to Boston wavered somewhat when they considered the size of the gathering as they saw it there. But all are firm that we must have the convention, and all are ready to work. We have a very strong local committee with Mrs. M. A. Cassell at the head. Many pleasant things are being planned for you. Feel free to bring fraternal delegates, and whomsoever you choose, for they will all be entertained most gladly. Please make the convention just what you desire and we need."

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

Van Houten's Cocoa, once tried, always used.

Have You Asthma?

Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn., will mail a trial package of Schiffmann's Asthma Cure free to any sufferer. He advertises by giving it away. It gives instant relief in worst cases and cures where others fail. Name this paper and send your address for a free trial package.

THE advertisement of J. H. Van Vlissingen & Bro. appears on the same page as this notice. This firm is thoroughly reliable and the lots which they are offering at Roseland are all they claim for them, both in point of favorable location and value as an investment. Parties who are looking for such an investment as this need have no hesitancy in dealing with this firm.

ONE OF THE FINEST.

Here is one of the many letters the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railway is constantly receiving in commendation of its superior facilities in the way of brand new coaches and sleeping-car accommodations:

"What you said about the cars on your road was true. They were the finest I saw on my way here, and the most roomy and comfortable. Should I have occasion to travel east, I shall try to use your part of the road, and shall recommend it to others."

It will be remembered this line is the only line in the west running the celebrated vestibuled compartment Pullman sleeping-cars, in which the price for exclusive use of a drawing-room is no more than that of a section in the ordinary sleeping-car. The dining-car service is beyond comparison and its express trains are run on the fastest schedules.

Refreshing Retreats.

Summer days are fast approaching, and now is the time that excursionists, pleasure-seekers and sportsmen should figure out a route for their summer vacation. In doing so, the delightfully cool summer and fishing resorts located along the Wisconsin Central Lines come vividly to view, among which are Fox Lake, Ill., Lake Villa, Ill., Mukwonago, Waukesha, Cedar Lake, Neenah, Waupaca, Fifield, Butternut and Ashland, Wis. Wisconsin has within the last five years become the center of attraction for more pleasure seekers, hunters and fishermen than any other state in the union, and each visit increases the desire to again see the charming landscapes, breathe the balsam fragrance that is a part of the invigorating atmosphere, wander through the colonnades of stately pines and hook the speckled beauties with a hand-made fly.

For pamphlets containing valuable information, etc., apply to GEO. K. THOMPSON, C. P. & T. A. Wis. Cen. Lines, Chicago, Ill., or JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

CALIFORNIA.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 621 Rialto Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

THE Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA

PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.

It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.

New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.

It will pay you well to write to us.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.
902-904 Royal Insurance Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

Publisher's Dep't.

Do You Want a Bible?

For yourself or any member of your family, for a friend or a member of your Sunday-school class? Then here is a Splendid Opportunity to secure one. Read carefully and see.

By special arrangements with a book dealer we are able to supply for a limited time, two fine Bibles on excellent terms, and have decided to offer them under the following conditions to our subscribers:

First, a Teacher's Bible, pearl, reference maps, concordance, and all helps usually found in a teacher's Bible, with Oxford circuit binding, and gilt edges, 11x7¼ inches from edge of flaps, reduced retail price, $1.75. We will send this Bible and THE UNION SIGNAL one year for $2.25.

Second, a Bagster Bible, minion, reference maps, and all helps usually found in a Bagster Bible except concordance, with Oxford circuit binding and gilt edges, 9x13 from edge of flaps; reduced retail price $2.75. We will send this Bible and THE UNION SIGNAL one year for $3.25.

Third. We will send with either of the above Bibles and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, "How to mark your Bible" by Mrs. S. Menzies, with introduction by D. L. Moody, cloth, price 75 cents, for 50 cents additional.

Recapitulation.

Offer 1. THE UNION SIGNAL one year, and Teacher's Bible, $2.25.

Offer 2. THE UNION SIGNAL one year, Teacher's Bible, and "How to Mark your Bible," $2.75.

Offer 3. THE UNION SIGNAL, one year, Bagster Bible, $3.25.

Offer 4. THE UNION SIGNAL one year, Bagster Bible, and "How to Read your Bible," $3.75.

Tell your friends what a splendid chance they can take advantage of, or get them to subscribe and add the amount necessary to secure these valuable books for yourself.

We said the time was limited. To take advantage of this your order must reach us by April 1.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Clearance Sale.

There are some copies of Miss Willard's annual address still in our store-room that should be doing missionary work all over the land. To make this easy we have determined to offer them as follows:

1 copy	2c
10 copies	15c
25 copies	40c
50 copies	75c
100 copies	$1 25

The supply is limited, and every copy will soon be taken at these ridiculously low figures. First come, first served. Do not delay, or you may be disappointed.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Home; or ——?

A seasonable and a serious question for many. The "cold" of the autumn has developed into disease. Business or society—the winter's confinement, or its weather, has made them weak and depressed. The family physician looks grave, and finally says a change of air is "the only thing." Where shall it be? The Seashore, the Mountains, the South, all have their features, but Home, sweet home, has comforts of its own—not to be found in the world elsewhere. The matter of expense also often makes the full cup of trouble overflow.

To any such, reluctant to go away, we would say, investigate what science and skill can do for you right where you are. The Home Treatment of DRS. STARKEY & PALEN will give you a change of air in your own room. Their COMPOUND OXYGEN is richest air, charged with magnetism—full of ozone. It is life for the lungs, blood and nerves; not a drug to tax the weak system.

We invite the fullest investigation from all. Twenty-three years of success grounds our confidence. We offer a book of explanation and of the most convincing proof. Before you leave home, remember that if a change of air will benefit you, it can be had where you are; if relief and ease is only possible, you can get it at home, where it will be relief indeed. The book is to be had for the asking only.

Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia.
120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. 66 Church St., Toronto, Canada.

We will forward free of charge a Bird's-Eye View of "THE WORLD'S FAIR" to all inquirers.

Roseland Joins Pullman

Lots

Indiana Avenue, one of Chicago's most prominent Residence Streets, joins Roseland to Pullman, that mammoth manufacturing town, where one institution alone pays every year in wages over $3,300,000.00. Roseland is practically the outgrowth of Pullman, and has at present over 6,000 population. There are 25,000 people at this point within a radius of one mile. For a steady and substantial growth there is no territory in Chicago that compares with it, and there is none that has a better or more certain future. Suburban railroad facilities are of the utmost importance to property of this class. Roseland lies between the Illinois Central and the Eastern Illinois Railroad, convenient to both, and has 107 trains daily. It is healthy, high and dry, 30 feet above the level of Lake Michigan, 20 feet higher than the elevation of Pullman, and 25 feet above the old level of the center of the City. There is no trouble here about perfect drainage. It has every advantage of Schools, Churches, Stores, Police and Fire protection, etc. The City is now putting in 15,000 feet of water mains in Roseland streets, free of cost to the property. The Board of Education has commenced the erection of one of the handsomest schools in Chicago, to cost $75,000. Others are to follow. We are offering lots for only $400 and upwards. There is no property on the market at the price that has the intrinsic value that Roseland has. Any one buying now can safely rely that its present value will double many times. The vital point of interest in the mind of every investor is where he can make the best investment for his money, and we know that there is nothing in the City of Chicago that equals Roseland. The amount of new building is immense, and buildings that are erected rent easily at good rentals. We will forward an abstract and contract upon receipt of one-tenth of the cost of the lot, and the balance can be paid in equal monthly amounts, ranging from $10.00 up. If it was known that a manufacturing plant anything like the size of Pullman was to be located in Chicago at the present time, lots in that vicinity would sell easily for from $500.00 to $600.00 before a brick had been laid, as has been demonstrated within the past year at other points where smaller plants were located. Roseland lies in the center of the Calumet District, which is becoming the greatest manufacturing center in the United States. Its railroad and water facilities, added to its geographical position, will ultimately concentrate the densest population in the United States. The Elevated R. R. has a right of way through it on State Street. The property is selling very fast. The sooner a purchase is made the better selection can be had. These lots shortly will be much higher in price. Our prices show that we are not boomers. For a good, safe investment, we offer you the best property on the market. Roseland lies within the City limits of Chicago, directly north of Harvey, and 5 miles nearer the center of the City. We solicit correspondence with those who desire to inspect Roseland. Special arrangements made about Railroad transportation. We refer readers to this page of THE UNION SIGNAL for their indorsement. Send for plats, prices and other particulars.

J. H. VAN VLISSINGEN & BRO.
149 LA SALLE ST. (MAJOR BLOCK) - - CHICAGO.

COMPOUND OXYGEN Price reduced. For information address DR. A. H. HIATT, Central Music Hall, Chicago

WANTED! A Christian lady in every township to do writing at home. Pleasant, remunerative work, requiring only a portion of each day's time. Address The Yale Hygiene Co. Agency Department, New Haven, Conn.

HOW TO MAKE A FORTUNE

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line, or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new; will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 18½ Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

WINTER PRICES ON BICYCLES

Don't wait till spring; buy now & save money. Easy payments. All makes new & 2d hd. Cata free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77G St. Peoria, Ill.

Sensible Mothers BUY THE "GOOD SENSE" corset Waists for themselves and their growing Children.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

WALL PAPER Send 6 cts. postage for 100 fine samples. $1.00 will buy Elegant Paper and Border, enough for a large room. Large sample books to paper hangers 25c. Address K. W. P. Co. 145-7 W. 6th, Cincinnati, O.

HARVEY.

HERE IT IS!

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

takes this means of showing to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL a complete plat of HARVEY, known throughout the whole country as the most successful Temperance Manufacturing Town ever founded.

HARVEY was conceived, located, founded, platted and improved by THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION.

Count the factories which were located by THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION, which has a contract by which preference in employing help is given to those who live in HARVEY PROPER, or on land OWNED or CONTROLLED by THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION or their grantees.

There is choice property near the factories, the schools and churches, the hotels and in the business district, which THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION is selling at ORIGINAL PRICES. Lots $175 and upwards.

Call or send for plats and the most complete pamphlet (size 36 pages, sent free) ever published, giving information about HARVEY.

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION,
819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY, CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—All communications that in any way pertain to Harvey should be addressed to THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION. This is important.

STRONG WORDS

I. "I could quote a thousand men who, when everything else failed them, found in Granula the very food their systems needed."—JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D., founder Dansville Sanatorium.

II. "Granula has saved my life on several occasions. I now carry the article with me as a sort of life preserver."—WM. GILLETTE (the actor).

III. "The Judge (A. W. Tourgee) has been crazy ever since he was in Dansville about the delicious Granula."—MRS. A. W. TOURGEE.

FOR THAT "PERFECT HEALTH FOOD"

GRANULA

GRANULA CO., Dansville, N. Y.

Pamphlet free. Trial box, postpaid, for 36 cts.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.

YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

'DELSARTE'

Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.

Agents Wanted. Also

DELSARTE CORSET CO.,
142 W. 23d St., New York.
111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

MASON & HAMLIN

Examine the new Mason & Hamlin Piano and Organ catalogues, sent free to any address. The Mason & Hamlin Grand and Upright Pianos are constructed on an Improved Method of Stringing, invented and exclusively used by Mason & Hamlin, by which remarkable purity of tone and great durability are secured, and phenomenal capacity to stand in tune. The Mason & Hamlin SCREW-STRINGER was patented in July, 1883, and is a veritable triumph for American ingenuity, being pronounced by experts "the greatest improvement of the century" in pianos. American Pianos and Organs are superior to all others. Mason & Hamlin Organs have long been the Standard the world over. The Mason & Hamlin Piano is fast becoming as famous as the Mason & Hamlin Organ, and illustrates that HIGHEST STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE which has always characterized the latter won for it instrument, and Highest Honors at all great World's Exhibitions since Paris, 1867. Illustrated catalogues free.

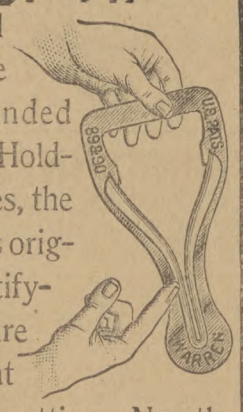
ORGANS

PIANOS

Without under-estimating the improvements effected by others in pianos, the Mason & Hamlin STRINGER is claimed to be the greatest improvement of them all, and without it the highest attainable excellence is simply impossible.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN AND PIANO CO.
BOSTON. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

Warren Hose Supporter



Let all ladies see the Rounded Rib on Holding Edges, the Warren's original identifying feature to prevent stocking cutting. No other hose supporter can help cutting the stocking. The Warren for sale everywhere. George Frost Co., makers, Boston, Mass.

FOR MANY LADIES THE

BALL'S CORSET

PERFECT COMFORT NO POSSIBLE INJURY TO THE HEALTH — NO METAL EYELETS TO PULL OUT OR CUT STRINGS — EASY THE FIRST DAY — NEVER BREAK OR ROLL UP BONES — FIT SNUG BUT NEVER TIGHT

CORSETS & CORSET WAISTS FOR OTHERS THE

KABO CORSET

ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY BY THEM — NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN YOUR CLOTHES — BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP — FULLY GUARANTEED BY CHICAGO CORSET CO.

CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

Publisher's Dep't.

Some Standing Offers.

There are some offers that we make to our subscribers that have a time limit, and some that are not so limited. We desire now to remind you that we will send at any time until further notice:

Neeley's Great Historical Chart and Political and United States Map, 5 feet 6 inches by 3 feet 10 inches, on rollers, ready to hang, and The Union Signal one year postpaid, for $2. We are receiving many flattering notices from persons who have purchased this map from us on these terms.

Or we will send at any time until further notice, a Union Signal Sewing Machine with full set of attachments, and The Union Signal one year on receipt of $22.

Or one of our wall pocket packages for 50 cents,

Or a souvenir spoon for $1.50; tea, $2.25; orange, $2.50,

Or any of our books or leaflets at catalogue price.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A Voice From The South.

The state superintendent of literature for Maryland uses some forcible language in her address to workers in the state, from which we cull a few sentences:

"Our work is hindered, our unions are dwarfed and we are perishing for this very food to nourish, inspire and fit us for lives of greater usefulness. Thoughts that should be as familiar to us as to those who penned them lie upon the shelves at our publishing house, and we mourn that there is not more fruit. Be vigilant, dear presidents and superintendents, and see that your members are supplied with the fittest and best, and that we all hand forth these healing leaves generously to be blessed for the Master's use. . . . If any union in the state is without a superintendent of literature, please have the 'best worker' elected to that position at once. . . . White-ribboners, one and all, let me ask you to sustain and help and encourage your literature superintendent, for this department is the life and vitality,—the feeder of all other departments. Let us not have to repent for lost opportunities that a timely leaflet might have saved."

Red-Letter Day Calendar.

The new Red-Letter Day Calendar for the National W. C. T. U. is something every white-ribboner should carry in her porte-monnaie. All who see it say how pretty it is. On the cover are the pictures of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, and the "days we celebrate" throughout the year are printed in red. As souvenirs of conventions these should be scattered in large numbers. We will send them for 5 cents each, or $4 per 100.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Spurgeon is Gone.

Sad news to all who love humanity and rejoice in those who labor for its uplifting. He was a hero. His work equals in extent and results that of any man who has labored, like him, for others. It was hard to let him go. Multitudes said this. But being dead, he speaks.

It is with pleasure we announce that we can introduce him to homes where he is unknown, and help those who know him to know and love him more, and perhaps to follow him, by a little volume of 219 pages, in the series "Lives that Speak." The author is Rev. James J. Ellis, who gives a very interesting narration of the life of this eminent divine.

Send for it. Price, $1.00.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Send for Color Samples and Price List. Patented February 23, 1886. Examine closely Stamp on inside of Waist.

TAKE NO OTHER.

THE GENUINE JACKSON CORSET WAISTS

ARE MADE ONLY BY THE JACKSON CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.

The manufacturer's name is printed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of clasp in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. You should have one of them.

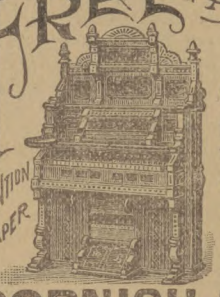
BE SURE AND GET THE RIGHT THING. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, SEND $1.25 FOR SAMPLE.

FREE AND SAVE $100.00 ON PIANOS AND ORGANS



CUT THIS OUT AT ONCE AND MAIL IT TO US. We will send you the FINEST PIANO and ORGAN CATALOGUES in the world, and show you how to SAVE $50 to $100.

Musical instruments for Cash, or upon terms to suit all buyers, at astonishingly low prices. Factory capacity ONE THOUSAND ORGANS and PIANOS per month. Correspondence Solicited.

CORNISH & CO., (Old Established and Reliable.) WASHINGTON, New Jersey.

COLD BLAST. Feathers and Feather Pillows

ARE SOLD GUARANTEED Free from ODOR, DUST and QUILLS AND IN PERFECT CONDITION.

ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM. IF YOURS DOES NOT, WRITE

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MANUFACTURERS OF PAULTLESS BEDDING
CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents. F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co., 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

Cocoas MADE BY THE DUTCH PROCESS are "Treated with Carbonate of Soda, Magnesia, Potash or Bicarbonate of Soda."

The use of chemicals can be readily detected by the peculiar odor from newly opened packages, and also from a glass of water in which a small quantity of chemically treated cocoa has been placed and allowed to remain for several days.

For more than One Hundred Years the house of Walter Baker & Co. have made their Cocoa Preparations ABSOLUTELY PURE, using NO Patent Process, Alkalies, or Dyes.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

PEATS THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT CHICAGO

Retails all grades of WALL PAPER of the newest designs and latest colorings in small quantities; many patterns cheaper than your home dealer can buy them.

GOOD PAPER, 3c. GOLD PAPER, 5c.

Handsome parlor paper 10—12½—15c per roll with wide border and ceiling to match.

If you intend to use any WALL PAPER whatever send 10 cents for postage on samples and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent free. Agents sample books $1.

See his samples before you buy.

ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 136-138 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

HOME DRESSMAKING

A Complete Guide to Household Sewing.

Women who try to save who love to dress who have to sew Need It

Prepaid $2.75. The only book on the subject. Free circulars giving Table of Contents.

Best Terms to Agents.

Address, CHARLES H. SERGEL & CO., Dept. A 350 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. MOCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTIGIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

BABY CARRIAGES ARE DELIVERED FREE to any place in the United States. Also Baby JUMPERS, BICYCLES, SAFETIES and GIRLS' TRICYCLES. One or more at wholesale price sent C. O. D. direct from L. G. SPENCER'S Factory, 221 W. Madison Street CHICAGO. $3 to $10 saved. Send 2c. stamp for new catalogue. The largest factory in the world. Latest Styles

PATTI A limited number of free scholarships in the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, Mass. Write for particulars to JAMES D. BALL, 36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE. OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR

Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish. St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day with our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send only five cents and receive a Large, Elegant Fashion Catalogue and how to secure 50c. worth of dress patterns, FREE. Add Young Lady's Bazar 230 La Salle St. Chicago.

LADY wanted, on salary, to sell Roses, Shrubs, &c Brown Bros. Nurym'n, Rochester, N.Y. & Chicago

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St. Chicago.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

LADY Agents $5 a day sure; new rubber undergarment. Mrs. N. B. LITTLE Chicago, Ill.

MORE MONEY IS MADE

Every year by agents working for us than for any other Company; why don't you make some of it? our circulars which we send free will tell you how. We pay salary or commission as party prefers, and want you now. OUTFIT FREE. Address at once. Standard Silver Ware Co., Boston, Mass.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

THE
Owen Electric Belt
AND APPLIANCES
For Men and Women
Are now recognized as the most valuable inventions of the present century.
They tone up the system and restore lost vigor.
CURE Rheumatism, Sciatica, Bright's Disease, Torpid Liver, Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, and many other diseases which drugs and medicines do not reach.
[Trade Mark.] DR. A. OWEN.
A FULL EXPLANATION will be found in
OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
containing sworn testimonials of people who have been cured, cuts of belts with prices and how to order, and other valuable information. Published in English, German, Swedish and Norwegian languages. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of 6 cents postage, or, treatise on rupture cured with electric truss by mail 6 cents.
The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co.,
Main Office and only Factory,
191-193 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 826 BROADWAY.
The Largest Electric Belt Establishment in the World.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.
American Desk & Seating Co.
270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

PARENTS CANNOT AFFORD
To let their children grow up without the amusement and physical training which the World's Parlor and Lawn Game gives. ELASTIC TIP CO., 152 and 154 Lake Street, Chicago.

BUILD A MODEL HOME
Our book shows and tells you how. Designs and sample pages of the work Free. GEO. F. BARBER & CO. Architects, Knoxville, Tenn.

YOU NEED THEM.
Crystal Glass Body. Silver Plate Top
Sample per mail 25 cents each.
PAINE, DIEHL & CO., PHILADELPHIA. PA.

NO CLAP-TRAP!
NO BOND SCHEME!
But a straight, honest effort to put Good Books in the hands of those who most need and appreciate them—Pastors and Sunday School Superintendents—and by a co-operative method that brings them at less than Half Usual Prices. Write for our Book Contract Plan.
CRANSTON & STOWE, Publishers
Cincinnati, O.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE.
A Christian woman's narrative of Mission work done "In His Name" in tough places, revealing the "inner life" of the underworld of New York "as seen by a woman." It describes Gospel work in the slums, and gives a famous detective's 30 years experiences. By Mrs. Helen Campbell, Col. Thos. W. Knox, and Inspector Thos. Byrnes (Chief of the N. Y. Detectives). With 250 engravings from flash-light photographs of scenes in Darkest New York by Day and by Night. Pure and good, full of tears and smiles, it is an ally of Temperance, a witness to the power of the Gospel,—a book for every home. Ministers say, "God speed it." Eminent women endorse it. ☞5,000 Agents Wanted, Men and Women. ☜ $200 a month made. ☞ Distance is no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to
A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Freight Paid. McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., CHICAGO

THE
CHICAGO & ALTON R. R.
IS THE BEST LINE TO
HOT SPRINGS
Arkansas. Fast time. Leave Chicago today, arrive Hot Springs to-morrow via "THE ALTON." You are only one night on the road. Through Pullman Service
FROM CHICAGO TO
HOT SPRINGS.
City Ticket Office, 195 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

Lady Gay and Her Sister.

This charming little book by Mrs. Geo. Archibald is winning favorable comment generally. One of our correspondents says:

Those children must be real—Sally especially; I have seen more than one just like her—mischievous, dove-eyed and inexpressibly precious. I fancy they are Mrs. A's grandchildren. Am I right?

Not quite. One generation nearer to the author, you may place them.

I have always urged that each Loyal Temperance Legion company should be collecting a library; I am more than ever convinced of the desirability of this when I read a book so thoroughly delightful as "Lady Gay and Her Sister," and realize that some of our brightest writers are devoting their talents to the children. The charm of this book is that its sayings and doings are such as we meet in the every-day children all about us, but yet it needed just Mrs. Archibald to bring them together and weave them into this sweet story of happy home-life.

Give the children everywhere an opportunity to become acquainted with "Lady Gay and Her Sister." HELEN G. RICE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:

Inclosed I hand you three dollars to be credited on my subscription for THE UNION SIGNAL. I only wish I possessed the power of language to express my high appreciation of the value of the paper. Its entrance into my household is a benediction. The privilege of looking at it on our sitting-room table and seeing the title is worth more than the price of the paper, which is pithy, interesting, instructive and high-toned—just the right stamp for the family. When I lived in Massachusetts, as a boy, I think the first money I earned was for catching rats in a steel trap at one cent each (old-fashioned, large pennies). I have just been thinking that I must continue to take THE UNION SIGNAL even were I to have no other means of earning money to pay for it, than catching rats at a penny apiece (provided the rats would only hold out).

Sincerely, ISAAC C——.
Lombard, Ill.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf.

If the members of the W. C. T. U. would read The Oak and Ivy Leaf, it would be great advantage to them. Especially should every local president and secretary and every superintendent of literature take it, that they may be properly informed regarding the possibilities of influencing aright the social life of the community. Read the following testimonials, and then send for the paper:

We feel the need of having your most valuable paper in order to successfully carry on our work. We trust our Oak and Ivy Leaf agent will be able to get many new subscribers. Our union is over one nehundred strong. Believing that reading Y's will never lose their interest, their courage, their convictions, or lack for things to do, we are resolved to put our Y paper in many homes this year that more work may be accomplished for our Lord and Master. We will also go further, and contribute occasionally to its columns.
CARRIE CONRAD AUSTIN.
Ishpeming, Mich.

I am very much pleased with your paper, and think I have been benefited by it. I enjoy so much reading about the work being done all over the country, and I hope some day to be an active worker myself. I have been giving my copy of this paper to a friend, and we both have enjoyed so much reading and talking about it. I hope I may interest some one in this work through this letter. My friend wants to take the paper this year.
Yours truly, RUTH DUFFEE.
Mobile, Ala.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, after reading, I shall send to my niece. I like the paper very much; the tone is, I think, so elevating, and if even every Y would take and read it, how much good it might do.
Very truly yours, LETITIA SMITH.
Richmond, Ind.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

BURPEE'S SEEDS GROW
Did you ever plant Seeds and then wait sadly for the green leaves that never came? BURPEE'S SEEDS are not that kind; you plant them; they grow. That's one reason why our mail order Seed Business is the largest. There is nothing doubtful about BURPEE'S SEEDS; their strong vitality is tested before selling, while having all been grown from the most thoroughbred strains they are equally sure to delight the planter with the Choicest Vegetables and most Beautiful Flowers. If you appreciate quality in Seeds, write to-day for Burpee's Farm Annual for 1892.
It is a handsome book of 160 pages: tells all about The Best Garden, Farm, and Flower Seeds, including Rare Novelties of Surpassing Merit, which cannot be obtained elsewhere—FREE to all who intend to purchase Seeds.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

SEEDS ROSES PLANTS TREES
THEY GROW--THEY BLOOM.
Catalogue Free 150 pages describing one of the most complete stocks in the U. S.
38 YEARS. 700 ACRES. 25 GREENHOUSES.
The STORRS & HARRISON CO.
PAINESVILLE, Lake Co., OHIO.

60c. worth for 20c. A Rare Collection of Flower Seed. 60c. worth for 20c.

Marguerite Carnations. A magnificent strain of this beautiful flower. Blooms easily from seed. Last all winter. Sweet scented. Red Ridinghood Pansy. Most beautiful of this popular flower; deep red, hazel eye, edged with gold. The Oriole, grand large double Golden Flowers, always in bloom. Giant English Show Balsams, (Queen Victoria's Strain,) 2 feet high, covered with large double flowers resembling roses, all colors. Helichrysum Monstrosum, best of all everlastings; keep their bright colors all winter. One packet each of the above choice varieties sent by mail for 20c. in stamps; retail price, 60c. Our beautiful illustrated 116 page catalogue accompanies each order. Address:
Samuel Wilson, Seed Grower, Mechanicsville, Pa.

$500 FOR A TOMATO
Last spring I offered $500 to any person producing a 3 lb. Mammoth Prize Tomato; T. R. Harris, Abbott, Neb., won it with one weighing 3 lbs. 3½ ozs., and I sent him my check for $500. It measured over 8½ in. in diameter. 37 tomatoes grew on one stem over 3 feet from the ground. Largest plant on record 18 ft. 6 in. tall. This mammoth strain creates a sensation wherever it goes, and is the largest ever offered. Thousands of my customers have grown them to weigh over 45 ozs. The quality is excellent; after you once test it you will grow no others. If well cared for they will produce 1 bu. to a plant (see cut) of large, smooth, bright red tomatoes, very solid with only a few seeds in each, and entirely free from rot. If started early, fruit ripens from July 4th until frost. This year I offer $500 Cash to any person producing a 3½ lb. tomato. (It can be done.) Full directions how Mr. Harris grew his with each order. Plant some, you may win the prize. All my seed is saved from large specimens.

SURE HEAD CABBAGE
Is all head and sure to head, very uniform in size, firm and fine in texture, excellent in quality and a good keeper. Single heads have weighed over 64 pounds.
EARLY SNOWBALL TURNIP
Is the earliest in the world, easy grown, good size, excellent quality. Will be far ahead of your neighbors.
My Catalogue, is worth 50 cts. to any one who gets it. $500 offered largest order; $50 for a pansy blossom; $300 for a bean plant with 100 pods, and above tomato prize, and Turnip, with my Catalogue of Bargains for only 25 cents. Greatest bargain catalogue ever sent out. ☞Every person sending silver for above collection will receive Free a packet FINCH'S IMPROVED EXTRA EARLY TREE TOMATO, and a 50c. certificate for seeds, your choice from my bargain catalogue Free.
F. B. MILLS, Rose Hill, Onandaga Co. N. Y.

FREE CATALOGUE, SEEDS, PLANTS, BULBS, Etc.

HOME GROWN NORTHERN SEEDS.
Money made by buying my seeds. 35 pkts $1.00. 2c to 5c pkt. Presents with every order. Send postal card with name and address for catalogue.
A. R. AMES, Madison, Wis.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D. C. H st. between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET, HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE. G. H. LA FETRA, Prop

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City. 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths.
Address, CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

PORTABLE BATHS.
Best ever known. Wholesale and Retail.
Agents Wanted Everywhere
Send for Circulars.
E. J. KNOWLTON, Ann Arbor, Mich.

PILES CURED FREE. New, Painless, Certain. Gives instant relief and lasting cure—never returns. To prove it we will send a trial package FREE, to any address. PYRAMID DRUG COMPANY, Box 35, ALBION, MICHIGAN.

ASTHMA
WORST CASES CURED TO STAY CURED IF UNCOMPLICATED BY ORGANIC DISEASE. Incurable cases declined.
WE WANT NAME OF EVERY ASTHMATIC. Examination free by mail.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M.D.
BUFFALO, N. Y.

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved, cheapest, scientific, powerful, durable and effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspenseries free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c stamp for pamphlet.
DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

Taken internally and used locally with Insufflator.
At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.
DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO

RUPTURE CURED!

(PATENT ALLOWED.)
Positively Holds Rupture.
WORN NIGHT AND DAY.
Has an Adjustable Pad which can be made larger or smaller to suit changing condition of rupture.
Illustrated Catalogue sent securely sealed by
G. V. HOUSE MFG. CO.
744 BROADWAY, N. Y. CITY

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISEASE, and can be Cured, by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given without the knowledge of the patient, if desired, by placing it in coffee, tea or articles of food. Cures guaranteed. Send for free circulars. GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

F. P. VAN VALKENBURGH, Former Associate Physician and Surgeon to the Old People's Home, 3858 Indiana Avenue, Chicago, also examining Physician for the New York Life Insurance Co., Cures Drunkenness, Morphine, Opium, and destroys the desire for Tobacco. Cures guaranteed. Correspondence solicited. Reference: Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Office, 103 State-st. Chicago

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept. G
C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM IF YOU CANNOT FIND A CURE Add. DR. W. H. ROSS, Grand Rapids, Mich.

TAPE WORM Removed alive, head and all, in three hours at your home. No starving required. Safe, sure and certain. Circulars free. 269 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

Signal Notes.

As a remedy for dyspepsia, buttermilk is frequently recommended. It is also a good temperance drink.

SOBER women are preferred to drunken men in business avocations. And why not? Railroad managers in Holland have found it impossible to man the switches with men who can be depended upon to let liquor alone, and so have substituted women.

CARDINAL MANNING was faithful to the last to his total abstinence principles. His horror of alcoholic drinks was so great that his physicians were compelled to find pharmacopœial substitutes when they considered it necessary to adopt a stimulant treatment.

FRANCISCO CRISPI, the foremost statesman of Italy, has just passed his 70th birthday. His youthfulness is remarkable. He still speaks with all the fire and force of forty years ago. He drinks no wine or beer, nor does he smoke tobacco, and he abstains from all luxuries. This is an instinct of greatness. Men born to rule the world have no tyrannizing habits.

THE League Journal, in a well-written article on "Savings Banks and Temperance," indicates the "silver lining" to the "sable cloud" of drunkenness. It hails the increased number of depositors (especially among youth and children) in the savings banks of the United Kingdom as a bright and cheering sign for temperance reformers; and it claims that the temperance agitation has wrought a great change in the habits of the more intelligent workingmen, directly and indirectly.

AMONG singers the erroneous idea prevails that the use of wine stimulates the voice. Dr. Richard B. Faulkner says that alcoholic liquors irritate the delicate throat tissues. "Drink no wine," says Mme. Adelina Patti, an undoubted authority. Dr. Lennox Browne is on record as opposed to the wine habit for singers. And the great throat physician, the late Sir Morell Mackenzie has written: "It must follow, as the night the day, that want of steadiness—i. e., want of adequate co-ordinative power over the laryngeal muscles, slight at first, but gradually increasing—will ensue."

A CONGREGATION in Scotland, it is said, in order to increase its receipts, leased the cellar of the church to a liquor merchant in which to store his surplus stock. One day the following lines were found to be chalked upon the wall of the building:

"There's a spirit above,
And a spirit below—
A spirit of love,
And a spirit of woe.
The spirit above
Is the spirit divine;
The spirit below
Is the spirit of wine."

This opened the eyes of the church fathers, who thereupon cancelled the liquor dealer's lease.

IN an address delivered by Mrs. Palmer, before the recent convention of state boards, she said, in regard to the exhibition of woman's work at the forthcoming Columbian Exposition, that no attempt would be made to separate women's work from that of men, but in the Woman's Building, in the central gallery, will be grouped the most brilliant achievements of women from every country and in every line of work. Exhibits will be admitted only by invitation, which will be considered the equivalent of a prize. No sentimental sympathy for women will cause the admission of second-rate objects, as the highest standard of excellence is to be strictly maintained.

THE English Government manufactures every year in two great factories at Patna and Ghazipur, no less than 57,000 chests of opium. (This does not include the large quantities manufactured by the government at India.) Each chest contains on an average 170 balls of opium, each ball being a little larger than a cricket ball. If Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle was crowded to its utmost capacity, six of these balls would put to death every man, woman and child within its walls, provided they had never tasted the drug before. The whole 57,000 chests would put to death the entire population of Great Britain and Ireland, 350 times over, if they had never tasted the drug before. This opium is expressly made for sensual use in China and the Straits Settlements. Every official in the factories, from top to bottom, is a government official. The factories are guarded by soldiers belonging to the government. It was only after two fearful wars that the Chinese consented to permit the importation of this vast annual torrent of poison.

ETHEL:—"Agnes, you are a regular little laundress, this chiffor looks like new."

AGNES:—"Of course it does, I wash it with IVORY SOAP."

ETHEL:—"Ah, that's the secret! How do you manage it?"

AGNES:—"Oh, I make a nice lather of IVORY SOAP, float the chiffon or embroidery about in it a bit until it is clear, squeeze it out, pat it softly in a damask towel until half dry, then arrange the edges, press it out and it looks like new. IVORY SOAP, you know, does not injure the most delicate colors and is invaluable for art embroideries and all fine fabrics."

COPYRIGHT 1891, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

RUBIFOAM
A PERFECT LIQUID DENTIFRICE
DELICIOUSLY FLAVORED.
ITS USE INSURES BEAUTIFUL CLEAN TEETH
Price 25 cents
E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

BUY NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS
FOR
12 cts.
In order to introduce my splendid NORTHERN GROWN SEEDS everywhere, I offer postpaid
1 Pkg. Melon, 1 Pkg. Radish, 1 Pkg. Lettuce, 1 Pkg. Tomato, 5 Pkgs. Elegant Flower Seed, Catalog Price 50 cts. Special Price 12 cts.
9 Pkgs. listed in no Catalog in America under 50c. 5,000 Acres used. Plants and Roses by the 100,000. Send 5c. for finest Plant and Seed Catalog published. Many Colored Plates.
Catalog and above 9 Pkgs., 17c.
JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.
JOHN A. SALZER, LA CROSSE, WIS.

A Complete Line of Dress Reform Goods,
INCLUDING THE
NEWELL BUST SUPPORT,
Equipoise Waist and Jenness-Miller Specialties. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue.
MRS. S. W. PIKE,
75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble, Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

WOMAN'S BAKING CO.

Less than 500 shares remain unsold and unreserved, and 5 weeks only have passed since first we offered the present issue of 2,000 shares of our capital stock at par $25 per share.

WHY IS STOCK SELLING SO FAST?

BECAUSE shrewd women foresee results and profit thereby. They know that profits on bakery goods are very large, and with the use of our labor-saving machinery, OUR PROFITS WILL BE VERY GREAT.

BECAUSE bread is a necessity. EVERY FAMILY MUST HAVE BREAD, and this being a woman's concern, owned and operated by women, we will have an unlimited demand for our goods from the very outset.

BECAUSE every officer of this company is known throughout the United States as a practical business woman, and their combined efforts in behalf of this company ASSURE A GREAT SUCCESS.

A woman writes: "I know most of your officers. Inclosed find check for my first installment on 200 shares of your stock."

FLORENCE E. KOLLOCH, pastor of the Englewood Church, writes: "The Woman's Baking Co. commends itself to the public, both as a financial enterprise and as an avenue for employment along lines of labor none dare deny belongs most assuredly to her."

STOCK SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN.

Absolutely Non-assessable, and there is no liability beyond amount invested. Price $25 per share, payable, if desired, in monthly installments of $2.50 per share.

Send a deposit, no matter how small, to show us you are in earnest, say how many shares you would like, and we will reserve them until you have time to fully investigate or arrange your money matters. Our illustrated pamphlet gives full information, also portraits and biographical sketches of our officers. It is sent free. Have your shares reserved, then investigate. You can lose nothing, and you may gain a great deal.

OFFICERS,

Mrs. Louise Rockwood Wardner, (Illinois Industrial School for Girls), Pres. Miss Caroline A. Huling, (Pres. Working Woman's Improvem't Ass'n), Sec.
Mrs. Lydia Rice Bentley, (the well-known Vocalist), Vice-President. Mrs. R. A. Emmons, (Sec. Woman's Lecture Bureau, W. C. T. U.), Treas.
Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, (Ravenna, Ohio), Vice-President. Mrs. Frances E. Owens, (Publisher of "Mrs. Owens' Cook Book"), Auditor.
Miss Ella S. Bass, (Proprietor Lily Publishing House), Auditor.

MAKE DRAFTS, CHECKS AND MONEY ORDERS PAYABLE TO
WOMAN'S BAKING CO., 161 LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

FREE Excursions TO CHICAGO

Over all Railroads for the next 30 days, from February 25th. The object of this is to give all readers of this paper a chance to see the wonderful temperance town of HARVEY. From your homes you can form but a small idea of Chicago, the World's Fair Buildings, and the millions of dollars being invested in manufacturing enterprises at Harvey. There we offer to pay your actual railroad fare to Chicago and return to the amount of not exceeding 2½% of the amount of lots you purchase of us while here. Illustrated Plats and Circulars free to all.

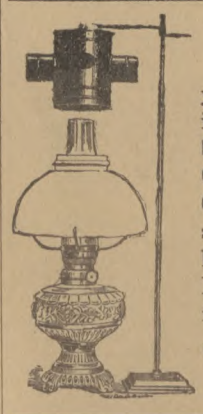
HARVEY

WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO., 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.



FREE HEAT.

The lamp that lights your room will heat it if you use a FALLS HEATER. Simple, Cheap, Clean, NO ODOR. A very useful article in every household at all seasons. Best of testimonials from all sections.

ENTERPRISE MANF'G. CO., 17 Milk Street, BOSTON, MASS.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prizes. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, B'way, New York.

YOSE & SONS PIANOS. ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Sold on easy terms. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue and full information.

170 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

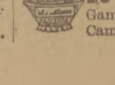
BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF
Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.

We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.

GRAND TERRACE ADDITION

For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to C. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.



YOUR NAME on 25 LOVELY CARDS, 1 RING, 1 LACE PIN, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 400 Album Verses &c. with the New and Popular Monthly, WAYSIDE GLEANINGS. THREE MONTHS FOR 10c. LAUREL CARD CO., CLINTONVILLE, CONN.

20 Hidden Name, New Emb. Basket, Plush Fringe Cards, 1 complete Fountain Pen 25 Games & Agts. Outfit 10cts. Typewriter and Photo Cameras free to Agts. Clinton Bros. Clintonville, Ct.

THE UNION SIGNAL

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII. No. 9.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, March 3, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Jay Gould is recovering.

Silver has declined to the lowest point on record.

It is proposed to erect a statue to James Russell Lowell in Westminster Abbey.

The street car railroad strike in Indianapolis, Ind., resulted in serious riots,

The national convention of the People's party has been called to meet at Omaha, Neb., July 4, 1892.

Nearly 300 car loads of flour are going forward to the sea-coast to be sent to the famine sufferers in Russia.

Senator Gatch, of Iowa, has introduced a local option bill in the senate. The license fee is fixed at not less than $500.

A conference of negroes was held at Tuskogee, Ala., on February 23. It was marked by good-nature, logic and common sense.

A German wine merchant has been fined $6,000 and sentenced to six months' imprisonment for adulterating wine with cider.

The President has sent to Congress a special message on the World's Fair urging a liberal appropriation on the part of the government.

The grounds and buildings committee of the World's Fair has declined to grant space for an Isabella pavilion and heroic statue of Queen Isabella.

The Board of Lady Managers of the Columbian Exposition invite designs by women for an official badge, sketches to be sent in by March 15, 1892.

The famous Schmidt license bill of Iowa failed to pass the senate on the 24th ult. by two votes. The Democrats favored and the Republicans opposed it.

Congressmen returned to Washington from Chicago filled with praise of the progress of the World's Fair, and confident that it is to be the greatest event in our history.

John D. Rockefeller, of New York, has added $1,000,000 to his former donation of $1,600,000 to the Chicago University, as a thank-offering for returning health. It consists of five per cent bonds.

At the graduating exercises of the College of Pharmacy of the Northwestern University, Miss Viola A. Griswold, the only woman in the class of forty-eight members, took the highest honor, the university medal.

Two hundred delegates, representing ninety-eight associations of the railroad department of the Y. M. C. A., met in Chicago last week. Although requested, they failed to ask for Sunday closing of the Exposition.

The Central Committee of the Prohibition party has sent out a request for a systematic canvass to secure names to the million voters' agreement sent out by the New York Voice. Blanks can be had by writing to The Voice.

The Illinois Woman's Exposition Board offers a prize of $5 for the best design, plan or method of representing within one cubic foot of space any one of the three hundred or more occupations in which woman is engaged in the state.

Berlin, Germany, was the scene of a wild riot on Thursday and Friday, the participants being socialists and unemployed workmen. More than a hundred arrests were made and scores of citizens and policemen injured. Windows were broken, shops sacked and the principal streets, notably Unter den Linden, were filled with angry workmen, excited lookers-on and mounted soldiers. The personal popularity of the Emperor was demonstrated by the cheers which greeted him as he rode through the crowds As we go to press, peace seems restored, and active measures are being instituted for the relief of the unemployed.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S absence in St. Louis prevented the usual article from her pen in this week's UNION SIGNAL.

OUR senior editor shows signs of grip since her return from St. Louis, hence cannot as promised analyze the article of Mr. Power in a late issue.

REV. DR. GILBERT DELAMATER, father of the Greenback party and its candidate for president, has a leonine face and mighty voice when aroused. He stood strongly for "the whole cause."

JOHN W. HAYES and Hugh Cavanaugh are two lieutenants worthy of the great chieftain to whom they are so loyal—Terence V. Powderly, and all are strong for prohibition and woman's ballot.

THE "Big Four" of the Labor Conference were General Weaver, Terence V. Powderly, Col. L. L. Polk and Ignatius Donnelly—all men of remarkable ability and experience and all friends of home protection and saloon destruction.

THE woman's separate organizations of Knights of Labor have, after several years' trial, been discontinued by request of the women themselves. They prefer to "belong" in "good and regular standing" to the order in general. So Mr. Powderly told us at St. Louis.

PERHAPS no woman of title and fortune, a great landowner at that, ever received a higher compliment than was paid to Lady Henry Somerset when, as a token of esteem and confidence, she was made a voting member of the largest labor conference ever held in the United States.

IGNATIUS DONNELLY made a point for government money that was worthy of reflection, when he said the little postal note now issued proves the power and practical utility of government control, and that it is not essential to use metals as money—the increase of commerce having far outrun the proportionate supply of gold.

ILLINOIS' valiant leader, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, has returned to her own state after an absence of three months, most of which time was spent at Clifton Springs, N. Y. Mrs. Rounds has been resting at her sister's home, endeavoring to recuperate from her active field work of the past year, and although yet far from her usual vigor, is preparing to meet her long-postponed engagements with her own women, all of whom will be heartily glad to welcome her home.

THE Catholic clergy of New York City have issued an address to the members of that church in which they take the strongest ground against the so-called "Excise Revision Bill" now pending in the legislature. They say: "Under the pretext of improving the present system, this iniquitous measure absolutely removes the restrictions imposed by existing laws. Its provisions are so entirely in the interest of liquor dealers and so defiant of the moral sense of the community that the just indignation of all friends of law and order has been aroused. The sanctity of the Sabbath, the peace and happiness of homes, and the best interest of the public are menaced by this bill, which has been maturely planned by those engaged in the liquor traffic, in flagrant defiance of the command of our Bishops against Sunday liquor selling. Realizing the imminent danger threatened by the proposed legislation, the priests have resolved by joint action to save trouble and expense by distributing on the same day to their congregations this circular in amounts sufficient to provide at least one copy for every Catholic household." We congratulate the white-ribboners of New York upon the powerful support thus furnished them.

THE Rev. Randall Davidson has proved the wide gulf that exists between a Christian man and a dignitary of the Christian Church of England. He was anxious to "share in the general expression of regret and regard for the memory of one who has worked so long and so manfully in his Master's cause." The Bishop of Rochester, however, not only could not attend the memorial services at the Tabernacle, but has forbidden his clergy from associating themselves with Non-conformist ministers, and therefore they are thus prohibited from showing their respect and love for Mr. Spurgeon who has so long been a bright light in the great universal church of Christ.

ANOTHER great heart has been stilled. On February 23, James M. Gordon, of Auburndale, Mass., father of Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, and Misses Anna and Bessie Gordon, passed peacefully away, aged seventy-seven. Few men were more honored and loved by the white-ribboners, many of whom will recall his introduction to the National W. C. T. U. in Battery D, in 1889, when his daughters stood beside him. The manhood of strength and gentleness had in him rare illustration. A hardy New Englander, who hewed his own way in the world, he came early to Boston where almost his whole life was passed. For thirty years cashier of the Columbian National Bank and living in the city's suburbs, he was never late but twice, once from illness and again by reason of a railroad accident. For twenty years treasurer of the "American Board" of the Congregational church, and a member of its prudential committee, he was deeply read on missionary subjects and widely acquainted with heroic workers in that and other philanthropic fields. A devoted Christian, his home joyful with music, serene with faith and sunshiny with love, he was as refreshing to one's spirit as the wells of Elim. Conservative in training, he became in his old age a radical in temperance politics and a champion of woman's rights. Brave as he was tender, and modest as he was meritorious, his children are, after all, his truest exponents and his greatest glory. Farewell until we reach the Summer Land, thou kindly one, thou gracious host, "beloved disciple," gentle Nathaniel—"an Israelite in whom there was no guile."

THE chief of police in Chicago, Major McClaughry, says that crime grows about forty per cent with every twenty-five per cent of the population. These figures have in them matter of eminent pith and moment for every temperance thinker. The major says that criminals are divided into three classes: They are born, they are accidental and led into wrong doing, and they are victims of circumstances. Under the criminals are the parasite class, which increases in proportion as the population drifts into the great centers. Statesmen have a short way out of this difficulty in the Empire of China where they increase the number of crimes for which the penalty is death, and thus mow down the parasite class, since it constantly interplays with the criminal. We live in a day in which a study is being made of the defective, dependent and delinquent branches of humanity as scientific and accurate as was formerly made of Greek roots and geometric theorems. Perhaps this single fact has in it more of hope for the world than any other mental phenomenon of which we can think. Our local unions ought to study these problems, taking as text books the results obtained by others. What these text books are can easily be ascertained by writing to the governor of your respective states and asking for a copy of the annual report of the commission on Charities and Correction, or better still obtaining from Hon. Fred Wines, of Springfield, Ill., a copy of the report of the National Commission on the same subjects. A postal enclosed to the last named gentleman, asking the price at which this book can be had, will soon bring back material for most helpful discussion in the local meetings.

Contributed.

"BUT TO MINISTER."

BY SARA FRANCES COOKE.

O merry eyes! that nevermore shall meet me,
O laughing lips! that nevermore shall part
To chase away the shadow as they greet me,
Or voice the pulsings of thy noble heart.

O glorious strength! that filled my feeble measure,
Aye, filled it overflowing from the brim!
What knew I of life's estimate of pleasure?
My pain his absence, and my pleasure him!

But say, my true one, did the angels need thee?
Is their strength greater because thou art strong?
Or 'mid their glory do they never heed thee,
Nor stay the rushing torrent of their song?

Heaven is the dwelling place of noble spirits,
Whose generous natures, strained and cramped on earth,
Knew no just sentence to adjudge their merits
No faithful witness to attest their worth.

I know that some stern nature, saved by fire,
And coldly standing far off from God's throne,
Has through thy guidance dared to come up higher,
To claim the heritage which was its own.

I know some timid spirit, shy and shrinking
Back from the glories of that wondrous place,
Has gained fresh courage, from thy clear eyes drinking
New realization of God's love and grace.

For he who hath been true to earth's Ideal,
Though human doubt and anguish veiled her face,
Shall higher raise the standard of heaven's Real,
When each man goeth to his chosen place.

THE LINBOROUGH LIBRARY AND ITS MASTER.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

It was a singular case in more ways than one. Long before the days of libraries, a good sixty years before the much bigger towns close at hand had thought of such need, little Linborough had had its own very select and, one must admit, chiefly unread library, and this is the way it had come.

To begin with, Linborough was a "county town," which being interpreted, means that court sat here and lawyers congregated. The Governor chose to build here a house for his old age, and sundry decrepit judges and other legal luminaries followed his example. But it was not to them that the village owed its library, but to the famous physician, who, born in Linborough, clung to it even when Harvard called him, and came back to lay his bones in the old churchyard, and leave to the inhabitants the volumes he had reserved when his will was made.

Young Doctor Weeden, called so only to distinguish him from the elder man, had never gone away save to graduate under his father and then return to the place he loved. He in turn consecrated most of his own books to the same purpose. His office was in the front yard before the great old house, and at one end the shelves rose to the ceiling filled with his father's bequest and his own addition. They were chiefly classics. He abominated the modern, and counted no book worthy of place till it had known at least ten years of existence. He watched the shelves jealously. He sought to mould public taste as he would have it, and groaned in spirit, as he saw the number of readers steadily diminish, and the books grow musty for want of handling.

This was the tale for many a year till the Linborough Library came to represent something that sounded well as one mentioned it, but had small bearing on the real life of the village. And then came a woman who looked with interest at the little building in the big yard, and at once proceeded to investigate its contents.

Dr. Weeden, now an exceedingly conservative old gentleman of seventy, eyed her distrustfully. It was certain that she knew something about books, for she handled them properly and with evident affection, the lack of which he bewailed in the rising as well as the risen generations then surrounding him. But there was a look in her eye that he felt meant war, and he braced himself for conflict. Why, he could hardly tell, but after years in which the administration of matters had been as he willed, no other nominal officer caring to question his methods, he felt the ground shake under his feet. Yet the bright blue eyes of his adversary twinkled as they met his, and as he waved her to a seat with the dignity which was part of the family inheritance, he himself was forced to smile though he at once frowned to dissipate any impression of possible yielding.

The will had left a small sum to be expended yearly in the purchase of new books, and these were to circulate first among a certain number of people who had been designated as the ones to have a general oversight of the library. But for unknown reasons nobody had ever attempted oversight, and the books never circulated. It was this fact that had distressed the new minister and that had made Mrs. Dalton determine upon vigorous measures, and now she looked inquiringly at the old doctor, who bent his grizzled brows and waited in silence.

It was at this moment that the door opened and the young minister entered to seek on the dusty shelves some reference book which naturally he did not find since it was a purely modern production. He hesitated, but the old doctor evidently considered him an ally, for he said hastily,

"Just in time, sir. We were about to have a slight discussion in which I do not doubt you will be of material assistance."

"Undoubtedly," Mrs. Dalton said cheerfully. "There is really no question, for of course you will at once agree that what we want is to have the town read. At present the town does everything but that, and they account for it by saying that there is nothing here that they can understand."

"That, madam, is their misfortune; not the fault of the library," said Dr. Weeden with dignity.

"Precisely, but as they have neglected or failed to have the minds that would make understanding possible, we have got to supplement deficiencies, and give them something they can understand. If they can't take one form of cultivation we must give them another, and with your knowledge of human nature, Dr. Weeden, you will be the first to do this."

"Madam," said the old doctor, "all forms of cultivation are condensed in those volumes. Familiarity with them means knowledge of the best the world has ever had to offer."

"Yes, for the people who have the cultivation necessary to their understanding. But the world has left these books high and dry on the shelves to be taken down by the student and scholar, but not by the general reader."

"The best hundred books—for I have seen such a list, madam—include them all."

"I know it, but those who understand them must know what preceded their making as well as the time that gave them birth, and this is not possible save where one has leisure as well as education. What are the young clerks and factory workers, and the farmers' boys and girls to do? When a living is earned there is no time left for anything but general reading. It is that that must be made attractive and that in which your library is fatally deficient."

"We must learn from our elders. It is the past that is the teacher."

"We are alive to-day. It is to-day that we must understand. In the day of the elders it was because they knew their own time that their work had value. It is the activities of this present time that we are to understand, and you get these in the new novel, the magazine or review, the best weeklies, the sermon. Not one of these is in your library, or distributed among your members. Aristotle and Bacon will not make men of affairs, or even thinkers who can deal successfully with the issues of the time."

"The ancients sounded all experience, and beyond them there is no need for further words."

The old doctor's lips were set firmly, and he looked toward the minister as if for confirmation. That gentleman was silent. So far Mrs. Dalton had spoken his own mind.

"Dear Dr. Weeden," and the little lady's tone was more persuasive as the obstinate nature of the material she dealt with became plainer and plainer. "You love your village and you want the best thing for it. Here ought to be the source of just that life for every one in it, and it lies in books and periodicals that you have shut out. You are responsible if the village retrogrades and the young people turn their backs on what was intended to be part of their daily life."

"I?" sputtered the old doctor. "Madam, you are making a grave mistake if you suppose I have anything to do with it."

"You have everything. The library is here under your own eyes and the funds are so in your hands that no one dares to say to you what I am saying now. It is the right of all concerned to have a spokesman, and I take that place for them. I want this focus for work that will tell on the village, and I claim at your hands the right to make the necessary changes. Think it over, doctor, and tell me that I may have it."

Mrs. Dalton put out her hand and the doctor took it mechanically, as if he were about to feel her pulse, and looked after her as she slipped away, with a dazed expression. Never before had any one dared to mention rights, nor did he, as, after a word or two, the young minister also left.

What thoughts went through the old man's mind have not been told. But a day later Mrs. Dalton received a note written in even more formal and stately fashion than his habitual speech, in which he said:

"I do not personally, madam, feel assured that your charges are as absolutely correct as you make me feel they may be, but I will not be responsible for any evil that may come through my obtuseness. The fund of this year is at your disposition, and I add my own check for a small amount as earnest of my wish to serve the community so far as I can."

"Bless his old heart!" said Mrs. Dalton, for the check was for fifty dollars. "Now we will see."

Three weeks later the little building in her own grounds, once used as a lawyer's office, had been transformed into a reading-room, as bright and attractive as new paper and paint could make it. Several tables, a long one with periodicals and papers, one or two smaller ones with games, and on the walls a few good engravings and attractive reproductions, made a spot so cheery that Mrs. Dalton wondered the whole village did not take instant possession. Under her skillful aid a good part of it in time came, too, and a club for the factory boys as well as one for the factory girls followed as a matter of course.

The old doctor looked in a moment now and then, but shook his head. This was not knowledge or the pursuit of knowledge, and small good could come of it. But having yielded once, to yield again was not hard, and gradually as books were needed for reference they transferred themselves to the shelves of the new quarters, and one evening he came in to find a boy counted as a hard case reading aloud to three others Plutarch's Lives, his choice being, for some reason, one of the doctor's favorites, "Fabius Maximus."

"That is something like," he said, sitting down with huge satisfaction, and listening so heartily that the boys presently asked a question or two, and then more as they found that he had a store of most fascinating tales to tell.

"Come some more, do come some more," they said as he presently rose to go, amazed that he had stayed so long, and to his own surprise he found that he wanted to.

That was the beginning of regular evenings with Plutarch, and to his own perennial amazement Dr. Weeden has become one of the hardest workers in the boys' club, and for the first time since its foundation, the library has begun to do the work that waited till one wise little woman had found out the way to bring its holder to terms.

THE MEDICAL CURE OF DRUNKENNESS.

BY BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS, D. D.

For many years the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been calling attention to the scientific phase of the temperance question. In the efforts made in this direction, the pathological effects of alcohol upon the human system have been specifically noted, and weighty arguments deduced therefrom in favor of total abstinence. To this noble body of Christian workers we are indebted for the study, in a number of our public schools, of alcohol in its bearing upon the physical constitution. It has thus prepared the way for the practical recognition of the scientific or medical treatment of the alcoholic habit.

It does not matter much whether this habit becomes in most cases a disease, according to the strict definition of the term, or not. That abnormal conditions in the body do result from the use of intoxicants cannot be denied. Distinguished physicians say we may call these the signs or symptoms of disease. To call the habit a disease does not abate one jot of the sinfulness which has caused it. Disease is always the effect of the violation of God's laws. Many a disease, besides that arising from alcohol, is the direct result of sin, which is the willful transgression of the moral law. The physician, however, treats disease as disease, whatever may have produced it. It is in perfect harmony with God's purposes, as evidenced in the healing power of nature, and with Christ's example in working His miracles upon the bodies of men, that a physical remedy should be used for the physical phases of alcoholism, if such a remedy can be found.

It seems to have been reserved for the nineteenth century to apply such a remedy, even if it cannot claim the honor of exclusively discovering it. The bi-chloride of gold with accompanying tonics appears to have proved itself a specific antidote for the alcoholic and narcotic poison. Nearly four hundred years ago, Dr. Paracelsus, a French physician, used bi-chloride of gold in the treatment of dipsomania. Depending upon it alone he failed to effect permanent cures. Dr. Keeley has been the hardy pioneer in our age of this specific treatment of inebriety, and has justly won both wealth and fame in his practice. It would be a disgrace to the intelligence of the medical profession of this century, however, if Dr. Keeley could justify any claim whatever to be the sole possessor of the important secret of the cure of drunkenness. The careful analysis of his medicines made by our leading chemists combined with independent scientific and medical research, and a critical comparison of the cures wrought by his method with that of another physician, who has made a specialty of the alcoholic habit for years, prove that the secret is not with Dr. Keeley alone. Time enough has now elapsed to show that for the most of the cases treated there must be an enlistment of moral and spiritual forces to make the cures permanent. Many very striking facts have come to my knowledge on this vital point.

There ought to be in an Institute where large numbers congregate to be healed, cheerful Christian surroundings. In every case where a cure is attempted, the will of the patient must be roused to determinate action. It has also been brought to my notice that treatment indiscriminately or en masse has often worked great mischief in the brain and the nerve centers. It has also caused many lapses which otherwise might have been prevented. These are danger-points which must be carefully watched. The problem for solution in the scientific and successful treatment of inebriates would seem then to require a medical method which shall be thoroughly effective and free from the slightest charge of quackery; an Institute permeated with a Christian spirit, and still extending its helpful influences after the patient has graduated, and an efficient plan for helping those to the cure who may be unable financially to help themselves. Great confidence has been felt in several quarters that the problem can be solved in part, at least, by the method of Dr M. M. Thompson of Chicago, and the plans of his friends. This gentleman, a thoroughly reputable, Christian physician, enjoying the full confidence of his medical brethren, to whom he has detailed the treatment he employs, recently presented a striking demonstration of his ability to cure the alcoholic disease. In the presence of several members of the medical profession, the clergy and the business men of Chicago, nearly a score of representative patients gave their willing and grateful testimony to the radical cure effected in them. Among those present to hear their enthusiastic words were the Rev. Dr. Withrow, the Rev. Dr. Noble, the Rev. W. T. Meloy, D. D., Prof. G. B. Wilcox, D. D., Dr. A. G. Beebe, Dr. J. J. Thompson, Dr. R. N. Hall and Messrs. J. Symington, Chas. H. Case, V. P. Welch and W. H. Rice.

As the outgrowth of the gathering on that occasion, steps have been taken for the establishing of a National Bi-chloride of Gold Institute in Chicago, which, with its branch Institutes in all parts of the Union, is to be under the general direction of Dr. Thompson. A Medical and Moral Temperance Association has been incorporated for the purpose of aiding the indigent victims of inebriety to a cure through this treatment, and also to endeavor to procure employment for those needing it after being placed on their feet. Without superseding or antagonizing any existing temperance society, it will simply aim to be the efficient agent of all temperance and benevolent organizations, and of the various churches, as well as of individuals, in applying funds contributed for the specific purpose named.

Among the incorporators are the Rev. J. L Withrow, D. D., the Rev. Dr. Noble, the Rev. Dr. Wolfenden, the Rev. Dr. Meloy, and the writer of this article. Several of the above mentioned gentlemen are members of the board of control. Dr. Thompson expects to move into the new Institute in a few weeks where he will be able to take care of a very large number of patients.

RAILROAD TIES.
IV.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

I took lunch to-day with my evolutionary friend and found that his research has destroyed the Bible—again.

I asked him which particular erratum he was at present pulverizing. He said, in his sententious way. "Suppose we have to give up the Psalms?" "Well," I said, "as long as we are only supposing, suppose we don't; but go on." And how he did talk! And I kept very still. I never discuss such things with him. And as he went on I was idly turning the leaves of an old morocco "New Testament and Psalms" in large type, which lay before me on the library table. Many of the passages were marked, and many of the leaves faded by much use. I knew the history of the old book, and when he had finished, said:

"You have demolished the best of them. What a blessing it would have been to the old folks if they could have known the truth. See! they have marked the very doubtfulest: 'The Lord is my Shepherd;' 'The Lord is my light and my salvation;' 'God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.' Say, I don't know who wrote them, nor when they were written, but it is amazing how such mistaken, random things fit every cog and cam of life's most delicate combinations." "Yes," he said, "I wish I had their simple faith."

What pains some people take to be uncomfortable! For my part I take no interest in this curious knowledge of dates and authors. I can tell whether I "have the step" without studying my companion's feet. I couldn't think of sparing time to calculate whether my wife is more German or English, more intellectual or vital—that's criticism. She's mine; she rests me, cheers me; she is beautiful. I want her, I have her—that's love.

. . . . . .

The Bible holds out very well, "considering." Have you ever seen Minnesota wheat field? Large as a New England state, many of them! I've seen a little dog "hunting" in them. Every minute or so he'd leap up into view above the grain barking spitefully. It was clear to him that the wheat field was a mistake—a lusus naturæ—things had got mixed; it did not stand to reason that in a world of hunting dogs grain fields like that should be intentional, but he would soon break it down; and away he'd go, flushing his ears into sight every few feet, then disappearing in the yellow deeps, and after hours he'd return. The wheat kept waving on, combing gold out of the sunlight, and sucking balm and food and medicine out of the clods. . . . . .

But the puppy was "awful tired."

B. & O. Depot, Chicago, Feb. 15, '92.

THE ESSENCE OF LOYALTY TO THE NATION.

BY GEORGE MILTON HAMMELL.

The government of the United States is a composite unit, whose existence is conditioned upon the harmonious co-action of the various parts of which it consists, and, also, upon the maintenance of right relations between it and the people, in whom, by delegation from the Supreme Ruler of the universe are vested all powers and privileges, all rights and obligations of sovereignty.

In the course of our political history there have been frequent conflicts between the different departments—notably, between legislative and executive—but they have not persisted long enough to cause disintegration, and the various local and sectional rebellions have been suppressed, though at vast cost, by exercise of executive authority.

But, vital as is the executive, the student of political science is assured that the judiciary is even more essential to the life of the nation.

Section 2, Article 3, of the Constitution reads:

"The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more states; between a state and citizens of another state; between citizens of different states . . between a state or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens or subjects."

The judiciary differentiates the "Union" from the "Confederacy." Analyzing its functions, Theodore Woolsey, in his "Political Science," says: "The supreme court of the United States is the moderating power of the Constitution, and, while it has no might and may be opposed by might, it has been able to carry its decisions into practice. They have been respected and received with scarcely an exception by an influential profession . . as well as by the intelligence of the country. We cannot help believing that the supreme court has saved the country from infinite evils, and that to break it down would be to dissolve the Union."

" . . If there were in our constitution no such ultimate power of interpreting the laws and of deciding whether new laws were consistent with the fundamental law, there is reason to believe that the Union could not have been kept together . . The supreme court is the anchor of the United States and there can be but one such anchor."

That is to say, the subordination of the supreme court to the will of a "political chief," or capricious Congress, or popular contempt of its just decisions, would be as fatal to the welfare of the nation as an organized and armed conspiracy to disrupt the republic by assassinating the President, or ejecting representatives of the people from the halls of the capitol.

In fact, such subordination or contempt of the supreme court is even more serious in its moral results, because it is, in the first place, a symptom of degraded character, and in the last place, a defiance of Deity, unless it can be shown that the utterance of the court is made in the interest of violators of fundamental ethical law.

"For," says Woolsey, "judges differ from other officers of state in that they have a part to perform which is almost exclusively moral; they are representatives of justice and of God."

To ignore their ex cathedra decisions, to act in defiance of their opinions, is as dangerous to the body politic as atheism; it IS atheism!

Now, this being true, according to the fundamental axioms of political ethics I assert, in the name of political righteousness, that no citizen of the United States can be consistently loyal to the government in its unity, unless he is loyal to the judiciary when it utters an opinion on questions of law and equity—such opinion being in accord with Divine law and order—or inherent moral law.

This being granted, the application is easy. The supreme court has declared that "there is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors by retail. It is not a privilege of a citizen of the state or of a citizen of the United States."

In boldest defiance of this decision (which no one can pronounce tainted by fear of a dominant political party) there are political leaders, organizers and conductors of campaigns, editors of great partisan journals, who deliberately propose to create the right to sell intoxicating liquors by retail, on payment of a "license" or "tax." Others denounce all "sumptuary" laws, while a new party proposes to make the state itself a vender of those drinks in which lurk damning demons, fierce to drag the souls of enslaved drinkers into deepest hells.

Therefore, every voter who belongs to a party that is confessedly managed in the interest of the liquor traffic antagonizes the supreme court, and is in rebellion against the government of the United States. I do not say that he is consciously guilty of treason,—in most cases, perhaps, he is not; but I do say that thousands upon thousands of men cast their ballots with the avowed purpose of preventing the annihilation of the liquor traffic—and of maintaining the present system of political alliance with the men of the saloon, distillery and brewery. Neither do I affirm that the government is a unit in its attitude towards the liquor traffic, it is not; both the executive and the legislative departments are managed in the interests of the saloon for purposes of partisan supremacy. The conscience of the nation is right—but the will is inert, or exercised in opposition to the dictates of the moral judgment.

For this inconsistency, the old party voters are directly responsible. Their leaders beguile them with false issues and prevent great moral questions from being agitated by the party press—and they are willing to have it so. Subservient to the caucus and the convention—(whose inner history is a record of shameful stultification and compromise)—they go to the polls and say, "Let the old order continue!" They make themselves "of necessity partners to the most degrading and ruinous of all human pursuits," and stand shoulder to shoulder with men spreading ruin and death. Their very silence on the liquor question is confession of guilty complicity with the saloon, of a diabolical alliance with the most degraded foes that society has now to combat.

Nelson College, Cincinnati.

PROHIBITION DOES NOT PROHIBIT.

BY HENRY W. BLAIR.

For the purposes of argument, I think the admission should be made by temperance advocates, of the general truth of the favorite proposition of the rum power that "Prohibition does not prohibit," and that the discussion should proceed upon the question, "If not, why not?" The proposition of the enemy better stated would be, "Prohibition does not prevent."

Is it fair to reason thence that prohibition is wrong?

Why does not prohibition prevent?

Will permission prevent any better than prohibition?

How can permission or license tend even to prevent?

What is it but the infusion of prohibition into a license law which gives it any tendency even to prevent; and is not that tendency just in proportion to the degree of prohibition incorporated into the license law?

Is not the reason why prohibition does not prohibit the fact that all our prohibitory laws are defective in their jurisdiction of the evil; that they fail to cover the manufacture, sale and distribution of the poison, and that hence their enforcement is impossible?

What can one town or county do of itself by prohibition of the evil, if all other localities in the state, and the state itself are for free rum?

What can you expect but failure, always partial and at last total, of prohibition by the local option of states? We have never tried any other form of prohibition.

National prohibition will prevent—nothing else will.

How then shall we get national prohibition? Only by agitation and legislation everywhere; but always with national prohibition as the great end without which "we have toiled all night and have caught nothing."

"MAN is twice born: the first time when he is made in the image of God; the second time when he becomes conscious of it."

Correspondence.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CALIFORNIA AWAKE.

If plenty of good workers and good work can arouse a state, certainly California is all alive. The first workers we met were Major Scott and wife, making a tour through Northern California. Next was Dr. Mary Wood Allen, who, both in Northern and Southern California, has addressed mass-meetings and instructed classes of ladies in the gospel of good health and purity, winning golden opinions everywhere. Messrs. Wolfenbarger and Huckins are giving February to California, under the auspices of the state prohibition committee. They commenced at Los Angeles February 8 and closed at Chico February 29, visiting twenty centers in the state, from which the influence of their work must radiate to every county in it. Among the places visited are San Diego, Riverside, Pasadena, Santa Barbara, Fresno, San Jose, Oakland, San Francisco, Stockton and Sacramento. Wolfenbarger's solid logic and Huckins' sweet singing will win thousands of votes for prohibition.

Dr. McDonald says he believes that California will be the next state to gain prohibition. He bases his hopes, not so much on the efforts of the temperance people, though he gives them due credit, especially the W. C. T U., but upon the fact that the liquor power here is growing so audacious, and the subserviency of political parties to it is so abject, that thinking men are beginning to revolt.

Another omen for good is the fact that wine making is not proving as money-making a business as was expected. Readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will remember that some months ago I drew this deduction from figures in the census report, and asked Californians to refute or verify these deductions. Many responded, invariably corroborating them. Since entering the state I have made it my business to investigate this matter and the result deepens my convictions arrived at before leaving the office.

At the most elaborate "lunch" for the International Press League given, I imagine, partly to sound the praises of wine which certainly flowed much more freely than water, I chanced to sit next to a leading business man of San Francisco, who spent most of the two hours at table in expatiating on California wines. Incidentally he remarked that this great industry needed more fostering, for at present prices it did not pay well. Thinking I misunderstood him, I asked if he really meant that the cultivation of wine grapes did not pay; and he assured me that was the case. He said that raisins pay so much better than wine that many wine grapes are being dug up and raisin grapes planted in their place. One reason for raisins paying better than wine is that they can be made successfully only in a much more restricted area. Later I conversed with the superintendent of a large winery, and he declared that at present prices wine making in California is a losing operation. "I fear," said he, "that Americans will never take kindly to wine, they are all becoming enamored of beer, and that, in large measure, fills the place our pure native wines should occupy. The very best champagne can be bought at the wineries for twelve and a half cents a gallon."

This estimate seemed so low that, in conversing with the Internal Revenue collector at Fresno, I asked him if it could be true. He replied that he thought it was; at its late meeting the Viticultural Association attempted to pass a resolution forbidding sales at wineries for less than fifteen cents a gallon. "And," he added, "there would have been no need of passing such a resolution if there was not danger of the wine being sold for less."

The state law allows the board of supervisors of each county to regulate the sale of liquor as it chooses. Under this statute the supervisors of Los Angeles county have passed an ordinance providing for the issuance of licenses to sell liquor outside of incorporated towns and cities, for twenty dollars a quarter, eighty dollars a year, the applicant to file a bond for $1,000 with two sureties. But if two thirds of the qualified voters in the precinct file a remonstrance within one day of the time of granting the license, it shall not be granted. That is, one whisky man outweighs two temperance men, worse—for the saloon-keeper does not have to secure the signature of a single voter, while the temperance men must secure those of at least two thirds the voters. In many county precincts this might be done were time enough allowed, but the time fixed is only one week after notice of application is made. Yet people here think this a step in advance; heretofore, any one could open a saloon anywhere outside of city limits without leave or license.

In this little valley, with only 227 voters in the entire precinct, there are nine rum-holes, strung along the roads all must travel. The people here are going to make a big fight to keep these from being licensed by securing signatures of two thirds the voters to a remonstrance. This could be easily done were it not for the shortness of time, the red tape in which the form of remonstrance is tied up, and the presence of thirty or forty Mexican voters who always go for saloons. The law goes into effect March 1. I will keep you posted as to the result.

One good thing it has already accomplished—aroused people who never thought much upon the subject before, to the necessity of action. A prohibition club has lately been organized in the valley, which has already districted the precinct for canvassing; the Good Templars are wide awake, and we have some hopes of organizing a W. C. T. U.

The latest phase of temperance work in this state is an effort to array the organized church against the liquor traffic, to concentrate the temperance sentiment of the church on one definite point—the suppression of the saloon.

The plan as enunciated by Mr. L. L. Abbott is to organize in each church a gospel temperance union whose special work shall be to study the Bible to learn what is God's teaching concerning temperance, and to pray for the overthrow of the saloon. Membership is open to all church members, whether total abstainers or not, and politics are rigorously excluded. Anything which will array the church against the saloon is a good thing, and we extend the right hand of fellowship to this new organization which stands in part upon ground occupied by the W. C. T. U. for eighteen years—study of God's word and believing prayer to Him for the overthrow of the drink traffic. May its evolution be as rapid and as widespreading as ours has been. As for those points in which it seems behind the times, we can well afford to bide the time of its growing in grace, as it grows in knowledge. A body of Christians cannot long study the Bible with direct reference to its temperance teaching, and pray God for the overthrow of the saloon, without being converted to total abstinence, to a belief that God pronounces a woe on him who "putteth his bottle to his neighbor's lips," or "buildeth a town with blood" money. And if they study long enough they will come to feel that to-day Christ sitteth over against the ballot-box, as of old He sat over against the treasury, judging men by what they cast therein.

The movement has made rapid progress since it started in this state, less than a year ago, having been indorsed by most of the leading denominations and organizations formed in their churches. Such indorsement has been given it by the Presbytery of San Francisco and the Synod at San Raphael, the Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church, the General Association of Congregational Churches, the California Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, the Lay Electoral Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Baptist State General Convention, the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the annual Conference of the Christian Church of California.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

Los Angeles, Cal.

A WOMAN'S PRISON.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You cannot even faintly imagine what an eventful day it was for me when I paid my first visit to a prison entirely under the supervision and guidance of women. The fame of the Indianapolis prison for women had reached my ears long ago, it is true, but not until recently did my eyes really behold what they had so long and anxiously ached to see. Miss Margaretta Elder, the energetic secretary, acted as my kind escort, and just as we came to the terminus of the electric cars which run out from Indianapolis, the prison roof appeared in sight.

Within a few moments we were at the gateway which needed no "open sesame" to yield us entrance, for nothing more than an iron railing surrounded the precincts, while the gate opened at our touch. In the large, well-cultivated yard several prisoners were busily at work without any apparent watch or guard over them; but although all knew that escape was easy, the realization that successful pursuit was inevitable was equally present with each one. Moreover, as I afterwards discovered, even the "hardened criminals," in the technical sense of the word, women who had been guilty of the most terrible crimes in the calendar, were, nevertheless, under the excellent protective system developing the latent good within them, so that they could now be trusted to act like honorable beings.

A belief in the possible redemption of every human soul, no matter how debased, is the principle which underlies the methods of the superintendent, Miss Sarah F. Keeley, who is ably seconded in her whole-hearted enthusiastic efforts by the assistant superintendent, Mrs. Elmina L. Johnson, a lady who has held office ever since the prison was opened eighteen years ago. "The gentler manners, purer laws" which such a régime should inaugurate, seemed to pervade every nook and cranny of the building, and few points can have escaped my eager notice during the many hours which I spent in school-room, lecture hall, laundry, work-shops and cells. With her big bunch of keys jingling at her side, Miss Keeley conducted me, after the staff supper was over, into the ironing room where a group of prisoners were still hard at work.

"Overtime" is an exception, but on this occasion each one was working with a will and with an obvious degree of proud satisfaction on a beautiful trousseau which was needed in all haste for a happy bride. Upon this trousseau all interest had been centered for many weeks. In work-room and laundry, lonely cell and ironing room, busy fingers had been hard at work, and imagination had been kindled in dreaming of marriage festivities; and perhaps, who knows, soft chords had been touched in hard hearts, which thus in solitude had been looking back upon like happy events of long, long ago.

The majority of the prisoners were, however, off duty, and were lounging in the doorways of their cells, doing fancy work or reading, and their faces brightened when we entered to inspect their nice, clean beds, or admire their flowers or pictures or other cherished treasures. Each woman has a separate cell which she may decorate according to her means or taste, and the individuality of each is carefully considered. The greatest order prevails despite the fact that there are only two officers in attendance over fifty-seven prisoners, but the lack of matrons is more than compensated for by the honor or "trusty" system which tends to make each prisoner a guard unto herself. Miss Keeley's belief in reformatory methods is such that she is of the opinion that even the worst offender may become a reformed character with a sentence of twenty-five years reduced by seven. In illustration of this she told of two murderesses who had been pardoned, one of whom is now living as a very faithful servant after seven years of prison discipline. The most extraordinary instance of faith in her trust-principles is evinced by the fact that only two days before, Miss Keeley had allowed five life sentenced murderesses to take a ten miles drive on the open electric cars under the charge of only two matrons. Remembering that the escape of a prisoner under such circumstances is as much as her reputation is worth, one cannot but be filled with admiration for one who will so act up to her convictions—but as a matter of fact the runaways do not average even one a year, while as far as the subsequent career of released prisoners can be traced, seventy-five per cent become reformed characters, and very few indeed ever find their way back to the Indianapolis prison.

The second main point to be noticed is that of gradual promotion. During the first month no prisoner is allowed to enter into the family life which is enjoyed every evening. A new-comer is kept entirely in solitude for the first two weeks, but if her behavior is good she is allowed during the third and fourth weeks to take her meals with the others and to attend the daily service. After that, no matter what her crime may be, whether petty larceny or murder, she is admitted into general association with the others. On the ground floor is a set of punishment cells, but there is seldom any need to exile any one down to "Japan," as the dreaded penitentiary is named.

The rules are few, but those few, respecting silence during the hours of labor, against visiting from cell to cell, and indiscriminate letter writing, are most rigidly observed. No rule exists which cannot reasonably be obeyed, but such rules as do exist are most rigidly enforced. Relations may visit the prisoners once a month and on popular holidays, but always in the presence of a matron.

Each life prisoner has charge of some particular department. A notorious murderess is the head of the kitchen and proves herself an excellent cook; indeed, the dietary, with its abundant supply of vegetables, fruit, fresh and canned, as well as meat and soup, would seem at first almost extravagant, were it not that in fruitful Indiana the good things of this life are so easily grown, and that the prison garden supplies luxuries as well as necessaries. Another life prisoner is in charge of the garden. She makes the beds, measures, plants out, and reports to the officers, and is held responsible for this department. She is aided by a younger woman, and both, by reason of prolonged good conduct, are known as "trusties."

Time will not allow me to invite you to accompany me through the doorway which divides the prison from the Reformatory School for little girls, where the trust system is even more fully and beautifully developed.

I shall never forget the moment when we entered the large hall and I rose to address the prisoners who sat in long, dull lines in the background, while in the front were many rows of bright, childish faces, the colored children forming quite a pretty little parterre set in the midst of the white faces. Somehow, I forgot where I was, the hideous list of horrid crimes which had been dinned into my ears, faded from my memory, and I could only see the irresponsible, neglected and abused childhood there before me, and the common humanhood which knit us all together. And so we had a real good time together, and after my long list of stories was exhausted, first one little girl and then another stood up to recite or sing, until the hour struck for evening worship, after which the prisoners vanished to their cells, while the dear children retired to their dormitories, let us hope to dream of giants and giant killers, fairies and good angels.

Meantime the president of the Board of Managers, Mrs. Eliza C. Hendricks, had arrived, accompanied by her two coadjutors, Mrs. Claire A. Walker and Mrs. Laura Ream.

After a night in prison, next day I was driven back to town by a reformatory "trusty," a fine looking girl of eighteen, and a most excellent "whip," who from being a child criminal had developed into a capable, industrious and Christian woman.

FLORENCE BALGARNIE.

Washington, Kan., Feb. 15, 1892.

THE ANTI-OPIUM DEMONSTRATION IN ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Early in the year great Exeter Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity in the interests of an international anti-opium demonstration. Nearly two hundred persons were on the platform, a rector of St. Paul's Cathedral being chairman, supported by two members of Parliament, two members of the Chinese Embassy, and many influential clergymen.

The first speaker was Rev. Cheok Hong Cheong, of China, who described the terrible power of the opium habit and the awful suffering and physical deterioration resulting therefrom. He warned his hearers that while he pleaded chiefly for the sake of his own race that something needed to be done for the English-speaking races, for in the little colony of Melbourne, Victoria, more than two thousand white people were smoking opium.

The next speaker was Miss Soonderbai Powar, of Bombay, India. She said: "I have come to tell you a very sad message from my people. When it was known in India that I was coming to England where the laws are made that license opium shops, great companies of women came to see me and said: 'Tell the English government that the great sorrow of the opium business rests upon the women and children of India.' (Substitute here the liquor business in the United States, and it will be equally true.) 'And tell the government if they will license this business to sell this evil thing to our husbands and fathers, then let them, in mercy, send an army to kill off the women and children, for we can bear no more.'

"Another woman said: 'It is for the sake of money that government licenses this business, but let government take our houses, take our lands, take everything, only stop this business.'"

Miss Soonderbai Powar, a full blood India woman, dressed in native costume, is an exceedingly eloquent and forcible speaker. She made this illustration, which equally applies to the relation of our government to the liquor business: "If a man knock down another and rob him because he needs money, what do you do? You put him in prison; but your Christian government is knocking down millions of men and women by its license system and just for the same reason—the sake of money. If you knew a man who was daily poisoning the little children of his neighbors till they turned loathsome and died, you would say, 'Hang him! Hang him!' But what then shall be done to a government that is perpetrating this very crime?"

In speaking of the license system Mr. Dyer, editor of the Bombay Guardian, remarked: "May God burn it into the hearts of this land that this nation is responsible for the greatest attack upon humanity that history records or the world has known." Again: "For a government to be financially well off by facilitating an injurious business, one that injures and debases its citizens, is as disgraceful for a government as it is mean and dishonorable for a man to derive a revenue from the prostitution of his wife and daughter." (Loud and prolonged applause.) This also: "It has been asserted that the opium trade cannot be dispensed with; but to make such a statement is to bow God and common-sense out of the universe."

"What is morally wrong can never be financially expedient," said another speaker. "Let us hold our standard high and take as a badge of royalty the term of reproach hurled at us by our enemies, viz: that our efforts against this opium business have taken the form of a crusade. We glory in the fact that God's word, God's law, is our foundation stone."

The motto printed in large letters on a banner hanging in front of the grand organ would be a good one to use in our temperance mass-meetings. It read as follows:

"I am only one, but I am one; I cannot do everything, but I can do something. What I can do I ought to do, and by the grace of God I will do."

NARCISSA WHITE KINNEY.

President's Column.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.

AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., 161 La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, W. C. 57 Gordon Square.

THE POWER OF CONGRESS.

There is a view of this great subject not often urged, viz., that Congress itself has power to outlaw the liquor traffic; that the interstate commerce law proves this; the Louisiana lottery bill proves it, and the shortest, surest way out of the wilderness would be to elect men to Congress who would put the liquor traffic under ban. Hon. Edwin C. Pierce, of Providence, R. I., an able lawyer who enjoys the confidence of leading white-ribboners there, is the chief debater in this contention. Surely we are not only willing but glad to hear all voices that cry out against the curse, and there is none without signification. Therefore, without expressing an opinion, as we have not yet sufficiently studied the subject, we print some of Mr. Pierce's points:

"First of all, I shall discuss the powers of Congress under the constitution. The constitutionalism that is accepted by the temperance men of America is the vital thing. If they have the courage and intelligence to firmly take the right constitutional ground, their cause will be won; otherwise it will be lost. Let them select from the armory of the constitution the weapons that Alexander Hamilton, or Charles Sumner, or Oliver P. Morton, if they were alive and leading them, would bid them choose. Recall the opening sentence of the constitution: 'We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America.'

"Justice, liberty, the general welfare,—these are the great objects of the constitution. The majestic and pregnant phraseology of that opening sentence, which the persistence of Hamilton secured, furnishes the commanding rule by which the whole constitution is to be interpreted. Listen to Judge Story, as he says of the constitution, that it was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence . . Hence its powers are expressed in general terms, leaving to the legislature from time to time to adopt its own means to effectuate legitimate objects.

"Turn again to the constitution itself. The eighth section of the first article contains eighteen clauses enumerating many powers of Congress. The powers of Congress, as Webster and John Marshall said, are enumerated rather than defined. But every one should understand, as constitutional lawyers do, that Congress possesses powers not even enumerated. The eighth section concludes thus: 'To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or offices thereof.'

"Said Chief-Justice Marshall in Cohens vs. the Bank of Virginia: 'A constitution is founded for ages to come, and is designed to approach immortality as near as mortality can approach it.' Congress has often exercised, without question, powers that are not expressly given nor ancillary to any single enumerated power. Powers thus exercised are what are called by Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, 'resulting powers,' arising from the aggregate powers of the government.

"It was in recognition of all this that I sought occasion to say at the Temperance Congress of 1890, in a five-minute speech: 'It is a very difficult thing to amend the National Constitution. Let us be thankful that it is a National Constitution. Instead of amending the constitution, apply it, construing it beneficently. Under the constitution as it is, under its power to regulate commerce, the manufacture and the traffic in intoxicants can be radically dealt with.' The constitution expressly grants power to Congress to regulate commerce among the states. This power must be construed with reference to the general welfare of the Union, the great object of the constitution, and aided by the incidental and resulting powers of Congress.

"In a nutshell, if Congress has the right to regulate interstate traffic, it may, if it deems it necessary to the success of its policy, regulate the manufacture and internal traffic. The logic of the supreme court decision easily carries us so far, although I concede that the court has given no support to the doctrine of a power to regulate the internal commerce of a state originating in the general welfare clauses. Ultimately the people and the court will settle this issue and others as well by the radical national-unionism for which I contend.

"In conclusion, I say that the most practical campaign to make is a national campaign for national control of the liquor business in all its parts; that this campaign is practical and will be triumphant if attempted by sound politics and with such alliances as history commands."

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And be not faithless, but believing.—John 20: 27.

A short time ago, as the evening shadows were gathering, I stood on the corner of Monroe and La Salle streets waiting for a street car. It gave me the opportunity I always delight in, that of looking at the Temple. Its beautiful proportions and exquisite architecture always give one a sense of completeness and rest, but this evening I had a new vision of its beauty from solid foundation stone to the topmost pinnacle of the graceful gothic turrets on the soaring roof above. All seemed instinct with life, every stone and brick in it represented a living soul; love seemed to be written all over it; voices that only my ear could catch, were telling me to be of good cheer, that this great multitude were all at work, raising money to pay for the beautiful Temple, and each owned a little bit in it, and that was what made it seem a thing of life, not dead like the other buildings around it; these were built for selfish purposes—the Temple for love of Christ and perishing humanity. In humble homes where life's luxuries are rarely known I could see the little ones denying themselves the coveted candy and other good things for the sake of putting their pennies into the Temple mite-box. Others were at work, both boys and girls, doing all kinds of chores to earn money for the same purpose. But the children were not alone in their loving deeds. Young maidens and matrons were also at work, denying themselves for His sake that "The House Beautiful" might be built, and the aged, while lingering on the confines of life awaiting the summons to the temple not made with hands, were planning in what way they, too, could best further the great undertaking which they never expected to see with mortal eye. All this I thought and saw as I stood there in the twilight and looked at "Our House Beautiful." Never on earth I believe was there a building erected in which there was so much love and self-denial built into its walls.

***

A little box has just been received from Fremont, Neb. It contains $1.15. The following pathetic note signed "Two Sisters" accompanied it: "We send you to-day a little box containing money found among the possessions of our parents who left all that was earthly a few weeks ago. This money, though but a trifle, is too precious for us to use." Mrs. E. A. Lundy, Roscoe, Ill., writes: "I am seventy-two years old to-day; for two years I have sent my birthday gifts but to-day I send the contents of my mite-box, $3.65. The one who helped me to fill it walked side by side with me for nearly forty-eight years. We have laid him away in the grave. He was much interested in the Temple." Mrs. V. H. Hixon, Westerville, O., sends 51 cents. These precious pennies were gathered by her little daughter Estie, who when but seven years old left for the heavenly home. Before her death she said, "Mamma, I am going to give all the money in my bank to the saloon-keeper on the corner and see if he won't stop selling liquor." Mrs. H. I. Woodrow, Havre de Grace, Md., writes: "Just three weeks after the National Convention at Atlanta, to which I was a delegate, our dear little Eddie was taken to his heavenly home. The enclosed $2 was found in his Temple mite-box, which we have not had the courage to open before." Mrs. Rebecca Smith, of Cohasset, Mass., sends $2 in memory of her sister, Mrs. M. O. Stetson. Miss Willia McMillan sends $1.25 in memory of her mother, Mrs. M. B. McMillan, who was a faithful member of the Felton, Del., W. C. T. U.

***

Mrs. Wm. J. Vawter, Haviland, Kansas, sends $5, from her two little boys, Arlen and Clarence, eight and six years old. These dear little fellows have worked very hard to earn the money. They cleaned up the yard, filled up a pit, wiped dishes and solicited from their friends. They live in the country fifteen miles from Topeka. Boys that are thus interested in working for the Temple, and have an ownership in it, will grow up strong temperance men. It cannot be otherwise. Willet Chamberlain, Wabasha, Minn., writes as follows: "I send you $5 which my three sisters and I have saved during the last year. I will tell you how we earned the money. We have an Auntie who lives in Ohio; she said she would give us five cents for every letter we would write her. On our birthdays she sent us a dollar each, and mother helped us get the rest." Florence Robinson, Socorro, N. M., writes: "I am a little girl only eight years old. I want to do something towards building that grand Temple. I send you $1.50 I have saved up the last three months." Two little boys, George and Raphael Blakesley, Lomo, Neb., each send a dollar from their mite-boxes. Mrs. Nellie M. Foster, Pittsfield, N. H., sends $1.50 and writes: "This is from my little daughter, Hope, she is six years old, and the youngest honorary member of the state W. C. T. U." One of the brightest young girls who attended the Boston Convention was Miss Agnes Moorley, of New Mexico. While there she handed me a silver dollar and said: "This is the first dollar I ever earned and I have saved it for the Temple."

***

Miss C. H. Leet, Racine, Wis., sends $40, the first payment on a pledge of one hundred for the Racine union. Mrs. C. C. Kennedy sends $21 for the West Denver, Colo., W. C. T. U. We believe this is on their pledge of a hundred. The Lincoln, Ill., union, through Mrs. Kinman, sends $30.19, which completes their payment of $100. Mrs. Bassett sends $20 on the $100 pledged by the Englewood, Ill., union. Mrs. Ella S. Gibson writes on behalf of the Jamaica Plain, Mass., W. C. T. U. and states that we have not credited them with paying $100. This amount is credited to them on our books and we now publicly announce it. The Sharon, Wis., union through Miss Kate Creveling, sends $30 on their $100 pledge. The Fayette, Mo., union through the state treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Glazier, send $17 which completes their pledge of $100. Mrs. J. S. Sterns sends $5 first payment on a pledge of $100 by the Orono, Me., W. C. T. U. Mrs. Nyame, Rising City, Neb., sends $25, first payment on a pledge of $100 by the union of that place.

149 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago.

Our Children.

BEDTIME.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

To and fro, rocking slow,
In the red fire's tender glow
Singing songs that mothers know,
Baby listens, loth to go
Off to dreamland so.

Eyes so blue, eyes so true,
Filled with love's own precious dew
Bend o'er baby passing through
Slumber's gates--Oh, wouldn't you
Like to go there too?

Now he's gone, hushed the song,
Mother's arms enfold him long,
Mother's fancies flit and throng—
God keep baby free from wrong,
Keep him pure and strong.

Down she lays him tenderly
In his cradle fair to see,
Dainty-white, so sweet is he,
Sweet as baby-boy can be—
Happy heart has she.

HOW BARBARA BECAME A HEROINE.

BY ELIZABETH FLINT MERRILL.

(Concluded.)

On her way she traversed a narrow street which skirted the Bowman place in the rear. The fine old mansion house rose in a dark mass above the surrounding trees, She gazed up at it with a quick sense of pain, recalling her experience of a few hours before.

She stopped suddenly. What meant that brilliant light in one of the rooms? She saw the flames leap up. Yes, surely, the house was on fire.

She leaped the fence at a bound, and in a few seconds was pulling at the doorbell and shrieking "fire!" at the top of her small lungs. It seemed ages to the excited child before she could get a response to her summons.

Finally a window was thrown up, and a voice demanded her errand.

"Your house is on fire!" screamed the child.

The head was hastily withdrawn, while the girl flew to the street to spread the alarm. The neighborhood was quickly aroused and the fire alarm rung in.

Meanwhile the flames, which must have been secretly working for some time, now burst forth and began to send volumes of stifling smoke throughout the house. People came running from every direction. Mr. Bowman appeared at the front door bearing the almost insensible form of his wife, and delivering her into the care of friends dashed back to rescue the children.

It was the work of some seconds to arouse the two boys, whom he found still sleeping, and helped them through a window which opened upon a porch whence they easily descended to the ground. He then turned back to secure the little Eleanor whose room was directly in the rear of and communicating with that of her parents.

What was his unspeakable horror to find himself utterly cut off from reaching her by a wall of raging flame. The only possible way to reach the child now was by a window from the outside. He sprang back to the window which had furnished an exit for his boys and quickly descended.

"A ladder!" he shouted. "For God's sake! The baby's in there."

The clang of the fire engine bells and the galloping of horses were heard in the distance, but seconds were ages when the mad flames were wrapping about and threatening momentarily to engulf a precious human life in their fearful vortex.

Men ran for ladders. Women moaned and wrung their hands. Out from the midst of the excited throng the lithe figure of a child darted forward. She seized the lightning rod which ran up at an angle of the house near one of the windows, through which it would be necessary to pass to reach the imprisoned child.

The crowd held its breath, and only the clatter of the approaching fire company mingled with the roar and crackle of the flames, as hand over hand, bracing herself against the side of the house, the agile figure climbed by the twisted wire until she reached a point whence she swung herself lightly over on to the projecting frame of a window.

Standing on this, with a quick movement she flung up the sash above, which readily yielded, and in a flash she had sprung into the room, whence already the smoke was issuing, while little tongues of flame could be plainly seen licking the woodwork and darting along the ceiling. The suspense was awful, and the people waited in hushed expectancy while the terrible flames leaped and crackled, and sent their lurid glow far out into the night.

The crowd parted to give passage to the firemen who dashed upon the scene. A ladder was planted and a sturdy fellow sprang up just in time to grasp in his arms the swaying form of the blinded girl who held, closely clasped to her breast, a limp little figure.

She had had the forethought to snatch a blanket from the bed and fling it about herself and her charge. A wild cheer from the crowd which now had assumed great proportions, greeted the appearance of the child, and hundreds of eager hands were outstretched to relieve the fireman of his now insensible burden, for the baby was unconscious when found, and Barbara—for she it was who had done the heroic deed—had fainted quite away when she felt the strong arms of the fireman about her.

Little Eleanor had received no serious harm. She had been at once delivered into the hands of her rejoicing parents, while Barbara was taken into the house of a neighbor, where she speedily regained consciousness, to find herself the center of an admiring group, to hear her praises sung over and over again, and to receive the tearful thanks of the family whose joy and treasure she had rescued from a terrible death. Her hands were torn and lacerated by the sharp edges of the twisted wire which had furnished her the means of ascent, and both face and hands were somewhat blistered and scorched by the fierce heat through which she had passed.

She could never tell just how she found the baby, for she could see nothing on account of the blinding smoke.

"It was God who led her," said the happy mother, pressing her darling to her breast.

Loving hands vied with each other to minister to the needs of the brave girl. The story was published far and wide and thus the poor, forlorn, neglected child of the drunkard became the praised and petted heroine of the hour.

Philip Bowman, thoroughly ashamed of his harsh and brutal treatment of Barbara only the afternoon before, made most humble confession and was freely forgiven. He offered to go in search of Dick, for the child was still anxious about her father. By this time it was quite daylight and Philip soon found the object of his quest just as he was emerging from a freight house into which he had crawled the previous night, too much under the influence of his potations to proceed further. A freight hand discovered him and at once ejected him.

Barbara was not allowed to return to her desolate home. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman decided to receive the child into their own household, and they were moved to this not only on account of the great debt of gratitude which they gratefully acknowledged, but also on account of the remarkable affection which at once sprang into being between Barbara and the little one, whose life she had saved at the imminent risk of her own.

Dick was very proud of his child's achievement and readily consented to the arrangement. Moreover, an effort was made to help the poor fellow to enter upon a new life as he expressed himself desirous of reform. A home was found for him in the household of a fellow-workman, where the influences would be of the best.

Barbara's story had the tendency further to arouse the dormant temperance sentiment of the town and in the elections which followed the saloons were banished from the place.

. . . . . .

These things took place some three or four years since. Dick has kept his pledge and is a thoroughly changed man of whom his daughter no longer has occasion to blush.

Barbara did not blossom into a full-blown saint at once, but she has improved marvelously and is a great favorite in the community. She has justified the confidence of the Bowmans, who have freely given her the place of a daughter in the household. The old fierce expression has faded from her face and she has quite laid aside her wild, hoidenish ways. It is the common verdict of those who know her that her young girlhood already gives promise of a rarely beautiful womanhood.

Boston.

A LITTLE CHILD'S GREAT HEART.

DEAR LITTLE SIGNAL FOLKS:—Little Dorothea Langton, a Chicago child, thirteen years of age, has recently died. It was hoped that she would have grown up to be one of the most capable friends of humanitarian work. Only a month ago a brutal driver stopped in front of her mother's house to beat an overladen horse. The little girl ran out bare-headed and entreated the driver to let her try to start the animal. This he permitted her to attempt. She took hold of the bridle, and at her gentle command the horse settled down to his heavy task, not, however, before he had offered appreciation of the kindness shown him, by rubbing his big nose against her hands.

Little Dorothea had so warm a love for dumb animals that almost every suffering four-footed creature in her neighborhood found a place at her home. Stray dogs were always the subject of her care and she did all she could to mitigate the sufferings of beaten horses. She said to a reporter: "I am going to care for the hard working horse as long as I live."

Had she lived wholly to herself, this little girl might have passed away and no special interest been felt in her besides that of her own family circle; but her great heart will endear her to every one of the ten thousand who will read these memorial lines, which are written for the purpose of inspiring other boys and girls to be as helpful and as true as she was during her helpful and gospel life.

Your friend,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

What Shall We Call It?

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Your letters are coming in from all quarters of the United States, from Maine to North Dakota. It makes me feel very happy to read them all, for I know that with such bright, warm-hearted and interested children our corner talks and gatherings are sure to be a success.

So many good names are sent in for this column, that it is going to be a hard thing to choose among them. One card, from the children of an intermediate school at Mankato, Kan., contains fifteen names! That looks as if we would have to take down our "interrogation sign" very soon, doesn't it?

I wish we might publish all the letters each week, but as that is impossible, we will take those that come first or contain some fact or bit of news that will interest you all. Remember, children, that your letters are always welcomed by your AUNT JANE.

"LEISURE MOMENTS."

My mamma has been reading out of THE UNION SIGNAL to me, especially "What shall we call it?" column. I thought I would send a name. I think "Leisure Moments" would be a very nice name.

Absaraka, N. Dak. ALLIE W. STOW.

"THE CORNER OF DELIGHT."

Seeing the request in THE UNION SIGNAL of what to call your corner, I thought I would write to you and try to answer the question. I think "The Corner of Delight" is a good name for it, because us little folks hail it with such delight. Yours truly, GERTIE D. STEVENS, (nine years old).

Lyons, Ind.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

10.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

14, 11, 13, a measure of length.
6, 8, 7, 10, is a little.
9, 15, 12, 17, is a church.
1, 2, 3, 5, is do not.
16, 4, is something you should say when asked to drink.

Whole, composed of seventeen letters, is good advice for all of the boys. SOLON.

11.

DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

The finals spell two-thirds of the name of a children's temperance organization. The primals spell the name of a paper which aims to help the temperance reform.

CROSS WORDS.

1. The name of a mountain range in Asia.
2. A wicked Roman Emperor.
3. Lazily.
4. A plant used in the West Indies.
5. Useless.
6. To move through the water.
7. Unemployed.
8. A low crowd.
9. A Latin word, signifying unless.
10. A sum above the nominal value.
11. Not fat.

12.

ANAGRAM.

Low Red Cat.

What is it? Nothing bad. What kind of an animal? It's harmless. It won't bite? Oh, no. Is it really red? No, it has no color; you can see right through it. Can it run? Certainly. Where does it come from? A hole in the ground. Ever used for food? Well—yes. Ever get fat? No, it's always thin. Have I seen it? Thousands of times. Where? In the kitchen. Then it's nothing bad? Oh, no! It's the nicest thing in the world. SOLON.

Answers published in three weeks. Send all replies and original puzzles to puzzle editor, UNION SIGNAL, 161 La Salle street, Chicago, Ill.

Soft-shelled nuts have been cracked by Ralph M. H., Chicago; Marion Moore, David City, Neb.; R. W. Cole, Tusten, N. Y.; M. J. I. Vilas, Syracuse, N. Y.; I. T. M., Scottsburg, Ill.; Lulu M. Butts, Mankato, Kan.; N. Marion Irwin, Suplee, Chester Co., Pa.; John S. Congdon, Wheaton, Ill.; Gertie D. Stevens, Lyons, Ind.

Original puzzles have been received from Marion Moore; M. J. I. Vilas; Solon; I. T. M.

The Household.

DER CROAKER.

BY ESTELLE MENDELL AMORY.

Der croaker ist von funny man;
Like his namesake in der slough,
He sits mit pipe on dry-goods box,
Und croaks der day all trough.

He dells you vhy you haf pad luck,
Und der tings you shouldt haf done—
Der endt from first to last he knows,
Ov all dings 'neath der sun.

He's schure he couldt run tings so schmoodt,
Dere shouldt never pe a preak
On landt or sea, in schtocks or trade,
Couldt he haf made der cake.

Und dere's der drouble, dondt you see,
Vhy der tings, dey goes like sin—
Der Lordt, He made der worldt und man,
Widoudt consultin' him!

Belmont, Ia.

A CIDER STORY.

BY MRS. ANNIE A. PRESTON.

"We shall put something in the bank this year," said Farmer Sloan complacently. "It is going to be a good cider year, and it does beat all what a difference that makes with our income."

"Or outgoes you mean," replied his wife. "You will buy neither tea nor coffee, and we shall have to drink cider at table."

"Have to. You like it as well as I do."

"I didn't until you got me broken in. I wasn't brought up to drink cider, and I don't believe in giving children cider instead of milk, or in their eating bread and cider instead of bread and milk."

"The pigs will fatten on the milk and there is where a gain is made."

"But the children grow black, and thin and scrawny on the cider diet. I don't believe in it, and I wish the brook would rise and carry off the old cider mill, or that a whirlwind would come along and blow it away. I have no desire to populate the town with cider drunkards. I have made up my mind that this year I will not taste of cider, and I put my foot down here and now to that effect, and I shall do my best to keep the children from drinking it."

"The cider is good for all of us, and I won't hear any more such talk!" roared the farmer.

"It makes us as cross as hornets, children and all. It is a regular pow-wow all through the district from the time the cider mill starts until the miserable stuff is gone the next haying time. The quarrels that you and I have are cider quarrels. The neighborhood fights are cider fights; the musses in school are cider musses. When there is a year that the apple trees fail to bear, this is as peaceable a neighborhood as can be found. I've thought it all out, and I declare war here and now on cider making and cider drinking."

"You're an obstinate woman, that's what you are," said the farmer. "Ever since you went off to Boston visitin' in the spring, you've been all for readin' the Bible an' goin' to meetin' an' havin' a Sunday-school at the school house, and singin' hymns, but I hadn't no idee that you'd come out ag'in cider an' the cider mill that brings us in more income every apple year than everything else on the farm put together. Now if you know what is for your interest, you'll shut up an' mind your business about cider."

"I will mind my own business about cider," said the woman, "and I believe with all my heart that my business is to cultivate a spirit against its manufacture and use."

"What is your object in going on in this way, I should like to know?"

"It is partly a selfish object. I don't want to be a cider drunkard when I am old like Mrs. Tom Wiggin."

"Oh, how foolish a woman will talk when she gets started! Old Mother Wiggin drinks something stronger than cider."

"Yes, now, if she can get it. But she told me herself the last time she was here begging for cider that she kept braced up on cider when she was young until she couldn't live without a stimulant."

"There is no alcohol in cider."

"You know any one can get drunk on it. I have seen you drunk on it, and you know our oldest boy was dead drunk on sweet cider that he sucked through a straw at the press before he was five years old."

"Well, you are plain spoken, I must admit," and the farmer rushed out, slamming the door in anger. His wife proceeded to draw up a pledge which prohibited the making or using of cider, and this she signed, herself, and started out to circulate.

She had to have the courage of her convictions and strength given her in answer to prayer, to stand up against the opposition that she met. Not a single farmer would promise not to make cider, but she said she was surprised to find out how many there were who only made it for vinegar.

Several women pledged themselves not to drink the stuff, and they were all, without exception, anxious to have their children sign the pledge.

The excuses given the good woman were amusing:

"I have to drink red pepper and cider to keep me warmed up," said one. "I should have a cold the hull durin' time all winter if I didn't."

"I should wanter drink it with b'iled victuals," said another. "I never care nothing about corn beef and cabbage without cider."

"I shall have ter give up eatin' popcorn if I sign that," said another; "popcorn never hurts nobody when it's washed down with cider."

"I shouldn't know what to do when folks come in in the evening without cider to pass around"; a good many said this, but Mrs. Sloan went home from her first day's work satisfied that she had set her neighbors to thinking and to talking upon the important subject, even if she had not secured many names.

It was an excitement that didn't die out. The mother of the very first boy that got tipsy at the cider mill came rushing in to put her name on that paper.

"I mean to fight it right through," she said. "I'll stand by you in everything you say or do."

"I shall send every boy home that I see standing about that cider tub, or hanging about the mill."

"All right, I hope you will."

Other mothers said the same thing; some of the boys were angry and left the bars down into the yard of the mill and it happened very strangely that nearly all the cows in the neighborhood got loose that night, and going to the cider mill ate so heartily of an old pressed cheese that they lay all about the yard and roadside helpless in the morning.

"The boys turned them in here," said some one.

"If they hadn't been sizzled on cider they wouldn't have thought of such a thing," said another.

All the men turned out to save the lives of the cows. Some of the cider had worked just enough to be nice to the taste, and pretty soon a good many of the men were as badly off as the poor brutes.

A free fight was the result.

"And this is only October," said one of the women; "and with all the cider to be drank there is in this neighborhood, how shall we live until spring?"

"Cider's awful stuff," said old Mother Wiggin. "I like it so well, it has done so much for me, it ain't likely I should do it any harm," and she slipped away leaving the other women holding an indignation meeting in Mrs. Sloan's kitchen.

There were barrels of cider at the mill belonging to nearly every one of the neighboring farmers. They always had a bee, turning out with drags and oxen to get the cider home and into the cellars.

The bee was to take place next day. The men gathered bright and early to find every barrel empty.

"It is the work of the women," they said; but the women affirmed that they knew nothing about it.

"It ain't likely you'd lay it to me," said old Mother Wiggin; "I think too much of the stuff to waste a drop. That is what you think, but you are mistaken. Cider has ruined me; now as long as I live I'll be the ruin of all the cider I can find anywhere. I can't pay a fine. I've drunk up my property, but you can put me in jail and it will be a better home than I've had these many years."

"Shall I be like her when I am old if I drink cider?" asked a beautiful little girl, standing by; "say, papa, shall I?"

"The Lord forbid!" said Mr. Sloan, taking his little daughter in his arms. "I say, neighbors, this must be a warnin'. I'm going to sign that paper of my wife's and I mean it when I say I never will make or touch or taste another drop of cider while I live."

"What will you do with the apples of your great orchards?"

"I will feed them out to my stock and hogs."

"What will you do for vinegar?"

"Buy it."

"That will be nothing new," said his wife; "we always have, for the cider has been used to drink. We never were able to save any for vinegar."

Those people found that they could get on through all emergencies without cider. The next year was an off year, and by that time the profits of lives of temperance could be counted.

Men and their wives lived peaceably together. There was not a feud in the district between families. The school was better than ever before, and prayer-meetings that met at the houses were after a time organized and took the place of the visits where cider used to be handed around.

Old Mother Wiggin became the care of the neighborhood. She gave up her habit of drinking, lived to be respected and was mourned when she passed away.

BE STRONG.

BY MARGARET BOTTOME.

I think this message from God is to all workers in His cause to-day. If you want to see the need for strength in the temperance movement, read an article entitled, "The World's Drink Problem," in The Christian Union of February 6. Facts are given—two impressed me particularly, that the two most educated nations, France and Germany, are more drunken than the most ignorant, Russia, Italy and Spain, and that wealth proves to be a more prolific cause of drunkenness than poverty. Everywhere increasing drunkenness! As I laid down my paper I opened an old Book that I feel is an inspired book, and I opened to the second chapter of Haggai, and I want all the women who need fresh inspiration for the battle that is before them to just read it again, and believe God is speaking to you as certainly as He spake on a certain day of a certain month to the prophet of old. We must believe, and believe strongly (weak faith will not do for this battle) that God is with us. Oh, how inspired we are when we hear His voice saying, "My spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not." And then as if He thought we might think, "Ah, but our enemies have all the money," He adds, "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts."

I declare to you as I read it I felt that I should never see a piece of silver or a piece of gold from that time, no matter who handled it, but I should know it was the Lord's—and when the terrible shaking of the nations shall come, money shall change hands—only we must believe it—we have been contemptibly small in faith. Take the new version of Christ's own words and read, "What things soever ye desire when ye pray believe you receive them and you shall have them." I can remember when Mrs. Dr. Palmer was persecuted in the church, they said she taught "believe you have it and you have it"—well, the new version is very much like it—"Therefore I say unto you (Christ is speaking now) all things whatsoever ye pray and ask for believe that ye have received them and ye shall have them." The need of the hour is a gigantic faith to overcome a gigantic wrong. We have depended on this, that and the other. It does not say all things are possible to grand talking—though that is good—nor to grand preaching or grand writing or grand praying, but to grand believing—Christ has said it and it shall be done! The mountain of iniquity shall be cast into the depth of the sea. We need the faith of John Wesley embodied in that verse,

"If what I wish is good
And suits the Will Divine,
By earth and hell in vain withstood—
I know it shall be mine."

Mark the fifteenth verse of the last chapter in Haggai and again the eighteenth verse. The people were called to "consider" from this day and upward, and the month and the day of the month were specified. Now from this day of the month shall we "consider"? We have considered along so many lines, now let us consider God's powers. Let us unite our spiritual forces on the line of faith afresh. Let us utterly refuse to consider anything only as connected with our faith—if drunkenness is on the increase, then we will meet it with a God of power who is greater than ALL SIN, and who has said not only all things are possible with God, but all things are possible to him that believeth. Now for one united voice—It shall be done!

God will overthrow the rum power. Amen!

SUN of our life, Thy quickening ray
Sheds on our path the glow of day,
Star of our hope, Thy softened light
Cheers the long watches of our night.

Lord of all life! below, above,
Whose light is truth, whose warmth is love,
Before Thy ever-blazing throne,
We ask no luster of our own.

Grant us Thy truth to make us free,
And kindling hearts that burn for Thee,
Till all Thy living altars claim
One holy light, one heavenly flame.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

UNION SIGNAL

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH,
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES: The Struggle at St. Louis—The Labor Conference Platform—People's Palace Work—The Welcome Guest 8, 9
WATCH-TOWER: 9
CONTRIBUTED: Poem, "But to Minister," by Sara Frances Cooke—The Linborough Library and its Master, by Helen Campbell—The Medical Cure of Drunkenness, by Bishop Samuel Fallows, D. D.—Railroad Ties, by John G. Woolley—The Essence of Loyalty to the Nation, by George Milton Hammell—Prohibition Does Not Prohibit, by Henry W. Blair 2, 3
CORRESPONDENCE: Editorial Correspondence—A Woman's Prison—The Anti-Opium Demonstration in England—Temperance Temple Items 4, 5
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN: The Power of Congress 5
OUR CHILDREN: Poem, Bedtime—How Barbara Became a Heroine—A Little Child's Great Heart 6
WHAT SHALL WE CALL IT? 6
THE HOUSEHOLD: Poem, Der Croaker—A Cider Story—Be Strong 7
NEWS FROM THE FIELD: State Reporters, Kansas Crumbs, West Virginia, Maine, South Dakota, Oklahoma, District of Columbia, Kentucky 10, 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS: The World's Petition—Lumber Camp Work—Prison and Jail Work—Literature Department—National Minutes—A Correction—Temperance Temple Receipts 12, 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT: 14, 16, 17
SIGNAL NOTES: 20
OUR LIBRARY TABLE: Second Cover Page.

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?—Ps. 27. 1.

The Lord knoweth them that are his. And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.—II. Tim. 2:19.

THE STRUGGLE AT ST. LOUIS.

The political forces of this country are on the move. The cauldron bubbles and will soon be boiling. America's splendid debating club of citizens has begun its national controversy; the universal school of politics with party platforms for the text books has opened its spring term.

In St. Louis, February 22-24, the labor organizations of this country held a conference from which has resulted the anticipated call for a convention of the People's party to be held in Omaha on July 4. The Industrial Conference was not political and to it the National W. C. T. U. sent four fraternal delegates, two of whom were the two editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, whose names head the list, and two others,—Mrs. Clara Hoffman, president of Missouri W. C. T. U., and Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, of St. Louis, one of our National superintendents. The general officers of the National W. C. T. U. were charged at the Boston Convention to send fraternal delegates to all great meetings of reformers, teachers, ministers and other workers for humanity.

In the discharge of this trust the delegation mentioned went to St. Louis and held a meeting on Sunday afternoon, February 21, in Music Hall (where the Industrial Conference met next day), at which five thousand were present, including perhaps a majority of the conference-delegates. Of these there were over six hundred from all parts of the United States, including a dozen or more women, among them Mrs. Lease and Mrs. Diggs, of Kansas, leaders in the farmers' movement there, and famous among the leaders of the People's party.

The impression made by our editors in the Sunday meeting is perhaps best explained by the statement that they, with Mesdames Hoffman and Ingalls, were made full, voting members of the great Industrial Conference, on motion of Ignatius Donnelly, and by a vote that was practically unanimous. At the same time, on motion of Alonzo Wardle, of Dakota, the senior editor was nominated as first vice-president of the conference, Terence V. Powderly, who declined that honor, having warmly seconded the motion saying, "Let us make it unanimous," which was done and "a speech" called for, whereupon the new vice-president spoke as follows:

Brothers of the Industrial Conference, I feel as if I had been struck by lightning! This is an electric convention sure enough. It must be that I owe this honor to the fact that I was so happy as to be a farmer's daughter and that this hand and brain have earned my "board and keep" since I was eighteen years old. It must be that your sympathetic lightning struck me because I believed there should be 'no sectionalism in politics, no sectarianism in religion, no sex in citizenship." I believe in the protection of the home from the saloon—and disagree "in toto" with the cartoonist, who at the doors of this convention is now busy circulating a picture where a big tree labeled "Prohibition" is represented as having fallen across the path of this movement to the nation's capital. Instead, the picture should represent the man who votes against prohibition as sitting on a limb and sawing it off between himself and the tree. A big boulder is also in the cartoon labeled "woman suffrage," indicating that this measure would be a hindrance. But I would macadamize with that stone the solid highway to places of success and power. If you enlist the heart of woman along with your firm hands, you will have in this movement the ballots that are God's dynamite under the people's wrongs, and we will make the two old parties grievously unhappy before we go from here. I say to you, my brothers, with your grand leaders, men and women whose names I have long loved and cherished,

"Be cheery, labor people, ye shall not suffer wreck,
While up to God the women's prayers are rising from your deck,
Work cheerily, my brothers, for daylight and for land,
The breath of God is in your sails,
Your rudder, in His hand."

The W. C. T. U. was not referred to because the speaker did not feel at liberty to bring that organization prominently forward in her character of officer and delegate in the Industrial Conference.

Meanwhile, a conference of labor leaders and Prohibitionists had been held, by appointment, at the Lindell Hotel on Saturday, which indorsed the Sherman House "Consensus of Opinion." But on Monday morning another conference of Prohibitionists, headed by Governor St. John and Mrs. Gougar, met at the Southern Hotel and for hours discussed the Chicago consensus, the general opinion seeming to be that if the words, "suppression of the saloon" were changed to "suppression of the liquor traffic" that plank would be satisfactory. Concerning the suffrage plank there was a strong feeling that the ballot for women should be demanded without educational or other qualification.

The whole subject was finally referred to a committee consisting of Governor St. John, Miss Willard, Mrs. Gougar, T. C. Richmond, of Wisconsin, and Rev. Dr. Kelley, of Tennessee. The action of this committee, the majority of which stood by the Chicago consensus (only changing the words "suppression of the saloon," to "suppression of the liquor traffic") was, however, forestalled by a resolution offered by Professor Dickie, seconded by Miss Willard and unanimously adopted, to the effect that "as a Prohibition party we can only treat with another party that has declared against the liquor traffic and for woman's ballot." As this was what the Sherman House committee had said from the beginning, there was no difficulty in attaining unanimity of action when the situation was fully understood. A consultation had been held with General Weaver, Mr. Donnelly and Dr. Delamater who had agreed to the words "suppression of the liquor traffic," and though Governor St. John wanted the specification "manufacture, importation, exportation and sale" added, he plainly said that he preferred the word "suppression" to prohibition.

This was the situation when our National W. C. T. U. president was made a member of the committee on platform which consisted of over one hundred delegates, and was afterwards made chairman of the sub-committee on woman's ballot and the temperance plank. Before the ten members of her sub-committee appeared, E. J. Wheeler, editor of The Voice, T. C. Richmond, and Mrs. Clara Hoffman, made speeches full of intellectual point and the pith of deep moral conviction, taking the ground that if the political party that was to result from this Industrial Conference set itself to antagonize monopolies, the liquor traffic was the greatest; that the Prohibition party had for twenty years stood for economic reform and was in accord with the People's party on all great questions save prohibition and woman's ballot; that it was not only a blunder, but a crime for the reform forces to remain in two camps; that the sympathetic power of organized Christian womanhood would be a mighty force should the two planks be put in; that the new party to be formed from the two reform parties now in the field ought to bid for the home rather than the saloon vote; that the longer they postponed so doing the more they would be encumbered by the baser elements in politics, and the less helped on by the better, with other cogent arguments for which we have not space.

After long debate the sub-committee voted with but two dissenting voices for the two planks, and at midnight joined the general platform committee, remaining with it until 7:30 the next morning.

During this time the suffrage plank was adopted on count by the chairman, Hugh Cavanaugh, by sixty-seven to twenty-four, and on a division insisted on by the opposition by fifty-five to twenty-five. Robert Schilling, the noted German from Milwaukee, led the opposition with Southern members, who, while personally in favor of the planks, insisted that with them they should but antagonize their constituencies and the women of the South.

Later on, the temperance plank was laid upon the table and after 7:30 a. m. (when our white-ribboners had gone and when the committee of over one hundred was represented but by a handful of determined opponents), the suffrage resolution was reconsidered and dropped. This is supposed to have been upon the principle that "All's fair in politics."

Upon learning this, our National President presented to the conference the following minority report (to which she had not a minute in which to obtain the signatures of her committee, save two who were near her) and spoke in its support:

1. We demand universal suffrage without distinction of sex.

2. We believe that the liquor traffic is the great enemy of reform in this nation, it is the chief fountain of corruption in our politics, and we denounce its pernicious influence upon our country and we demand its suppression.

We hold that the states respectively have full authority to legislate concerning the sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders.

Therefore, when the people have by law interdicted or restricted the sale thereof it is the duty of the Federal Government to respect their action and collect no revenue from the traffic within such state except from persons permitted to sell under state authority; and whenever the laws of any state shall prohibit or restrict the sale of intoxicants, we demand that Congress, in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce among the states, shall forbid under proper penalty all persons except those duly authorized by local authority from transporting liquors into such states; and we arraign the Republican and Democratic parties for not respecting the reserved rights of the state in these particulars.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, Illinois.
E. W. FISH, Minnesota.
MRS. DR. DABBS, Texas.

She reminded the delegates that this was an hour of the people's destinies; the choice now made was likely to be final. She reminded them that women have been devoted to the People's party—that they had no better speakers than Mrs. Lease and Mrs. Diggs, who had declared that they would leave if the suffrage plank were not sustained. The protection of home against saloon was a live issue in this country with a live party behind it, made up of trusty, intelligent and experienced voters backed by an army of unstampedeable women; it would be a great day for the labor interests of this nation when the prohibition and the People's party merged into one. Mrs. James Curtis, editor of The Royal Gorge, a labor paper of Canyon City, Colorado, now got the floor and said she had a resolution that covered the whole ground, for if women had the ballot they would kill the liquor traffic.

It read as follows:

"We demand that the question of woman suffrage be submitted to the state and territorial legislatures for favorable action."

"Sockless" Jerry (Hon. Mr. Simpson of the United States Congress) called out, "She has solved the problem, let's adopt it."

A scene of indescribable confusion followed. Miss Willard and Mrs. Curtis were besought to withdraw their motions. One of the chieftains said to the former, "Madam, you are hurting your cause and will have to take the consequences," whereupon she meekly answered. "I have been taking 'consequences' so long now that I have got used to it."

The announcement was made amid a deafening uproar that Mrs. Curtis had withdrawn her substitute, but the fragile little woman with her fine, thoughtful face, stood up in her chair and called out, "I can't bear to be the means of all this contradiction, but I must stand by my sisters in the Egyptian bondage of the liquor traffic."

Colonel L. L. Polk, president of the conference, pounded with his gavel until the echoes rang; the conference swayed like the waves of the sea; every dilatory motion known to parliamentary usage or possible to be invented in aid of a bad cause, was urged. A vive voce vote sustained the resolution. When a division was called for and a roll-call had, J. W. Hayes, the secretary, announced the amendment of Mrs. Curtis carried by 254 against 246. The uproar then became greater than ever. A recess was had. Caucuses of the different labor organizations were called, and when in a few minutes, the conference reassembled, there was a plea for peace by Mr. Donnelly, and a general consent, for fear of a split then and there, to adopt the motion of Mrs. Curtis as a resolution rather than as a plank in the platform, which was done, and thus closed the most stormy political scene of which we have knowledge.

While we grieve over the lost opportunity of a coalescence of parties, and firmly believe that the rank and file and most of the leaders desired it, but were out-plotted and out-throated by the minority, we rejoice that individually four-fifths of those delegates are for woman's ballot, and two-thirds for prohibition. It is not yet too late; their political convention meets July 4, in Omaha, our Prohibition convention meets June 29 in St. Louis. Let us make it the grandest demonstration of home politics that this country has yet seen, and invite our labor reform brethren and sisters who seek to outlaw the saloon and arm women for the battle, to meet with us and swell the greatest party of moral ideas that this world holds.

THE LABOR CONFERENCE PLATFORM.

We print the address adopted by the St. Louis conference, prepared by Ignatius Donnelly, and worthy of the man popularly supposed to be the author of Shakespeare.

THE PREAMBLE TO THE PLATFORM.

This, the first great labor conference of the United States and of the world, representing all divisions of urban and rural organized industry, assembled in National Congress, invoking upon its action the blessing and protection of Almighty God, puts forth, to and for the producers of the nation, this declaration of union and independence.

The conditions which surround us best justify our co-operation. We meet in the midst of a nation brought to the verge of moral, political and material ruin. Corruption dominates the ballot-box, the legislatures, the Congress, and touches even the ermine of the bench. The people are demoralized. Many of the states have been compelled to isolate the voters at the polling places in order to prevent universal intimidation or bribery. The newspapers are subsidized or muzzled, public opinion silenced, business prostrated, our homes covered with mortgages, labor impoverished, and the land concentrating in the hands of capitalists. The urban workmen are denied the right of organization for self-protection; imported pauperized labor beats down their wages; a hireling standing army, unrecognized by our laws, is established to shoot them down and they are rapidly degenerating to European conditions. The fruits of the toil of millions are boldly stolen to build up colossal fortunes, unprecedented in the history of the world, while their possessors despise the republic and endanger liberty. From the same prolific womb of governmental injustice we breed the two great classes—paupers and millionaires. The national power to create money is appropriated to enrich bondholders; silver, which has been accepted as coin since the dawn of history, has been demonetized to add to the purchasing power of gold by decreasing the value of all forms of property as well as human labor; and the supply of currency is purposely abridged to fatten usurers, bankrupt enterprise and enslave industry. A vast conspiracy against mankind has been organized on two continents and is taking possession of the world. If not met and overthrown at once it forbodes terrible social convulsions, the destruction or the establishment of an absolute despotism.

In this crisis of human affairs the intelligent working people and producers of the United States have come together, in the name of peace, order and society, to defend liberty, property and justice. We declare an union and independence. We assert our purpose to vote with the political organization which represents our principles.

We charge that the controlling influences dominating the old political parties have allowed the existing dreadful conditions to develop without serious effort to restrain or prevent them. Neither do they now intend to accomplish reform. They have agreed together to ignore, in the coming campaign, every issue but one. They propose to drown the outcries of a plundered people with the uproar of a sham battle over the tariff, so that corporations, national banks, rings, trusts, "watered stocks," the demonetization of silver, and the oppressions of usurers, may be all lost sight of. They propose to sacrifice our homes and children upon the altar of Mammon; to destroy the hopes of the multitude in order to secure corruption funds from the great lords of plunder. We assert that a political organization, representing the political principles herein stated, is necessary to redress the grievances of which we complain.

Assembled on the anniversary of the birth of the illustrious man who led the first great revolt on this continent against oppression, filled with the sentiments which actuated that grand generation, we seek to restore the government of the republic to the hands of the "plain people," with whom it originated. Our door stands open to all points of the compass. We ask all honest men to join with and help us.

In order to restrain the extortions of aggregated capital, to drive the money changers out of the temple, "to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity," we do ordain and establish the following platform of principles:

THE PLATFORM.

We declare the union of the labor forces of the United States, this day accomplished, permanent and perpetual. May its spirit enter into all hearts for the salvation of the republic and the uplifting of mankind.

Wealth belongs to him who creates it. Every dollar taken from industry without an equivalent is robbery. "If any will not work neither shall he eat." The interests of rural and urban labor are the same; their enemies are identical.

We recommend a national currency, safe and sound and flexible, issued by the general government only, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and that without the use of banking corporations, a just, equitable and efficient means of circulation, direct to the people, at a tax not to exceed two per cent, as set forth in this sub-treasury plan of the Farmers' Alliance, or some better system. Also by payments in discharge of its obligations for public improvements.

We demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver. We demand that the amount of the circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than fifty dollars per capita.

We demand a graduated income tax. We believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all national and state revenue shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government, economically and honestly administered.

We demand that postal savings banks be established by the government for the safe deposit of the earnings of the people, and to facilitate exchange.

We demand that the government issue legal tender notes and pay the Union soldier the difference between the price of the depreciated money in which he was paid in gold.

Your sub-committee upon Land Planks beg to submit for your approval the following:

The land, including all the natural resources of wealth, is the heritage of all the people, and should not be monopolized for speculative purposes, and alien ownership of land should be prohibited. All land now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of their actual needs, and all lands now owned by aliens should be reclaimed by the government and held for actual settlers only.

Transportation being a means of exchange and a public necessity, the government should own and operate the railroads in the interests of the people.

The telegraph and telephone, like the post-office system, being a necessity for the transmission of news, should be opened and operated by the government in the interest of the people.

Resolved, That we hail this Conference as the consummation of a perfect union of hearts and hands of all sections of our common country. The men who wore the gray and the men who wore the blue meet here to extinguish the last smoldering embers of civil war in the tears of joy of a united and happy people, and we agree to carry the stars and stripes forward forever to the highest point of national greatness.

THE LOCAL UNION IN VILLAGES.

There is really no more difficulty about carrying on a local union in a small town than in a large one. The only difficulty is to know how. Many think that the white ribbon movement may not come by observation, but the contrary is true. We must set ourselves to bring a better education to the people. A study of quiet, systematic methods is what we want. Let any person who is interested call together the women in the community who care for the temperance cause. Let her or him send to the W. T. P. A. for a form of constitution, which will be found in Mrs. Buell's "Helping Hand." Let the object of the society, as set forth in that book, be studied carefully. Then let names be secured and a committee appointed to choose officers and prepare a plan of work. This plan might read somewhat as follows:

1. We will try to induce as many as possible in our community, men, women and children, to sign the pledge of total abstinence. We will secure the form of pledge and present it to each Sunday-school that it may be kept hanging on the walls in sight of all the scholars as a means of education, their names being sought as signers. We will also try to introduce into the Sunday-schools temperance story books, these to be paid for from the funds of the respective Sunday-schools.

2. We will try to secure some space in the local papers and appoint a woman of good sense and intelligence to send items every week culled from THE UNION SIGNAL and from other temperance papers, together with any local items that we may be able to furnish. We will send for the white ribbon "Signal Lights," leaflets, etc., and place them in wall pockets in the railway stations, at the meat market, in the barber shops, and in other eligible locations.

3. We will hold a temperance mass-meeting at least once a quarter, securing, when practicable, men and women who are experts in temperance work, also the pastors of our village, and women from our own number when they are willing and competent to speak.

4. We will gather the children into Loyal Temperance Legions, sending to the W. T. P. A., 161 La Salle street, Chicago, for Miss Gordon's "Questions Answered," that we may get the best methods of conducting such an association, also for her "Marching Songs," that we may teach the children to keep time to the company's music. We will endeavor to secure the introduction of scientific temperance instruction into the schools, public and private, of this community, sending to Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Hyde Park, Mass., for instructions, also physical education for the boys and girls, sending to Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, Mansfield, Ohio, for direction in the latter effort.

5. We will endeavor to circulate the White Cross and our purity literature among our young people, sending for the same to our publishing house.

6. We will try to induce our children and young people to raise flowers to be sent to the institutions for the defective, dependent and delinquent classes in adjoining larger towns and cities.

7. We will write to the corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Caroline Buell, Evanston, Ill., asking her to send us such petitions as she wishes us to circulate, also to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna O., for the great Petition that we may secure names and thus help swell the second million asked for.

8. We will send to Mrs. Carse, 149 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, for mite-boxes, that we may gather up small sums for the Temperance Temple, and we will do the same for the National Temperance Hospital, Chicago, writing to Mrs. M. E. Kline, 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago.

9. We will especially take up the work Miss Gordon indicates for the children to enlist them in the World's Columbian Exposition, sending to her at Evanston, Ill., to tell us how to work.

This is enough to start on. It is entirely practicable in any village whatever, and if undertaken in a quiet, womanly way will lead on to vastly more.

The Watch-Tower.

It is said of Harriet Martineau that she had a genius for friendship. The same deserves to be said of every woman of brains that we have ever met. In this transition period when men and women are en route to a better understanding, and especially in lands where women greatly outnumber men, the friendships of earnest-hearted and intellectual women for each other hallow their lives and help to make them happy.

***

Mrs. Mary B. Willard writes as follows from Berlin. The item is most interesting, and we have asked her to give us further particulars: "Have you ever heard of Bertha Von Suttner who is probably at the back of the Peace Parliament in Rome? I am just reading her wonderful book 'Die Waffen Lieder,' and wonder if it has been translated into English. I think I shall write her and find out, for it ought to be in every nation a household cry. What an achievement it would be for a woman, if by her work and influence she could abolish war and these everlasting preparations for war! The Rome Congress has acknowledged her power in its resolution calling on the women of Europe to organize Peace Societies. This is the first appeal to women at large, of which I have knowledge, on the part of governments and their representatives."

***

"A spinster—one of that valuable class, whose merits are growing more and more to be appreciated as the world grows older, and they grow younger; since it is a singular fact whereas such persons used to be called 'old maids' they are now acknowledged to possess the advantage of perennial youth."—Edward Everett Hale.

***

Doubt says, "I can't;" unbelief says, "I won't." What are you saying?

***

We cannot frequently enough reiterate our devotedly earnest hope that the white-ribboners will "mother up" their own great Petition which has been so much better "mothered" in the mother country than in our own. We must have a million more names at least, as the World's Convention comes one year from June. Dear local presidents, will you not covenant with God and your own hearts that we shall have no fewer than fifty signatures from your local union? If this could but be, the million names would soon be ours. Send for the blank forms to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, Ohio, and mail the signed petitions to Miss Alice Briggs, Evanston, Ill.

***

We are the players and the universe is each one's harp. Be an Orpheus, never a Boreas, and in the sweetness of congenial comradeship help swell that loving chorus "whose music is the gladness of the world."

***

IT IS often said that so-called "tradespeopie" are careless about keeping engagements; that is, they freely promise to do a certain job upon a certain day, and, as a rule, they do not come. It must have occurred to thoughtful persons, reflecting on this unfavorable condition of things, to inquire whether it would not be better for these friends of ours to say frankly: "It is impossible for me to tell just when I can come, but I will do so as soon as I can in view of my other engagements." Is it not a pity to form the habit of making promises only to break them? Does it not harm one's own character, and diminish the sum total of faith in human nature? Doubtless employers are often unreasonable; each one wants his own work attended to at once, and the temptation is great, in order to hold a good many jobs, to promise all that their requests shall be complied with; but it seems quite probable that if the other method were used (of downright square dealing,) it would work much better results in the long run for all concerned.

***

Mrs. Hoffman, writing of the revered Mother Lemen as "the oldest white-ribboner in Missouri, aged eighty years and eight months," had evidently forgotten Rose Phillips' mother, who nears her eighty-second birthday in perfect health and mental preservation. Mrs. Phillips, with her father, signed the total abstinence pledge more than sixty years ago. Her family of eight children—raised to manhood and womanhood without the loss of one—were all total abstainers. She was a charter member of the first W. C. T. U. organized in Missouri, and took a cut off the first bolt of white ribbon consecrated as the emblem of temperance in that state. One of her daughters, who is prouder of this private record than of any public one possible to woman, desires to correct the mistake that would take the laurel, "oldest white-ribboner in Missouri," from her, even to place it upon a memory so honored as that of Mrs. Lemen.

ON DUTY.

News from the Field.

STATE REPORTERS.

Alabama—Mrs. Jennie B. Gerald, Montgomery.
Arizona—Mrs. L. C. Hughes, Tucson.
Arkansas—Mrs. F. L. Sutton, 315½ W. Markham street, Little Rock.
California—Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, Oakland.
California (Southern)—Mrs. Mary E. Garbutt, Temperance Temple, Los Angeles.
Carolina (N.)—Miss Bettie D. Caldwell, Greensboro
Carolina (S.)—Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Charleston.
Colorado—Mrs. S. L. Teetor, Denver.
Connecticut—Miss M. Belle Smith, Rockfall.
Dakota (North)—Miss Emma F. Bates, Valley City.
Dakota (South)—Mrs. Irene G. Adams, Lake Helen, Volensia Co., Fla.
Delaware—Miss Annie Sutton, Smyrna.
District of Columbia—Miss Lizzie Kessler, 802 North I street, Washington.
Florida—Mrs. N. B. Irwin, Jacksonville.
Georgia—Miss Missouri Stokes, Decatur.
Idaho—Mrs. Mary E. McGee, Nampa.
Illinois—Mrs. G. H. Read, 412 E. North street, Bloomington.
Indiana—Miss Sadie B. Whistler, Terre Haute.
Indian Territory—Mrs. Sarah Ford Crosby, Muscogee.
Iowa—Mrs. Clara P. White, Volga.
Kansas—Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, Le Roy.
Kentucky—Miss Nellie Sloy, Lebanon.
Louisiana—Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, Baton Rouge
Maine—Miss Mary French, Auburn.
Maryland—Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, Mt. Washington.
Massachusetts—Miss Emma W. Bumstead, 171 Tremont St., Boston.
Michigan—Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint.
Minnesota—Mrs. Amy B. Green, 2208 6½ avenue, Minneapolis.
Mississippi—Mrs. Olivia Fort Fitzhugh, Vicksburg.
Missouri—Mrs. Mary E. Jones, Humansville.
Montana—Mrs. W. W. Wylie, Bozeman.
Nebraska.—Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock, Beatrice.
Nevada—Mrs. Lena M. Westlake, Reno.
New Hampshire—Mrs. F. H. Bailey, Hopkinton,
New Jersey—Mrs. N. L. Caminade, Trenton.
New Mexico—Mrs. Ada Morley Jarrett, Socorro.
New York—Mrs. Frances Graham, Lockport.
Ohio—Miss Hannah A. Foster, Berea.
Oklahoma—Mrs. Sue Brown, Oklahoma City.
Oregon—Mrs. L. A. Nash, Corvallis.
Pennsylvania—Mrs. Bertha Howe, Bradford.
Rhode Island—Miss Miriam Earle, Valley Falls.
Tennessee—Mrs. T. P. Holman, Fayetteville.
Texas—Mrs. Elizabeth Strong Tracy, Houston.
Utah—Miss Mary Howard Nutting, 2324 Madison Ave., Ogden.
Vermont—Mrs. Clinton Smith, Middlebury.
Virginia—Miss Lona A. Kern, Winchester
Virginia (W.)—Mrs. Mary Cartwright, 1007 Main St., Wheeling.
Washington (East)—Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, Cheney.
Washington (West)—Mrs. J. W. Lee, Tacoma.
Wisconsin—Mrs. Maria F. Hanchette, 322 W. Washington Ave. Madison.
Wyoming—Mrs. Therese A. Jenkins, Cheyenne.

KANSAS CRUMBS.

"Work, for the night is coming,
Work through the sunny noon;
Fill brightest hours with labor,
Rest comes sure and soon."

There can be no fitter sentiment than the above to inscribe on the banner of every W. C. T. U. Indeed, I believe it is a part of our unwritten ritual, for it would be difficult to find a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union who has not her heart, brains and hands filled with the work of some one, at least, of our varied departments. It sometimes appears too, that we are all of one mind, if not all in one place, for in reply to a letter addressed to our attorney-general, I received a few days since a circular which stated in substance that for some time past his office had been flooded with letters from the W. C. T. U. These came from all over the state, asking him to take the matter in hand and close out the "hop tea" joints, which have sprung up in various localities. He said the letters were all so nearly alike—giving a copy of one—that one answer would do for all, and as he had not the time to reply personally to each, he would do so by having a letter issued in printed form. Then followed an elaborate exposition of our prohibitory law, with the duties of officials and citizens regarding its enforcement. He claimed that the possession of a United States permit to sell, was not evidence that any sales had been made, also that the responsibility rested upon the people instead of the officials in making out cases for prosecution. If this is a correct decision, it would be well to bear that point in mind in future, and not expect too much help from those in office.

At the late annual session of the state teachers' association our women secured the services of Mrs. Frances Leiter, of Ohio, to speak to the teachers. Her theme, as might be readily inferred, was "Scientific Temperance Instruction." The Western School Journal gave extracts from her address, among which was the following, "Let the children of this nation receive scientific instruction in temperance, and in less than twenty years we will become a nation of abstainers."

As a result of the address, the following was passed by the association:

Resolved, That we earnestly favor instruction in physiology and hygiene which shall more strongly impress upon the minds of our youth the evil effects of alcohol and narcotics; and further, that we have no sympathy with the unjust criticism which says, "Prohibition does not prohibit," but are heartily in favor of retaining, enforcing, and, if necessary, strengthening the present prohibitory law.

The enrollment of teachers reached the number of 1,165.

Crawford county recently held a good convention at Girard. The "question drawer" was an important feature of the occasion. Among the questions which drew forth lively and earnest discussion was the following: "Would the personal and financial support of the W. C. T. U. of the county be given to prosecute rumsellers and impeach unfaithful officials?" This was answered almost unanimously in the affirmative.

Lyon county held its last quarterly session at Emporia. Mrs. S. A. Thurston, state superintendent of organization, was present and conducted a very instructive school of methods. Excellent papers were read on "Non-alcoholic Medication," "Peace and Arbitration" and "Literature." Mrs. Merritt, state superintendent of evangelistic work among the colored people, was a visitor, and gave a short and interesting talk in behalf of her race. Twelve of the eighteen departments were reported. Several distinguished visitors were in attendance.

The colored sisters of the W. C. T. U. have started a very worthy project, viz: The establishment of a "Home" at Leavenworth for the aged and orphaned of their people. They have purchased a property on Fifth Avenue, and are astir to raise funds to meet the payments on the same. One plan is, to find one hundred people who will donate five dollars each, also five hundred who will give one dollar each toward the enterprise. Will not some generous souls come to their assistance? Any one wishing to help them in their laudable undertaking, can remit by check or money order to Mrs. W. B. Townsend, 1023 Kiowa street, Leavenworth, Kan.

Mrs. Dora A. Evans, president of fifth district W. C. T. U., assisted by Mrs. M. E. Chase, conducted a successful Demorest medal contest at Fort Riley. As a result of the interest awakened by this contest, Chaplain Lowell of the Fort organized a literary association composed of thirty soldiers, and I understand it is in successful operation.

There is a lodge of Good Templars at Junction City, and among its membership are six soldiers from the Fort. They are enthusiastic in attendance and work.

The local union at this place meets semi-monthly and arrangements have been made for an oyster supper to be served soon by the ladies of the union; with the funds thus raised, they will buy a flag for the public schools of the place.

Demorest silver and gold medal contest work is still going on in the vicinity, under the efficient supervision of Mrs. Evans. Nine silver medal contests have already been held, and three more are under way. The first gold medal contest was held February 16.

A "Keeley cure" has been established at Leavenworth conveniently near the Soldiers' Home, so that when "Uncle Sam" has succeeded in his business of habitual drunkard-making at the Home, his worthy victims—the maimed, the halt and the blind—can all be marched up to the Keeley cure, perhaps to the tune of "America," "Hail Columbia," "The Star Spangled Banner," or some other equally patriotic air. After being there awhile, they can be marched back again, to more appropriate music, ready for another chance to help raise the revenue to support the government, so that they may get their pensions regularly. Verily, there is such a thing as a wheel within a wheel, and "for ways that are dark," etc., the "heathen Chinee" is not the only character that is "peculiar."

Mrs. E. D. Carson, of Wa Keeney, held one gold and nine silver medal contests between September 1 and November 26, 1891. In McPherson and vicinity she taught pupils to recite 117 prohibition selections, drilling about one hundred different individuals and also taught twenty-seven prohibition songs. The people there regard her as earnest and energetic, and heartily recommend her work.

Two of our unions have lately been called upon to part with beloved members who have passed from labor to reward, Mrs. Elizabeth Cottrell of the Morrill union, and Miss Nettie J. Donnell, of Waverly. Appropriate resolutions of respect were passed by the locals to which they had belonged.

Waverly union is making a vigorous protest against the sale of tobacco to minors under sixteen years of age, which is in violation of our "anti-tobacco law."

The newspapers of the state seem to take quite an interest in the suffrage campaign just opening. Dates have been arranged for more than a month.

Several of the members of Rastall union have been visiting in Oklahoma. They report that what surprised them most in the Territory, was the saloon. They had been so long unused to such sights, that it was something of a shock, notwithstanding the oft-repeated assertion that as much liquor is drank in Kansas now as there ever was.

Since commencing this letter, I have been pleasantly interrupted by a call from one of Wisconsin's white-ribboners, who is on a visit to friends in this locality. Though strangers, we spent a delightful hour in interchange of "experiences," and when she left it seemed as though we had known each other always. "Blest be the tie that binds." MRS. S. S. WEATHERBY,
State Reporter, Le Roy.

WEST VIRGINIA.

HELPFUL MEETINGS AND COMING CONVENTIONS.

The annual meeting of the first district was held in the Y. M. C. A. building at Wheeling. Devotional exercises were led by state president, Mrs. Jennie Sisson. The district president, Mrs. Warren, occupied the chair and conducted the meeting. The following unions were represented: Roney's Point, Fowler's, West Liberty and Wheeling. Reports from the different departments were made.

Mrs. Isaiah Warren, of Wheeling, offered a prize of five dollars for the best essay on temperance, written by any boy or girl, from fourteen to eighteen years of age. A prize of three dollars was offered for the second best. The time limit was fixed for April 1.

Dr. Harriet B. Jones, of Wheeling, made a splendid report on social purity. This is her special line of work and is successfully carried out. She has a large class of young men who are pledged to social purity.

Officers were then elected: President, Mrs. Schofield; secretary, Mrs. Battelle; treasurer, Mrs. Jos. Hall; vice-presidents, Mrs. Gist and Mrs. Rogers; superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Herriman; superintendent of literature, Mrs. P. Dobbins; social purity, Mrs. Trimble; juvenile, Miss Maxwell.

Miscellaneous business was transacted, and after noontide prayer the convention adjourned.

The state executive committee met at Grafton, February 16, in the parlors of the Presbyterian parsonage. Devotional exercises were led by Mrs. L. Herr, of Grafton. Mrs. Belle Harmison, of Romney, supplied the music. State president, Mrs. Jennie Sisson, occupied the chair.

Various matters pertaining to the state work were taken up and thoroughly discussed. Finances were arranged in a better and more secure form than heretofore, thus aiding the treasurer in her work. A district banner was ordered, which, when completed, will compare favorably with the other states. Mrs. M. M. Love, formerly of West Virginia, but for the last five years in Melbourne, Australia, has been secured for state work, some of which she has already done.

The state convention will be held at Romney, June 14, 15 and 16. Dr. Anna Shaw will be present on the evening of the 16th. Miss Lydia Newcomb will probably fill the 15th and Mrs. Love the 14th. The outlook is good for a larger convention than ever before. An effort is being made to have the district completely organized before the convention.

The tenth district will hold their annual convention March 3d and 4th. Mrs. Love will be there and lend her valuable assistance.

After a thorough investigation it is found that Cutter's series of scientific instruction text-books is used in all the schools in West Virginia.

MRS. MARY CARTWRIGHT,
State Reporter, Wheeling.

MAINE.

CHASING A SMUGGLER.

"Of all the rides since the birth of time,
Told in story, or sung in rhyme,—"

one of the most exciting of recent date was a race between the liquor deputy sheriffs of Androscoggin county and two rum smugglers. It occurred on the afternoon of February 6, and is thus described by the Lewiston Journal: "It was soon after dinner that the two officers left Lewiston, and drove out toward Lewiston Junction. When near the Junction they saw a speck upon the horizon that looked like the craft of the rum smugglers, and they made for it. For two miles and a half, both horses on the leap, the race continued. That Odlin's horse was gaining was evident at the end of the first half mile, and at this point the smugglers tossed out a twenty-gallon keg of whisky. Half a mile further it again became evident that the nose of the Lewiston officer's horse was nearing the tailboard of their pung, and out went another twenty. They had reached the hermit's house on the Poland Spring road when out came a barrel of bottled whisky. The officers seized this, and the men turned down the road that leads to Empire Station. Here the chase became so hot that they quit the team and went into the woods to hunt rabbits. The officers secured the team, and brought it to town."

AMONG THE WORKERS.

Several unions are holding monthly Sunday evening temperance meetings in connection with the churches. As a rule these are very largely attended, and will doubtless result in great good.

Rev. T. E. Busfield, pastor of the First Baptist church of Bangor, repeated a recent sermon under the auspices of the union, plainly rebuking the lax enforcement of the prohibitory law in that city, which is at present rather a black sheep in our temperance fold.

In Portland, however, prohibition continues to prohibit. Rev. J. S. Merrill, of one of the Congregational churches, in a recent sermon on the enforcement of the liquor law in the city and county, declared that having had such a taste of good things during the past year, the people would not willingly return to the days which brought shame and dishonor. He suggested to any who might grudge Boston dealers the profits of those who were determined to have strong drink, that by the same reasoning they might urge the removal of the Windham powder mills to Portland. Said he, "We will not stop to compute the amount of insurance premiums that will need to be paid to cover the increased risks. To be sure there might be a genuine Lisbon earthquake some fine morning, and the deaths would be as numerous as the damage to property would be vast, but never mind, we should have all the profits of the powder business kept in the city."

Notwithstanding the prevalence of La Grippe, the unions are improving these mild winter evenings to replenish their treasuries.

Rockland Y has held a pie sociable and entertainment at their hall. One pie remaining after the supper, it was purchased by the chief templar of Progressive Lodge I. O. G. T., and at the next meeting voted to the prettiest girl in the lodge.

Auburn union has given two fine entertainments; the first, a lecture by Will Carleton, in the course of which he recited a number of his poems, and the second an evening with that wonderful impersonator, Leland T. Powers. After paying Carleton one hundred and fifty dollars, and other expenses, the union netted over one hundred and forty-one dollars. This lecture drew by far the largest paid audience which ever gathered in the city.

An equal suffrage club has lately been formed in Portland. Some of its officers and many of its members are among the younger women, a fact very pleasing to the older suffragists, who feel that they need reinforcement. There is with us a steadily growing sentiment on this question.

As white-ribboners, we are very proud of our National superintendent of peace and arbitration, Mrs. H. J. Bailey, who is also president of the Maine W. S. A., and who with all her "peace" believes that woman suffrage is the next thing needed to forward all other true reforms. Mrs. Bailey represented Maine at the hearing recently given the National Association by the United States Senate committee.

Apropos to the above is the story just told by ex-Speaker T. B. Reed. As every one knows, he is a firm believer in equal suffrage. His daughter Kitty shares his opinions, and the little damsel already keeps well informed on current events. Not long ago she surprised her father by saying: "Father, I believe you are growing lukewarm on the suffrage question." There is urely little danger that the ex-Speaker will backslide with such a faithful monitor!

Mrs. Fessenden, Massachusetts' president, and Mrs. Layah Barakat, an eloquent Syrian woman, have been speaking for many of the unions. In one of her addresses Mrs. Fessenden uttered the following wholesome truths: "The people of this country, instead of being taxed to support the government, are taxed to support the rum monopoly. I believe that this state of yours is largely rid of the influence of this power which so holds us in Massachusetts, although you find it quite difficult to enforce your law when surrounded by so many neighbors who violate it."

Mrs. Maria Gower Sargent, one of the earliest workers in our state union, and state president from 1876 to 1877, died January 21 of pneumonia, at her home in Sargentville. Mrs. Sargent was a well educated and capable woman, and will be greatly missed, especially by the older members of the state union. She attended our last convention and was full of interest and love to us all.

On the rainiest day in January Mrs. Stevens organized a union at Springvale. The weather and traveling were so bad that had not some good "brothers-in-law" come to the rescue and brought the women in their sleighs to the town hall, the plan of organization would have proved almost a failure. With this help twenty-five women joined at once, with more to come in later. Mrs. Stevens spoke both in the afternoon and evening, the newly-elected president, Mrs. J. P. Fogg, presiding at the latter meeting. Revs. Chase and Waldron, two Springvale pastors, manifested much interest and were very helpful, and the new union begins its career with a bright outlook despite its somber birthday.

Mrs. Stevens is as busy as ever, traveling over our state of great distances, speaking, organizing and strengthening weak unions. She fits into her other work regular visits to the State Industrial School for Girls, and to many other institutions, takes her turn with the Portland ministers in conducting Sunday services at the Boys' Reform School, and feels a special interest in the temporary home for needy women and little children. This home is officered and managed entirely by women; it has women physicians, and at the funerals there Mrs. Stevens always takes the part usually performed by a clergyman.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

MRS. BARKER'S DEPARTURE.

We are in tears; that is to say, we would be if white ribbon women were of the crying sort.

This remark has been called forth by the departure of our state president, Mrs. Barker, who has been called to Chicago to act as assistant and as superintendent of press work for the Board of Lady Managers of the Columbian Exposition. We rejoice at this recognition of our beloved leader's talents. But 'tis hard to forget our own bereavement.

Mrs. Barker writes: "I am very sad at leaving my W. C. T. U. work, even for a season, but I am so impressed that this work is going to do so much to advance woman and show to the world her capabilities, that I feel I ought to go. I am especially sorry to go just as another re-submission fight is coming on."

When we recover, we will find that we have a great consolation in the fact that our state is not left without a gracious leader, for our vice-president, Emma A. Cramner, of Aberdeen, is a fine speaker and well versed in our work.

At the third district semi-annual convention held at Huron, Mrs. Cramner gave an excellent address. Ten unions were represented by delegates. Mrs. Alice M. Pickler presided.

I should be delighted to give a more detailed account of this convention, but no report has been sent me and what I have given was gleaned from indirect sources.

I earnestly request local superintendents of press work to keep me informed of events in their locality in order that our report to THE UNION SIGNAL may be a complete one and a credit to the state. IRENE G. ADAMS,
State Reporter, Webster.

OKLAHOMA.

SOME OF THE LATER DOINGS.

When a reporter is pioneering on one of Uncle Sam's farms, seven miles from a post-office, news-gathering is done under difficulties.

The Willard L. T. L., of Guthrie, sends a bright report of its first anniversary reception, given in honor of its superintendent, Mrs. C. S. Swan, at her home. The report is written by the secretary, Amelia A. Balcock. The exercises opened with appropriate music; Master Eddie Balcock read an original poem, expressing gratitude to the superintendent, who responded with an eloquent address that touched all hearts. Master Oliver Page then presented her with an autograph album containing the names of all the members written in it. The children sang some sweet songs to close the literary exercises. The rest of the time was spent in instructive games, making a happy and profitable evening.

The terms "Sooner" and "Later" denote as distinctive a class of people in this Territory as the terms "Jew" and "Gentile" do all over the world. The "Sooners" are those who were within the boundary lines before twelve o'clock high noon on the memorable 22d of April, 1889. The "Laters," those who obeyed the President's proclamation. The W. C. T. U. are "Laters." They came after the "bugle blast" that gave permission for the pell-mell rush of home-seekers. We too, have "claims;" they are not upon the rich alluvial prairie nor the "Black Jacks" or "Shiner Oaks" of this Territory, but our "filing papers" are upon the ministers, the church members, Sunday-school workers, business men and educators, urging them to throw off this terrible incubus, the saloon, that is fastening its clutches upon every portion of the Territory.

I copy from the Leader, the Democratic paper of Oklahoma City, to show with what complacency the saloon is regarded by them:

"Like all newly-developed western towns Oklahoma City has its share of saloons and gambling houses; in fact, every saloon is a gambling house. They are not like the "joints" that are constructed in the rear of drug stores in Kansas. The doors are thrown wide open; no screens are allowed. The drinking of a glass of beer or whisky is almost as public as if it was done upon the street. In all these places, everything is conducted in the most orderly manner. Oklahoma has as stringent laws against gambling as any state in the union, and in time public opinion will enforce these laws, but now it is a question of revenue, which all new cities and some old ones need badly."

Thus the old Satanic cry of "Revenue," "Revenue," is holding these doors of infamy open. Oh! when will it cease!

A Keeley cure has been established in Oklahoma City; several patients pronounce themselves cured. The union of the same city has established its headquarters in the Y. M. C. A. room.

We know of one white ribbon Sunday-school superintendent who hailed the temperance lesson of the international committee with gladness. On reviewing the lesson, at the close, she taught the school temperance from the W. C. T. U. standpoint. The L. T. L. pledge was placed upon the blackboard, the nature of a pledge explained, and a promise that in the near future all would be given an opportunity to sign it.

This winter lyceums have been organized in many country school districts, and in one, woman suffrage was the question for debate. A W. C. T. U. woman led the affirmative, her "liege lord" being her best assistant, and the question was decided in the affirmative.

The M. E. Church North, which has always shown a pioneer spirit, has furnished money to buy material for the erection of churches throughout Oklahoma. They also show their educational spirit by offering, under certain conditions of improvement, to lease these churches to school boards for five years, for educational purposes, and in many districts, where it would otherwise be impossible to erect school-houses, schools are now in session in these M. E. churches.

Oklahoma returns greetings to Kansas, whose reporter's work is a model. MRS. SUE UHL BROWN, State Reporter, Oklahoma City.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

MRS. MOLLIE MCGEE SNELL IN WASHINGTON.

For the past ten days Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, National evangelist, has been in Washington holding evangelistic services for the various local unions throughout the city and speaking by special invitation, in many of the city churches.

It is impossible to estimate the great good which is being accomplished, for Mrs. Snell has won all hearts by her tender, womanly graces, her simplicity of manner and deep spirituality. She has been warmly welcomed in some of the very conservative churches, to which none of our women have heretofore been invited. The hearts of our white-ribboners have been sweetly moved to a deeper and more thorough consecration and many new members have been added to our ranks. Personally, Mrs. Snell has come to us as a ray of sunshine from the beautiful southland, and we are so glad the National has commissioned her to "go forth."

On Sabbath afternoon, January 31, a very large mass-meeting was held at Foundry M. E. church. Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy) read an original story, based on facts, which must have done great good. Mrs. E. J. Perkins rendered a solo of great sweetness and power. Mrs. Snell made the final address of the hour.

One of our city churches opened its parlor every night in the week in order to offset the saloons, theaters, gambling houses, etc., in our city. White-ribboners had charge of Wednesday evenings; the Y's of the District were invited to be present January 20 and it proved a pleasant and profitable occasion. L. C. KESSLER,
Reporter, District of Columbia.

THE PRESIDENT'S ACCOUNT.

Our brother, John G. Woolley, joined forces with Mrs. Snell for a week's special evangelistic services here, commencing February 7. Bible readings were given daily, testimony meetings followed, and the Spirit was with us in demonstration and power.

The public evening meetings, all of which were held in Metropolitan M. E. church, were well attended, and our people were strengthened, and built up. There were some remarkable conversions, and the various unions received accessions.

Mrs. Snell, whose faith and love have recently been made so perfect through suffering, opened her lips only to speak words of consolation and blessed comfort which fell in a constant stream upon our hearts. We rejoice that this blessed woman, from the sunny Southland, has been added to the list of National evangelists.

Brother Woolley's heart-searching Bible talks, his appeals and admonitions were like "precious ointment" poured forth. We feel that the kingdom of Christ on earth is richer for having John and Mary Woolley in it.

SARAH D. LA FETRA,
Washington.

ANOTHER WORD.

I have been in Washington two weeks, and first of all, my gratitude must be expressed for the love and care that Mrs. La Fetra has shown me. Mr. Woolley said to me at breakfast this morning: "Hotel Fredonia is a sermon within itself." This delightful house is known far and wide as "The Temperance Hotel;" no saloon and no tobacco smoke anywhere about it. I have given the message from various pulpits and certainly never met before such universal encouragement and sympathy. I am glad that in Washington our colors are flying so cheerily. The women composing the different W. C. T. U. organizations are earnest, devoted characters.

Mr. Woolley is doing some very telling work in the Metropolitan M. E. church. He is just the evangelist the South needs. I have advised our women to open the way and send for him, although with so many hundreds of calls it may not be possible for him to come at once. But write and see, dear women of my Southland.

MARY MCGEE SNELL.

KENTUCKY.

BRIGHT SPOTS.

You are to know by these presents that Kentucky is still alive and at work—in spots.

Our eleventh state convention which met at Madisonville last fall continued in session three days and was followed by a memorial meeting on Sunday, in memory of our promoted soldiers during the year. The attendance at the convention was not large, owing to so much sickness throughout the state, but it was in every sense of the word a most delightful meeting.

Madisonville did herself "proud" in the way of entertainment. We were met with cordial greetings on every hand, and welcome! welcome! was spoken by men and women who felt what they said. The business sessions were largely attended; the ministers threw open their churches and showed in every way their brotherly interest in the W. C. T. U. I think they were all present at every meeting.

Mrs. Lathrap "came and saw and conquered" as usual. She gave two addresses. A young lady gave the welcoming address; the response was beautifully made by our recording secretary.

Time would fail me to tell you of all the good things said and done. But one especially pleasing feature was the L. T. L., which marched into the church on Sabbath evening singing "Saloons, Saloons, Saloons must go." As we listened, the thoughts called forth by the song resolved themselves into the conviction that saloons will go, and who knows but Madisonville will take the lead? Those L. T. L. boys and girls have fathers who vote and mothers who work and pray for prohibition. Prohibition is the prevailing sentiment there. May their "Battle cry of Freedom" go ringing through the hearts of the voters.

The reports showed fine work done, especially in flower mission and juvenile work, Mrs. Munnell and Mrs. Beauchamp are at the head of these departments, and looking into their earnest faces we could not but believe that a little child shall yet lead the nation into the light of a better day.

Newport brought in a good report. The union is actively at work preparing to erect a fountain in one of the public squares. Mrs. Lewis, their president, deserves mention for her untiring energy in securing money and help for this work.

Greenburgh gave a good report, as she always does, and a letter from there recently received shows unabated zeal "In His Name." They were for two years the banner union.

Lexington union reported a grand advance. I hope to tell at some future time just what has been accomplished in the juvenile work and along other lines. Mrs. Beauchamp has wonderful success in organizing and keeping up this work.

Barboursville union has twenty members. They have a sewing circle, the proceeds to go to the Temple building fund. They also have a lot on which they hope to build a Temple. The cost will be $3,000, and we hope these brave women will succeed in their enterprise. There is a Loyal Temperance Legion in Barboursville with 123 members. "We love to count the children in the Loyal Temperance Legion, "for they are growing up."

The White Cross has been started again in Hawesville, Mrs. M. Hennen editing it. She is a brave, sweet-spirited woman, and undertakes this paper under many difficulties. She asks the support of the W. C. T. U. women throughout the state, and this should be given her. I am reminded of an epitaph hung up over a defunct newspaper office:

"Man's a vapor—full of woes—
Starts a paper—up he goes."

Don't let us fail Mrs. Hennen, who is not "a vapor." The price of the paper is but fifty cents.

Bena union is one year old. They have forty members. The members are very active in devising ways and means to increase their numbers and spread temperance sentiment. They hold temperance socials frequently, and are "always at it." Mrs. A. J. Hanson is their president. The Loyal Temperance Legion numbers 125; Mrs. Daisy Corlock, superintendent, and one especially fitted.

Owensboro was reorganized last year and has done some good work, distributing literature and in other ways helping the cause. The mills and the stills go on grinding out misery and woe to hearts and lives, but thank God! the W. C. T. U. too, can labor, not entirely in vain, to gladden lives that are sad.

Mrs. Mary Hunt is expected this month, and will, in company with Mrs. M. A. Watts, superintendent scientific temperance instruction, appear before the legislature in behalf of the children, who have a right to know the danger of alcohol and tobacco upon the system. We hope she will so move the hearts of these law-makers that a temperance law will be passed.

One pleasant thing that I must not fail to note was the surprise planned and carried out by the employés of the L. & N. railroad shop at Louisville. On Tuesday before Christmas Mrs. Sue Davis, the superintendent of railroad work, went down at noon to hold her regular services. After Mrs. Davis had sung several hymns, Rev. E. W. Bottomby made a short address, at the conclusion of which Theodore S. White, one of the employés, in a few well chosen words handed Mrs. Davis a beautiful testimonial in the shape of a Bagster Bible, with the Scripture text, Num. 6:24. 25, 26, inscribed on its face; also a gold medal in the shape of a locomotive entering the round-house. Mrs. Davis was taken so completely by surprise that she could not respond. About eight hundred men who are employed in the machine shops were present. Mrs. Davis has been superintendent of railroad work for the last year, and these testimonials showed the appreciation in which she is held by "the boys."

For the benefit of the various unions in Kentucky, the names of our officers for the year are given: Mrs. N. H. Munnell, president; Mrs. G. H. Given, corresponding secretary; Mrs. M. E. Bryan, treasurer; Mrs. L. F. Hubble, recording secretary. We are proud, and justly so, of this efficient corps.

The unions who have so kindly furnished items will please accept thanks. NELLIE SLOY.
State Reporter, Lebanon.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

INQUIRIES frequently come to us for a strictly pure, non-alcoholic grape juice for sacramental and medicinal purposes. An unfermented wine answering this description is manufactured and sold by Mrs. Sarah C. Sampson & Co., Bedford, Mass., successors to Miss Emma M. Taylor.

"How to Institute School Savings Banks," is the title of a helpful pamphlet issued by Mrs. Sara Louisa Oberholtzer, of Norristown, Pa., superintendent for School Savings Banks, National W. C. T. U. This practical, educational movement progresses favorably, and meets the approval of W. C. T. U. workers.

THE young women who decorated the president's prize banner in 1889 were Mrs. Annie Claybaugh, of Frankfort, Ind., Miss J. B. Fogg, Wilmington, Del., Miss Susan Higgans, Norwich, Conn., Mrs. H. L. Rowell, New Carlisle, Ind., Mrs. J. L. Williams, Fort Wayne, Ind. This committee has presented the president's banner to the World's National W. C. T. U. president, Miss Willard. This is to be bestowed each year upon the state having made the greatest gain in membership.

MRS. HITCHCOCK, president of the W. C. T. U. of Nebraska, writes that they have already 8,000 children who have placed their names on pledge cards proposed by Anna Gordon, World's superintendent of juvenile work, to form the autograph chain that decorates the white-ribbon department of the Columbian Exposition. As is known to all active workers, we are to have a children's exhibit, for which Miss Gordon has provided, and in which children of all nations are manifesting a most encouraging interest. The method is to send to the W. T. P. A., 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill., for red, white and blue pledges of the Loyal Temperance Legon cards, on which the names and places of residence are written. These are returned to Miss Anna Gordon, Evanston, Illinois, who will arrange them in festoons, as a visible token of the protection of childhood in all parts of the world from the habit of the use of brain poisons.

Official Communications.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President—FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Sec.—MRS. C. B. BUELL, Evanston, Ill.
Recording Sec.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Rec. Sec.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer—ESTHER PUGH, Evanston, Ill.

For presidents of states and superintendents of departments, see Annual Leaflet, which will be sent by Mrs. Buell on application, inclosing a two-cent stamp.

THE WORLD'S PETITION.

The World's Petition has received a million of signatures, but before the first of April, 1893, we hope for a second million, and would rejoice were the present number to be trebled or quadrupled.

We want millions of signatures that we may say to rulers of every land as we present the Petition, "Herein and hereby the will of the people is expressed."

1. We want the names of women who are the petitioners.

2. We want the names of men (on another copy of the Petition), who approve and indorse this effort of the mothers and sisters of every land.

3. We want an expression of approval from public assemblies, organizations, societies, orders, etc. First, to call the attention of the people to the endeavor of the World's W. C. T. U.; second, to prove that the general trend of public opinion is in harmony with it.

4. Only persons over twenty-one years of age should sign.

5. We are thoroughly constitutional, inasmuch as the right of citizens to sign this Petition "shall not be denied nor abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." We would welcome the signature of the President of the United States, or the ruler of any nation, and their humblest subject.

6. Will each person sending for blanks give the number desired? Each canvasser must have two copies, one for women, one for men; thus, when ordering, multiply the number of canvassers by two, and send us the result as the number of copies needed for your locality.

7. With the date of your letter or card please give the name of your town (or city), and the state, as Boston, Mass.

8. Many have written: "If there is any charge and you will inform us, we shall be happy to remit." There is no charge, but the expense is great, and those who wish to lighten the financial burden of the World's W. C. T. U. can do so by sending postage with the order; one cent for four or six blanks, two cents for double the number. When circulars, reports, or literature are to be added, the postage is somewhat increased. This is a small amount for each local union or individual, but in the aggregate, a large sum for the World's union.

9. All blanks, however, to be used are of the same form, but easily adapted to all proposed uses. At the close of some of the Petition blanks are the words, "The above Petition is heartily indorsed by." When the Petition is circulated for signatures of women (they being petitioners, not indorsers), run your pencil through those words, in all other cases let them stand. Where these words are not found they can be added on Petitions to be circulated for endorsement. First, for signatures of leading men (against whose names should always appear their profession or occupation). Second, for indorsement of churches, societies, etc. In places of ordinary size (not large cities) all churches can place their indorsement upon one blank, as:

The M. E. Church, Burlington, Vt	300 Members, M. E. Jones, pastor.

This will fill but two lines, and other churches may follow, each taking the same space, and if more room is required, paper can be pasted across the bottom of the sheet.

10. It will be impossible to transport the immense roll of signatures the wide world over, but we can first, display every foot of it at the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in the most advantageous manner; and second, copies of the Petition in sufficient number can be printed on linen, to which can be appended the names of the highest officials in each nation who are petitioners, with the exact number of women in the land who join with them in the plea; a record of the societies and a number of their membership who indorse the Petition, also of government officials, of ministers, lawyers, merchants, physicians, etc., etc., and the aggregate of all these for the world. But to have these of convincing power, the Petition itself must exceed anything before known, and we believe the W. C. T. U. is the organization through which such victory will be achieved.

(The above is the method of presentation now proposed which will, however, without doubt, expand as the days go on, and if we, with those who indorse our effort, "pray without ceasing," have we not reason to hope, that as leading Christian women stand face to face with the rulers of the earth, pleading for the protection of their homes, the Spirit of the Lord will move royal hearts to grant the request?)

11. Send all Petitions, when signed, to Miss Alice Briggs, office secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill., and send for blanks to

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
Ravenna, Ohio. Sec. World's W. C. T. U.

LUMBER CAMP WORK.

"The best laid plans of mice and men gang aft aglee," and the carefully laid plans of your superintendent to get the package of reports relating to camp work to the great Boston Convention on time, all went wrong. The reports were there, but owing to a blunder of the express messenger they failed to get to the right place or the right person. Several women went on the war-path after the missing package, which, after the Convention was over, was returned to me by a faithful W. C. T. U. worker in Boston. Query.—Shall I sue the express company for damage to character (being found wanting in faithfulness) or being of Quaker blood, and believing the fable of "the monkey and the chestnuts" as the sure reward of those who go to law, shall I ask THE UNION SIGNAL to right me? The reports have been forwarded to state presidents and superintendents, etc., and any one may have one who will write and ask. Moreover, you will find them in the Minutes.

In general let me add that the work and interest in this department has grown steadily during the past two years, as a great mission work. While the unions in the largest lumbering states, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan, send missionaries and literature into their camps, they desire to give due credit and gratitude to the unions that have lent a helping hand in New York, Massachusetts and a few other states, while Maine, Texas, Pennsylvania and Georgia are all working in a similar way in the forests of their own special states.

A bird's-eye view of the three great lumber states of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan would show dense pine forests covering the whole northern half of each state, dotted here and there in isolated spots by the little cluster of log shanties, known as a lumber camp, where the red blanketed crew are the only evidence of civilization for miles around, and where all mail matter is brought from the nearest postoffice many miles away. In these three states 60,000 men are thus employed every winter. In Wisconsin the women have adopted a regular method of sending literature, direct from the home into some special camp, that they receive as their legacy for the winter, from the superintendent of camp work. This saves the barrels of old garret lore that formerly so burdened the heart and hands of the superintendent. In this manner last winter they sent good packages of their best home papers into over three hundred camps, as often as once a week, and this winter have improved upon last winter's plan, by individuals asking for a camp in place of a union. One union supplied thirty-six camps this winter, while in far-away Springfield, Mass., twenty-five faithful women have agreed to do likewise. Time would fail me to tell of young people's societies and churches that have entered with us into this good work.

Lumber dealers approve of this work, and even men with "political bees" under their hats, who like to have women "keep in their sphere," unite in saying, at last, we W. C. T. U. women have got into a work that while it keeps us busy, won't "agitate" the atmosphere outside of the home. Kind words have been said of us in many a local paper, and the two leading journals, taken by lumbermen generally in the Northwest, The Mississippi Valley Lumberman and the Chicago Northwestern Lumberman have each given up a column of good words of encouragement and greeting, and have asked your superintendent to use them for the work wherever they could serve us.

Surely when the leading lumbermen's journals lend us a hand, we may expect to get to the ear of the dealers in the easiest way. Hundreds of letters and messages have been received from the men in camp, expressing gratitude for this attention. The missionary has met with an added welcome on this very account. This method of sending literature means a little work and care, but with Mrs. Grubb to send us foreign temperance tracts and foreign Bibles, and our home library table to draw from, may I ask if a busy housekeeper can do more good with less money, than in this way? Besides, think of the "authority" for "saving the fragments."

MARY C. UPHAM, Nat. Supt.
Marshfield, Wis.

NATIONAL MINUTES.

The National Minutes are now ready, and will be sent out on application to Mrs. C. B. Buell, Evanston, Ill. Price fifteen cents per copy, ten copies to one address for one dollar. The money must in all cases accompany the order. ESTHER PUGH.

PRISON AND JAIL WORK.

I wish as speedily as possible to reach all state and local superintendents of prison and jail work. I have not been able to get a full directory. Will all state and territorial presidents send me the address of state and territorial superintendents, and will those who have not yet appointed superintendents, do so at their next annual convention? All state and local superintendents who read this will please send me a report of what they are doing and planning. Let me urge upon state and district conventions the desirability of sending fraternal delegates to all national and state conventions of charities and corrections. You will in this way become acquainted with the men who are working for these unfortunate criminals whom we wish to reach and make it much easier for the prison door to swing open for the work we wish to do. Let us carry no "sentiment" or "gushing," but let us go as sensible women alive to the awfulness of the sin which has brought them there, and careful to offend no prejudice that may exist in the heart of warden or jailer. The army of criminals unreached calls for many workers who, putting all timidity aside are willing to do this, to some, hardest of all duties.

To any who wish I will send a list of the names of state secretaries of charities and corrections, and the secretary of the national prison congress.

JANE M. KINNEY,
Nat. Supt. Prison and Jail Work.
North Street, St. Clair County, Michigan.

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

MRS. R. A. EMMONS, SEC.

LECTURERS.

Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge.	Mrs. F. W. Leiter.
Mrs. Marion B. Baxter.	Miss I. C. DeVelling.
Rev. Henrietta G. Moore.	Mrs. Caroline M. Woodward
Mrs. E. T. Scott.	Mrs. Helen L. Bullock.
Mr. A. G. Wolfenbarger.	Prof. A. B. Huckins.
Hon. John P. St. John.	Rev. A. A. Phelps.
Mother Stewart.	Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman.
Miss Ida Clothier.	Maj. E. T. Scott.
Rev. E. O. Taylor.	Mrs. S. M. Perkins.

EVANGELISTS.

Rev. C. H. St. John.	Rev. Eugenia F. St. John.
Mrs. S. M. I. Henry.	Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler
Mrs. Harriet D. Walker.

ELOCUTIONISTS.

Miss Eva M. Shontz. Mrs. Frances E. Preston.

SOCIAL PURITY.

Mrs. Alice Williams.

DR. KATE MITCHELL

will speak at New London, O., March 4, Evanston, Ill., March 6.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN

speaks at Salem, Ill., March 12, St. Louis, Mich., 15, Monroe, 17, Flint, 18. There are only a few vacant dates left for Michigan; let applications be made at once.

REV. HENRIETTA G. MOORE

speaks at Carey, O., March 20, Wellsville, 21, New Lisbon, 22, Salineville, 23 and 24, Winona, 25, Damascus, 26. April 2, 5 and 6 are available for southern Ohio; let applications be made early.

REVS. C. H. AND E. F. ST. JOHN will be in Kansas beginning March 15.

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE

speaks at Colorado Springs, Col., March 13, and for one month following in the state. March 9, 10 and 11 is available for Iowa and Nebraska en route to Colorado.

REV. E. O. TAYLOR

is available for Illinois during March and April.

For dates and terms of the above address

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A CORRECTION.

DEAR COMRADES:—In a copy of the National Minutes just received, on page 77 I see my name as a member of the "Committee on Speakers." I wish to state that I declined to serve when my name was mentioned. As the Bureau is practically under my charge, it is best that I should not be one of that committee. Therefore, will those wishing to communicate with the committee about speakers, please bear in mind that I am not the person to be addressed? CAROLINE B. BUELL.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

LITERATURE DEPARTMENT.

